INTRODUCTION

Ante oculos errant domus, urbs, et forma locorum;
Succeduntque suis singula facta locis.

Ovid, Tristia.

IF the historian's knowledge of his subject were complete, and his judgment unerring, the writing of history would be a simple matter, depending only upon the writer's power of expression, and the amount of space available. As, however, these ideal conditions practically never exist, his task usually resolves itself into an attempt to draw conclusions from too meagre records, and to reconcile or explain contradictory, or seemingly contradictory, statements. The result is that the facts are often complicated and obscured, sometimes even hopelessly distorted, and not infrequently quite overwhelmed, by the writer's individual interpretations and opinions, the expounding of which is apt to occupy as much space as the recital of the facts themselves.

It has long seemed to the author that the ideal method of presenting history would be to arrange all of the available worth-while material in strictly chronological order, and to allow the facts and the myths, together with the interpretations of competent authorities, and even the casual comments of intelligent observers, to speak for themselves. The present Chronology is an attempt to carry out this idea; in it are recorded, in brief form, but with sufficient detail to make easy reading, all procurable information of real importance or interest relating to the history and development of Manhattan Island, special emphasis being placed on information regarding the physical growth of the city of New York.

In the search for such material, all known and available sources have been examined, or at least inquired into, and a consistent effort has been made to trace each material fact or statement to its original source, and to quote from that source, retaining, wherever practicable, the language, and thereby the spirit, of the original, usually in condensed form, immaterial facts or statements being omitted. Even when this method has proved impracticable, if the subject has seemed of sufficient importance or interest it has usually been included, and reference given to the earliest and best authority found. This has sometimes led to the inclusion of material the authenticity of which is open to question, and occasionally even to the recording of statements which have been rejected by modern critics as belonging to mere tradition or mythology. The author cannot but feel that the modern fashion of excluding such material has robbed many a serious work, not only of local colour and picturesque interest, but of valuable suggestions and hints which would have proved useful in future researches.

John Addington Symonds, in his Renaissance in Italy ("The Fine Arts," pp. 102-3), has very well expressed the reasons for giving thoughtful consideration to tradition—even to myth—in the interpretation of history. He says: "I regard the present tendency to mistrust tradition, only because it is tradition, as in the highest sense uncritical. . . . Tradition, when not positively disproved, should be allowed to have its full value; and a sounder historic sense is exercised in adopting its testimony with due caution than in recklessly rejecting it and substituting guesses which the lack of knowledge renders unsubstantial. Tradition may err about dates, details, and names. It is just here that antiquarian research can render valuable help. But there are occasions when the perusal of documents and the exercise of what is called the higher criticism afford no surer basis for opinion. If in such cases a legend has been formed and recorded, the student will advance further toward comprehending the spirit of his subject by patiently considering what he knows to be in part perhaps a mythus than by starting with the foregone conclusion that the legend must of necessity be worthless, and that his cunning will suffice to supply the missing clue."

In the preparation of the Chronology, not only have the original sources, whenever available, been used, and full references given thereto, but references have also been furnished to later, and secondary, authorities. Even "popular" works have been drawn upon, where these add to our knowledge or understanding of the subject under consideration. Furthermore, frequent cross-references have been supplied, so that related subjects may be easily compared, without reference through the Index.

In most cases, quoted facts and statements have been allowed to tell their own story, with little or no comment by the author; occasionally, however, especially in connection with the periods of discovery and early settlement, where it is usually difficult to convey a clear and comprehensive idea by merely quoting from the fragmentary, scattered, and often very perplexing, records, it has seemed desirable to compare and discuss the meagre facts, and, when possible, to draw conclusions from them; and the author has even yielded to the temptation to formulate certain theories, which, in many cases, he is fully aware that he has been unable satisfactorily to sustain. They are given in the hope that in this way an occasional hint may be supplied which will prove of value in some more comprehensive or detailed investigation.

While the Chronology, in form and substance, is primarily a compilation, nevertheless, it contains a considerable admixture of new material; and even the old facts and statements will often be found to have acquired a new significance by being placed in their true chronological sequence, and viewed in relation one to another.

The Chronology is intended to form a complete work in itself, containing, as it does, sometimes in condensed and sometimes in extended form, all of the historical material found in Volumes I and III, and everything of real importance from Volume II, in addition to much that has been obtained since these volumes were written. Doubtless, more satisfactory results would have been obtained in the work as a whole had it been possible to complete the Chronology before writing the earlier volumes, as these are based primarily upon the very sources that have been developed, usually in more detail, in the Chronology.

As explained in the Preface (Volume I), considerable space has been devoted, especially during the early periods, and in connection with matters of topographical and antiquarian interest, to facts and occurrences which, in themselves, may sometimes seem of but little moment, for it not infrequently happens that these apparently insignificant trifles acquire interest and importance beyond themselves, through their association with people, events, or places, which have since become famous.

It has also seemed desirable to add occasional brief references to contemporary occurrences of outstanding importance, or of special interest, in other parts of America, and even abroad, so that the reader may be in a position to study intelligently the various factors which helped to form public opinion, at any given moment, on Manhattan Island, and thereby be better able to understand the underlying motives which prompted action on the part of the inhabitants.

In consulting the Chronology, an eye should be kept on the Addenda, which occasionally contains new material and corrections not referred to in the text or in the marginal notes.

Although new light has been thrown on some vexed questions, many still remain unanswered. Who, for example, was the first European to set eyes upon Manhattan Island? Was it Karlsefni, the Norseman, about the year 1020, or possibly the French explorer whose intimate knowledge of our bay was shown on the Cossin Map, five and a half centuries later? Who were the first foreign sojourners on our island? If neither the early Norse voyagers nor the projectors of the Cossin Map, were they, perhaps, the weather-stressed crew of some phantom ship driven for shelter into our splendid harbour on one of those mysterious clandestine voyages along the North East Coast which we know from casual references and from unidentified maps must have been of almost yearly occurrence during the 16th Century? Or does the honour perchance belong to the "pretended Dutch Governour," and his followers, whom Samuel Argall is said to have found on the island in the Autumn of 1613, and who, it now seems, may well have been that famous pioneer in our waters, Adriaen Block, and his indomitable shipmates? Or, again, was the first permanent settlement on Manhattan begun by Minuit, in 1626, or by May and Tienpont in 1624, in accordance with Catalina Trico's much maligned statements, which are certainly strengthened by the testimony of the recently discovered Van Rappard documents, as well as by the cumulative evidence of other records here grouped under these early years? Or is it possible that it was even earlier?—during that mysterious period between the founding of Fort Nassau in 1614 and the arrival of the "Nieu Nederlandt" in 1624. On the whole, this last date seems the most probable.

These, and many similar questions, rise in the mind of the student, and demand further investigation and analysis. On one point there is no longer room for reasonable doubt; the "Nieu Nederlandt" (the "Nieu Verdriet" of the Van Rappard documents) arrived at Manhattan in May or June, 1624, with the first officially organized company of colonists for New Netherland. The question which still puzzles historians is whether any of her passengers remained on Manhattan Island, forming the nucleus of a permanent settlement, the vanguard of that firmly established by Minuit, in 1626. On this point the information now available, although not absolutely conclusive, is distinctly affirmative.

One apparently important source, at least, has not been adequately examined,—the collection of papers representing the semi-public records of Dutch notaries in the 16th and 17th Centuries. These records are contained in several hundred volumes, and are preserved in the National Archives at The Hague. This great mass of material has only recently become accessible. In 1919, Dr. F. C. Wieder made, for the author, a cursory examination of the records for the years 1623, 1624, and 1625, but without important results. It is hoped, however, that a more thorough inspection, covering a longer period, now being made for the author by Dr. A. Eekhof, may yield at least a few facts of interest for inclusion in the Addenda to the fifth volume of the ICONOGRAPHY. Other important Dutch and English sources will doubtless be discovered, and a further comparison and analysis of the known sources will surely bring out new information. Of one thing, especially, the author is convinced; a thorough study of the 16th and early 17th Century maps and voyages would richly repay the patient scholar. HARRISSE and others have nobly blazed the way, but a great deal remains still to be done in this fascinating field.

After careful consideration, the difficult question of how best to deal with the perplexing problem of Old-, and New-Style dates was settled by following the Gregorian Calendar (or New-Style) from October 5/15, 1582, when its use began on the Continent, until Sept. 6/16, 1664, when this method of dating was dropped from the city records, after the capture of New Amsterdam by the English. From Sept. 22/Oct. 2, 1664, when the Julian system of reckoning was first used in the court records, until Sept. 3/14, 1752, when England adopted the Gregorian Calendar, Old-Style is used. To avoid confusion, double dates are introduced during periods of transition, and also in connection with all English dates during the Dutch occupation of the city, and all Dutch and other Continental dates during the English occupation.

In bespeaking the indulgence of the reader in connection with the many faults which he is all too conscious this work contains, the author feels that a special word of apology is due for frequent inconsistencies throughout the four volumes in the use of upper- and lower-case; inconsistencies which are primarily due to the considerable number of persons who, from first to last, have collaborated in its production. These did not become conspicuous until the page proof of the Chronology was so far advanced that a revision was impracticable. This apology must be extended to include also, specifically, the gelatine plates in Volumes IV and V, which are far less satisfactory than those made in Holland for the second volume. Although the greatest care was taken in the preparation of the original photographs from which the plates were made, it has proved impossible to get from these, in this country, prints comparable with those made abroad.

In addition to the acknowledgments made in previous volumes, it is a pleasure to add here a further word of appreciation regarding the work of Mr. Thomas W. Hotchkiss, who has devoted more than ten years to researches for the Chronology, a large part of which is the direct result of his pains-taking labour and enthusiasm.

The author is also particularly indebted to Dr. A. E. Peterson, who has contributed much valuable material, especially in connection with the last decade under Dutch rule, and the Revolutionary Period, including extracts from the important collection of William Smith Papers recently acquired by the New York Public Library, and examined for the first time, critically, for this work; to Professor A. J. F. van Laer, who, in addition to supplying a number of translations from Dutch printed and manuscript sources, has read the proof of the Dutch Period, and made many constructive criticisms and additions; to Mr. Alexander Wall, now Librarian of the New York Historical Society; to Mr. Peter Nelson, Assistant State Archivist, who has cheerfully answered frequent inquiries regarding documents in his charge; to Mr. Samuel Oppenheim, who has furnished many important items regarding the Jews in early New York; to Miss Zula Ziebach, whose notes on the early taverns and their keepers shed new light upon a phase of our city's life which, from the earliest days, has been a potent factor in its development; and finally to Miss Ellen C. Ahern, for three years a keen and helpful collaborator in this work.

565 If we except the legends emanating from Plato's mythical island of Atlantis, perhaps the earliest definite suggestion of a voyage of discovery from Europe to the far west is embodied in the legend of St. Brandan. In or about A.D. 565, Brandan, an Irish monk, having heard of the existence to the west of an "Isle of Saints" (perhaps St. Kilda—from "Holy Culdees"—the Erse name of which was Hirta or Western land), and, seized with a pious desire to see it, embarked with seventeen other monks in an osier boat covered with tanned hides and well greased. After sailing for forty days the monks reached an island with steep scarp sides where they received hospitality and took in provisions. Thence they were carried by the winds to an island covered by countless flocks of sheep (perhaps the Féroes, from far, a sheep). They took a lamb and then continued to a barren island close by where they intended to celebrate the Easter festival. When they had landed and started to cook the lamb the island began to move. The monks fled to their ship and then discovered that they had been on the back of a whale instead of on an island. Next they came to an island where they found a multitude of birds. They remained here until Pentecost, then wandered several months on the ocean. At last they reached an island of which St. Patrick was patron; here they celebrated Christmas, embarking again after the Octave of the Epiphany. A year had passed in these journeys. During the next six, the monks continued the same round, visiting the same islands. During the seventh year they found, to the north, a rocky barren island of the Cyclops' forges; this was the mouth of hell (perhaps Hecla in Iceland). Finally, they entered a zone of mist and darkness, and discovered the long sought Isle of Saints. They remained here for forty days, and then an angel appeared and told them to return to their own country.

734 The next important legend relating to this subject records that, in 714 or 734, the Archbishop of Oporto, with six other Spanish bishops, discovered Antillia or the Isle of the Seven Cities (evidently a revival of Plato's Atlantis myth—vide supra), and settled upon it with a number of companions of both sexes.

Antillia, represented as a large island in the mid-Atlantic, in about 35° north latitude, first appeared on a map of 1424, preserved at Weimar, and is found on the principal maps made during the rest of the century. The sixteenth and seventeenth century maps show it as a smaller island, with the name of "Sete Ciudades." Behaim gave the legend in a note on his globe of 1492.

Next in chronological order, and the first to be based on information susceptible of scientific analysis, came the discoveries of the Norsemen along the north-east coast of the American continent, in the tenth and eleventh centuries, starting from Greenland as a base. Our information regarding these discoveries is derived mainly from three sources, the Flatley Book, the Saga of Eric the Red, and Hawk's Book. These documents will be described presently, and an attempt made to identify the principal features of our coast therein described. In the year 986, the Greenland Colony was founded, by Eric the Red of Jaerden in Norway, who a few years before had settled in Iceland. In the summer of the same year, Bjarni, whose father, Herjulf, had accompanied Eric, and had settled in Greenland, arrived in Iceland from Norway with a cargo, and, finding his parents departed, determined to follow them. (The following extract is taken from the Flatley Book.) With his crew he "put to sea . . . and they sailed for three days before the land was laid; but then the fair wind ceased, and north winds and fogs came on, and they did not know where they were going, and they went on for many days. After this they saw the sun, and so were able to get their bearings, whereupon they hoisted sail, and after sailing that day they saw land, and they discussed among themselves what land this could be, but Bjarni said he fancied that it could not be Greenland. They asked whether he would sail to this land or not, 'I am for sailing in close to the land,' he said, and on doing so they soon saw that the land was not mountainous, and was covered with woods, and that there were small knolls on it, whereupon they left the land on the port side, and let the sheet turn towards it. Then after sailing two days they saw another land. They asked Bjarni if he thought this was Greenland; he said that he did not think this was Greenland any more than the first place, 'for it is said that there are very large glaciers in Greenland.' They soon neared this land, and saw that it was a flat country and covered with woods. At this point the fair wind dropped, whereupon the crew suggested that they should land there; but Bjarni would not. He ordered them to hoist sail, which was done, and they turned the bows from the land, and sailed out to sea for three days before a south-westerly breeze, when they saw the third land; now this land was high and mountainous, with ice upon it. So they asked if Bjarni would put in there, but he said he would not, since—as he put it—this land appeared to be good for nothing. They without lowering sail they kept on their course along the coast, and saw that it was an island: once more they turned the bows away from the land, and held out to sea with the same breeze; but the wind increased, so that Bjarni told them to reef, and not crowd more sail than their ship and rigging could stand. They now sailed for four days, when they saw the fourth land. Then they asked Bjarni if he thought this was Greenland, or not. Bjarni replied, 'This is most like what was told me of Greenland, and here we will keep our course towards the land.' So they did, and that evening they came to land under a cape, which had a boat on it, and there on the cape lived Herjulf, Bjarni's father, and it is from him that the cape received its name, and has since been called Herjulfness."

As we shall see presently, there is good reason to believe that the first land sighted by Bjarni was within the limits of the present United States, and that he was therefore the first European to discover the new continent.

In the year 1000, Leif, son of Eric the Red, introduced Christianity into Greenland. In the following year, he bought a ship of Bjarni, engaged a crew of thirty-five men, and, in the year 1002, sailed forth, going first to the country last visited by Bjarni. (The following extract is taken from the Flatley Book.) "There they sailed up to the land, and having cast anchor and lowered a boat went ashore, and saw no grass there. The background was all great glaciers, and all the intermediate land from the sea to the glaciers was like one flat rock, and the country seemed to them, destitute of value. Then Leif said, 'We have not failed to land, like Bjarni; now I will give this country a name, and call it Helluland (the land of flat stone).' Thereupon they returned on board, after which they sailed to sea and discovered the second land. Again they sailed up to the land and cast anchor, then lowered the boat and went ashore. This land was low-lying and wooded, and wherever they went there were wide stretches of white sand, and the slope from the sea was not abrupt. Then Leif said, 'This land shall be given a name from its resources, and shall be called Markland (woodland),' after which they returned to the ship as quickly as possible. And they sailed after that in the open sea with a north-east wind, and were out two days before they saw land, towards which they sailed, and having come to an island which lay to the north of the mainland they landed on it, the weather being fine, and looked round; and they perceived that there was a dew on the grass, and it came about that they put their hands in the dew, and carried it to their mouths, and thought that they had never known anything so sweet as that was. Then they went back to the ship, and sailing into the sound which lay between the island and the cape which ran north from the mainland they steered a westerly course past the cape. It was very shallow there at low tide, so that their ship ran aground, and soon it was a long way from the ship to the sea. But they were so very eager to get to land that they would not wait for the tide to rise under their ship, but hurried ashore where a river came out of a lake; but when the sea had risen under their ship they took the boat and rowed to the ship, and took her up the river and afterwards into the lake, where they cast anchor, and carrying their leather kitbags ashore they put up shelters, but later, on deciding to pass the winter there, they made large houses. [The last part of this description of the surroundings of Leif's camp, as will appear later, is, in all probability, copied from the earlier and fuller description in the Saga of Eric the Red.]

"There was no want of salmon, either in the river or the lake, and bigger salmon than they had seen before; the amenities of the country were such, as it seemed to them, that no cattle would need fodder there in the winter; there came no frost in the winter, and the grass did not wither there much. Day and night were more equally divided there than in Greenland or Iceland: on the shortest day the sun was up over the (Icelandic) marks for both noons and breakfast time [vide infra].

"Now when they had finished building their houses, Leif said to his men, 'Now I will divide our party into two, and have the country explored: and one half shall stay at home in camp while the other explores the country, going no further than they can return by the evening, and not separating.' And so for a time they did this, Leif sometimes going with the explorers, and at others staying at home in camp, . . .

"It happened one evening that a man of their party was missing, and this was Tyker the southerner [German]. . . . But [returning] a little later he said in Norse, . . . 'I have found something fresh to report. I found vines and grapes.' 'Is that true, foster-father?' said Leif. 'Certainly it is true,' he replied, 'for I was born where there was no lack of vines or grapes.'

"Now they slept that night, but in the morning Leif said to his crew, 'We will now do two things, keeping separate days for each; we will gather grapes and cut down vines, and fell wood, to make a cargo for my ship,' and this suggestion was adopted. The story goes that their pinnace was full of grapes. So a cargo was cut for the ship, and in spring they made ready and sailed away [to Greenland]; and Leif gave the country a name according to its resources, on a subsequent voyage (q. v. infra) and called it Wineland."

(The following extract is from the Flatley Book; other versions make Thorvald a companion of Karlsefn, on a subsequent voyage (q. v. infra)). "Now [probably in 1004, the year after Leif's return] there was much discussion of Leif's expedition to Wineland, and Thorvald, his brother, thought that the exploration of the country had been confined to too narrow an area. So Leif said to Thorvald, 'If you wish, brother, you shall go to Wineland in my ship: . . . Thereupon Thorvald prepared for this expedition, taking thirty men, . . . Afterwards they made their ship ready and held out to sea, and there is no report of their voyage before they came to Wineland to Leif's camp. There they laid up their ship, and remained quiet that winter, catching fish for their food. But in the spring Thorvald told them to make ready their ship, and ordered the ship's pinnace with some of the crew to go to the west of the country and explore there during the summer. It seemed to them a fine wooded country, the trees coming close down to the sea, and there were white sands. There were many islands, and many shoals. They found no traces either of men or beasts, except that on an island to the west they found a wooden barn. Finding no further human handiwork they returned, and came to Leif's camp in the autumn. But the next summer Thorvald sailed to the east with his trading ship, and along the more easterly part of the country: then a sharp storm arose off a cape, so that they ran ashore, breaking the keel under their ship; so they made a long stay there to repair their vessel. Then Thorvald said to his companions, 'Now I wish that we should raise up the keel here on the cape, and call it Keelness,' and so they did. Afterwards they sailed away thence and eastward along the coast and into the nearest fjord mouths, and to a headland which ran out there: it was all covered with wood. Then they moored their ship, and put out the gangway to land, and there Thorvald went ashore with all his crew. Then he remarked, 'This is a beautiful spot, where I should like to make my home.' After this they returned to the ship, and saw on the sands inside the headland three lumps, and on approaching they saw three canoes of skin, with three men beneath each. Thereupon they divided their party, and laid hands on all of them, except one who escaped with his canoe. They killed the eight, and afterwards went back to the headland, when they saw inside in the fjord some mounds, which they took to be dwelling places. After this there came over them so great a heaviness that they could not keep awake, and they all fell asleep. Then came a cry above them, so that they all woke up, and the cry was, 'Awake, Thorvald, and all your company, if you value your life: and return to your ship with all your men, and leave the land with all speed.' At that there came from within the fjord countless skin canoes, which made towards them. So Thorvald said, 'We must set the war-shields over the side, and defend ourselves as well as we can, while assuming the offensive but little.' So they did, but the savages, after shooting at them for a while, afterwards fled away, each as quickly as he could. Then Thorvald asked his men if they were wounded at all; they said there were no casualties. 'I have got a wound under the arm,' said he; 'an arrow flew between the gunwale and the shield under my arm and here it is, and it will be my death. Now my

c.1004 advice is that you prepare to go away as quickly as possible, after carrying me to that headland which I thought the best place to dwell in: maybe it was the truth that came into my mouth that I should stay there awhile. Bury me there with a cross at my head and at my feet, and call it Crossness hereafter for ever."

"Now Thorvald died, but they carried out all his instructions, after which they went and met their companions, and told each other such tidings as they knew, and they stayed there that winter, gathering grapes and vines for their ships. Then in the spring they prepared to go back to Greenland, and arrived with their ship in Eric'sfjord, with great news to tell Leif."

c.1020 (The following extract is from the Saga of Eric the Red, collated with that of Hauk's Book; passages in italics from Hauk's Book only.) About the year 1020 Karlsefni, a Norwegian, in a ship with forty men, sailed on a trading expedition to Greenland, where he spent the winter with Eric the Red, at Brattahlid, and married his daughter, Gudrid. At this time, there was much discussion "about a search for Wineland the Good, and it was said that it would be a profitable country to visit; Karlsefni and Snorri [Thorbrandson] resolved to search for Wineland, and the project was much talked about, so it came about that Karlsefni and Snorri made ready their ship to go and look for the country in the summer . . ." Bjarni Grimolfson and Thorhall Gamlison joined the expedition in another ship. The total force on both ships was 160 men. (The Flatey Book version reads: "They had with them all kinds of cattle, because they proposed to colonize the country if they could. Karlsefni asked Leif for his houses in Wineland, but he declared that he would lend his houses but not give them. Afterwards they put out to sea with their ship, and arriving at Leif's camp safe and sound they carried up their baggage.")

The Saga of Eric the Red continues: "After this they sailed away to the Western Settlement and the Bear Isles. They sailed away from the Bear Isles with a northerly wind. They were at sea two days. Then they found land, and rowing ashore in boats they examined the country, and found there a quantity of flat stones, which were so large that two men could easily have laid sole to sole on them: there were many arctic foxes there. They gave the place a name, calling it Helluland. Then they sailed for two days with north wind, and changed their course from south to south-east, and then there was land before them on which was much wood and many beasts. An island lay there off shore to the south-east, on which they found a bear, and they called it Bjarney (Bear Island), but the land where the wood was they called Markland (woodland). [The naming of Helluland and Markland, as well as Keelness—see below—is evidently borrowed from the account of Leif's voyage.]

"Then when two days were passed they sighted land, up to which they sailed. There was a cape where they arrived. They beat along the coast and left the land to starboard: it was a desolate place, and there were long beaches and sands there. They rowed ashore, and found there on the cape the keel of a ship, so they called the place Keelness: they gave the beaches also a name, calling them Furdustrands (the Wonder Beaches) because the sail past them was long. Next the country became indented with bays, into one of which they steered the ships. . . ."

"Now when they had coasted past Furdustrands . . ., they cast anchor and lay there . . ., and when three days were passed, two Scots, Hake and Hekja, who had been despatched to reconnoiter "southward along the land to explore the resources of the country . . . came running down from the land, and one of them had in his hand a grape-cluster while the other had a wild [self-sown] ear of wheat. . . . They received them into their ship, and went their ways, till the country was indented by a fjord. They took the ships into the fjord. There was an island outside, about which there were strong currents, so they called it Straumsey (Tide or Current Island). There were so many birds on the island that a man's feet could hardly come down between the eggs. They held along the fjord, and called the place Straumsfjord, and there they carried up their goods from the ships and prepared to stay: they had with them all sorts of cattle, and they explored the resources of the country there. There were mountains there, and the view was beautiful. They did nothing but explore the country. There was plenty of grass there. They were there for the winter, and the winter was severe, but they had done nothing to provide for it, and victuals grew scarce, and hunting and fishing deteriorated.

c.1020 Then they went out to the island, in the hope that this place might yield something in the way of fishing or jetsam. But there was little food to be obtained on it, though their cattle threw there well. . . . Soon afterwards there came a whale, and they went to it, and cut it up, but no one knew what sort of whale it was. . . . The cooks boiled this whale, and they ate it, but they were all ill from it. . . . : the state of the weather then improved and permitted them to row out, and from that time there was no lack of provision during the spring. They went into Straumsfjord, and got supplies from both places, hunting on the mainland, and eggs, and fishing from the sea.

"Now they consulted about their expedition, and were divided. Thorhall the Hunter wished to go north by Furdustrands and past Keelness, and so look for Wineland [evidently, they had not found Leif's camp], but Karlsefni wished to coast south and off the east coast, considering that the region which lay more to the south was the larger, and it seemed to him the best plan to explore both ways. So then Thorhall made ready out by the islands, and there were no more than nine men for his venture, the rest of the party going with Karlsefni. . . . After this they set out, and Karlsefni accompanied them by the islands.

"Before they hoisted their sail Thorhall recited a verse:

Now let the vessel plough the main
To Greenland and our friends again:
Away, and leave the strenuous host
Who praise this God-forsaken coast
To linger in a desert land,
And boil their whales in Furdustrand.

"Afterwards they parted, and they sailed north past Furdustrands and Keelness, and wished to bear westward; but they were met by a storm and cast ashore in Ireland, where they were much ill-treated and enslaved. There Thorhall died, according to the reports of traders.

"Karlsefni coasted south with Snorri and Bjarni and the rest of their party. They sailed a long time, till they came to a river which flowed down from the land and through a lake into the sea: there were great shoals of gravel there in front of the estuary and they could not enter the river except at high tide. Karlsefni and his party sailed into the estuary, and called the place Hóp.

"They found there wild [lit: self-sown] fields of wheat wherever the ground was low, but vines wherever they explored the hills. Every brook was full of fish. They made pits where the land met high-water mark, and when the tide ebbed there were halibut in the pits. There was a great quantity of animals of all sorts in the woods. They were there a fortnight enjoying themselves, without noticing anything further: they had their cattle with them.

"And one morning early, as they looked about them, they saw nine skin canoes, on which staves were waved with a noise just like threshing, and they were waved with the sun. Then Karlsefni said, 'What is the meaning of this?' Snorri answered him, 'Perhaps this is a sign of peace, so let us take a white shield and lift it in answer,' and they did so. Then these men rowed to meet them, and, astonished at what they saw, they landed. They were swarthy men and ugly, with unkempt hair on their heads. They had large eyes and broad cheeks. They stayed there some time, showing surprise. Then they rowed away south past the cape.

"Karlsefni and his men had made their camp above the lake, and some of the huts were near the mainland while others were near the lake. So they remained there, that winter; no snow fell, and their cattle remained in the open, feeding their own pasture. But at the beginning of spring they saw one morning early a fleet of skin canoes rowing from the south past the cape, so many that the sea was black with them, and on each boat there were staves waved. Karlsefni and his men raised their shields, and they began to trade: the (strange) people wanted particularly to buy red cloth, in exchange for which they offered skins and grey furs. They wished also to buy swords and spears, but Karlsefni and Snorri forbade this. The savages got for a dark skin a span's length of red cloth, which they bound round their heads. Thus things continued for awhile, but when the cloth began to give out they cut it into pieces so small that they were not more than a finger's breadth. The savages gave as much for it as before, or more.

"It happened that a bull belonging to Karlsefni's party ran out of the wood, and bellowed loudly: this terrified the savages, and they ran out to their canoes, and rowed south along the coast, and there was nothing more seen of them for three consecutive weeks. But when that time had elapsed they saw a great number of the boats of the savages coming from the south like a rushing torrent, c.1020 and this time all the staves were waved widderships, and all the savages yelled loudly. Upon this Karlsefni's men took a red shield and raised it in answer. The savages ran from their boats and thereupon they met and fought; there was a heavy rain of missiles; the savages had war-slings too. Karlsefni and Snorri observed that the savages raised up on a pole a very large globe, closely resembling a sheep's paunch, and dark in colour, and it flew from the pole up on land over the party, and made a terrible noise where it came down. Upon this a great fear came on Karlsefni and his party, so that they wished for nothing but to get away up stream, for they thought that the savages were setting upon them from all sides, nor did they halt till they came to some rocks where they made a determined resistance. . . .

"It now appeared to Karlsefni's party that though this country had good resources yet they would live in a perpetual state of warfare and alarm on account of the aborigines. So they prepared to depart, intending to return to their own country. They coasted northward, and found five savages in skins sleeping by the sea; these had with them receptacles in which was beast's marrow mixed with blood. They concluded that these men must have been sent from the country: they killed them. Later on they discovered a promontory and a quantity of beasts: the promontory had the appearance of a cake of dung, because the beasts lay there in the winter. Now they came to Straumsfjord, where there was plenty of every kind.

"Some men say that Bjarni and Freydis [Hauk's Book gives Gudrid] stayed there with a hundred men and went no further, while Karlsefni and Snorri went south with forty men, staying no longer at Hóp than a scant two months, and returning the same summer. . . . They considered that those mountains which were at Hóp and those which they now found were all one, and were therefore close opposite one another, and that the distance from Straumsfjord was the same in both directions. They were at Straumsfjord the third winter. . . .

"There Karlsefni's son, Snorri, was born the first autumn, and he was three winters old when they left.

"On sailing from Wineland they got a south wind, and came to Markland. . . . Here they captured two boys, from whom they learned that "another country lay on the other side, opposite to their own, where people lived who wore white clothes, and uttered loud cries, and carried poles, and went with flags. It is thought that this was Hvítmannaaland, or Ireland the Great. So then they came to Greenland, and stayed with Eric the Red for the winter. . . ."

c.1024 (The following extract is taken from the Flatey Book.) In the following year [1024?], "talk began again [in Greenland] about the journey to Wineland, for the voyage thither seemed both lucrative and honourable. The same summer that Karlsefni returned from Wineland there came a ship from Norway to Greenland, commanded by two brothers, Helgi and Finnbofi, and they stayed that winter in Greenland." Freydis, Eric's daughter, "invited them to go to Wineland with their ship, and divide with her all the profit they might make out of it. They consented. From them she went and interviewed her brother Leif, whom she asked to give her the houses which he had built in Wineland; but he gave her the same answer as before [to Karlsefni], that he would lend her the houses but not give them. . . ."

The brothers reached Wineland first, and took possession of Leif's camp. When Freydis arrived with her husband, Thorvald she insisted that her brother Leif had lent her the houses, and they therefore "made themselves a camp, which they placed further from the sea by the shore of a lake. . . ."

"Now when winter set in the brothers suggested that games should be started to pass the time. This went on for a while, until a quarrel arose which led to discord between them, and the games stopped, and no one went from the one camp to the other. . . ."

After this state of affairs had continued for some time, Freydis persuaded Thorvald to murder all the men in the other camp, and she herself killed all the women. In the spring they loaded the ship "with all the good things which they could collect, and the ship would hold," and after a rapid voyage, "came with their ship to Eric's fjord early in the summer."

As we have seen, these voyages to Wineland all took place between 986 and 1025. What we know concerning them was derived originally entirely from oral traditions. These traditions first began to be recorded in written form in the third quarter of the eleventh century, in the Descrípito of the "islands" or countries of c.1024 the North, which was written then by the well-known Adam of Bremen, but not printed until 1595. This work contains the following reference to Wineland,—"He (King Svein) told me of yet another island besides, discovered by many in that Ocean, which is called 'Wineland,' from the fact that there vines grow naturally, producing the best wine. Moreover, that corn abounds there without sowing we have ascertained, not from fabulous conjecture, but from the reliable (certa) report of the Danes."

At a slightly later time, probably during the first quarter of the twelfth century, Ari the Learned, the pioneer among Icelandic historians, composed his Islendingabók, which has come down to us only in a highly condensed summary by the author, which, however, contains one passage of great value as corroborative evidence of the recognized existence of Wineland and of some of the episodes related by the sagas at a period scarcely a century after the occurrences described. This passage reads,—"The country which is called Greenland was discovered and colonized from Iceland. It was a man called Eric the Red from Breidafjord who went out from this country, and took land in the place which was afterwards called Eric's fjord: he named the country and called it Greenland, saying that the fact that the country had a good name would attract men to journey thither. They found there, both in the east and the west of the country, dwellings of men, and fragments of canoes, and stone implements of a kind from which one could tell that a race had come (farit) there of the kind that inhabited (bygt) Wineland, and whom the Greenlanders call Skraelings. Now the date when the settlement of that country was started was from fourteen to fifteen winters before Christianity came here to Iceland [in 1000], according to an account given to Thorkel Gellison in Greenland by one who himself accompanied Eric the Red out."

The Landnámabók, in the authorship of which Ari evidently played an important part, although dealing almost exclusively with the history of Iceland, contains also one statement of corroborative importance in this connection. Speaking of Ari Marsson, who is there said to have been cast upon Hvítmannaaland, it continues,—"which some call Ireland the Great, it lies westward in the sea near Wineland the Good," from which casual reference it seems evident that the existence and position of Wineland were perfectly established and generally known.

Our prima-facie knowledge of the Wineland voyages is derived from two apparently independent sources, Hauk's Book, and the Flatey Book. The story as known to Hauk has come down to us in two very similar, but not identical, manuscripts, one contained in his book (Hauk's Book), and written partly in his own hand, probably in the first quarter of the fifteenth century, the other written in an early fifteenth century hand, and known as the Saga of Eric the Red. Both manuscripts are probably based on a common written archetype, dating from the early thirteenth century, and can therefore not properly be said to corroborate each other.

The Flatey Book version, on the other hand, contains much internal evidence of an independent origin; although it was the last of the three to assume written form, the existing manuscript probably having been written between the years 1370 and 1387, whereas, from internal evidence, it is clear that the existing manuscript of Hauk's Book follows an intermediate text written about 1325, and that similarly the Saga of Eric the Red probably embodies an even earlier and better intermediate text.

Leaving aside for the moment the question of the relative trustworthiness of the two sources, that represented by Hauk's Book, and that embodied in the Flatey Book, there can be no doubt that, on the whole, the latter contains the fuller and more interesting details of the Wineland voyages, although it is distinctly inferior to the other versions in connection with the most important of them all, Kalsefni's.

Quoting Gathorne-Hardy, the latest writer on the subject of the Norse voyages to America,—"Bjarni Herjulfsson and his adventure are recorded in the Flatey Book, and nowhere else in literature. Leif's voyage is represented by the same version also as being deliberately undertaken as a result of Bjarni's discoveries; elsewhere it is accidental, an episode of a different voyage. A separate voyage of Thorvald Ericson, terminating in his death, is detailed in the same account, whereas in the Saga of Eric the Red no such person is mentioned at all till the episode of his death, and in Hauk's Book and the companion manuscript he is represented as sailing and meeting his death under the auspices of Kalsefni's expedition. Finally, after Kalsefni's return, we have in the Flatey

c.1024 Book alone the story of Freydis's second visit to the newly discovered country." Furthermore, "numerous statements of a circumstantial nature are made in the Flatley Book version which find no place in the rival account. The important 'eykjarstad' observation is a good instance of this."

It is not feasible to enter here into a discussion of the various theories and arguments that have been advanced regarding the relative authority and merits of the three principal sagas, and the courses followed on the various voyages therein recorded. These complex and highly controversial questions have been dealt with by such writers as Torfaeus, Rafn, Weise, Storm, Horsford, Fiske, Reeves, Winsor, Fischer, Vigfusson, Fernald, Gathorne-Hardy, and at least a dozen others. We must content ourselves here by drawing attention to the fact that the older school, who accepted the superiority of the Flatley Book version, and proclaimed a location of Wineland in New England, south of Cape Cod, have, during the past few years, suffered a merited rebuke for their over-zealous dogmatism, especially in matters of detail. The advocates of the newer school, seem, in their turn, to have gone too far in maintaining the impossibility of locating Wineland within the territory of the United States, in the latter case basing their arguments largely on the conclusions of the botanist, Professor Fernald, that the wild-grapes and self-sown wheat, which play so important a part in the various narratives, were, in reality, the partridge-berry and lyme-grass, which do not grow in any quantity south of the St. Lawrence. But the pendulum has again begun to swing in the opposite direction, and the latest writer on the subject, G. M. Gathorne-Hardy, to whose work, The Norse Discoverers of America (Oxford, 1921), the author is indebted for many of the facts and theories here considered, as well as for the translations from the saga texts, goes far towards rehabilitating the fundamental tenets of the older school, by his logical, fair-minded, and, in most cases, convincing arguments. He stoutly defends the superiority, in most respects, of the Flatley Book version, which he believes to be based principally on the sagas as preserved in Greenland, which would account for differences, and an independence in form and treatment, which can hardly be satisfactorily explained if we assume an Icelandic origin.

Very briefly summarized, Gathorne-Hardy's conclusions in regard to the various voyages and locations are as follows:—

The lands discovered by Bjarni were Cape Cod, or the Barnstable Peninsula, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland.

Helluland is Newfoundland and Labrador, probably considered as one country.

Markland is Nova Scotia.

Wineland is New England, possibly including New York.

It will be seen, on reference to the map, that Greenland and these three continental land bodies, occupy relatively the positions, and are separated approximately by the distances, suggested by the sagas.

Keelson is the northern extremity of Cape Cod.

Straumfjord is Long Island Sound, while the Straumsey base is at its eastern extremity.

Furdustrands is the coast between Keelson and Straumfjord.

The author's conjectural identification of the various camps sites in Wineland is naturally, and confessedly, less convincing, although three separate sites are pretty clearly indicated, all south of Keelson, and it seems more than likely, as he maintains, that Leif's encampment was on the south shore of Cape Cod, or in its immediate vicinity (it may possibly be identical with Straumsey), and that Thorvald and Freydis successively occupied the same site.

As to the location of Karlsefni's winter quarters, two are clearly indicated, one at Straumsey, where he spent his first, and apparently his third, winter, and where Snorri was born, and one at Hóp, a considerable distance "south" of Straumsey.

The arguments suggesting a possible identification of the former with a point near the eastern entrance to the Sound, west of Fisher's Island, are very plausible. The suggested identification of Hóp with the estuary of the Hudson, although possible, has one very definite weakness—the island, between which and the cape facing north the river flowed through the lake to the sea, can hardly have been Long Island, for, as the author himself points out, the insularity of Long Island probably was not determined until Adriaen Block sailed through the Sound in 1614. Furthermore, the "great shoals of gravel" there, in front of the estuary, which made it impossible to "enter the river except at high tide," do not suggest anything in the neighbourhood of the mouth of the Hudson.

It is also difficult to reconcile the statement that "Karlsefni coasted south" with the fact that Sandy Hook lies much more nearly west than south from the eastern entrance to the Sound.

It is quite possible, as suggested by the author, that the combination of cape, island, shoal, river, and lake in the Flatley Book description of Leif's camp was borrowed bodily from the earlier description of Karlsefni's Hóp, as it is entirely improbable that Leif ever reached so southerly a point. "The writer of the Flatley Book, imbued with the idea that Leif and Karlsefni occupied identical camps, has evidently felt himself at liberty to draw his description of the scene of Leif's landing from the fullest report available, which, as he tells us, was Karlsefni's. Given the notion [which exists in the Flatley Book] that all explorers made the same landfall, this was natural and legitimate enough, but it adds an [other] element of confusion to our already difficult task."

While it is clearly impossible, with the information at our disposal, to harmonize or explain the many confusing, and often contradictory, statements contained in the sagas which have come down to us, and while it is therefore impossible to definitely fix the various localities therein referred to, nevertheless, the general conclusions here stated seem to the author, on the whole, to constitute the best working hypothesis, and to afford the most consistent and likely solution of this much vexed problem. At all events, there seems no sufficient reason to warrant the identification of Wineland as Nova Scotia, which is the only other location that can be seriously defended from a geographical point of view.

As to positive and demonstrable facts regarding the Norse settlements in Wineland, Fischer is obviously right when he states, in The Discoveries of the Norsemen in America, that, "If we sum up in brief the result of previous researches, we arrive at certain definite facts: the Norsemen for centuries possessed tolerably thriving colonies in Greenland. For this we have historical, geographical and cartographical proof, supported by Papal Briefs, and the accounts of the Papal Legates, and there are also the numerous ruins of churches, homesteads, and other buildings, besides numbers of Norse relics. Wineland, Markland, and Helluland, in short, the continent of America, were only occasionally visited but were not colonized as intended. Every theory in support of a lasting colonization of Wineland has proved untenable, and, most important of all, no amount of research has brought to light [there] any Norse remains or Norse ruins."

The author is quite aware that the above conclusions differ in important particulars from those of the majority of recent writers on the Norsemen, who exclude altogether southern New England, Connecticut, and New York, when considering the location of Wineland.

Mr. George Parker Winship, who is entitled to speak with high authority on all matters regarding the early voyages to our coast, and who represents the point of view of advanced modern criticism, sums up briefly the facts, as he understands them, in a recent letter to the author, from which the following extracts are taken. He writes:

"Before the end of the tenth century, Scandinavian voyagers had found their way to the land south-west of the colonies on the Greenland coast. This land seemed to them quite as good for purposes of settlement as the sea-coast villages in Iceland from which they came. An attempt was therefore made to establish here a new colony. By the year 1000 A.D. houses had been built, cattle pastured, and a child born at this westernmost outpost of mediaeval European wanderings. The Norse seamen, who had first been carried to this land by the ocean currents during a prolonged and dense fog, were able afterward, on several successive voyages, to lay their course to the place selected for a settlement there and back again to the earlier outpost colonies in Greenland, apparently with comparative certainty. This much may be stated, with considerable confidence, as a summary of all that is known regarding the earliest European visits to America."

After reviewing briefly the voyage of Bjarni, Leif, Thorvald, and Karlsefni, in substantial accordance with the narrative outlined above, he continues:

"In the original Saga text there are only two statements which lend themselves to serious scientific analysis as evidence regarding the region visited by the Norse explorers. One is that, at the settlement, on the shortest day in winter, the sun was in 'Eyk' position, and again in 'Dagmal' position. There can be no possible doubt that the seafarers knew precisely what this meant, and that their observation was trustworthy. Unluckily, the modern astronomer

c. 1024 who understands fully the mediaeval Icelaoic sea or star terms has not yet interpreted this statement. Those who have worked at the problem get results varying from 49° to 58° north latitude, i.e., north of Newfoundland. The other evidence is more satisfactory; it relates to the words which are chiefly responsible for the assurance with which some writers have located the settlement in southern New England. The wineberry (vinber), with which the voyagers loaded their boats, meat grapes, and could mean nothing else, to the historical students who have written about this episode. To a botanist, who looked into old books, as Professor M. L. Fernald demonstrated in 1910, it cannot possibly mean anything except currants, or the mountain cranberry. He showed also that the sub-Artic 'mountain cranberry' could have been gathered in quantity in springtime, and would have made a valued cargo that would stand the voyage, but that it can hardly have been procured, in quantity, south of northern Newfoundland. The botanical evidence is equally conclusive in identifying the 'self-sown wheat' with Elymus arenarius, stragg wheat, one of whose 'almost innumerable folk-names' is wheat in Norway and Iceland, where 'the flour it yields is considered to be finer in quality and more nutritive than any which is imported.' This occurs in great abundance north of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and only locally southward as far as Peaboscot Bay. Furthermore, the word translated 'wood' or 'maple' is found by Professor Fernald to have an early and precise meaning as the knob or protuberance which occasionally occurs in birch trees. This was highly valued by the Norse because from it were carved cups and other small vessels. This points to the American canoe birch, which does not occur as a seacoast tree south of Essex County, Massachusetts, but may be found anywhere on the Labrador coast."

His letter ends with the admonition, "Do anything you like with my suggestions—but don't hedge on the landfall—Fernald has a barrel of notes he has never used & everything focuses on Labrador."

1393 or 1394 A much later story, and one which is based on claims which deserve serious attention, relates the voyages of the Brothers Zeno, at the end of the fourteenth century. According to this story, Nicolo Zeno, a Venetian in the service of Henry Sinclair, Earl of Orkney and the Féroes, sailed in July, 1393 or 1394, to Egroenland (Greenland) with three ships. He visited the East Bygd and found there a monastery dedicated to St. Olaus. On his return to the Féroes he died, and his brother, Antonio, succeeded to his office. Antonio accompanied Sinclair on an expedition to the westward. Sailors had reported that, 26 years before, four fishing boats had been driven to a very rich island called Estotland, about 1,000 miles west of Frisland (Féroes Islands); after many adventures the castaways had come to a country called Drogeo, to the south, and after that to many other lands. It was to discover and, if possible, to conquer these lands that Sinclair and Zeno set out. They did not reach the countries described by the fishermen, but found Icaria and Trin (probably Cape Farewell) in the Western Sea. In the latter, Sinclair settled and built a town. Zeno returned to the Féroes Islands, where he arrived after sailing eastward for about a month, during 25 days of which he saw no land.

Antonio wrote an account of his voyage, of Nicolo's trip, and of the sailors' narratives, to his brother, Carlo, in Venice. He also sent a map or sailing chart which he had brought back from his expedition with Sinclair. These documents remained for more than a century in the palace of the family at Venice, until one of the children got hold of them and tore them up. This child was Antonio's great-great-grandson, Nicolo, born in 1515. When this Nicolo had come to middle age, he chanced upon some remnants of these documents. In the light of the rapid progress in geographical discovery since 1492, his ancestors' voyages took on an added interest to him. Nicolo collected all the documents he could find, redrew the map, which was in a very dilapidated condition, and published both, with annotations, in 1558, under the title Della scoperta dell' isole Frislandia, Eslanda, Engroenlanda, Estotlanda, Icaria, fatto per due fratelli Zeni, M. Nicolo il Causaliere, & M. Antonio.

Unfortunately, young Nicolo considered it necessary to make corrections and additions to the old map. As he had no personal knowledge of the places represented, he succeeded only in confusing the chart, thus greatly reducing its value. On the map, Greenland is attached to Norway, and names are grossly misspelled and misplaced. The Zeno map is poorly reproduced in Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., I: 127, and, full size, in F. W. Lucas' Annals of the Zeno Voyages (1898).

The Egroenland to which Chevalier Nicolo made his voyage was doubtless Greenland. If the story of his trip to East Bygd be true, his visit has a peculiar interest as the last distinct glimpse afforded us of the colony founded by Eric the Red. From the description of Estotland, it has proved impossible to identify the island with any assurance. The most common conjecture has identified it with Newfoundland. Concerning Drogeo, there is more certainty. Its description, and that of the vast stretch of country beyond it, peopled by oaked savages who lived by hunting and who were ruled by chieftains, is doubtless a description of America.

The authenticity of the Zeno narratives has long been a subject of contention among geographers. By some, the story has been looked upon as a Venetian claim to the discovery of America, but Nicolo sets up no such claim. He gives the story simply as an interesting narrative of his ancestors' voyages. Fiske, in The Discovery of America, thinks it reasonable to conclude that Nicolo reproduced the ancestral documents faithfully, because his book shows knowledge that he could not have got in any other way. Beazley, in Dawn of Modern Geography, III: 456-60, and elsewhere, and Lucas, in Annals of the Zeno Voyages (1898), regard the narratives as sixteenth century forgeries, whereas Miller Christy, in his appendix to The Silver Map of the World (1900), at least partially accepts them.

The exploration and settlement of the Canaries by the French seigneur, Jean de Bèthencourt, from 1402, and of Madeira by Zarco and Vaz, in the service of Prince Henry, from 1420, gave European enterprise a new and more advanced base for western expeditions. Last among the foreshadowings of the great Atlantic discoveries of 1492 and subsequent years, come the septemic colonization of the Azores, from about the year 1436, and the Portuguese expeditions, from the Azores as a starting point, into the ocean beyond, in the hope of further discoveries. Before the death of Prince Henry (1460), exploration had pushed some way into the Atlantic, south-west as well as due west from Europe, in the direction of Brazil and the West Indies, and therefore towards the distant shores of North America.

Jan Cousin, of Dieppe, is claimed by Desmarquets and other writers to have discovered South America in this year.—See Vol. II: 34.

1492

On Aug. 3, Columbus sailed from Palos with three ships, the "Santa Maria" (the flagship), the "Pinta," and the "Niña," and on Oct. 12, landed at Guanahani (doubtless San Salvador or Watlings Island), one of the Bahama group, and took formal possession in the name of Ferdinaod and Isabella of Spain. On the 28th, he landed on the island of Cuba, and shortly afterward discovered Haiti and built a fort on the shore named "La Navidad." Here he left a garrison, and sailed for home on Jan. 4, 1493.

Columbus's account of his first voyage, in a Spanish letter to Luis de Santangel, was first printed in April, 1493. See Church Catalogue, p. 8. His journal and maps are lost, but extracts from the former are preserved in Historia de las Indias, by Las Casas. See also Rudolf Cronau, The Discovery of America and the Landfall of Columbus (N. Y., 1921).

On May 4, 1493, Pope Alexander VI, issued a "Bull" fixing the "Line of Demarcation" between Spain and Portugal on a meridian passing through a point 100 leagues west of the Azores. The convention at Tordisillas, on June 7, 1494, moved the line to a point 370 leagues west of the Cape Verde Islands.

On Sept. 25, 1493, Columbus sailed from Cadiz, with 17 ships and 1,200 souls, largely colonists. On reaching La Navidad, he found it a waste, but at once started to build a city, which he named Isabella, a short distance to the east. He did not return to Spain until 1496.

On May 30, 1498 (2. v.), he sailed from San Lucas on his third voyage, and, on Aug. 5, set foot for the first time on the continent, on the north coast of South America.—Harrisse, Disc. of N. Am.; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., Vol. II.

1497

In this year, presumably shortly after May 2, John Cabot sailed from Bristol on his first American voyage, probably in the "Matthew," retreating about Aug. 10, the date of the king's privy purse reward "to him that found the new isle." Pasqualigo, writing

1497 — on Aug. 23, says: "the Venetian, . . . who went with the ship from Bristol, in quest of new islands is returned, and says that 700 leagues hence he discovered land, the territory of the Gran Cam. He coasted for 300 leagues and landed; he saw no human beings. . . . He was there three months on the voyage. . . ."

It is altogether probable that Cabot's landfall took place between Cape Breton and the Strait of Belle Isle. Although Harrisse, and other writers, have placed this landfall in New Foundland, north of Cape Race, it seems much more likely that it took place on Cape Breton Island, or at the north end of Nova Scotia; as, otherwise, it would be difficult, even making due allowance for fogs and off shore winds, to explain why Cabot, in search of a western passage, should have passed by the entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

On this voyage, which lasted about three months, or more likely on the second, undertaken during the following year, with five vessels, or during both of these voyages together, he sailed along the North East Coast.

Cabot's journals and charts are lost, and our contemporary information in regard to this second voyage is confusing and contradictory, even such as is derived from Cabot himself. Indeed, the very existence of this voyage, or rather the arrival of the expedition in American waters has been questioned. It seems altogether probable, however, that the voyage took place and that Cabot followed the coast, at least as far south as Cape Hatteras, and very likely sighted Sandy Hook. It is even possible that he coasted as far south as Florida, and there is good reason to believe that he landed, and explored the coast at a number of points.

The celebrated world-map drawn by Juan de la Cosa in 1500 (C. Pl. 1, Vol. II) is, doubtless, the first map to embody the results of Cabot's explorations on these voyages. This important map, with its mysterious and insinuating coast-line, is also the first to show any part of the North American continent. That this coast line was intended for America, and not for Asia, is evident, from the fact that the names which it contains are entirely different from those found at the time along the Asiatic coast, as well as for other reasons, fully discussed by Harrisse in Discov. of No. Am. (q. v.)

From the delineation of our coast on this map, it seems clear that Cabot (or the author of the map, whoever he was) followed pretty closely the sinuosities of the shore, and it does not require much imagination to recognize, in the prominent headland thereon delineated, Cape Cod. One might even venture to wonder whether the well-defined bay full of islands, south-west of the prominent cape, and just where the land begins to trend distinctly to the south, may not have been intended to represent the bay of New York; but this, of course, is mere surmise. See Harrisse, John Cabot, the Discoverer of North America, and Sebastian, his Son (London, 1898); The Discovery of North America (London, 1900), etc.; also C. R. Beazley, John and Sebastian Cabot, the Discoverers of America (London, 1898).

May 10 — On May 10, 1497, Vespucci sailed from Cadiz, and about July 1 sighted land, which he believed to be the continent, in 16° N.L. (probably in the Gulf of Honduras). Thence he followed the coast in a general northerly direction until he reached a place which is called Lariab in the Italian version of his journal (Lettera), and Parias in the Latin version (Cosmographia Introductio). Vide infra.

This place, we are told by Vespucci, was "in 23° beneath the parallel of Cancer," and probably corresponds to the moderna Tampico, the most westerly port on the Gulf of Mexico. The name Parias is found in this location on Schöner's globe of 1515. His globe of 1520 has Paria. See Thacher, The Continent of N. Am., Index, under Parias.

From this point, Vespucci says, he continued, always following the sinuosities of the coast, a distance of 870 leagues—about 3,300 miles—in a north-westerly direction. This is evidently an error for north-easterly, as otherwise he would have travelled, overland, almost to California. At the end of this course, he reached "the finest harbour in the world," where he remained 37 days.

Leaving here in July, he sailed 100 leagues, in an E.N.E. direction, to an archipelago, which has usually been identified with the Bermudas, but which there is equally good reason to identify with the islands off the coast of Maine. Thence he returned to Cadiz, reaching there Oct. 15, 1498 (the Latin edition gives 1499, evidently an error), after an absence of 17 months.

Vespucci's original journals of his four voyages, to which he several times refers in his Mundus Novus, and his Lettera, under the name "Quatro Giornale," as having been submitted to the King of Portugal, have disappeared. They were, however, mentioned by Jean Vespucci, his nephew and successor as pilot-major, as being, after his uncle's death, in his possession.

All the information that we have on the subject of the first voyage is contained in La Lettera (a letter addressed to Pietro Solerini, "Gonfaloniere Perpetuel" of Florence, signed by Vespucci, and dated from Lisbon, Sept. 4, 1504). This letter contains a résumé of Vespucci's four voyages.

The Lettera is known by two versions, the original, in Italian, with the title Lettera di Amerigo Vespucci delle isole nuovamente trovate in quattro suoi viaggi, being a small quarto of 16 leaves, undated, but probably printed at Florence, in 1505 or 1506, for Pietro Paccioli, by Gian di Carlo di Pavia. The only copy in America of this rare and important work is in the Princeton University Library. The first Latin version was printed in the Cosmographia Introductio, by Waldseemüller (Hylacomylus), at St. Dié in the Vosges mountains, from a French edition, now lost, and is dated April 25, 1507. The best English translation of the Italian and Latin texts is that of Michael Kerney, published in 1893, and reproduced, on the same page with the Italian and Latin texts, in John Boyd Thacher's The Continent of America, from which the following extract, describing Vespucci's first voyage, is taken:—

"This land [Lariab] is within the torrid zone, close to or just under the parallel which marks the Tropic of Cancer: where the pole of the horizon has an elevation of 23 degrees, at the extremity of the second climate. Many tribes came to see us and wondered at our faces and our whiteness: and they asked us whence we came: and we gave them to understand that we had come from heaven, and that we were going to see the world, and they believed it. In this land we placed baptismal fonts, and an infinite [number of] people were baptized, and they called us in their language Carabi, which means men of wisdom. We took our departure from that port: and the province was called Lariab: and we navigated along the coast always in sight of land, until we had run 870 leagues of it, still going in the direction of the maestrale [north-west] making in our course many halts, and holding intercourse with many peoples: and in several places we obtained gold by barter but not much in quantity, for we had done enough in discovering the land and learning that they had gold. We had now been thirteen months on the voyage: and the vessels and the tackling were already much damaged, and the men worn out by fatigue: we decided by general council to haul our ships on land and examine them for the purpose of staunching leaks, as they made much water, and of caulking and tarring them afresh, and [then] returning towards Spain: and when we came to this determination, we were close to a harbour the best in the world: into which we entered with our vessels: where we found an immense number of people: who received us with much friendliness: and on the shore we made a bastion with our boats and with barrels and casks, and our artillery, which commanded every point: and our ships having been unloaded and lightened, we drew them upon land, and repaired them in every thing that was needful: and the land's people gave us very great assistance: and continually furnished us with their victuals: so that in this port we tasted little of our own, which suited our game well: for the stock of provisions which we had for our return-passage was little and of sorry kind: where [i. e., there] we remained 37 days: and went many times to their villages, where they paid us the greatest honour: and [now] desiring to depart upon our voyage, they made complaint to us how at certain times of the year there came from over the sea to this their land, a race of people very cruel, and enemies of their: and by means of treachery or of violence slew many of them, and ate them: and some they made captives, and carried them away to their houses, or country: and how they could scarcely contrive to defend themselves from them, making signs to us that [those] were an island-people and lived out in the sea about a hundred leagues away: and so piteously did they tell us this that we believed them: and we promised to avenge them of so much wrong: and they remained overjoyed herewith: and many of them offered to come along with us, but we did not wish to take them for many reasons, save that we took seven of them, on condition that they should come [i. e., return home] afterwards in canoes because we did not desire to be obliged to take them back to their country: and they were contented: and so we departed from those people, leaving them very friendly towards us: and having repaired our ships, and sailing for seven days out to sea between northeast and east: and at the end of the seven days we came upon the islands, which were many, some [of them] inhabited, and others deserted: and we

1497 anchored at one of them: where we saw a numerous people who May called it Ithi. . . . We arranged our departure, and the seven men, 10 of whom five were wounded, took an island- canoe, and, with seven prisoners that we gave them, four women and three men, returned to their [own] country full of gladness, wondering at our strength:
 and we thereupon made sail for Spain with 222 captive slaves:
 and reached the port of Cadiz on the 15 day of October 1498, where we were well received and sold our slaves. Such is what befel me, most noteworthy, in this my first voyage."

Starting at Lariab, or Paria (Tampico), and following the sinuosities of the coast a distance of 870 leagues (measured on the globe, or on Lambert's projection), in a general north-easterly direction, carries us a little beyond New York, which may therefore be considered as the northernmost possible limit of Vespuccius' explorations. It is, however, perhaps, safer to identify the fine harbour which he mentions as the northern limit of this voyage as Chesapeake Bay, as, owing to the many bays and river mouths that he must have explored, he is more likely to have over-estimated than under-estimated the actual length of the coast-line between his starting point in 23° and the harbour which marked the northern limit of his exploration of the coast.

Varnhagen, in his Le Premier Voyage d'Américo Vespucci Définitivement Expliqué (Vienna, 1869), maintains that 770 leagues, rather than 870, should be accepted as the length of the voyage, when we take into consideration the distance covered going into bays, rivers, etc., which he figured would bring the northern limit of his voyage about to Cape Hatteras. He draws attention to the fact that a cape, and not a harbour, marks the northern limit on the map of Ruysch, 1508, and on that in the Ptolemy of 1513.

The archipelago, which Vespuccius tells us lay 100 leagues from the fine harbour, and which they reached in seven days, sailing in a direction "between N.E. & E." corresponds more nearly, in distance and direction, to the islands in the neighbourhood of the Peoboscot than it does to the Bermudas, which, moreover, there is every reason to suppose were uninhabited at this time, as they are known to have been a few years later.

This voyage of Vespuccius seems undoubtedly to be embodied in the De la Cosa map of 1500 (C. Pl. 1, Vol. II) the northern portion of which is, with equal probability, derived from the Cabot voyages of 1497 and 1498, while the South American coast-line probably follows the accounts brought back by Hojeda and Pinzon, with the former of whom De la Cosa himself sailed.

Vespuccius' first voyage is also the basis of the Cantino chart of 1501-2 (C. Pl. 2, Vol. II), and of the Canerio chart of c. 1503
 (C. Pl. 3, Vol. II), as well as of the large Waldseemüller map
 (C. Pl. 5, Vol. II) made to accompany the Cosmographie Introductio, of 1507, on all of which the Asiatic coast is also clearly shown. It is interesting to remember that the Cantino chart was made at Lisbon, at the very time when Vespuccius was there, on his return from his first voyage.

1500

— In the early summer of this year, Gaspar Cortereal sailed from Lisbon for a voyage to the north-west. He probably visited Newfoundland, the Hudson Straits, and Greenland. In December, 1500 he returned to Portugal.—Harrisse, Les Cortereal. This voyage seems to have been followed by a second, in the same year, from which Gaspar never returned, and by a third, in 1501 or 1502, in which his brother, Miguel, lost his life. Although unsuccessful in finding a passage to Cathay, these expeditions helped to open up for Portugal a source of profitable trade.

In this year, Juan de la Cosa, who had accompanied Columbus on his first and second voyages to the West, compiled his map of the world, on which he delineated all he knew of the discoveries in the New World, this information being undoubtedly derived, as we have seen, primarily from the voyages of Vespuccius and Cabot, probably with some help from those of Hojeda and Pinzon. This is the earliest map known on which the western discoveries are shown, and it therefore constitutes the starting point in a study of the cartography of the North-East coast. The original, drawn on an ox hide, is preserved in the Museo Naval at Madrid. As the names along the coast of North America show no Asiatic influence, and for other reasons, there can be no doubt that the author intended to represent America, not Asia.

This very important map is reproduced (in part) in Vol. II, C.
 Pl. 1, and is described on p. 131. See also Harrisse, Discovery.

1502

— The Cantino map or chart (C. Pl. 2, and pp. 6 and 131, Vol. II, Stevenson No. 1) was made in this year.

— The Canerio chart (C. Pl. 3, and pp. 7 and 131, Vol. II) was made between the map of Ruysch and that in the Ptolemy of 1513.

1503

— In this year, the Casa de Contratacion was created. It was a state institution, intended to concentrate all transactions relating to the New World; it had its own pilots, under a pilot-major, and a school of cosmography. On Aug. 6, 1508, the Spanish government ordered the creation of an official pattern map, called the padron real, by a commission of pilots (junta), chosen from among the most competent men of the kingdom, under the leadership of Americus Vespuccius, who was then pilot-major, an office expressly created for him that same year. This model map was "to embrace all lands, and isles of the Indies until then discovered, and belonging to the Crown." Thenceforth, the use of other maps was forbidden, under penalty.

All pilots were required to report "every land, island, bay, harbour, and other things new and worthy of being noted," discovered by them, as soon as they returned to Spain. In this way the official map of the new world was intended to be always kept up to date, and copies of it could be obtained at a fixed price from the Casa de Contratacion.

On Aug. 2, 1527, Charles V ordered that the padron real, thenceforth called padron general, should be verified by the pilot-major twice a year. For further information on this subject, see Vol. II, Cartography; and Harrisse, Discovery of No. Am., 255 et. seq.

1504

— The earliest book containing a collection of voyages to America was published at Venice in this year. It is entitled Libretto de tutta le Navigacione del Re di Spagna delle Isole, e Terreni nuovamente scoperte. Per Albertino Verellese. There is a copy of this book in the John Carter Brown Library. The only other copy known is a defective one which once belonged to Fernando Columbus, and is now preserved in the Biblioteca Marciana.—Harrisse, Bibl. Amer. Vet., No. 32, and Additions, No. 16; Harrisse, Christophe Colomb, I: 89; Humboldt, Examen critique, IV: 67; Sabin, Dict. of Books relating to Am., X: 327.

— Fishermen from Brittany are known to have reached the Newfoundland shores as early as this year.—Winsor, *Nar. & Crit. Hist.
 of Am.*, IV: 4, and authorities there cited.

1506

— Columbus dies at Valladolid.—Harrisse, Christophe Colomb, May II: 138. Las Casas, lib. II, cap. XXXVIII, tome III, page 194, 21 gives the date as May 20.

1507

— The name America is first applied to the Western Hemisphere Apr. in a book published at St. Dié by Martin Waldseemüller (Hylacomylus). This book, which is entitled Cosmographie introductio 25

1507 . . . Insuper quatuor Americi Vespuccij navigationes, contains a cosmographical treatise written by Waldseemüller, a Latin translation of the four voyages of Vespuccius, and some verses by Philelus.—See Church Catalogue, No. 23. See also Vespuccius, under 1497. The Cosmographiae introductio was accompanied by a large world-map, of 1507 (C. Pl. 5, and pp. 7 and 131, Vol. II), the first to contain the name America. The map bears also, conspicuously, the portrait of Vespuccius, and was, without doubt, based primarily on his discoveries. See Fischer & v. Wieser, Die Weltkarten Waldseemüller.

1509

Apr. King Henry VII of England dies, and his son, Henry VIII comes to the throne. On June 3, by dispensation of the Pope, he married Catherine of Aragon, sister of King Philip of Spain, and widow of his brother Arthur. They were crowned at Westminster on June 24.

1511

— The Bermuda Islands first appear on the map in Peter Martyr's Opera, etc. of this year.—Church Cat., No. 35. They were probably discovered a few years earlier. See Lafroy's Memorial of Bermuda, I: 1-2.

Mar. Ponce de Leon, who had accompanied Columbus on his second voyage, sailed from Porto Rico with three caravels, and, on Easter Sunday, March 27, sights the mainland that Vespuccius had discovered in 1498, along which he cruised until April 2, when he anchored in 30° 8', and landed. On the 8th, he took possession in the name of the King of Spain, and named the country Florida.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 233, and authorities there cited.

Sept. Vasco Nuñez de Balboa crosses the Isthmus of Panama and discovers the South Sea or Pacific Ocean.—Oviedo, Historia general de las Indias, lib. XXIX, cap. 3.

Jan. Louis XII, King of France, dies. He is succeeded by his son-in-law, Francis I, who reigned until 1547.

1516

1517

Oct. The British Museum contains a unique small black-letter octavo (imperfect), once belonging to Garrick, and bearing the title A new Interlude and a mery, of the nature of the iiii, Elementes (etc.). This little drama, which is one of the earliest of the English moral, or morality, plays, was reprinted by the Percy Society (Vol. XXII) in 1848, edited by J. O. Halliwell. In the cosmographical part of the play, "Experience" relates to "Studiuous Desire" many things regarding "dyuers straunge regions and of the new founde landys" of America. The following extract is taken from this part of the book: [Ex.] "This see is called the Great Occryan,

So great it is that never man
Coude tell it sith the worlde began;
Tyll nowe, within this xx. yere,
Westwarde be founde new landes,
That we never harde tell of before this
By wrytyng nor other meynys,
Yet many nowe have beo there;
And that contrey is so large of rome,
Muche longer than all Cristendome,
Without fable or gyle;
For dyvers maryners had it tryed,
And sayled streyght by the coste syde
Above v. thousande myle!
But what commodytes be wythin
No man can tell nor well imagin,
But yet not longe ago
Some men of this contrey went,
By the kyoges noble consent,
It for to serche to that extent,
And coude not be brought therto;
But they that were they venteres
Have cause to curse their maryners,
Fals of promys, and dissemblers,

That falsly them betrayed,
Which wold take no paine to saile farther
Than their owne lyst and pleasure;
Wherefore that vyage and dyvers other Suche kaytyfys have destroyed.
O what a thyng had be than,
Yf that they that be Englyshemen
Myght have ben the first of all
That there shulde have take possessyon,
And made furst buyldyng and habytacion,
A memory perpetuall!
And also what an honorable thyng,
Bothe to the realme and to the kyng,
To have had his domynyon extendyng
There into so farre a grounde,
Whiche the noble kyng of late memory,
The moste wyse prynce the iij. Henry Causyd furst for to be founde.
And what a great meritorouse dede
It were to have the people instructed
To lyve more vertuously,
And to lerne to knowe of men the maner,
And also to knowe God theyr Maker,

Buyldyng nor house they have non at all,
But wodes, cotes and cavyis small,
No merveyle though it be so,
For they use no maner of yron,
Nother in tole nor other wepon,
That shulde help them therto:
Copper they have, which is founde
In dyvers places above the grounde,
Yet they dyg not therfore;

Great haboundance of wodes ther be,
Most parte vyr, and pyne apple tre,
Great ryches Myght come therby,
Both pyche, and tarre, and sopp ashys,
As they make in the East landes,
By brynyng therof only.
Fysh they have so greet plenty,
That in hayvns take and slayne they be
With stavys, withouten fayle.
Nowe Frenchemen and other have founde the trade,
That yerely of fysh there they lade
Above an c. sayle;
But in the South part of that contrey,
The people there go naked alway,
The lande is of so great hétel
And in the North parte all the clothes
That they were is but bestes skynnes,
They have no other fete;
But howe the people furst began
In that contrey, or whens they cam,
For clerkes it is a questyon.

But this newe landes founde lately
Ben callyd America, bycause only Americus dyde furst them fynde.

But estwarde on the see syde,
A prynce there is that rulyth wyde,
Callyd the Cane of Catowe.
And this is called the great east see,
Whiche goth all alonge this way
Towardes the newe landis agayne;
But whether that see go thyther dyrectly,
Or if any wyldernes bytwene them do ly,
No man knoweth for certeyne:
But these newe landes, by all cosmografie,
Frome the Cane of Catous lande can not lye Lytell paste a thousande myle:
But from those new landes men may sayle playne
Estwarde, and cum to Englande agayne,
Where we began ere whyle.
Lo! all this parte of the yerth, whiche I Have here discryvyd openly,

1517 The north parte we do it call;
Oct. But the South parte on the other syde 25 Ys as large as this full, and as wyde,
Which we knowe nothyng at all,
Nor whether the moste parte be lande or see,

Harrisse, in his Bibliotheca Americana Vetustissima, Additions (1872), No. 38, assigns the date 1511, but quotes a manuscript note on the book, reading: "First impression dated 25 Oct. II Henry VIII," which would indicate 1510. In his Terre-Neuve, published in 1900, after discussing the Interlude at some length, he concludes that it was written "vers 1517"; 20 years after Cabot's first voyage. The British Museum catalogue, however, gives the date "1520—f," and Mr. Willerforce Eames, who has made a special study of the subject, places the date at "c. 1520."

One of the most interesting features of this poem is the reference, at this early date, to a continuous continental coast-line of "above 7, thousande myle," from Labrador to South America, which can hardly be said to have become an established fact until the voyage of Gomez, in 1525, and appeared for the first time in approximately accurate detail on the Mantua Map of the same year (C. Pls. 7 and 8, Vol. II). See Harrisse, Terre-Neuve, IV: lxxi.

31 Martin Luther posts on the door of the church at Wittenberg, Germany, his ninety-five theses on indulgences. In 1520, he published his Address to the Christian Nobility of the German Nation on the Improvement of the Christian Estate and The Babylonian Captivity of the Church. On June 15, 1520, a papal bull was issued against him, but Luther burnt it publicly on Dec. 10. This led, in 1521, to his excommunication and to the Edict of Worms, which put him under the ban of the Empire. These events ushered in the Reformation.

1519

— Fernando da Magalhaens (called Magellan by the French and English), on Aug. 10, 1519, left Spain, in command of five ships, on a westward exploration. One of these ships eventually was the first to circumnavigate the globe. He discovered the strait which bears his name, but was killed in the Philippines; one of his ships, the "Victoria," carried the survivors of the expedition around the Cape of Good Hope and back to Spain on Sept. 6, 1522.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 591-617, and authorities there cited.

1520

June Interviews take place near Calais between Francis I of France and 7-24 Henry VIII of England. The nobility of both kingdoms are present, and seek to outdo each other in magnificence and in feats of chivalry. The meeting is known as the "Field of the Cloth of Gold."

1521

June In 1520, Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, one of the auditors of the 30 Island of St. Domingo, despatched a vessel, under the command of Francisco Gordillo, with directions to sail northward through the Bahamas to the shores of the continent. Near the Island of Lucayoneque, Gordillo met a ship commanded by Pedro de Quexos, and the two decided to continue their explorations together, and, contrary to Ayllon's instructions, to engage in a slave trading expedition. After a sail of eight or nine days, they reached the coast of the continent, about in latitude 33° 30' (Chicoa and R. Jordan). They landed, and, on June 30, 1521, finally took possession of the country. Then, without further exploration, they returned to St. Domingo, carrying with them some 70 natives.—Testimony of Pedro de Quexos; Act of taking possession by Quexos; Act of Possession; Testimony of Aldana, cited in Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 238 et seq.; Harrisse, Disc. of N. Am., 199 et seq.

1524

Jan. Giovanni da Verrazano, a Florentine, is sent by Francis I, 17 King of France, in the "Dauphine," in search of a western passage to Asia. His point of departure was a "deserted rock" in the neighbourhood of Porto Santo, of Madeira, probably the small island now known as Porto Santo. From his letter to the king (the Cliller Codez, C. Pls. 66-81, and pp. 169-71, Vol. II), written at Dieppe on July 8, 1524, after his return, we know that he entered New York Bay, and saw the mouth of the Hudson River.

On March 7, after sighting the American continent in the neighbourhood of 34° N.L. (probably just above Cape Fear), and coasting southward for about 50 leagues (presumably to a point just north of Charleston), Verrazano, observing that the coast trended continually to the south, and finding no "port or any place where it was possible to stay with the ship," turned to the north, and having made a brief excursion on shore near the point of his first landfall, proceeded again northward along the coast, to which he gave the names "Forest of Laurels," and "Field of Cedars."

Skirting the coast, which he now found turned to the east, as far as Cape Lookout, which he named "Annunciata," he "found an isthmus a mile in width and 200 long." These words accurately described the continuous sandbar separating the ocean from Pamlico and Albemarle Sounds, which Verrazano evidently mistook for "the Oriental sea . . . which is the oee without doubt which goes about the extremity of India, China, and Cathay." To the isthmus he gave the name "Verrazano," a name which it retained for more than 50 years.

After leaving Cape Lookout, and passing Cape Hatteras, "following always the shore, which turned somewhat to the north [he writes], we came in a space of 50 leagues to another land which appeared much more beautiful and full of the largest forests." This is referred to as the land of vines, wild roses, violets, and lilies, and corresponds with the Accomac Peninsula of Virginia.

Up to this time, it will be noticed, no mention is made of anchoring at night, which probably accounts for Verrazano not having noticed the entrance to Chesapeake Bay, which, moreover, on account of its wide mouth, and the oblique direction of the river, has, from the sea, the appearance of a rather shallow indentation.

After remaining three days in the vine country, they proceeded, "always skirting the shore [the coast of Maryland] . . . which we baptized Arcadia, on account of the beauty of the trees, towards the north and east, navigating by daylight, and casting anchor at night."

Verrazano next reached "a coast very green with forests but without ports, and with some charming promontories and small rivers [Delaware and New Jersey]. We baptized the coast 'di Lorena' . . . the first promontory 'Lazone' [Cape Henlopen], the second 'Bonivoto' [Cape May], the largest river 'Vandoma' [the Delaware], and a small mountain which stands by the sea 'di S. Polo' [Navesink Highlands]."

"At the end of 20 leagues [from the starting point in 34°], we found a very agreeable situation located within two small prominent hills [Navesink Highlands and the high ground at the east end of Staten Island], in the midst of which flowed to the sea a very great river [the Hudson]."

This is the first time that Verrazano mentions hills in his account, and the Navesink Highlands are, indeed, the first hills of any importance found on the whole stretch of coast from Florida northward.

Beyond these hills, he describes, "within the land about half a league [inside the Narrows], a very beautiful lake with a circuit of about three leagues [the Upper Bay]."

Verrazano called the bay "Santa Margarita," and the river and the surrounding land "Angoleme," all in honour of the royal family.

In a small book (une libretto), he collected technical observations made during his voyage, notably the longitudinal distances and the movements of the tides. This libretto is, unfortunately, lost.

It is interesting to compare Verrazano's account of his approach to New York with the accounts of the same neighbourhood written in later years by Van Meteren, Juet, and De Lset. Van Meteren (Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 7) describes Hudson's entrance, on Sept. 12, 1609, as follows: "They found a good entrance between two headlands [at the Narrows] and entered . . . into as fine a river as can be found, wide and deep, with good anchoring ground [and vegetation] on both sides."

Juet (Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 17) writes (Sept. 2, 1609): "For to the Northward off us we saw high Hills. . . . This is a very good Land to fall with, and a pleasant Land to see." He adds (Sept. 3): "The Land is very pleasant and high, and bold to fall withal. At three of the clocke in the after-noon, we came to three great Rivers" (the Raritan, the Arthur Kill, and the Narrows).

De Lset (Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 38), observes: "Continuing their course along the shore [New Jersey], they observed a white sandy beach and drowned land within; beyond which the land was full of trees, the coast running north-east by north and southwest by east. Afterwards the direction of the coast changed to north by east, and was higher land than they had yet seen, along to a lofty promontory [the Highlands], behind which was situated a bay

1524 [Sandy Hook Bay], where they ran up into a roadstead behind a Jan. low sandy point [Sandy Hook], in latitude 40° 18'."

17 The discoveries of Verrazzano are found first on a map of the to world by Vesconte di Maggiolo, dating from 1527 (C. Pl. 12, Vol. II); 17 secondly, and most clearly, on a large sea-chart drawn by his brother, July 8 Girolamo, five years after his visit, namely, in 1529 (C. Pl. 13, Vol. II); and thirdly, on a map of Nova Francia, in Ramusio, 1556 (C. Pl. 14, Vol. II), which is probably derived from some now lost map by Gastaldi, closely resembling his map of 1646 shown in outline on C. Pl. 17, and the unsigned Italian map of 1560 shown on the same plate, which also is probably by him.—See Vol. II, p. 15, footnote 44, and Addenda, 1560.

For a description of these maps, and others of the "Verrazzano type," and a discussion of Verrazzano's voyage as therein depicted, see Vol. II, Cartography, page 13 et seq. See also pages 169-71, and C. Pls. 60 to 81, Vol. II, for a description and reproduction of the Cèllere Codex, and a discussion of Verrazzano's other letters and the texts based thereon; and also Prof. Bacchiani's critique, with an introduction by Edward Hagaman Hall, in the 15th Annual Report (1910) of the Am. Scenic & Hist. Preservation Soc. Dr. Hall's translation of the Cèllere Codex (occasionally modified, to make the meaning clearer), is given here in full, as follows:

(Note.—The letters R., F., C., and Rm. refer, respectively, to the Cèllere or Roman Codex [reproduced in full in Vol. II, C. Pls. 60-81], the Florentine Codex, the fragment in the Academy of Cimento, and the account in Ramusio. The italics in the text of the Cèllere or Roman Codex (R.) indicate words not found in the Florentine Codex (F.). The notes in parentheses are interpolations, marginal notes, etc., in R., in a hand differing from that of the amanuensis, and were probably written by Verrazzano himself. Variations from R., found in F., C., and Rm., are given in brackets. If these include additions to the R. text, such additions are in italics.)

"After the storm had moved towards the north, Most Serene King, I did not write to Your Majesty concerning that which was experienced by the four ships [The R. document uses the word "navi" for ships; the F. document uses "legni," meaning the same thing. In the following notes, which refer to similar variations which have no special significance, or which cannot readily be expressed in English, or which (as is sometimes the case) make nonsense, I have referred the reader to the Italian text following.—Translator.] which thou hadst sent through the Ocean to discover new lands, thinking that thou hadst been informed of everything—how we were compelled by the impetuous force of the winds to return to Brittany with only the distressed Normanda and Dauphine; where having made repairs, Your Majesty will have learned of the voyage we made with them, armed for war, along the coasts of Spain [Rm. we took our course along the coasts of Spain: which Your Majesty will have learned by the profits which we made thereby.] Later, it was ordered that we should continue the original voyage with the Dauphine alone [Rm. later, with the Dauphine alone, the discovery of new countries was considered in order not to leave incomplete the voyage already commenced—See Italian text]; having returned from which, I will tell Your Majesty what we have found.

"We started from the deserted rock near the Island of Madeira belonging to the Most Serene King of Portugal (commencing 1524. [The same hand had written 1523, then changed the 3 to 4]) with the said Dauphine, on the XVII of the month of January past, with fifty men, furnished with victuals, arms and other instruments of war and naval munitions for eight months; departing, we sailed westward with an east south-east wind blowing with sweet and gentle mildness [F. lightness]. In XXV days we sailed eight hundred leagues. The XXIII day of February [Rm. on the 20 February] (perhaps 16 hours) we experienced as severe a storm as ever any man who has navigated experienced. From which, with divine aid and the goodness of the ship, enabled by its glorious name and fortunate destiny [F. goodness and praise of the glorious name and fortunate achievement. Rm. goodness of the ship together with the good fortune of its name] to resist the violent waves of the sea [Rm. And the sea subsiding, with favourable wind], we were saved. We pursued our navigation continuously toward the west, bearing somewhat to the north. In XXV more days we sailed more than 400 leagues, where there appeared to us a new land never before seen by anyone, ancient or modern.

"At first it appeared rather low, having approached to within a quarter of a league, we perceived, by the great fires built on the shore of the sea, that it was inhabited. We saw that it extended toward the south; following it, to find [Rm. searching them to discover] some port [F. near port] where we could anchor with the ship and investigate its nature, in the space of fifty leagues we did not find a port or any place where it was possible to stay with the ship. And having seen that it trended continually to the south (in order not to meet with the Spaniards), we decided to coast along it again toward the north, where we found the same [place that we started from—?] [Rm. where we found ourselves in the same difficulty]. We anchored by the coast, sending the small boat to land. We saw many people, who came to the shore of the sea and seeing us approach fled, sometimes halting, turning back, looking with great admiration. Reassuring them by various signs, some of them approached, showing great delight at seeing us, marvelling at our clothes, figures and whiteness [See Italian text], making to us various signs where we could land more conveniently with the small boat, offering us of their foods.

"We were on land, and I shall tell Your Majesty briefly what we were able to learn of their life and customs:

"They go altogether naked except that at the private parts they wear some skins of little animals similar to martens, a girdle of fine grass woven with various tails of other animals which hang around the body as far as the knees; the rest nude; the head likewise. Some wear certain garlands [F. similar garlands] of feathers of birds. They are of black color not much unlike the Ethiopians [Rm. they are of berretta color and not much different from the Saracens]; their hair is black and thick, and not very long, which they tie together back on the head in the shape of a little tail. As for the symmetry of the men [F. likeness of the men], they are well proportioned, of medium stature, and rather exceed us. In the chest they are broad, their arms well built, the legs and other parts of the body well put together. There is nothing else to remark, except that they incline somewhat to broadness in the face; but not all, for in many we saw the face clear-cut. The eyes are black and large, the glance intent and quick. They are not very strong, [but] of keen intelligence, swift and the greatest runners. From what we were able to learn by experience, they resemble in the last two respects the Orientals, and mostly those of the farthest Siarian regions [Rm. regions of China]. We were not able to learn in detail of the life and customs of these people because of the shortness of the stay we made on land, on account of there being few people and the ship anchored in the high sea [see Italian text].

"We found on the shore, not far from these, other people whose mode of life we think is similar. I will tell Your Majesty about it, describing at present the site and nature of said land. The sea-shore is all covered with fine sand XV feet high, extending in the form of little hills about fifty paces wide [Rm. rising about 15 feet, extending in the form of broad little hills]. After going ahead [Rm. After having navigated], some rivers and arms of the sea were found which enter through some mouths, coursing the shore [Rm. washing the shore] on both sides as it follows its winding [F. its shore. Rm. its turning]. Near by appears the spacious land, so high that it exceeds [overtops] the sandy shore, with many beautiful fields and plains [F. provinces], full of the largest forests, some thin and some dense, clothed with as many colors of trees [F. of various colors. Rm. various sorts of trees], with as much beauty and delightful appearance as it would be possible to express. And do not think, Your Majesty, that these are like the Hycranian Forest or the wild solitudes of Scythia [Rm. solitudes of Tartary] and northern countries, full of rugged trees [F. full of vines and trees. Rm. wild trees], but adorned and clothed with palms, laurels, cypresses [Rm. tall cypresses ("tall" was also written in R. but was cancelled)], and other varieties of trees unknown in our Europe (We baptized this land "Forest of Laurels" and a little farther down on account of the beautiful cedars it was given the name "Field of Cedars"); which, for a long distance, exhale the sweetest odors (We smelled the odor a hundred leagues, and farther when they burned the cedars and the winds blew from the land); the property of which we were not able to learn, for the cause above narrated, not that it was difficult for us to travel through the forests [F. through the forests], because their density is not so great that they are not everywhere penetrable. We think that, partaking of the Orient, on account of the surroundings, they are not without some drugs or aromatic liquor. And other riches: gold [F. gold and other], to which land of such a color has every tendency. It abounds in many animals, stags, deer, hares; likewise in lakes and pools of living water, with many kinds of birds, adapted and convenient for every delectable pleasure of the hunt [Rm. pleasure of the chase].

1524 "This land lies in 34 degrees (like Carthage and Damascus).
Jan. The air salubrious, pure and with moderate heat and cold; in those 17 regions gentle winds blow, and those which prevail most continu-to ously are west-north-west and west [See Italian text], in summer July sky clear and serene with infrequent rains, and if sometimes owing to 8 the south winds the air gathers in clouds or darkness [See Italian text], in an instant, not lasting, it is dispelled, and the air again becomes pure and clear; the sea tranquil and not boisterous, the waves of which are placid. And although the shore always tends to lowness, and is barren of ports, it is not troublesome to sailors [Rm. tiresome for sailors], being entirely clear and without any rocks; so deep that within only four or five paces from land are found, regardless of flood or ebb, XX feet of water, the depth of the sea increasing in uniform proportion [See Italian text]; with such good holding-ground [F. territory. Rm. anchorage] that any ship howsoever afflicted by the tempest can never perish in those parts unless it breaks its rope [Rm. cable]. And this we have proved by experience; because many times at the beginning of March when the [full] force of the winds usually prevails in all countries, being anchored in the high sea, oppressed by storms, we found the anchor broken before it dragged on the bottom or made any movement.

"We left this place continually skirting the coast, which we found turned to the east. Seeing everywhere great fires on account of the multitude of inhabitants, anchoring there off the shore [F. anchoring off that shore] because it did not contain any port, on account of the need of water we sent the little boat to land with XXV men. Because of the very large waves which the sea cast up on the shore, on account of the strand being open, it was not possible, without danger of losing the boat, for any one to land. We saw many people on shore making us various signs of friendship, motioning us ashore; among whom I saw a magnificent deed, as Your Majesty shall hear.

"Sending ashore by swimming one of our young sailors, carrying to them some trinkets, such as little bells [Rm. in order to send them some of our things, by the Indians commonly much desired and valued, as are sheets of paper, little bells], mirrors, and other pretty trifles, and having approached within 4 fathoms of them, throwing the goods to them and wishing to turn back he was so tossed by the waves that, almost half dead, he was carried to the edge of the shore. Which having been seen, the people of the land ran immediately [to him]; taking him by the head, legs and arms, they carried him some distance away. Whereupon, the youth, seeing himself carried in such a way [F. in such shape], stricken with terror, uttered very loud cries, which they did similarly in their language, showing him that he should not fear. After that, having placed him on the ground in the sun at the foot of a little hill, they performed great acts of admiration, looking at the whiteness of his flesh, examining him from head to foot [Rm. omits "examining him from head to foot"]. Taking off his shirt and shoes and stockings, leaving him naked, they made a very large fire near him, placing him near the heat. Which having been seen, the sailors who had remained in the small boat, full of fear, as is their custom in every new experience, thought that they wanted to roast him for food. His strength recovered, having remained with them awhile, he showed by signs that he desired to return to the ship; who [the natives], with the greatest kindness, holding him always close with various embraces, accompanied him as far as the sea, and in order to assure him more, stationing themselves on a high hill, stood watching him until he was in the boat. Which young man learned of this people that they are thus: of black color like the others, the flesh very lustrous, of medium stature, the face more clear-cut, much more delicate of body and of limb, of much less strength and of keener intelligence. He saw nothing else [Rm. I saw nothing else]. (We called it Annuziata from the day of arrival, where is found an isthmus a mile in width and about 200 long, in which, from the ship, was seen the oriental sea between the west [before had been written "the east"] and north. Which is the one, without doubt, which goes about the extremity of India, China and Cathay. We navigated along the said isthmus with the constant hope of finding some strait [after which it is written, but cancelled, "to the end of [or, in order to find—],"] or true promontory at which the land would end toward the north in order to be able to penetrate to those blessed shores of Cathay. To which isthmus was given by the discoverer [the name Isthmus of Verrazano; as all the land found was named Francesca after our Francis].

"Having departed thence, following always the shore which turned somewhat toward the north, we came in the space of fifty leagues to another land which appeared much more beautiful and full of the largest forests. Anchoring at which, XX men going about two leagues inland, we found the people through fear had fled to the woods. Searching everywhere, we met with a very old woman and a young woman of from XVIII to XX years of age, who through fear had hidden themselves in the grass. The old one had two little girls whom she carried on her shoulders, and back on her neck she carried a boy, all of eight years of age [F. of about eight years. Rm. a little boy of about eight years]. The young woman had as many but all girls. Having approached towards them, they began to scream, [and] the old woman to make signs to us that the men had fled to the woods. We gave them to eat of our food, which the old woman accepted [F. they accepted] with great gusto; the young woman refused everything and with anger threw it to the ground. We took the boy away from the old woman to carry him to France, wishing also to take the young woman, who was of much beauty and of tall stature, it was not however possible for us to conduct her to the sea, on account of the very great cries which she uttered. And having to pass through some woods, being far from the ship, we decided to leave her, carrying only the boy.

"These we found lighter colored than the previous ones, dressed in certain grasses which grow, pendent from the branches of the trees, and which they weave with various ends of wild hemp [Rm. cords of wild hemp]. The head bare in the same way as the others. Their food in general consists of pulse which they have in abundance, differing in color and size from ours, of excellent and delightful flavor; besides, from hunting, fishes and birds, which they take with bows and with snares. They make [the bows] of tough wood, and arrows of reeds, placing at the extremities bones of fishes and of other animals. The beasts in this part are much wilder than in our Europe because they are continually molested by the hunters. We saw many of their boats constructed from a single tree twenty feet long, four wide, which are not fashioned with stones, iron or other kind of metals, because in all this land, in the space of two hundred leagues which we traveled, only one stone of any kind was seen by us. They aid themselves with the fourth element [Rm. they help themselves with fire], burning such part of the wood as is necessary for the hollowing of the boat, also of the stern and prow, so that, sailing, it is possible to plough the waves [Rm. to endure the waves] of the sea.

"The land in situation, goodness and beauty, is like the other; the forests open [scarce—?]; full of various kinds of trees, but not of such fragrance, on account of being farther north and colder. We saw in that [land] many vines growing wild, which, rising, entwine themselves around the trees, as they do in Cisalpine Gaul [Rm. as they are accustomed to do in Lombardy]; which, if they had a perfect system of culture by agriculturists, without doubt would produce excellent wines, because we found many times the dry fruit of those [F. drinking the product of those. Rm. having many times seen the dry fruit of those] [vines] sweet and agreeable, not different from ours. They are held in esteem by them [the inhabitants], because wherever they grow, they lift up the surrounding bushes [See Italian text] in order that the fruit may be able to mature. We found wild roses, violets and lilies, and many sorts of herbs, and fragrant flowers different from ours. We did not learn about their habitations on account of their being within, inland. We think, on account of many signs which we saw, they are composed of wood and grass, and we believe also from various indications and signs that many of them, sleeping on the ground, have nothing for cover except the sky. We did not learn anything else of them. We think all the others of the land [by which we] passed lived in the same manner.

"Having remained in this place three days, anchored off the coast, we decided, on account of the scarcity of ports, to depart, always skirting the shore (which we baptized Arcadia on account of the beauty of the trees. In Arcadia we found a man who came to the shore to see what people we were: who stood hesitating and ready for flight. Watching us, he did not permit himself to be approached. He was handsome, nude, with hair fastened back in a knot, of olive color. We were, about XX [in number] ashore, and yielding to our coaxing he approached to within about two fathoms, showing a burning stick as if to offer us fire. And we made fire with powder and flint-steel and he trembled all over with terror and we fired a shot. He stopped as if astonished and prayed, worshipping like a monk, lifting his finger toward the sky, and pointing to the ship and the sea he appeared to bless us) toward the north and east, navigating only during the day 1524 and casting anchor at night (we followed a coast very green with forests

Jan. but without ports, and with some charming promontories and small 17 rivers. We baptized the coast "di Lorena" after the Cardinals; the to first promontory "Lanzone," the second "Boniferno," the largest river July "Fandora," and a small mountain which stands by the sea "di S.
8 Polo" after the Count).

"At the end of a hundred leagues we found a very agreeable situation located within two small prominent hills [Rm. among little hills], in the midst of which flowed to the sea a very great river [Rm. very great torrent], which was deep within the mouth; and from the sea to the hills of that [place] with the rising of the tides, which we found eight feet, any laden ship [Rm. any great loaded ship] might have passed. On account of being anchored off the coast in good shelter [F. restraint. Rm. in a place well protected from winds], we did not wish to adventure in without knowledge of the entrance [the mouth]. We were with the small boat, entering the said river to the land, which we found much populated. The people, almost like the others, clothed with the feathers of birds of various colors, came toward us joyfully, uttering very great exclamations of admiration, showing us where we could land with the boat more safely. We entered said river, within the land, about half a league, where we saw it made a very beautiful lake with a circuit of about three leagues [the Upper Bay]; through which [the Indians] went, going from one and another part with XXX of their little boats, with innumerable people, who passed from one shore and the other in order to see us. In an instant, as is wont to happen in navigation, a gale of unfavorable wind blowing in from the sea, we were forced to return to the ship, leaving the said land with much regret because of its commodiousness and beauty, thinking it was not without some properties of value, all of its hills showing [Rm. some wealth showing] indications of minerals [Called Angôleme from the principality which thou attainedst in lesser fortune [as a minor part of thy fortune—], and the bay which that land makes Santa Margarita from the name of thy sister, who vanquishes the other matrons in modesty and intelligence].

"The anchor raised, sailing toward the east, as thus the land turned, having traveled LXXX leagues [Rm. and so 50 leagues] always in sight of it, we discovered an island triangular in form, distant ten leagues from the continent, in size like the island of Rhodes, full of hills, covered with trees, much populated [judging] by the continuous fires which we saw they made along all the neighbourhoods. We baptized it in the name of your most illustrious mother (Aloysia); not anchoring there on account of the unfavorableness of the weather [Rm. on account of the contrariness of the weather]."

It is interesting to compare this last passage with the corresponding text of De Laet's account of Verrazano's voyage, in his Nieuwe Wereld, 3d Book, Chap. I, p. 90 (edition of 1630). He says:

"They thus continued along the coast, fully one hundred miles [Dutch miles, or leagues] according to their estimation, where they found a beautiful river. Thence the coast again trended eastward, which they followed for nearly fifty miles and then discovered an island which had the form of a triangle, lying ten miles off the main land, full of hills, which were densely covered with trees and well populated, which they called Claudia." De Laet names Hakluyt among his sources, and probably derived his account from Hakluyt's publication. It is interesting to notice that he uses the name Claudia, which appears on the Dutch maps of the period.

The Cöllere Codex continues:

"We came to another land, distant from the island XV leagues, where we found a very beautiful port, and before we entered it, we saw about XX small boats of the people who came with various cries of woe under round about the ship. Not approaching nearer than fifty paces, they halted, looking at the edifice [i. e., the ship. Rm. the workmanship], our figures and clothes; then all together they uttered a loud shout, signifying that they were glad. Having reassured them somewhat, imitating their gestures, they came so near that we threw them some little bells and mirrors and many trinkets, having taken which, regarding them with laughter, they entered the ship confidently. There were among them two Kings, of as fine stature and form as it would be possible to tell; the first of about XXXX years [Rm. of 20 years], the other a young man of XXXIII years, whose clothing was thus: the older had on his nude body a skin of a stag, artificially worked like a damask with various embroideries; the head bare, the hair turned back with various bands, at the neck a broad chain ornamented with many stones of diverse colors. The young man was almost in the same style. This is the most beautiful people and the kindest in manners that we have found on this voyage. They excel us in size; they are of bronze color [F. of very white color], some inclining more to whiteness, others to tawny color; the face sharply cut, the hair long and black, upon which they bestow the greatest study in adorning it; the eyes black and alert, the bearing kind and gentle, imitating much the ancient [manner]. Of the other parts of the body I will not speak [F. I do not speak] to Your Majesty, as they have all the proportions which belong to every well built man [F. to one well built]. Their women are of the same beauty and charm [F. form and beauty. Rm. conformation and beauty]; very graceful; of comely mien and agreeable aspect; of habits and behavior as much according to womanly custom as pertains to human nature; they go nude with only one skin of the stag embroidered like the men [Rm. nude except the private parts, which they cover], and some wear on the arms very rich skins of the lynx; the head bare, with various arrangements of braids, composed of their own hair, which hang on one side and the other of the breast. Some use other hair-arrangements such as the women of Egypt and of Syria [F. Soria] use, and these are they who are advanced in age and are joined in wedlock. They have in the ears various pendent trinkets as the orientals are accustomed to have, the men like the women, among which we saw many plates wrought from copper, which is prized by them more than gold; which, on account of its color, they do not esteem; but among all [colours] it is held by them the most worthless [F. because it is held very worthless on account of the yellow color which they abhor]; they on the other hand rating blue and red above any other. The things which they were given by us and which they most valued were little bells, blue crystals and other trinkets to place in the ears and on the neck. They did not prize cloth of silk and of gold nor even of other kind [F. kind of cloth], nor did they care to have them; likewise with metals like steel and iron; for many times showing them our arms they did not conceive admiration for them nor ask for them, only examining the workmanship. They did the same with the mirrors; suddenly looking at them, they refused them, laughing. They are very liberal, so much so that all which they have they give away. We formed a great friendship with them, and one day, before we had entered with the ship into the port, remaining on account of the unfavorable weather conditions anchored a league at sea, they came in great numbers in their little barges to the ship, having painted and decked [F. tattooed and bedecked. Rm. all painted] the face with various colors, showing us it was evidence of good feeling, bringing us of their food, signalling to us where for the safety of the ship we ought to anchor in the port, continually accompanying us until we cast anchor there.

"In which [F. on account of which] we remained XV days, supplying ourselves with many necessities; where every day the people came to see us at the ship, bringing their women, of whom they are very careful [F. and Rm. jealous]; since, entering the ship themselves, remaining a long time, they made their women stay in the boats, and however many entreaties we made them, offering to give them various things, we did not succeed in persuading them to allow them to enter the ship. And one of the two Kings coming many times with the Queen and many attendants through their desire to see us, at first always stopped at a place distant from us two hundred paces, sending a boat to inform us of his coming, saying he wished to come to see the ship; doing this as a kind of safeguard [F. security. Rm. sign of security]. And when they had the response from us, they came quickly, and having stood awhile to look, hearing the noisy clamor of the sailor crowd [Rm. hearing the shouts and clamor of the mariners], sent the Queen [Rm. madam the Queen . . . remained] with her damsels in a very light boat to stay on a little island distant from us a quarter of a league; he himself remaining a very long time, expressing himself by signs and gestures of various fanciful ideas, examining all the equipments [Rm. all the apparatus and furniture of the ship], asking especially their purpose, imitating our manners [Rm. he also took pleasure in seeing our clothes], tasting our foods, then parted from us benignly. And one time, our people remaining two or three days on a little island near the ship for various necessities as is the custom of sailors, he came with seven or eight of his attendants, watching our operations, asking many times if we wished to remain there for a long time, offering us his every help. Then, shooting with the bow, running, he performed with his attendants various games to give us pleasure.

"Many times we were from five to six leagues inland which we found as pleasing as it is possible to express, adapted to every kind of cultivation,—grain, wine, oil. Because in that place the fields

1524 are from XXV to XXX leagues wide [F. broad], open and devoid of
Jan. any very impediment of trees, of such fertility that any seed in them 17 would produce the best crops. Entering then into the woods, all to which are penetrable by an army of any size in any way whatso-July ever, and whose trees, oaks, cypresses, and others, are unknown in 8 our Europe, we found Lucallian apples (or cherries) [See Italian text], plums and filberts, and many kinds of fruits different from ours. Animals there are in very great number, stags, deer, lynx, and other species, which they capture in the same way as the other animals with snares and bows which are their principal arms.
Whose arrows are worked with great beauty, placing at the end, instead of iron, emery, jasper, hard marble, and other sharp stones, which they used instead of iron in cutting trees, making their boats from a single trunk of a tree, hollowed with wonderful skill, in which from fourteen to XV men [F. and Rm. 10 and 12 men] may go comfortably; the oar short, broad at the end, worked solely with the strength of the arms at sea without any peril with as much speed as pleases them.

"Going further [See Italian text. Rm. omits], we saw their habitations, circular in form, of XIII to XV paces [F. and Rm.
10 to 12 paces] compass, made from semi-circles of wood [i.e., arched saplings, bent in the form of an arch] separated one from the other, without system of architecture, covered with mats of straw ingeniously worked, which protect them from rain and wind.
There is no doubt that if they had the perfection of methods [Rm.
the system of building and the perfection] which we see, they would build magnificent edifices [Rm. grand and superb edifices], for all the maritime coast is full of blue rocks [See Italian text], crystals and alabaster; and for such cause is full of ports and shelters for ships [F. shelters for animals. Rm. for ships]. They change said houses [F. they change said things. Rm. they transport the said houses] from one place to another according to the fertility of the site and the season in which they live. Carrying away [F. experience of the site and the season. Having lived in that (place) they carry away] only the mats, immediately they have other habitations made. There live in each a father and family to a very large number, so that in some we saw XXV and XXX souls. Their food is like that of the others: of pulse (which they produce with more system of culture than the others, observing the full moon, the rising of the Pleiades [F. thade. Rm. some stars], and many customs derived from the ancients), also of the chase and fish. They live a long time and rarely become ill; if they are oppressed with wounds [F.
sign of omission], without crying [Rm. with any infirmity without physician] they cure themselves by themselves with fire, their end being of old age. We judge they are very compassionate and charitable toward their neighbours, making great lamentations in their adversities, in their grief calling to mind all their happinesses. The relatives, one with another, at the end of their life use the Sicilian lamentation [Rm. omits "Sicilian"], mingled with singing lasting a long time. This is as much as we were able to learn about them.

"The land is situated in the parallel of Rome, in forty and two-thirds degrees [F. and Rm. parallel of Rome in forty-one and two-thirds degrees], but somewhat colder on account of chance and not on account of nature, as I will narrate to Your Majesty in another part, describing at present the situation of said port. The shore of said land runs from west to east. The mouth of the port (which on account of its beauty we called "Refugio") looks toward the south, half a league wide, after entering which between east and north it extends XII leagues, where, widening itself, it makes an ample [F. very ample] bay of about XX leagues in circuit. In which are five little islands of much fertility and beauty, full of high and spreading trees, among which a fleet of any size [F. among which islands any number of fleets Rm. any huge armada], without fear of tempest or other impediment of fortune, could rest securely [F. secure]. Turning thence toward the south to the entrance of the port, on one side and the other are very charming hills with many brooks, which from the height, to the sea discharge clear waters.

"In the midst of the pulse is found a rock of petra viva produced by nature, adapted for the building [on it] of any desired engine or bulwark for its protection [Rm. fortress for protection] (which on account of the nature of the stone and on account of the family of a gentleman we called "La Petra Viva"; on whose right side at said mouth of the port is a promontory which we called "Jevio Promontory").

Jan. "Being supplied with our every necessity, the 6th day [Rm. 5th 17 day] of May we departed from said port, following the shore, never to losing sight of the land. We sailed one hundred and fifty leagues to (within which space we found shoals which extend from the continent July into the sea 50 leagues. Upon which there was over 3 feet of water; 8 on account of which great danger in navigating, we survived with difficulty and baptized it "Arnellini (the shoals off Cape Cod"), finding it of the same nature and somewhat higher with some mountains (with a high promontory which we named "Pallavino") which all indicated minerals. We did not stop there because the favorableness of the weather served us in sailing along the coast [Rm. omits "in sailing along the coast"]; we think it must conform to the other (people?). The shore ran to the east.

"Within the space of fifty leagues, holding more to the north, we found a high land full of very thick forests, the trees of which were pine, cypresses [F. and Rm. cypresses] and such as grow in cold regions. The people all different from the others, and as much as those passed were of kind manners, these were full of uncouthness [F. rusticity] and vices, so barbarous [F. faces so barbarous] that we were never able, with whatsoever many signs we made them, to have any intercourse with them. They dress in the skins of bear, lynxes, sea-wolves, and other animals. The food, according to that which we were able to learn through going many times to their habitations, we think is of the chase, fish and some products which belong to a species of roots which the ground yields by its own self. They do not have pulse, nor did we see any signs of cultivation, nor would the ground, on account of its sterility, be adapted to produce fruit or any grain. If, trudging [F. refusing] at any time with them, we desired their things, they said to the shore of the sea upon some rock where it was very steep, and—we remaining in the small boat—with a cord let down to us what they wished to give, continually crying on land that we should not approach, giving [F. demanding] quickly the barter, not taking in exchange for it except knives, hooks [See Italian text] for fishing, and sharp metal. They had no regard for courtesy, and when they had [Rm. we had] nothing more to exchange, departing from them the men made at us all the signs of contempt and shame [F. immodesty] which any brute creature [Rm. any inhuman and discourteous creature] (such as showing the . . . and laughing) could make. Contrary to their wish, XXV of us armed men were inland two and three leagues (they are in 43<sup>3</sup>), and when we descended to the shore they shot at us with their bows, sending forth the greatest cries, then fled into the woods. We do not know any thing of any considerable value in this land except the very great forests, with some hills which possibly have some metal, because on many [natives] we saw "pater-mosters" of copper in the ears.

"We departed, skirting the coast between east and north, which we found very beautiful, open and bare of forests, with high mountains back inland, growing smaller toward the shore of the sea. In fifty leagues we discovered XXXII islands (among which we called the three larger "The Three Daughters of Navarra"), all near to the continent, small and of pleasing appearance, high, following the curving [F. greenness. Rm. many turns] of the land, among which were formed most beautiful ports and channels, as are formed in the Adriatic Gulf, in the Illyrias [Rm. in the Adriatic Gulf in Slavonia] and Dalmatia. We had no knowledge of the peoples and think they were [F. they stand], like the others, devoid [Rm. omits "devoid"] of morals and culture.

"Navigating between east-south-east and north-north-east, in the space of CL leagues we came near the land which the Briens found in the past [See Italian text], which stands in fifty degrees, and having consumed all our naval stores and victuals, having discovered six hundred leagues and more of new land, furnishing ourselves with water and wood, we decided to turn toward France.

"How much religion these peoples whom we have found have, we were not able to learn, through lack of language, either by signs or any gestures. We consider they have neither religion nor law, nor know a first cause or author [F. nor know one by one cause and author], nor worship the sky, stars, sun or moon or other planets nor have any species of idolatry, nor did we learn that they make sacrifice or other prayers; nor that their people had temples or churches for prayer.

"We think they have not any creed and live in entire freedom [F. in this freedom], and everything proceeds from ignorance, for they are very easy to persuade, and did with as much enthusiasm

1524 and fervor as we all that which by us Christians they saw done concerning the divine worship.

17 "It remains for me to narrate to Your Majesty the order of said navigation as it bears on Cosmography. As I said above, departing from the aforesaid rocks which are situated in the extremity of the west known to the ancients, and in the meridian described by the Fortunate Islands, in latitude of XXXII degrees from the equator in our hemisphere, we sailed to the west, as far as the first land we found, MCC leagues, which contain 4,800 miles, counting four miles per league according to the maritime usage of naval experts [See Italian text]: "geometrically" according to the proportion of three and one sesqui-seventh times [See Italian text] the diameter to the circumference,  $92^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees [F.  $92^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees]. That should be, because the chord of the arc of the great circle being  $114 \frac{1}{2}$  degrees, [and] the chord of the parallel of 34 degrees of the first land found by us, according to the same proportion,  $95^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees [F.  $95^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees], the circumference of all the circle is shown to be  $300 \frac{1}{2} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees [F.  $300 \frac{1}{2} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees]; which, allowing for each degree  $62 \frac{1}{2}$  miles, as the greater part of those who have experimented assure us they correspond on earth to the proportion of the heavens, should give us  $18,759 \frac{1}{2} \frac{1}{3}$  miles [F.  $18,759 \frac{1}{2} \frac{1}{3}$  miles], which divided into 360 parts, would give for each  $52 \frac{1}{2} \frac{1}{3}$  miles [F.  $52 \frac{1}{2} \frac{1}{3}$  miles]. And such is the value of a degree of longitude in said parallel of 34 degrees, from which, in a straight line, from the meridian of said rocks which stand in 32 degrees, we have calculated the reckoning. Since [F. the reckoning in this that] we have found the said 1200 leagues in a straight line from west to east, in 34 degrees, it traverses therefore through that [distance] the  $92^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees [F.  $92^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees], and so much have we sailed farther to the west unknown to the ancients in said parallel of 34 degrees.

"This longitudinal distance was known to us navigating with various instruments, without lunar eclipses or other phase by the motion of the sun, always taking the elevation at any desired hour by the difference the ship made running from one horizon to another; "geometrically" the interval from one meridian to another was known [F. was not known] to us; as I have noted all fully in a little book, together with the rising of the tide, in whatever climate, time, and hour, which I think would prove to be not useless for navigators.

"I hope, for better speculation, to discuss it with Your Majesty. "My intention was in this voyage to reach Cathay and the extreme east of Asia, not expecting to find [F. expecting not to find] such an obstacle of new land as I found; and if for some reason I expected to find it, I thought it to be not without some strait [See Italian text] to penetrate to the Eastern Ocean. And this has been the opinion of all the ancients, believing certainly our Western Ocean to be one with the Eastern Ocean of India without interposition of land. This Aristotle affirms, arguing by many similitudes, which opinion is very contrary to the moderns and according to experience untrue [F. and the experience false]. Because the land has been found by them, unknown to the ancients, to be another world with respect to the one which was known to them, it manifestly shows itself to be larger [F. and of greater size] than our Europe and Africa and almost Asia, if we estimate correctly its size, as briefly I will give Your Majesty a little account of it.

"Beyond the equator, distant from the meridian of the Fortunate Islands [F. from the Fortunate Islands] toward the west  $20^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees [F.  $20^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees] degrees, the Spaniards (that is, Magellan) have navigated 54 degrees toward the south, where they have found land without end. Turning thence toward the north along said meridional line, following the coast as far as 8 degrees [F. supplies the omission of R. . . . near the equator farther west, bearing more to the north along said meridional line, following the shore as far as 21 degrees, not finding an end,  $89^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees] . . . . .  $89^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  [F.  $89^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  degrees] they have navigated, which, joined to the  $20^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$  make  $110^{\circ} \frac{2}{3} \frac{1}{3}$ . And so much have they navigated from said meridian of the Fortunate Islands farther west in the parallel of 21 degrees of latitude.

"This distance has not been actually measured by us, on account of not having made said voyages; it may vary more or less. We have calculated it "geometrically" according to the observations of many expert naval scientists who have frequented it, who affirm it to be 1600 leagues, judging by estimate the course of the ship according to the character of the wind for continuous navigation.

"I hope in a short time we shall have (we ourselves) the utmost certainty (for the benefit of posterity) of it.

"On the other hand, we, in this voyage, made by order of Your Majesty beyond 92 degrees, etc. from said meridian toward the west to the land we first found in 34 degrees (land near Temisitan), navigated 300 leagues between east and north and almost 400 leagues to the east uninterrupted along the shore [See Italian text] of the land, attaining to 54 degrees [F. 50 degrees], leaving the land that the Lusitanians (that is, Bacalaia, so called from a fish) found a long time ago, which they followed farther north as far as the Arctic circle leaving the end unknown. Therefore the northern latitude joined with the southern, that is, 54 degrees with 66 degrees, make 120 degrees, more latitude than Africa and Europe contain, because joining the extremity of Europe, which the limits of Norway [See Italian text] form, [and] which stand in 71 degrees, with the extremity of Africa, which is the Promontory of F. promontory of the Cape] of Good Hope in 35 degrees, makes only 106 degrees, and if the terrestrial area of said land corresponds in extent to the seashore, there is no doubt it exceeds Asia in size.

"In such way we find the globe of the Earth much larger than the ancients have held and contrary to the Mathematicians [See Italian text], who have considered that relatively to the water it [the land] was smaller, which we have found by experience to be the reverse.

"And as for the corporeal area [F. for the air] of space, we judge there cannot be less land than water, as I hope on a better occasion by further reasoning to make clear and proven [F. I hope on a better occasion with further reasoning to experiment and demonstrate] to Your Majesty.

"All this land or New World which above I have described is connected together, not adjoining Asia nor Africa [F. adjoining Asia and Africa] (which I know to a certainty); it may join Europe by Norway [See Italian text] and Russia; which would be false according to the ancients, who declare almost all the north [See Italian text] from the promontory of the Cimbric to have been navigated to the east, going around as far as the Caspian Sea [F. going around about the Caspian Sea. C. Cassino Sea] itself they affirm. It would therefore remain included between two seas [F. alone included between two seas situated], between the Eastern and the Western, and that, accordingly (secondo), [F. and those two] shuts off [C. guides] one from the other; because beyond 54 degrees from the equator toward the south it [the new land] extends toward the east for a long distance, and from the north [See Italian text] passing 66 degrees it continues, turning toward the east, reaching as far as 70 degrees.

"I hope we shall have [F. we shall have soon] better assurance of this, with the aid of Your Majesty, whom God Almighty prosper in everlasting glory, that we may see the perfect end of this our cosmography, and that the sacred word [See Italian text] of the evangelist may be accomplished: "Their sound has gone out into all the earth," etc.

"In the ship Dauphine [F. in the ship Dauphine in Normandy in the port of Dieppe], VIII of July, M.D.XXVIII.

"Humble servant [F. most humble servant].

"To Leonardo Tedaldi or to Thomas Sartini, merchants in Lyons. To be forwarded to Bonacorso Ruscelletti."

In April a council convened at Badajoz to determine whether the Moluccas were on the Spanish or the Portuguese side of the "line of demarcation," and to consider the probability of finding a strait north of Florida by which they might be reached. The congress broke up on May 31, having accomplished nothing in the way of an agreement between the powers.—Navarrete, Coleccion de los viages y descubrimientos que hicieron por mar los Españoles desde fines del siglo XV, Vol. IV; Winsor, *Nar. & Crit. 1525

Estevan Gomez, a Portuguese pilot of the Casa de Contratación of Seville, under orders from Charles V of Spain, sailed from Coruna, in a caravel of 50 tons, probably toward the close of the year 1524, and in the winter or early spring of 1525 cruised along the east coast of North America, and probably sighted Cape Cod and possibly Sandy Hook, although there is no definite information on which to base a positive assumption in this connection. 1525 fortunately, we have only very incomplete knowledge of this voyage, as the original journal, which we know Gomez, soon after his return, handed to the king at Toledo, is lost.

The most ancient data concerning his voyage is found in Oviedo's Sumario, the printing of which was completed on Feb. 15, 1526.—Harris, B. A. V., No. 139. Oviedo here tells us that "Gomez went to the northern parts, where he discovered an extensive country, which is a continuation of the one called the Bacalaos, and continued westward, reaching 40° and 41° more or less. He brought from that country several Indians, who are at present in this city" (Seville?).

In his Historia General, published in 1535, the limit reached by Gomez is changed without explanation to 42° 30'. Peter Martyr adds the information that Gomez "was sent with a caravel in search of another strait between Florida and the Bacalaos."

On the other hand, Antonio Galvan records that Gomez, "sailing from Coruna to Cuba, thence to Florida, and, navigating only in the daytime to avoid shoals and reefs, steered northward as far as the 44° latitude. From this point he returned to Spain with a cargo of kidnapped Indians to be sold as slaves."

In the Islario, written in 1560 by Alonso de Santa Cruz, who must have known Gomez personally in Spain, we are told that Gomez was absent ten months, "in search of and to discover Cathay . . . as well as the passage or strait so much desired, and leading to the sea commonly called the South Sea," also that "he discovered on that coast a great many islands near the continent; and particularly a very large and deep river, which he called Deer River. . . . He sailed up the river for a considerable distance, thinking that it was the strait which he desired to discover, but ascertained instead that it was a grand river with a very great flow of water, from which he inferred that it belonged to the continent of immense size which is there. And although firmly believing in the existence of the aforesaid canal or passage, close to the Codfish Continent [Bacalaos] and the country called Labrador, he was also convinced of the inutility of proving it experimentally, as the obstacles arising from the cold temperature of the neighbouring regions would prevent the passage from being used. This opinion and plea was deemed sufficient to prevent in the future any further attempt to effect the object. . . . The country is quite temperate, containing many trees, such as oak, birch, olive, wild vines with grapes in great quantity, and many plants and herbs like those of Spain. . . . Passing beyond those islands and that river, westward, near the coast, there are many islands, all deserted and poor, which were discovered by the licentiate Ayllon . . . All those islands are by 45° and 44° . . ."

We learn further from the Islario that, "Passing beyond the islands of the Eleven Thousand Virgins, towards the sea, there is a large bay, called 'the bay of the Britons' . . . Passing the bay, more towards the west, and close to a point of land named Cape Breton the [coast] begins to extend towards an island [which is] east and west, called 'Sanct Joan,' 56 leagues long by 20 leagues wide. . . . The island extends from 46° to 48°." This was probably Cape Breton Island.

It will be noticed that the order of the narrative here, as well as in most of the other sources quoted, seems to indicate a voyage from north to south, which is the interpretation accepted by Harris and most other modern historians. It seems, however, to the author, that sufficient importance has not been given to the fact that Gomez sailed for America during the winter season, from which fact it appears much more natural to suppose that he would have chosen to begin his explorations in the south,—an interpretation which will be noted, is supported by more than one statement in the sources quoted.

The results of Gomez' explorations appeared for the first time on the planisphere of Mantova, also styled the Castiglioni Map, probably completed toward the close of 1525 (see C. Pls. 7 and 8, Vol. II); on the anonymous Weimar map of 1527 (C. Pl. 9, Vol. II); the Ribero maps of 1529 (C. Pl. 10, Vol. II), and the Peter Martyr map of 1534 (C. Pl. 7, Vol. II). They also appear on a map which accompanies an early manuscript of the Islario of Alonso de Santa Cruz, a work written in 1560, but not published until 1908, by F. von Wiesser at Innsbruck. This map is reproduced and described by Harris in the Discovery of North Am., p. 241. See also his Terre Neuve, p. 87 et seq. This map includes a much less extensive area than the others mentioned, extending from 38° to 45°, or from the Chesapeake to Nova Scotia.

1525 A comparison of these maps with those containing the discoveries of Verrazano shows that the explorations of these two pioneers together form a complete whole, the combination constituting a fairly accurate survey of the east coast of North America from Florida to Nova Scotia.

For further discussion of Gomez' explorations, as shown on these and other maps of the Gomez type, see Vol. II, Cartography, page 18 et seq., and authorities there cited.

The explanation of the principal difference between the Verrazano type and the Gomez type perhaps lies in the fact that Gomez, coming from the north, and tacking along the coast, was embayed by Cape Cod, which he, therefore, very distinctly noted, whereas Verrazano, approaching from the south, evidently kept off shore, and, therefore, missed the cape itself, although he clearly records, under the name "Aremelline sirtes," the extensive shoals lying to the south and east of it. A glance at the modern map shows that the cape is not nearly so prominent when approached from the south as from the north. That Gomez apparently gives no exact information regarding the coast southwest of Cape Cod may be explained by supposing that he feared the shoals, which must have been clearly visible as he rounded the Cape, and therefore, having first stood well out to sea, laid a straight course for Cape Hatteras.

Early in this year, Ayllon, in order to preserve his rights under the royal cédula granted him on June 12, 1523, and extended on March 23, 1524, to cover the year 1525, despatched two caravels under Pedro de Quexos to the land which his expedition of 1520-21 had visited. Quexos succeeded in regaining the good will of the natives, and explored the coast for a distance of 250 leagues, setting up stone crosses bearing the name of Charles V and the date of taking possession.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 249, and authorities there cited; Harris, Disc. of N. Am., 199 et seq.

1526

Ayllon himself sails, with three ships and 600 colonists of both sexes, from Puerto de la Plata. He reached the coast in about 133° 40' N. L., where he lost his largest vessel, which he replaced by a "gavarrá," the first recorded instance of ship building on our coast, and then sailed northward until he came to Guandape. There he started the settlement of San Miguel where the English in the next century founded Jamestown. Before the colonists were housed, winter came on and sickness broke out. Ayllon died on Oct. 18. The others decided to return to St. Domingo, but only about 150 succeeded in reaching home.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 240 et seq., and sources there cited; Harris, Disc. of N. Am., 199 et seq.

1527

In this year, the sack of Rome took place. This event is sometimes given as marking the end of the Renaissance.

In this year, Gines Navarro was told by John Rut that, while fishing off the Banks of Newfoundland, he had seen more than 50 Spanish, French, and Portuguese fishing bars.—MS. cited by Navarrete, in Harris, Terre-Neuve, LV1.

The so-called "Weimar-Spanish Map" (C. Pl. 9, and pp. 18, 132, Vol. II; Stevenson No. 9) is made.

The Maggiolo Map (C. Pl. 12, Vol. II, and II: 13, 132; Stevenson No. 10) bears this date.

1529

In this year, the Ribero Maps (C. Pl. 10, Vol. II, and II: 18, 133; Stevenson No. 11); and Girolamo Verrazano's Map (C. Pl. 13, Vol. II, and II: 13, 133; Stevenson No. 12) were made.

1530

Peter Martyr publishes his De Orbe Novo . . . or Eight Decades.—Church Catalogue, No. 62.

1532

Sometime between 1532 and 1535, the first printing-press in the western hemisphere was established, in Mexico, by Juan Pablos.—Padilla, Historia de la fundacion y discurso de la provincia de Santiago de México, de la orden de predicadores, por las vidas de sus varones insignes y cosas notables de Nueva España (Madrid, 1596), 670; Fernandez, Historia eclesiástica (Toledo, 1611); Davila, Teatro eclesiástico (Madrid, 1649).

1534 — In the winter of 1534-5, Cortés marched with a land force from Acapulco to Chiametla. Here he joined his fleet and sailed to the west. On May 1, 1535, he landed at the Bay of Santa Cruz. On May 3, he took possession of the country and started a settlement. After exploring the lower portion of the Californian peninsula, he returned to Acapulco.—Navarrete, Coleccion de los viajes y descubrimientos que hicieron por mar los Españoles desde fines del siglo XV, IV: 190.

Apr. 20 — Jacques Cartier, with two ships, sets out from the port of St. Malo on his first voyage to America. On May 10, he reached Newfoundland, and from then until Aug. 15 he explored the Gulf and the coast as far north as Labrador, discovering the Straits of Belle Isle, but he failed to discover the mouth of the St. Lawrence River. At Gaspé Bay he set up a cross with a shield attached, bearing the fleurs-de-lis and the motto "Vive le Roy de France." Having been unsuccessful in his attempt to find a northwest passage to the Indies, Cartier started on his return voyage on Aug. 15, and arrived at St. Malo on Sept. 5.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1600), III: 201-11.

Nov. 3 — The Act of Supremacy is passed by parliament, severing the connection of the English Church with Rome, and declaring the king to be its supreme head.

May 19 — With three ships, the "Great Hermina," the "Little Hermina," and the "Hermerillon," given to him by Francis I, Cartier starts from St. Malo on his second voyage to the new world. On this trip he discovered and explored the St. Lawrence from its mouth to Hochelaga, made friends with the Indians, and fortified the harbour of Ste. Croix. He returned to St. Malo on July 6, 1536.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1600), III: 212-32. Three manuscript versions of the narrative are preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale.

— Some time shortly after May 20, 1535, Queen Isabella of Portugal called upon Fernando Columbus to cause the immediate completion of the revision of the padron real, ordered by Charles V in 1526. Probably this was not actually accomplished until the following year, when a junta of pilots and cosmographers met at Seville for the purpose of composing a very accurate sea-chart, which should be the model from which all maps for navigating the Indies should in future be copied, as we are told by Alonso de Santa Cruz, in his Islario. The padron general of Alonso de Chaves was probably the direct result of this junta. Unfortunately, this important map has been lost, and was until quite recently known to us only by the references to it found in Oviedo's Historia de las Indias, written probably in 1537, but not published until the nineteenth century. In this work, Oviedo gives a description of the coast, following Chaves' map, as he expressly states. Although more or less unsuccessful attempts have been made, by Kohl, De Costa, and others, to reconstruct from this description the outline of the North East Coast, no really serious effort has yet been made to compare Oviedo's text with existing maps, or rather, no thorough search has been made for a map or maps which might correspond with that text. Recently, however, the discovery in Florence by Dr. Wieder of the world-chart drawn by Lopo Homem in 1554 (C. Pl. 11, Vol. II), and in Madrid of a hitherto unknown manuscript by Chaves himself, containing a very complete description of the American coasts, has thrown new light on the subject, and, from a comparison of these new documents with Oviedo's text, it is now possible, for the first time, to judge, with much precision, how our coast must have appeared on Chaves' lost map. This comparison is shown in tabulated form in Vol. II, following p. 40. See also p. 22 et seq.

Apr. — At some time toward the end of April, 1536, Robert Hore and other Englishmen set out in two ships from Gravesend on a voyage to America. They reached Cape Breton and Newfoundland. The party returned to England about the end of October.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1589), 517-19.

Apr. — Heroando de Soto sails from San Luear, Spain, with about 600 men, five ships, two caravels, and two pinnaces. He reached Cuba safely; in May, he sailed from Havana. On May 25, he arrived at a bay on the Florida coast, to which he gave the name Espirito Santo; on the 30th, he landed his army, and, on June 3, took possession of the country. Then he began his long and toilsome journey in search of a land rich in gold and precious stones. He passed through what is now the states of Florida, Georgia, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, fighting with the Indians every step of the way and losing more than half his men. In June, 1541, he crossed the Mississippi River at the lowest Chickasaw bluff, and marched northward to Little Prairie. Despairing of finding his El Dorado in that direction, De Soto finally turned south, and then south-west and, on Sept. 1, 1541, reached Coligua. Here the expedition recrossed the Mississippi and began to march south-east, arriving at a town at the mouth of the Red River on April 17, 1542. At this place De Soto fell ill of fever, died on May 21, and was buried in the Mississippi.—Winsor, Am. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 244-53, 288-92, 294-95, and authorities there cited.

— In 1541, the prospect of the settlement of Canada under the French gave such a stimulus to merchants that, in January and February, 1541 and 1542, no less than 60 ships went from France to fish for cod off the Banks. In 1543, 1544, and 1545, this ardour was sustained, and during the months of January and February about two ships left every day from Havre, Rouen, Dieppe, and Honfleur.—Gosselin, Documents authentiques et inédits pour servir à l'histoire de la marine Normande et du commerce Rouennais, pendant les XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles (Rouen, 1876), 13.

Cartier starts on his third voyage to America. He reached Ste. Croix on Aug. 23, soon after started a fort four leagues above it, at Charlesbourg Royal, and then continued his ascent of the river. He stayed awhile at Hochelaga, then went on to the Lachine Rapids and Sault de St. Louis, and finally returned to the fort, where he spent the winter of 1541-2. In the summer of 1542, Cartier returned to France.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1600), III: 232-42.

— Jean Allefonse de Saintonge sails from Honfleur as pilot to Roherval on a voyage to Canada. On this voyage, or possibly on an earlier one of which we have no record, he claimed to have explored the Atlantic coast from Labrador to Florida, and to have made several maps and sketches of the region. The original manuscript, entitled "Cosmographie avec espee et régime du Soleil et du Nord en notre langue françoise," signed by Allefonse, and dated 24 May, 1544, is in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. An abridgment of this manuscript was first printed in 1559, with the title Les Voyages aventureux du Capitaine Jean Allefonse, Saintongois. An account of this voyage is also found in Hakluyt's Principall Navigations (1599-1600), and in Champlain (1632 ed.).

The following account of that part of the voyage of Saintonge which covers the North-East Coast is taken from the printed text (translated) of the "Cosmographie," published and annotated by George Musset, Paris, 1904, and entitled La Cosmographie . . . par Jean Fonteneau, dit Allefonse de Saintonge, Capitaine-pilote de François I<sup>er</sup>. . . ; it contains several maps.

After leaving Canada, the first feature of the coast that can, with reasonable assurance, be identified is the Penobscot. From this point the narrative proceeds as follows:

"From the river Norumbega (probably the Penobscot) the coast turns to the W.S.W., full 200 [?] leagues, to a gulf by which runs up into the land about 20 leagues and is fully 29 leagues wide, and within this bay there are four islands, joined one to the other [possibly the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound, and the large islands lying between it and Cape Cod—?].

"The entrance to the bay is about 38° [sic], and the said islands are in the neighbourhood of 39°. I did not see the end [of] of this bay, and do not know whether it passes beyond. The water rushes out as does the river of Norumbega. This entire coast is peopled but I did not communicate with them, and do not know what law they follow. . . . [Although at this point no mention is made of any prominent cape, the manuscript contains an earlier reference to a "Cap de la Franciscane," 140 leagues S.W. of "Cap de Norumbega" ("Cape Sable?"), which should probably be identified as Cape Cod.]

"From the said bay the coast turns to the W.N.W. [sic], about 46 leagues, and here there is a great river of fresh water [Hudson River—?], and there is at its entrance a sandy island [Sandy Hook—?] which island is near the 49th [sic] degree. . . .

1541 "From this river the coast turns N.E. & S.W., a quarter East and Aug. west, 60 leagues, and here there is a cape which juts out into the 22 sea full 56 leagues [Cape Henlopen as part of the Accomac peninsula, etc.—?]. The cape is in about 36° latitude, and is high, with a white cliff [a conspicuous object on entering Delaware Bay]; and from here the coast turns to the W.N.W. [sic], 46 leagues, as far as a large river full 20 leagues [sic] in width [Chesapeake Bay—?], with many reefs at its entrance, which river is in about 37°. I know not whether this river runs far into the main. The surrounding land is very low . . . and very beautiful, with fine trees, which seem to be chestnuts and cedars. Here the coast turns to the S.W., a quarter west, about 30 leagues; and here there is a cape [Cape Hatteras—?], and behind it a great gulf [Pamlico and Albermarle Sounds—?]. I don't know how far it enters into the main.
At its entrance there are several reefs. Said cape is in about 36°.
From here I was quite a day and a half with the cape in the west without seeing land until reaching 35°. And I estimate sailing about 35 leagues before I reached the coast again.

"And from this point the coast turns toward Florida, N.N.E. and S.S.W., and the distance from here to Florida may be 100 or 120 leagues, the whole coast being straight . . . , and along this entire stretch of shore there are islands large and small. I was unable to make out any rivers. The cape of Florida is in about 27°, and is more than 25 leagues wide, and in front of it are several islands of sand, and there is a reef that juts out into the sea two or three leagues from the main-land, and is no broader at one end than at the other, and extends more than 20 leagues along the shore in a N.N.E. and S.S.W. direction; and between the land and the reef there seemed to be good sailing, but I could find no entrance. At the end of this reef there is a cape, and a good port. . . . The said cape is in 28½°, and is at the N.N.E. of Florida, a fine country.
. . . . Along this whole coast from N.N.E. to S.S.W., as far as Florida, one dare not approach the shore nearer than 3 leagues because of the reefs, etc."

Although the above description contains many inaccuracies in latitudes, directions, and distances, and several irreconcilable statements, nevertheless it constitutes, in the main, a fair description of the North-East Coast, and is, I believe, based on personal observations, notwithstanding Harrisse's circumstantial evidence to the contrary (see his Terre-Neuve, 153 et seq.).

1542

- In this year, the tribunal of the Inquisition was established at Rome.
- Dec. — From this time, in her infancy, until 1567, Mary Queen of Scots reigned in Scotland.

1544

- Sebastiao Cabot's well-known map with marginal legends (C. Pl. 18, and pp. 17, 133, Vol. II) bears this date.

1545

- Dec. 13 The Council of Trent, called to overcome religious schisms and to reform ecclesiastical abuses, is formally opened. Discussions began on Jan. 18, 1546, at which time the council committed itself to a codification and definition of Catholic doctrine. It ended its deliberations on Dec. 4, 1563, and its decisions received the approval of the Pope on Jan. 24, 1564.

1547

- Jan. 28 Henry VIII dies. His son, Edward VI, ascends the throne; he reigned until 1553.
- 31 Francis I dies; his son, Henry II, becomes King of France; he reigned until 1559.

1553

- July 6 King Edward VI dies, aged 16 years. The Duke of Northumberland having persuaded him to bequeath the crown to his cousin, Lady Jane Grey, she was proclaimed Queen in London on July 10. The people, however, showed no enthusiasm for Lady Jane, and, on July 19, Mary, daughter of Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon, was declared the ruler. Mary was crowned on Oct. 1, and reigned until 1558.

1555

- The first collection, in English, of accounts of the various voyages to America was published at London in this year, by Richard Eden. The book was called The Decades of the Newe Worlde or West India.—Church Catalogue, No. 101. It was a translation from Peter Martyr's De Orbe Novo . . . Decades, of 1550.—Ibid., No. 62.

André Thevet, a Franciscan monk, sails from Havre with the expedition sent out by Admiral Coligny to Brazil under the command of Villegaignon. The French made a settlement, in November, near the River Ganabara, but Thevet remained with the colony only about ten weeks, leaving on his homeward voyage, Jan. 31, 1556. He claimed to have coasted, on this voyage, along the entire eastern shore of the United States.—Thevet, Les Singularitez de la France antarctique autrement nommée Amérique; & de plusieurs terres & isles decouvertes de nostre temps (Paris, 1558); Thevet, La cosmographie universelle d'André Thevet, cosmographe de roy (Paris, 1575). The following interesting extract (translated) is taken from his Cosmographie, reprinted by Kohl, who has added the explanations in parenthesis:

"Having left La Floride on the left hand, with all its islands, gulfs, and capes, a river presents itself, which is one of the finest rivers in the whole world, which we call 'Norumbegue', and the aborigines 'Agency', and which is marked on some marine charts as the Grand River (meaning Penobscot Bay). Several other beautiful rivers enter into it; and upon its banks the French formerly erected a little fort about ten or twelve leagues from its mouth, which was surrounded by fresh-water, and this place was named the Fort of Norumbegue.

"Some pilots would make me believe, that this country (Norumbegue) is the proper country of Canada. But I told them that this was far from the truth, since this country lies in 43° N., and that of Canada in 50 or 52°. Before you enter the said river appears an island (Fox Island) surrounded by eight very small islets, which are near the country of the green mountains (Camden Hills?), and to the Cape of the islets (Cabo de muchas islas?). From there you sail all along unto the mouth of the river, which is dangerous from the great number of thick and high rocks; and its entrance is wonderfully large. About three leagues into the river, an island presents itself to you, that may have four leagues in circumference (Long Island, now Islesboro'), inhabited only by some fishermen and birds of different sorts, which island they call 'Aiyascon,' because it has the form of a man's arm, which they call so. Its greatest length is from north to south. It would be very easy to plant on this island, and build a fortress on it to keep in check the whole surrounding country. Having landed and put our feet on the adjacent country, we perceived a great mass of people coming down upon us from all sides in such numbers, that you might have supposed them to have been a flight of starlings. Those which marched first, were the men which they call 'Aquehus.' After them came the women, which they call 'Peragruastas,' then the 'Adegastas,' being the children, and last were the girls, called 'Aniugestas.' And all this people were clothed in skins of wild animals, which they call 'Rabatatz.' Now considering their aspect and manner of proceeding, we mistrusted them, and went on board our vessel. But they, perceiving our fear, lifted their hands into the air, making signs that we should not mistrust them; and for making us still more sure, they sent to our vessel some of their principal men, which brought us provisions. In recompense of this, we gave them a few trinkets of a low price, by which they were highly pleased. The next morning I, with some others, was commissioned to meet them, and to know whether they would be inclined to assist us with more victuals, of which we were very much in need. But having entered into the house, which they call 'Canoque,' of a certain little king of theirs, which called himself 'Peramic,' we saw several killed animals hanging on the beams of the said house, which he had prepared (as he assured us) to send to us. This chief gave us a very hearty welcome, and to show us his affection, he ordered to kindle a fire, which they call 'Azista,' on which the meat was to be put and fish, to be roasted. Upon this some rogues came in to bring to the king the heads of six men, which they had taken in war and massacred, which terrified us, fearing that they might treat us in the same way. But toward evening we secretly retired to our ship without bidding good-by to our host. At this he was very much irritated, and came to us the next morning accompanied by three of his children, showing a mournful countenance, because he thought that we had been dissatisfied with him; and he said in his language: 'Cazigno, Cazigno Casnoy danga addaggru' (that is, let us go let us go on land; my friend and brother); 'Coquoqua Ame Cousson Kazacenny' (come to drink and eat, what we

1555 have); 'Arca somioppach Quenchia dangua ysmay assomaka' (we May say you upon oath by heaven, earth, moon, and stars, that you 6 shall fare not worse than our own persons).

"Seeing the good affection and will of this old man, some twenty of us went again on land, every one of us with his arms; and then we went to his lodgings, where we were treated, and presented with what he possessed. And meanwhile great numbers of people arrived, caressing us and offering themselves to give us pleasure, saying that they were our friends. Late in the evening, when we were willing to retire and to take leave of the company with actions of gratitude, they would not give us leave. Men, women, children, all entreated us zealously to stay with them, crying out these words:
'Cazigno agyda hoá' (my friends, do not start from here; you shall sleep this night with us). But they could not harangue so well as to persuade us to sleep with them. And so we retired to our vessel; and having remained in this place five full days, we weighed anchor, parting from them with a marvellous contentment of both sides, and went out to the open sea."—Kohl, Discovery of North Am., 416-19. If the "Grand River," to which Thevet refers, is the Penobscot, as Kohl believes, and not the mouth of the Gulf of St.
Lawrence, and if Thevet is right in regard to the fort, this must have been the first settlement of Europeans in New England since the Norsemen. Harrisse, however, and other modern critics, place very little reliance on Thevet's claims in connection with this voyage.

Sept. The religious Peace of Augsburg is agreed to by Lutherans and 25 Catholics. All accepting the Augsburg Confession are declared exempt from the jurisdiction of the Holy See, and guaranteed equal rights in everything with the Catholics.

Oct. Charles V transfers to his son, Philip II, the sovereignty of 25 The Netherlands. On Jan. 16, 1556, the Spanish possessions, also, were conferred upon him. Philip II reigned until 1598.

Oct. With four ships, John Hawkins sets out from Plymouth on a 18 voyage to the West Indies and America. After spending some time in Guinea and the West Indies, carrying on the slave-trade, he began to explore the coast of Florida in the summer of 1565. He came to the relief of Laudoniere's struggling colonists on the "river of May," and left them a ship in which they might return to France. Hakluyt records, from the account written by "John Sparke the Younger," who accompanied Hawkins, that on the Florida coast they anchored every night, and in the day time, in the ship's pinnace, sailed along the shore, and went into every creek. Oct.

In this case they were particularly searching for good fresh water, 18 but the specific recital of the fact that they anchored at night indicates that this was not the usual custom, and therefore helps to explain how so often important landmarks were passed by unseen, and were therefore not recorded in the journals or on the maps.
On July 28, Hawkins left Florida and, probably keeping at no great distance from the coast, sailed north to Newfoundland, which he reached on Aug. 23. Thence he continued his journey homeward, and arrived in England on Sept. 20.—Hakluyt, Principal Naviga-tions (London, 1589), 523-45.

A sentence of the Inquisition condemns to death, as heretics, Feb.
all but a few of the inhabitants of The Netherlands.—Motley, 16
Rise of the Dutch Republic, II: 158.

David Ingram, who, with two companions, had been set on shore on the northern coast of the Gulf of Mexico by Sir John Hawkins, in the autumn of this year, claimed, in an account of his adventures, reported "unto Sr. firaucey Walsingham Kt. . . ."
in 1582, and first printed by Hakluyt in 1589, to have traversed the south, central, and eastern portions of what is now the United States, and to have reached "the head of a riuér called Garinda, which is 60 Leagues West frō Cape Britton . . . . Whereupon they made their repaire to the Sea-side, and there found a French Captaine named Moaisier Champaigne, who tooke them into his Shippe and brought them unto Newhauen, & from thence they were transported into England, Anno. Dom. 1569." In the course of his travels, which extended over a period of about twelve months, of which about seven were spent north of the "riuér of May,"
"in which time (as the said Ingram thinketh) he traueiled by land two thousand miles at the least . . . . towards the North, found the maine sea [Great Lakes?] upon the Northside of America, and trauailed in the sight thereof the space of two whole dayes, where the people signified unto him, that they had seene shippes on that coast, and did draw upon the ground the shape and figure of shippes and of their sailes and flagges, Which thing especially proueth the passage of the Northwest, and is agreeable to the experience of Vasques de Coronado, which found a shippe of China or Cataia upon the Northwest of America."

One of several contemporary manuscript accounts of this journey is preserved in the British Museum (Sloane MS. No. 1447), and is printed in Weston, Documents connected with the history of South Carolina (London, 1856). The narrative as printed by Hakluyt in 1589 (from which version the above extracts are taken), was omitted from his 1599-1600 publication, probably because of its dubious veracity, as we are told by Purchas, IV: 1179. See also Geo. Parker Winship, Sailors Narratives of Voyages along the New England Coast (1905).

— This date is found on a beautifully executed small world map in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; which map is signed by Jean Cossin, a well known cartographer of Dieppe. The map is remarkable for its unusual representation of the coast in the neighbourhood of the Hudson River, which is shown in greater detail and more accurately than on any other map of the period. This representation proves, without question, that the author, or the voyager whose map or notes the author used, not only penetrated into the inner harbour of New York, but actually sailed around Staten Island, and perhaps through Long Island Sound, which seems to be laid down on this very interesting map, which is reproduced in Vol.
II, C. Pl. 15 and 16, and described on pages 33 et seq., and 134.

— In this year, Abraham Ortelius published at Antwerp the first edition of his celebrated Theatrum orbis terrarum.

Nov. 12 The states of the province of Holland entrust the Prince of Orange with "absolute power, authority and sovereign command in the management of all general affairs of State, none excepted." Zealand joined Holland on June 4, 1575. Utrecht put itself under the government of the prince on Oct. 9, 1577, and negotiations with Gelderland were begun in 1578. By the Union of Utrecht, on Jan. 23, 1579, the union of the northern provinces became complete.—Robert Fruin, Geschiedenis der staatsinstellingen in Nederland tot den val der Republiek, uitgegeven door Dr. H.  June Martia Frobisher sails from Blackwall with two small vessels, the "Gabriel" and the "Michael," on his first voyage to the Arctic regions. On July 21, he entered the opening now known as Frobisher's Bay, and, after sailing about 60 leagues, took possession of the land, "Meta Incognita," in the name of Queen Elizabeth. He returned to England in October.—Thomas Churchyard, A Prayse, and Reporte of Maister Maryne Forboishers Voyage to Meta Incognita (London, 1578); Church Catalogue, No. 120A; Beste, A True Discourse of the late voyages of discoverie, for the finding of a passage to Cathaya, by the North-west (London, 1578).

 Nov. 15 Francis Drake, with a fleet of five vessels, sails from Plymouth on his celebrated voyage around the world. It was on this trip that he discovered and explored, in 1579, the coasts of Oregon and California. He returned to Plymouth on Sept. 26, 1580.—The World Encompassed by Sir Francis Drake, carefully Collected out of the notes of Master Fletcher, Preacher in this Employment, and divers others his followers (London, 1628), reprinted by the Hakluyt Soc. in 1854.

 Jan. 23 The Union of Utrecht is agreed to by the deputies from Holland, Zealand, Gelderland, Zutphen, Utrecht, and the districts of Groningen.  July 26 The United Provinces, assembled at The Hague, declare their independence of Spain, and renounce their allegiance forever. The Duke of Anjou had been chosen sovereign, with the understanding that William of Orange was to continue to exercise sovereignty over Holland and Zealand.

 — In this year, Richard Hakluyt's Drivers Voyages Touching the Discoverie of America was published at London.—Church Catalogue, No. 128. This, Hakluyt's first book of voyages, contained the Michael Lok map (C. Pl. 17, and pp. 38, 134, Vol. II) and the Thorne Map (C. Pl. 17, and p. 132).

Fy 10 Oct. 5-15 The Duke of Anjou (see 1581) arrives in the Netherlands. In this year, Pope Gregory XIII reformed the calendar to conform to the true solar year. Ten days were dropped out of this year, October 5 becoming October 15. Leap year was removed from the calendar at the close of each century (except when it was a multiple of 400), thus gaining three days in 400 years, or about 11 minutes a year.

The Gregorian calendar was introduced into Spain, Portugal, and part of Italy, on the same day as at Rome (Oct. 5). It was accepted in France in December 1582, and in the Catholic states of Germany in 1583. In the various provinces and cities of The Netherlands, New Style was adopted at different times between 1582 and 1702. In the Protestant states of Germany, the Julian calendar was adhered to until 1700, when the diet of Regensburg decreed that the New Style be adopted. Denmark and Sweden also accepted it about 1700. In England, Scotland, and the American colonies, the Gregorian calendar was established by the parliamentary act of March 18, 1751 (q.v.), and went into effect Sept. 3/14, 1752 (q.v.). Ireland followed in 1788. Russia retained the Julian reckoning until 1918, when the revolutionary government adopted the New Style. From 1582 until the surrender of New Amsterdam to the English, in 1664, the Chronology follows the Gregorian Calendar, or "New Style." From the beginning of English rule in New York until 1752, when England adopted the Gregorian Calendar, "Old Style" is used. To avoid confusion, double dates are introduced during periods of transition (the upper, or numerator, being O. S., and the lower, or denominator, N. S.), and also in connection with all English dates during the Dutch occupation of New Amsterdam, and all Dutch and other continental dates during the English occupation. See A.

 Sir Humphrey Gilbert, the first Englishman to attempt colonization in the new world, starts on a voyage to America, with five ships and about 260 men. On Aug. 5, he took formal possession of Newfoundland in the name of Queen Elizabeth, but many of the colonists soon died of disease. Gilbert sailed south on Aug. 20, and, on Aug. 29, his ship was wrecked on Cape Breton Island and he was drowned.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1589), 679-99; Peckham, A True Reporte of the late discoveries and possession taken in the right of the Crowne of Englande, of the Newfound Landes: By that valiant and worthy Gentleman Sir Humphrey Gilbert (London, 1583), reprinted in Mag. of Hist., Extra Number 68, pp. 1-59; Burrage, Early English and French Voyages, 175-222.

 Sir Walter Raleigh receives a charter from Queen Elizabeth empowering him to plant colonies in America.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1589), 725-28.

Raleigh dispatches two vessels, under the command of Capts. Arthur Barlowe and Philip Amados, on a reconnoitring voyage to the east coast of America, to decide upon a site for a settlement. Barlowe and Amados sailed south to the Canary Islands, then crossed to the West Indies, and, on July 4, reached the American coast. They went northward along the coast for 120 miles, entered the first inlet they found, and, after sailing a short distance, landed and took possession of the country in the name of Queen Elizabeth. Their landing-place was one of the more southerly islands in Pamlico Sound, and the country which they claimed afterwards received the name of Virginia. After establishing friendly intercourse with the Indians, Capt. Barlowe and some of his men sailed 20 miles to Roanoke Island. They explored the rivers and islands in the vicinity, and returning reached England in the middle of September.

In the spring of 1585, Raleigh sent a hundred more men, under command of Ralph Lane, in seven ships, to Virginia, who stayed on Roanoke Island from Aug. 17, 1585, to June 18, 1586. With this expedition went John White, the artist, who made two charts of the country. In the spring of 1586, a third expedition was dispatched commanded by Sir Richard Grenville, to try to relieve the settlers in Virginia, but by the time the ships arrived, the colonists had started for home, having been rescued by Sir Francis Drake and carried back to England. When Grenville arrived at Roanoke, believing that the colonists had transferred their settlement to some other site, he left supplies and a guard of 15 men. A fourth trip to Virginia was made in 1587, under John White, and 120 men, women, and children were left on Roanoke Island, with one small vessel, to start a settlement, while White returned to England for aid. War between Spain and England prevented Raleigh's sending relief to his colonists until 1590. When the ship arrived in Virginia in that year, White could find no trace of the settlers he had left there in 1587.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1589), 728-48, 764-73; ibid. (London, 1600), III: 288-95; Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1645-46; Fiske, Old Virginia and Her Neighbors, I: 31-39. The fate of this "lost colony" has never been ascertained. They were probably killed by the Indians, or captured and in time assimilated with the natives.

The Duke of Anjou dies in France. William of Orange is murdered by a fanatic. His son, Maurice of Orange-Nassau, soon after became stadtholder. See A.

1584 Richard Hakluyt wrote in this year his Discourse on Western Planting, the original manuscript of which he presented to Queen Elizabeth, probably at the request of Sir Walter Raleigh, who sought Elizabeth's assistance for his colonization schemes. Hakluyt, in twenty-one chapters, described the discoveries already made along the North-East Coast, and propounded the various reasons why England should establish colonies in America. The original manuscript is lost, but a duplicate contemporary copy, evidently in the hand of a scribe and probably made for Walsingham, has preserved for us its contents. This duplicate was found in the library of Sir Peter Thomson, after his death in 1770, and is now in the author's collection. It was printed, 1877, as Vol. II of Maine Hist. Soc. publications, with notes by Dr. Chas. Deane.

Perhaps the earliest reference to a possible sojourn of Europeans in the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island is contained in a complaint addressed on Oct. 25, 1634, by the "Assembly of XIX" to the states-general, in relation to the representations of one Jacob Jacobsen Elkens, a trader, who, in April, 1633, came to the North River in the service of one William Klobery, an Englishman, with the ship "William," and, although refusing to exhibit "his Majesty's Instruction or Commission," made public claim that "said river and adjacent country were in, and of, the Domain of his Majesty of Great Britain." Although the complaint states that "the said river and adjacent countries had been discovered in the year 1609, at the cost of the East India Company," it adds: ". . . Likewise, that one or more little forts were built also under your High Mightinesses' chief jurisdiction, even before the year 1614, and supplied with people for the security of the said trade; Further, that, after these countries had passed into the hands of the incorporated West India Company, not only were the above named forts renewed and enlarged, but said Company purchased from the Indians, who were the indubitable owners thereof, the Island of the Manhattes, situate at the entrance of the said river, and there laid the foundation of a city."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 93. This reference to an early fort on the North River is repeated, and the date 1598 assigned to the first frequenting of these parts, in a "Report and Advice on the Condition of New Netherland, drawn up from documents and papers placed by commission of the Assembly of XIX, dated 15th Decr. 1644, in the hands of the General Board of Accounts . . ." This report begins as follows:—

"New Netherland . . . extending from the South river lying in 34½ degrees, to Cape Malabar, in the latitude of 41½ degrees, was first frequenting by the inhabitants of this country in the year 1598, and especially by those of the Greenland Company, but without making any fixed settlements, only as a shelter in the winter. For which purpose they erected on the North and South Rivers there two little forts against the incursions of the Indians. A charter was afterwards, on the 11th of October, 1614, granted by their High Mightinesses . . ."—Ibid., I: 149.

There is no proof, or even suggestion, that such a fort, even if built on the North River, was on Manhattan Island. No record has been found of a "Greenland Company" at so early a date as 1598. If such a company existed, it was probably composed of a small group of merchants who sent out expeditions to Greenland (probably Spitzbergen) prior to the organization of the Noordsche Compagnie in 1614. In this connection, the following statement is found in the Historie Der vermaerde Zee-en Koop-stad Enckhuysen, by Geeraerd Brandt, 2d edn. ed. by Sebastianen Centen (Hooru, 1747), suppl. p. 19: "For some time there had been discussions regarding the formation of a Greenlandsche Maatschappij (Greenland Company), and to that end various subscriptions had been made in Holland and Zeeland. At last, in this year (1614), this company took its beginning under the name of the Noordsche Compagnie."

It is also possible that there was some confusion in the minds of the authors of the report of 1644 between the North and South Rivers in New Netherland and the West and South Rivers mentioned by De Laet in his Nieuwe Wereldt (1630), 567-68, in describ-

June John Davis sails from Dartmouth with two vessels, the "Sun- 7-17 shine" and the "Moonshine." On this voyage he discovered the strait which now bears his name, and sailed as far north as 66° 40', and to the west farther than anyone had yet penetrated. He returned to Dartmouth on Sept. 30.—Hakluyt, Principall Navigations (London, 1589), 776-80.

In this year, Sir Francis Drake, on his way to Virginia, captured, plundered, and burned St. Augustine. An engraved view of this settlement (the first engraving of a North American town) accompanies the description in his Expeditio Francisci Draki (Leyden, 1588); Church Catalogue, No. 134A.

Oct. The trial of Mary Queen of Scots begins, at Fotheringay Castle, 14-24 under charges of attempting to transfer the sovereignty of England to the King of Spain, and with complicity in a plot to assassinate Elizabeth. On Feb. 1, 1587, Elizabeth signed the death-warrant; and on Feb. 8, Mary was executed.

May King Philip II of Spain having organized "The Invincible Armada," a fleet of 130 vessels carrying about 35,000 men for the invasion of England, it sails from Lisbon. Soon afterward it was dispersed by a storm, but was reassembled, and in July entered the English Channel. During the week of July 21-29, an English fleet, commanded by Lord Charles Howard, Sir Francis Drake, and Sir John Hawkins, in several encounters, supported by a Dutch fleet, almost destroyed the armada, the remaining vessels of which sailed northward, most of them being demolished by storms. 19-29

June The first three ships equipped by the states-general to search 5 for a north-east passage to India sail from the Texel. They are commanded, respectively, by Willem Barendsz, Gerrit de Veer, and Jan Huyghen van Linschoten. After having reached the Waygat Strait, the ships separated on July 21 and took different directions. The strait was open, but farther on the passage was so obstructed by ice that all three commanders decided to return to the Waygat. They met there on Aug. 15. On Aug. 18, they started on their homeward trip, arriving in the Texel on Sept. 16.—Versteeg, Manhattan in 1628, 87-88. The first printed account of this expedition is contained in Voyage, ofte Schip-Vaert van Ian Hvyghen van Linschoten (1601), Church Catalogue, No. 324.

— In this year, Shakespeare's Globe Theatre was built in London.
— The so-called Molineux-Wright map of the world, drawn on Mercator's projection, and probably intended for inclusion in the 1599-1600 edition of Hakluyt's Principall Navigations, but completed too late, and therefore issued separately, was engraved in this year. One of the 13 recorded copies of this map is in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See Church Catalogue, No. 322.

1601

— During this year, steps were taken to bring about the formation of the Dutch East India Company, the first of the great Dutch trading companies of the seventeenth century, which in less than fifty years built up a world empire comparable to the British Empire of a later day. This extraordinary expansion of Dutch commerce and navigation, which occurred in the very midst of the war with Spain, is explained partly by the geographical situation of The Netherlands and partly by the political conditions of the surrounding countries.

— Situated midway between the Danish Sound and the Strait of Gibraltar, the Dutch people from an early date had carried on an extensive trade between the countries of northern and southern Europe. During the first years of the war with Spain, this trade suffered a serious setback, but with the destruction of the Spanish Armada, in 1588, the chief danger to Dutch shipping disappeared, and from that time trade began to revive.

— The fall of Antwerp, in 1585, caused thousands of the ablest and most industrious citizens, among them such men as Usselinx, Plancius, De Moucheron, De Laet, Blommaert, and others, to emigrate to Holland, especially to Amsterdam. This large increase of population, which forced the city of Amsterdam twice within a decade, in 1585 and in 1593, to extend its walls, gave a fresh impetus to Dutch commercial enterprise. The Baltic trade soon rose to an unprecedented height, Dutch merchants applied themselves with energy to the development of the Muscovy trade; ships were built in Holland more cheaply and in greater number than anywhere else in the world, and to the ancient Scottish wool staple established at Veere was added the once famous wool staple of Antwerp, at first transferred to Middelburg, then moved to Delft, and finally located at Dordrecht.

— On May 29, 1585, the king of Spain issued sudden orders to seize all Dutch vessels then found in Spanish and Portuguese harbours, and in 1598 all trade with the rebel provinces was formally forbidden. These measures resulted in much clandestine trade and forced Dutch merchants to seek out new routes of commerce. To obtain the indispensable salt for the herring fishery, which hitherto had procured at Lisbon and Setubal, Dutch merchants sailed to the Cape Verde Islands. In 1593, ships from Enkhuizen visited Guinea, and soon after Zealand traders began to make frequent voyages to Brazil. In 1590, the first Dutch ships were seen in the Mediterranean, and from that time on they became regular visitors, first in Italy, and then in the Levant, where, through the business connections of the Portuguese and Spanish Jews who had established themselves at Amsterdam in 1590 and 1602, the Dutch were soon mistress of the trade.

— The extremely profitable commerce which Spain and Portugal (united from 1580 to 1640) carried on with the East Indies now turned the thoughts of Dutch merchants to those distant parts. Hoping to find a shorter route than that around the Cape of Good Hope, which, while respecting the Spanish monopoly of that ancient route, would also lessen the danger of attack by Dunkirk pirates, Dutch ship owners sent out a number of expeditions to seek a north-east passage. The results were discouraging, but soon another way presented itself. After Cornelis de Houtman's return from Lisbon (in 1594), Dutch merchants, in consultation with Petrus Plancius, organized the Compagnie van Verre (the Company of Distant Parts), which sent out four ships in 1595. Houtman, after a voyage of about a year, succeeded in reaching the coast of Bantam, on Java, by way of the Cape of Good Hope, on June 23, 1596 (some authorities say June 24), and the ships returned in 1597. Immediately a number of similar companies were organized in various places of The Netherlands, and before the end of 1601, 15 fleets, with a total of 63 ships, had sailed to the East Indies. These companies engaged in a destructive competition with each other, and it became evident that measures must be taken to combine them into some form of organization resembling a modern trust or cartel. Oldenbarnevelt took the initiative and the Dutch East India Company was the result. The charter of this company, which was granted on March 20, 1602, became the model for that of other companies: first, that of the Northern Company, organized on January 27, 1614, and later that of the Dutch West India Company, chartered on June 3, 1621, all three of which companies have played a part in the discovery and settlement of Manhattan island.—See chapters on "Handel en Nijverheid," by Dr. H. Brugmans, in Amsterdam in de Zeventiende Eeuw, vol. II; S. Muller, *Fz. — In this year, Herrera published his Historia general de los hechos de los Castellanos, the earliest work based on Spanish state documents, which, by an order of Charles V, dated Feb. 19, 1543, were preserved in the national archives at Simancas. This edition contained seven American maps.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 1, 67, 213, 460, and authorities there cited; Sabia, No. 31, 539.

— Queen Elizabeth grants a charter to the English East India Company. This charter is for 15 years. It empowers the company to trade to all places in the East Indies unclaimed by other Christian nations, to buy land for factories, to make by-laws, etc.

1602

— Early in this year, Capt. Bartholomew Gosnold and Capt. Bartholomew Gilbert were sent out, largely through the efforts of the Earl of Southampton, to discover a convenient place for a new colony in the north part of "Virginia." Sailing from Falmouth, Gosnold was driven by an unfavourable wind as far southward as the Azores, whence he steered directly across the Atlantic, striking the continent of America in latitude 43°, near Portsmouth, New Hampshire. After some time spent in visiting and trading with the natives, he "found himself imbrayed with a mighty headland," which he named Cape Cod.

— Gosnold reached a point as far south as Buzzard's Bay, where he prepared to plant a colony on the westernmost island, which he named "Elizabeth" (Cuttyhunk), in honour of the queen. Here he built a house, expecting to spend the winter, while the "Concord," in charge of Gilbert, returned to England "for new and better preparations;" but his men could not be prevailed upon to remain, and Gosnold therefore returned to England in July.

— Pring's expedition of the next year (q. v.) was the direct result of this enterprise. The history of Gosnold's expedition, which constituted the first English attempt to settle New England, is found in A Briefe and true Relation of the Discoverie of the North part of Virginia, by John Breretto (London, 1602). Cf. 1586.

— On this date, the Dutch East India Company was organized by a consolidation of several independent Dutch trading companies, and a charter was at once granted, covering a period of 21 years, for the exclusive privilege of trading in the eastern seas beyond the Cape of Good Hope on the one side and the Straits of Magellan on the other. This charter bestowed large powers for conquest, colonization, and government within these limits.—Brakel (S. van), De Hollandische Handelcompagnieën der zeventiende Eeuw, 12-22; Groot Placaat-Boeck, I: 130-38; Van Meteren, XXIV: 512.

Mc.15 The "chiefest Merchants of Bristol" (moved largely by the enlightened zeal of Richard Hakluyt), having resolved to send an expedition "for the farther Discouerie of the North part of Virginia," and having obtained permission of Sir Walter Raleigh, patentee, send out a small vessel called the "Speedwell," under Captain Martin Pring, and a bark, the "Discouerer," under Captain William Broune. For trading purposes, they carried clothing, hardware, and trinkets. The expedition was in no sense solely a voyage of discovery, one of its objects being to procure sassafras, in search of which Pring coasted in and out among the islands in the neighbourhood of 43° 30', and at length anchored in a harbour on the south shore of Cape Cod Bay, in 41° 25', to which he gave the name Whitson Bay (probably Barnstable Harbour, which, although it lies in 41°, 43', in other respects exactly corresponds with Purchas's description). Here they erected a "small baricado" for shelter and protection. Seven weeks were spent gathering sassafras and experimenting with the soil, which they ploughed up and planted. On Aug. 8 or 9, they left "this excellent Haven" and returned to England, reaching there early in October.—Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1654-56. This voyage of Pring stimulated afresh England's awakened interest in New England. For his later voyage, see Aug. 12, 1606.

19-29 Sir Walter Raleigh, after impoverishing himself in unsuccessful efforts to add to his native kingdom an effective American plantation, is consigned, under an unjust judgment, to a lingering imprisonment in the Tower of London; which was followed, in 1618, by his execution.

25- James VI of Scotland is crowned King of England as James I. Shortly after his accession to the throne, he declared himself at peace "with all the princes of Christendom," and recalled all letters of marque and reprisal against the Spaniards.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 9 citing Rymer, Federa, XVI: 516. He was proclaimed on Oct. 24, 1604, "King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland."

Jan. The Hampton Court conference of prelates and Puritan dissenters begins, for the purpose of effecting a union of the Church of England. The king resolving to make no concessions to the Puritans, it led to little besides the production (in 1611) of the King James version of the Bible.

Aug. England makes a formal treaty with Spain, which resulted in time in the abandonment of the predatory expeditions which English mariners had so long carried on against the American possessions of their recent foe.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 9.

— In this year, a settlement was made by the Spaniards at Santa Fé.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VIII: 254, and authorities there cited.

Mar. Capt. George Waymouth, during this period, explored the coast of New England. His expedition, which was fitted out at the expense of the Earl of Southampton and his brother-in-law, Lord Arundel, was intended for the coast of Maine. Sailing from the Downs, Waymouth struck the American coast near Nantucket, whence, running northerly along the coast, he sailed for "sixty miles up the most excellent and beneficial river of Sacadehoc."
18- After an absence of four months, Waymouth returned to England, taking with him five natives, two or three of whom were immediately "seized upon" by Sir Ferdinando Gorges, who afterward declared that "this accident must be acknowledged the means, under God, of putting on foot and giving life to all our plantations" (see Aug. 12, 1606). The account of this voyage is contained in A True Relation of the most prosperous voyage made this present year 1605 by Captaine George Waymouth, in the Discovery of the land of Virginia, by James Rosier (London, 1605).

Nov. Guy Fawkes is discovered in the act of blowing up the House of Parliament, and the "Gunpowder Plot" is frustrated.

— In this year, John Smyth, a Separatist minister, and many of his congregation emigrated from Gainsborough, Eng., to Amsterdam, because of persecution.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 257 and authorities there cited.

Apr. King James, by patent, divides Virginia into two colonies; the southern, called "the first colony," being granted the privilege of occupying and governing a strip 100 miles long extending along the coast between the thirty-fourth and the forty-first degrees, he grants to the London Company; the northern, called "the second colony," lying between the thirty-eighth and the forty-fifth degrees, he grants to the Plymouth Company. In order to prevent collision between the two colonies, the charter expressly provides that the colony which shall be planted last shall fix its boundary at least 100 miles from that of the prior establishment.—Hazard, Historical Collections, consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents, I: 51-58.

Aug. Capt. Henry Challoung (Challons) is sent by Sir Ferdinando Gorges and others on a voyage of discovery to the New England coast, accompanied by two Indians who had been brought to England by Waymouth, and who had imparted to Gorges much information regarding that country, and especially its principal rivers. Soon after leaving the Canaries, Challoung fell ill, and his ship was carried by the prevailing winds to "St. John de Porteriko." Shortly afterward, the ship and crew were captured by a Spanish fleet coming from Havana, and carried to Spain.

In October, Martin Pring was dispatched from Bristol by Popham to join Challoung "where by his instructions he was assigned," but not finding him, after he had "scow'd the coast all about, . . . and had made a perfect discovery of all those Rivers and Harbours [of which] he was informed by his instructions, (the season of the year requiring his return) brings with him the most exact discovery of that Coast that ever came to my hands since, and indeed he was the best able to performe it of any I met withall to this present, which with his relation of the Country, wrought such an impression in the Lord Chiefe Justice, and us all that were his associates, that (notwithstanding our first disaster) we set up our resolutions to follow it with effect, and that upon better grounds, for as yet, our authority was but in motion.—Ferdinando Gorges, "A Briefe Narration," etc., and "A Description of New England," in America Painted to the Life (1659).

A very full account of Challons' voyage, written by John Stoneman, pilot, is printed in Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1832-37.

It is not clear how far south Pring's explorations on this voyage extended. His instructions provided that, after "they had discovered the Main . . . as high as Cape Britton," they were "to bear it up to the Southward, as the Coast tended, till they found by the Natives they were near the place they were assigned unto . . ." possibly the Hudson, the Delaware, or Chesapeake Bay.

Champlain, on a voyage of exploration from Canada along the New England coast, leaves "Port Fortuné [See plan in Champlain, 1613 ed. p. 132] . . . in 41 degrees & one third latitude, & some 12 or 13 leagues from Malebarre" (Nausett Harbour, or Pleasant Bay, on Cape Cod. See plan in Champlain, 1613 ed. p. 88.) From this point, he continued some six or seven leagues in sight of an island(?), which he named "la soupponneuse" because of its mysterious appearance; evidently he at first took it for a part of the main land. On the 20th, having been driven back by a storm, he again left Port Fortuné and skirted "the coast to the south-west about 12 leagues," to a small river and one difficult of approach because of shoals and rocks at its entrance. At this point, a strong and contrary wind caused him to turn toward "the water" (the open sea?).

A careful comparison of the maps contained in the 1613 and 1632 editions of Champlain's Voyages with the modern map, taken in connection with the distances and directions noted in Champlain's several descriptions contained in the different editions, seems to indicate that Port Fortuné was the modern Starbore; that "la soupponneuse" was perhaps Point Gammon, or possibly some island now submerged, such, for instance, as Bishop and Clerk's Island; and that the deep gulf which, on the map of 1612, marks the southern limit of his explorations, was in all probability Vineyard Sound, which presents a land-locked appearance from a point a few miles east of its entrance.

William Usselincx, who had already (in 1591) suggested a Dutch association to trade in the West Indies, now urges the immediate establishment of a West India Company modelled after the East India Company, which new company, however, did not materialize until June 3, 1621 (q. v.).—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 23.

1607 The Dutch defeat the Spanish fleet at Gibraltar, and become masters of the sea.

May Colonists, under Capt. Newport, dispatched to America by the London Company, start the first permanent English colony in the western hemisphere, with a settlement at Jamestown, Virginia. "The fourteenth day [of May] we landed all our men, which were set to work about the fortification [James Fort], and others some to watch and ward as it was convenient."—Observations by Master George Percy, 1607, printed in Tyler's Narr. of Early Virginia, 15.

June 31= The "Gift of God," under George Popham, and the "Mary and John," commanded by Raleigh Gilbert, the nephew of Sir Walter Raleigh, sail from Plymouth with 120 colonists to make a settlement on the Kennebeck River. They arrived in August, and began their settlement at the mouth of the Sagadahoc. They named their fort "Saint George." In a short time, 50 houses were constructed, and a "pretty Barke" built—perhaps the second vessel constructed by Europeans in the territory now known as the United States, the only earlier one recorded having, apparently, been built by Ayllon on the coast of South Carolina in the summer of 1526 (q. v.). The winter of 1607-8 was very severe, and in the midst of it fire destroyed their store-house, provisions, and most of their lodgings. On Feb. 5, Capt. Popham died and was succeeded by Raleigh Gilbert. In the following summer, several vessels visited North Virginia, by one of which Gilbert learned of the death of his brother and the necessity of his return to England. Thereupon, the colonists, discouraged by their sufferings (to which, doubtless, the mosquitoes contributed largely), and disappointed also because of their failure to discover any valuable minerals, abandoned the colony and returned to England, being assisted in this by the vessel they had built, the "Virginia."—"A briefe Relation of the Discoverie and Plantation of New-England," in Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1827-32; Ferdinando Gorges, "A Brief Narrative," 8, in America Painted to the Life (1659).

1608

— In this year, the Separatists, of Scrooby, Eng., emigrated to Amsterdam. In 1609, they removed to Leyden and established their church.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 261-62 and authorities there cited.

— Probably between 1606 and 1608, the so-called "Virginia Company Chart," an English manuscript chart of the Atlantic coast of America from New Foundland to Brazil, and of England and Asrica from Ireland to the coast of Guinea, was drawn. This map, which is reproduced in Vol. II, Cartography, C. Pl. 21-3, and described on p. 49 et seq., apparently embodies the information possessed by Hudson when he undertook his memorable third voyage. The stretch of coast which was unknown to the author of this map is exactly that portion which was still unmapped when Hudson sailed, and which he evidently intended to explore, should his search for a passage to the Orient by the North prove unsuccessful.

On this chart, we find recorded for the first time a relatively accurate knowledge of the coast-line north and east of the suspected passage in the neighbourhood of 40° N. L., including Cape Cod, and extending to a point midway between the 41d and 44th degrees.

July 3 The first permanent settlement in New France is made, at Quebec. "The rock and the surroundings of the old Iroquois city of Stadacona [Stadacona] attracted Champlain as it has fascinated millions since his day. So Champlain cast anchor there on July 3, 1608, and laid the foundations of a city which he called Quebec, from the Indian name meaning the Narrows."—Tracy, Tercentenary Hist. of Canada, I: 53.

— In the latter part of this year, at the invitation of the directors of the East India Co., Henry Hudson, having been unsuccessful in two expeditions, sent out respectively in 1607 and 1608 by the London Company, to seek a shorter passage to the Orient by way of the Northern Seas, went to Holland, in the hope of securing encouragement and help in connection with a new enterprise. After negotiating with the Dutch East India Company at Amsterdam for a voyage in its service, he was advised that no expedition could be immediately undertaken. Isaac Le Maire, thereupon, attempted to enlist Hudson's services for the King of France, but, when the rumour of these negotiations reached the Dutch East India Company, Hudson was at once recalled.—Letter (dated Jan. 25) of President Jeannin, French ambassador at The Hague, to Henry IV, in Asher's Henry Hudson the Navigator, 244-54. See also Murphy, Henry Hudson in Holland. This letter quotes Hudson and Plancius as believing that the climate as one approaches the Pole becomes milder, and the sea more open, and as advising therefore an attempt to sail eastward in c. 85° rather than in c. 74°.

The directors of the Amsterdam chamber of the East India Co. commission three of their members to draft a contract with Henry Hudson, and prepare the necessary letters to the other chambers. At the same time instructions are given to look out for a suitable vessel of from 25 to 35 lasts (50 to 70 tons) for Hudson. The contract was made out and signed on Jan. 8, 1609 (q. v.).—Resolutien van de Kamer van Amsterdam, trans. in Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, 115, 142.

"... the Voyage [to Virginia] is not long nor tedious, five weeks at ease will send us thither, whereas five months suffice not to some other places where we Trade: our course and passage is thorow the great Ocean, where is no feare of Rocks or Flattes, nor subject to the streights or restraint of Iorrieine Princes; most Winds that blow, are apt and fit for vs, and none can hinder vs: when we come to the Coast, there is continual depth enough, with good Bottoome for Anchorhold, and the Land is faire to fall with all, full of excellent good Harbours, the world affords no better for Ships of all burdens, many pleasant llands great and small affronting the Coast: Two goodly Riuers are discovered, winding farre into the Mayne, the one in the North part of the Land [Is this a reference to the Sagadahoc, which was abandoned by the Popham colony in 1608 (see May 31, 1607), or, possibly, to the Hudson River?] by our Westerne Colonie, Knights and Gentlemen of Excester, Plymouth, and others: The other in the South part thereof, by our Colonie of London: Upon which Riuer being both broad, deepe and pleasant, abounding with store of fish, our Colonie haue begun to fortifie themselves, and haue built a Towne, and named it (in honour of our King) James Towne, fourseore miles within Land, upon the Northside of the Riuer ...".—Robert Johnson, Nova Britannia (1609), page 9 (unnumbered).

Henry Hudson enters into a contract with the Dutch East India Company for a voyage of discovery (his third in search of a short route to the Orient), in which he is to seek a new route to the Indies, by way of the north-east, that is along the northern coast of Russia and Siberia, passing "around by the North Side of Nova Zembla," and through the Straits of Anian (Bering Strait).

The original contract has disappeared, but a copy, made by Pieter van Dam, counsel of the company from 1652 to 1706, for his unpublished history of that corporation, is preserved in the archives at The Hague (see Pl. I, Vol. IV), together with an abstract of certain "Instructions," which Van Dam states were issued to Hudson at the same time. The contract and "Instructions" are printed in Dutch and in English by Murphy in his Henry Hudson in Holland, from which the following extracts are taken (see also Vol. II, Cartography, page 42 et seq.):

The contract provides that "the said Directors shall in the first place equip a small vessel or yacht of about thirty lasts [60 tons] burden, with which, well provided with men, provisions and other necessaries, the above named Hudson shall about the first of April, sail, in order to search for a passage by the North, around by the North side of Nova Zembla, and shall continue thus along that parallel until he shall be able to sail Southward to the latitude of sixty degrees. He shall obtain as much knowledge of the lands as can be done without any considerable loss of time, and if it is possible return immediately in order to make a faithful report and relation of his voyage to the Directors, and to deliver over his Journals, log-books and charts, together with an account of everything whatsoever which shall happen to him during the voyage without keeping anything back; for which said voyage the Directors shall pay to the said Hudson, as well for his outfit for the said voyage, as for the support of his wife and children, the sum of eight hundred guilders [5320.] and, in case (which God prevent) he do not come back or arrive hereabouts within a year, the Directors shall further pay to his wife two hundred guilders [880.] in cash; and thereupon they shall not be further liable to him or his heirs, unless he shall either afterwards or within the year arrive and have found the passage good and suitable for the Company to use; in which case the Directors will reward the before named Hudson for his dangers, trouble and knowledge in their discretion,

Jan. 8 The following reference to the original "Instructions" to Hudson is made by Van Dam (ibid., 37) in support of his censure of Hudson for seeking a passage through the continent of America: "This Company in the year 1609 fitted out a yacht of about 30 lasts burthen and engaged a Mr. Henry Hudson, an Englishman, and a skilful pilot, as master thereof, with orders to search for the aforesaid passage by the North and Northeast above Nova Zembla, towards the lands or straits of Anian [Bering Strait] and then to sail at least as far as the sixtieth degree of North latitude, when if the time permitted he was to return from the straits of Anian again to this country. And he was further ordered by his instructions, to think of discovering no other routes or passages, except the route around by the North and Northeast above Nova Zembla; with this additional provision, that if it could not be accomplished at that time, another route would be the subject of consideration for another voyage." See also the Eleventh Annual Report of the Am. Scenic and Hist. Preservation Soc. (1906).

Mar. 5 On this day, Zuñiga writes to Philip III a long letter regarding the Jamestown settlement. At the end of the letter he says: "I have also been told that two vessels are leaving Plymouth with men to people that country which they have taken, which is farther off." In a footnote, Brown remarks: "This was certainly an expedition for North Virginia." It may have had as its object the re-establishment of the colony of Sagadahoc, which had been abandoned the preceding year, or it may have been directed to some other goal, possibly to the south, toward the Hudson River.

We do not know whether this expedition actually started, or not, but undoubtedly at about this time, as Brown remarks, expeditions were sent from England to North Virginia of which no accounts have been preserved.—Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I, 243-47.

Apr. 4 Hudson, with his crew of 18 or 19 English and Dutch seamen, sails from Amsterdam in the ship "De Halve Maen" (Half Moon), which had been fitted out for him by the Amsterdam chamber of the East India Company.

7 Not being able to force a passage by the north-east, because of the ice and cold encountered in the neighbourhood of Nova Zembla, and harassed by dissensions among his crew, which, as we shall see later, he probably accepted as a ready excuse, he turned westward on May 14. Before turning, however, he laid before the ship's company two alternative proposals: "The first of these was to go to the coast of America, to the latitude of 40°, moved thereto mostly by letters and maps which a certain Captain Smith had sent him from Virginia, and by which he indicated to him a sea leading into the western ocean, by the north of the southern English colony [Virginia, which, by the "Second Charter," formulated some time prior to Feb. 17, 1609, had been divided into two parts, the southern part lying between 34° and 40° N. L. so that the mouth of the Hudson, lying as it does in 40° 18', coincides exactly with the location here indicated.] . . . The other proposition was to direct their search through Davis' Straits."

The maps sent by Captain Smith, which probably represented comparatively recent discoveries, perhaps included a map containing such information of the coasts of Virginia, New England, and Canada as are found for the first time combined on the "Virginia Company Chart" (C. Pl. 21A, Vol. II). They can hardly have included the original of the Velasco Map before the addition of Hudson's discoveries and those of his immediate successors, as in this case Hudson would naturally have sought a northern passage by way of the St. Lawrence, rather than through Davis Straits. They may have included a copy of the Jehan Cossin Map of 1570 (C. Pl. 16), which clearly suggests the possibility of a passage through the Hudson River, as well as by the extreme north-west.

The collection had, doubtless, been supplemented before Hudson left Holland by copies of such important maps as Michael Lok's map of 1582 (outline on C. Pl. 17), which shows the western sea, or the Sea of Verrazzano; the Mollineux Map, published in 1600 (outline on C. Pl. 20), and perhaps an earlier issue than the 1610 edition of the map of Octavius Pisanus (C. Pl. 21), which important map actually shows a passage to the western sea, in the neighbourhood of 40° N. L. Hudson was also, no doubt, familiar with the maps depicting the discoveries of Verrazzano, Gomez, and other early explorers along our coast. See Vol. II, Cartography, Chap. I.

Alexander Brown, in his Genesis of the U. S., I, 184, suggests that Hudson may have taken with him to Holland, in the latter part of 1608, a copy of Smith's True Relation and his sketch map of the neighbourhood of Chesapeake Bay, which accompanied it. It is not inconceivable that the Relation, which, it will be remembered, was "Written by Captaine Smith Coronell of the said Collony, to a worshipfull friend of his in England," was actually addressed to Hudson, and that this and the map were among the documents referred to by Van Meteren as having been sent to Hudson by Smith. We learn from the Relation that Smith himself was deeply interested in the question of a passage to the western sea, the existence and location of which he frequently discussed with the Indians, who successively led him to seek for it via Chesapeake Bay, the Susquehanna River, and the Potomac, and finally suggested that the passage was by way of "the river of Canada." From various statements made by the Indians, and quoted by Smith, Strachey, and others, it is clear that the sea which they had in mind, and which Smith and others mistook for the western ocean, was in reality Lake Ontario, which is evidently the sea that Strachey tells us "should be about ten daies [above the falls of the James River], allowing, according to a march, some fourteen or sixteen miles a day."—The Historie of Travaille into Virginia Britannia, Hakluyt Soc. Publ. (1849), 34. It is true that Velasco, in his letter of March 22, 1611, to the King of Spain (reproduced in Brown, Genesis of U. S., I: 455 et seq.) says: ". . . It is more than 400 leagues off and many high mountains are there and vast deserts which the Indians themselves never yet have explored." Among other references to this unknown sea are Smith's statement that "Beyond the mountains from whence is the head of the river Patowomeke, The Savages report, inhabit their most mortal enemies, the Massawomekes vpon a great salt water, which by all likelihood is either some part of Cammada [Canada] some great lake, or some inlet of some sea that falleth into the South sea."—A Map of Virginia (etc.) (1612), 26. King Powhatan evidently realized that any statements made by the Indians to the effect that a salt sea existed beyond the mountains, to the west, were without foundation, as he told Smith that, "for any salt water beyond the mountaioes, the relations you haue had from my people are false."—Smith, The Generall Historie of Virginia (etc.), 68.

It is altogether likely that the Relation, which came to a somewhat abrupt end on June 2, 1608, was forwarded by the "Phoenix," which sailed on that date, and reached England early in July. From this document, which was entered for publication on Aug. 13, we know that Smith had, by June 2, explored most, if not all, of the possible approaches to the western sea in the neighbourhood of Chesapeake Bay, and it is quite possible that the portions which we are told in the preface were omitted, as "fit to be private," contained the reference to "a sea leading into the western ocean, by the north of the southern English colony," to which Van Meteren refers; or, it is possible that Hudson may have received some further information from Smith on this subject.

In the "Report of What Francisco Maguel, an Irishman, learned in the State of Virginia, during the eight months that he was there," probably from Sept., 1607, to April, 1608 (reproduced under cxxi, in Brown, Genesis of U. S., I: 393-99), we find the following statement:

. . . the natives of Virginia assure the English that they can easily take them to the South-Sea by three routes. The first route on which they will take them is by land, from the head of that river, on which the English have a fort, to the South Sea, as the Natives affirm [is ten days' march]. The second route is, because in a day's march and a half from the head of that river inland, there is another river so long that it falls into the South Sea. The third route is that twelve leagues from the mouth of this river, where the English are, towards the N. W. there are four other rivers, to which there came [went?] one of those English Captains in a pinnace, who says that one of these rivers is of great importance, and the Natives affirm, that fourteen leagues farther on from these 4 rivers towards the N. W. there is another great river, which flows very far into the country, until it meets another large river, which flows to the South Sea." Cf. the Pisanus Map (C. Pl. 21, Vol. II).

Apr. 4 to Nov. 7

1609 These are clearly references to the story which Capt. Smith
Apr. brought back to the colony on returning from his captivity in 4 January, 1608, and show that Smith, at the time when he wrote to Hudson, believed that the passage would be found somewhere to Nov. the north of Chesapeake Bay.

7 Maguel's further statement that "the anxiety they [the English] feel that the secrets of this country shall not become known, is so great that they have issued orders prohibiting any one from taking letters with him beyond the frontiers, and also from sending any, especially to private individuals, without their being first seen and read by the Governor," is an indication of the pains taken by the English to prevent foreigners, especially Spaniards, from getting possession of maps and descriptions of the country.

It is of course possible that Hudson, in accordance with the principle of elimination, drew his own inferences as to the likelihood of a passage between 38° and 41° 30', which embraced the only section of the coast not already thoroughly explored. It seems also clear that Hudson believed that the chances of finding the passage in the neighbourhood of 40° were at least equal to those of finding it by way of the north-west, and that he did not greatly care which section of the coast he searched first, expecting, in case of failure in his first attempt, to try as soon as possible the other alternative.

Hudson's forehandedness in possessing himself of the above-mentioned documents furnishes ground for the belief that even before sailing he had in mind the possibility of departing from the strict terms of his contract, and of seeking a passage by way of the east coast of America, should difficulties be encountered on the north-east route. That he confidently anticipated such difficulties, as a result of his experience on his second voyage, is more than likely. Indeed, in one place in his journal of this voyage, while describing his explorations in Nova Zembla, he remarks: "It is no marvell that there is so much Ice in the Sea toward the Pole, so many Sounds and Riwers being in the Lands of Noua Zembla, and Newland [Spitzbergen] to ingender it; besides the coasts of Pechora, Russia, and Groenland [Greenland], with Lappia, as by proofes I finde by my trauell in these parts: by means of which Ice I suppose there will be no navigable passage this way." Again he remarks: "... for at my beieg at Noua Zembla, the sixt of Iuly, vide of hope of a North-east passage, (except by the Vaygats [Weygats: straits separating Noua Zembla from Russia], for which I was not fitted to trie or proue) I therefore resolu'd to vse all means I cou'd sayle to the North-west; considering the time and means we had, if the wind should friend vs, as in the first part of our Voyage it had done, and to make triall of that place called Lumleys Inlet [Hudsons Straits], and the furious over-fall by Captayne Davis, hoping to runne into it an hundred leagues, and to returne as God should enable mee."—Purchas His Pilgrimes, III: 579-80. There seems, therefore, reason to suspect that he had, from the beginning, virtually determined upon a westward course.

Although Van Meteren clearly states that the proposal to direct their search through Davis Strait met with general approval, it seems clear, from subsequent events related by him and by Juet, that Hudson himself preferred, or at least accepted, the alternative of seeking first a passage in "the latitude of 40°," which course there is even reason to believe he had pretty well determined upon before sailing. Smith's theory of a probable passage through America in the neighbourhood of 40° was probably based upon the Indians' accounts of the Great Lakes, which he evidently mistook for the western sea, which, in his True Relation, written in 1608, he refers to as "the backe Sea that on the other side the maiore, where was salt water." It may also be noted in this connection that Popham, writing to King James from Sagadahoc, on Dec. 13, 1607, said: "Besides, they [the natives] positively assure me, that there is a certain Sea in the opposite or western part of this province, distant not more than seven day's journey from our fort of St. George in Sagadahoc: a sea large, wide and deep of the boundaries of which they are wholly ignorant; which cannot be any other than the Southern Ocean, reaching to the regions of China, which unquestionably cannot be far from these parts."—Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I: 146. This sea is clearly shown on the Velasco Map (C. Pl. 22), where, as has already been noted, it corresponds in location with Lake Ontario, and is connected with the Atlantic Ocean by Hudson River (through the Mohawk) and the St. Lawrence. The Velasco Map also shows Lake Champlain.

Hudson also had with him copies of George Waymouth's journals, describing his attempt, in 1602, to discover a north-west passage through Davis Strait, and more particularly through Lumley's (Hudson's) Straits, in 61° 40', which he penetrated to a distance of 100 leagues, or within 50 miles of Hudson Bay, and his discoveries along the New England coast as far south as 41° 30', in 1605. These journals had been furnished him by Peter Plancius, the great Dutch geographer, with whom he consulted in 1608-9, before his departure, and with whose own maps of the north-east coast he was, of course, familiar. Plancius, however, believed the theory of a westerly passage in this direction to be fallacious, "from the account of one who had explored the land in the west and had declared it to be continuous" (i. e., to contain no strait or passage).—Hessel Gerritsz., Descriptio ac delineatio Geographica Detectionis Preti Sive, Transivis ad Occasum, supra terras Americanas, in Chinam atq; Japonem ducturi, in Asher's Henry Hudson the Navigator, 89, 191-92.

A full translation of this tract will be found in Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, p. 49 et seq. This translation contains some errors: for example, in the sentence "Hence the opinion prevailed that by that way [alone] there was a passage open to the Indies," the important word alone is omitted; and, further, the passage beginning "Hudson . . . sailed Westwardly, in order that he might see if there were any hope remaining, not in a direct course, as is said, in order that he might get some profit for our country and the Directors" can better be rendered: "Hudson nevertheless seeing that towards the East, and Nova Zembla, the way was closed by ice and snow, sailed towards the west, so that he might investigate whether any hope remained; not by a direct route (as is related) that this our country and the Directors might profit, only that he might in New France exchange his merchandise, for skins, he returned safely to England, where he was accused . . ."

From Juet's account, it is clear that, after leaving the Fåroe Islands, Hudson shaped his course south by west, rather than towards Davis Strait, which would have required a more northerly course. It is interesting to note that on July 3d, off the coast of Newfoundland, the "Hall Moon" passed a "great Fleet of Frenchmen, which lay Fishing on the Banke," and that from this point on, until they reached the coast of America, ships were sighted at frequent intervals. Having landed, on July 18, in the neighbourhood of Penobscot Bay, to replace a broken foremast, and his crew, after a few days sojourn there, having quarreled with the natives, he again sailed south-west, with the probable purpose of making land in the neighbourhood of Chesapeake Bay, where Smith and his 500 colonists were settled, at Jamestown, in "the Kings Riuer in Virginia," and of searching thence the little known coast, in a northerly direction, for a passage which should lead to the western sea. Waymouth, in 1602 and 1605, and Gosnold, in 1602, had pretty well explored the coast between the entrance to Hudson's Straits in the north and Nantucket in the south, and explorers from the southern colony of Virginia had coasted as far north as about 38°. No previous explorer, however, had thoroughly examined the intervening coast, although Verrazzano, Gomez, Alfonso de Saotango, perhaps Jehan Cossio, or the explorer whose discoveries his map records, and several others about whose voyages even less is known, had sailed along this stretch of shore.

Approaching Cape Cod from the north, Hudson became embayed, and in seeking to pursue his southward course was greatly harassed by the shoals lying off its eastern extremity. Finally reaching the open sea, he did not again approach land until he found himself in the neighbourhood of Cape Charles. Probably, on second thought, deeming it wiser, for political reasons (which Juet, not being in his confidence, did not record), to resist the temptation of calling upon his friend, John Smith, in Chesapeake Bay, he turned his bows northward, in order to seek the so much desired passage that should give access to the western sea, or the "Sea of Verrazzano." That he did not thoroughly explore Delaware Bay was doubtless due to the fact that its shoal waters convinced him that this could not be the entrance to the sought for passage. It seems clear that, from the information in his possession, he looked rather for success in the neighbourhood of 40°, probably having in mind Verrazzano's "grandissima riviera," or the river shown in about the same latitude on the Pisanus and Cossin maps. So it was that Hudson, following closely in the track of his predecessor, Giovanni da Verrazzano, entered in his turn, on Sept. 11, 1609, the land-locked harbour which Verrazzano had visited eighty-five 1609 years before, adding, however, to Verrazzano's discovery that of

Apr. the great river which still proudly bears Hudson's name.

4 Robert Juet, who had been master's mate ("the Master his to Mate") on Hudson's second voyage, in 1608, and was an officer of Nov. the "Half Moon" (probably the navigator, but clearly not fully 7 in Hudson's confidence, in so far at least as related to the motives and politics underlying the expedition), gives the best account of his voyage that is extant.

"On Saturday the five and twentieth of March, 1609, after the old Account, we set sayle from Amsterdam; and by the seven and twentieth day, we were downe at the Texel; and by twelue of the clocke we were off the Land, it being East vs two leagues off.
And because it is a journey vsually knowne, I omit to put downe what passed, till we came to the height of The North Cape of Finmarke, which we did performe by the fift of May (stilo nouo) being Tuesday. On which day we obserued the height of the Pole, and found it to bee 71. degrees and 46. minutes; and found our Compass to vary six degrees to the West: and at twelue of the clocke, the North Cape did beare South-west; and by South, tenne leagues off, and we steered away East and by South, and East."

There is no further entry until the 10th, when, without a word of explanation regarding the sudden abandonment of the original intention of seeking a north-east passage, or the breaking of the contract, Juet records the "Half Moon" again off the North Cape, on a westerly course. They reached Strömöe, in the Færoe Islands, on the 30th, and left again on the first of June, steering "South-west and by West," until on the 22d they found themselves in 44° and 58'. From here they "steered away West for Newfound Land." On July 12, they "had sight of the Land" between 43° and 44° (the south coast of Nova Scotia). "The sixteenth, in the morning it cleered vp, and wee had sight of fwe Ilands lying North, and North and by West from vs, two leagues.
Then we made ready to set sayle, but the myste came so thicke,
that we durst not enter in among them.

"The seventeenth, was all mystic, so that we could not get into the Harbour. At ten of the clocke two Boates came off to vs, with sixe of the Saouages of the Countrey, seeming glad of our comming. We gaue them trifles, and they eate and dranke with vs; and told vs, that there were Gold, Siluer, and Copper mynes hard by vs; and that the French-men doe Trade with them;
which is very likely, for one of them spake some words of French.
So we rode still all day and all night, the weather continuing mystic.

"The eighteenth, faire weather, we went into a very good Harbour" (Penobscot) where, on the 23d, they rigged their new foremast. After fishing and trading with the natives, they finally, before departing, deliberately "draue the Saluages from their Houses, and tooke the spoyle of them, as they would haue done of vs." On the 26th they came out of the harbour and sailed again south-west. On the 3d of August they "went on Land [on the north side of Cape Cod], and found goodly Grapes, and Rose trees."
On the 5th they cleared the cape, which they recognized as Cape Cod, and on the 6th the out lying shoals, and "steered away South and South by East."

On the 9th they found themselves in 38° 39', "in an vnknowne sea." On the following day they tacked about to the westward.
On the 17th, at sunrise, they began to look for land, which they sighted at about 11 o'clock, in 37° 26', just north of "the Entrance into the Kings Riuer in Virginia, where our English-men are."
From the 18th to the 26th, they cruised about off the shore in a storm. On the latter date, at noon, their "height was 37. degrees 15. minutes. And wee found that we were returned to the same place, from whence we were put off at our first seeing Land."
On the 27th, Juet records: "The Coast lyeth South South-west, and is a white Sandie shore, and sheweth full of Bayes and Points.
The streame setteth West South-west, and East North-east. At sixe of the clocke at night, we were thwart of an Harbour or Riuer [Chincoteague Inlet—or Bay], but we saw a Barre lye before it, and all within the Land to the Northward, the water ranne with many Ilands in it. At sixe of the clocke we Anchored, and sent our Boate to sound to the shoare-ward, and found no lesse then foure and a halfe, fwe, sixe, and seven fathomes.

"The eight and twentieth, faire and hot weather, the winde at South South-west. In the morning at sixe of the clocke wee weighed, and steered away North twelue leagues till noone, and came to the Point of the Land [Cape Henlopen]; and being hard by the Land in fwe fathomes, on a sudden wee came into three Apr. fathomes; then we beare vp and had but ten foote water, and 4 joined to the Point. Then as soone as wee were ouer, we had fwe, to sixe, seven, eight, nine, ten, twelue, and thirteene fathomes.

Nov. Then we found the Land to trende away North-west, with a great 7 Bay and Riuers [Delaware Bay]. But the Bay wee found shoald; and in the offing wee had ten fathomes, and had sight of Breaches and drie Sand. Then wee were forced to stand backe againe; so we stood backe South-east by South, three leagues. And at seuen of the clocke wee Anchored in eight fathomes water; and found a Tide set to the North-west, and North North-west; and it riseth one fathome, and sheweth South South-east. And hee that will thoroughly Discouer this great Bay, must haue a small Pinnasse, that must draw but foure or fwe foote water, to sound before him.
At fwe in the morning wee weighed, and steered away to the Eastward on many courses, for the Northern Land is full of shoalds."

On the 29th they coasted along the shore, which they "found to bee all Ilands." On the 30th they "stood to the East-ward," and were out of sight of land until the 2d of September. On this day, early in the morning, they "saw a great Fire, but could not see the Land, then we came to ten fathoms, whereupon we brought our tackes aboard, and stood to the East-ward East South-east, four Glasses" (4 hours). Then the sun arose, and, says Juet: "We steered away North againe, and saw the Land from the West by North, to the North-west by North, all like broken Ilands, and our soundings were eleuen and ten fathoms." This corresponds exactly to the formation between Atlantic City and Little Egg Inlet. "Then wee looft in for the shoare, and faire by the shoare, we had seven fathoms. The course along the Land we found to be Northeast by North," which corresponds to the map. They continued from "the Land which we had first sight of, vntill we came to a great Lake of water, as wee could iudge it to be, being drowned Land, which made it to rise like Ilands, which was in length ten leagues [Barnegat Bay]. The mouth of that Lake hath many shoalds, and the Sea breaketh on them as it is cast out of the mouth of it [Barnegat Inlet]. And from that Lake or Bay, the Land lyeth North by East [which again corresponds exactly with the map], and we had a great streame out of the Bay; and from thence our sounding was ten fathoms, two leagues from the Land."
At five o'clock they anchored, probably a few miles north of Barnegat Inlet. From this point Juet records, "For [far] to the Northward off vs we saw high Hills" [Navesink Highlands, and perhaps the Stateo Island hills] and, he adds, "This is a very good Land to fall with, and a pleasant Land to see."

The next day, September 3rd, they weighed anchor at ten o'clock, and, with the wind south south-east, stood to the Northward until three in the afternoon, when they came to "three great Riuers," which can have been none other than Raritan Bay, the Narrows, and Rockaway Inlet. From this point the narrative continues: "So we stood along to the Northernmost [the Narrows] thinking to haue gone into it, but we found it to haue a very shoald barre before it [Romer Shoal] . . . Then wee cast about to the Southward [towards Sandy Hook] . . . till we came to the Southern side of them [the shoals] . . . and Anchored [a short distance to the north of Sandy Hook]. So wee set in our Boate to sound [towards the Hook], and they found no lesse water then foore, fwe, sixe, and seuen fathoms, ad returned in an hoour and a halfe. So wee weighed and went in, and rode in fwe fathoms, Ozie ground" (probably just inside the Hook). Here Juet records the latitude or "height" as 40° 30'.

"The fourth, in the morning as soone as the day was light, wee saw that it was good riding farther vp . . . and found that it was a very good Harbour; and foure and fwe fathoms, two Cables length from the shoare [this undoubtedly was Horseshoe Bay or Harbour]. Then we weighed and went in with our ship.
Then our Boate went on Land [Sandy Hook] . . . At night the wind blew hard at the North-west, . . . and wee droue on shoare, but tooke no hurt, thanked bee God, for the ground is soft sand and Oze . . ."

"The fifth, in the morning . . . we heaued off our ship againe into fwe fathoms water, and sent our Boate to sound the Bay, and we found that there was three fathoms hard by the Southern shoare. Our men went on Land there, and saw great store of Men, Women and Children, who gaue them Tabacco at their comming on Land. So they went vp into the Woods [Navesink Highlands], and saw great store of very goodly Oakes, and 1609 Apr. 4 to Nov. 7 some Currants. For one of them came aboard and brought some dried, and gaue me some, which were sweet and good. This day many of the people came aboard, some in Mantles of Feathers, and some in Skinnes of diuers sorts of good Furs. Some women also came to vs with Hempe. They had red Copper Tabacco pipes, and other things of Copper they did wear about their neckes. At night they went on Land againe, so we rode very quiet, but durst not trust them.

"The sixth . . . our Master sent Iohn Colman [doubtless the same John Coleman who is mentioned as master's mate in the account of Hudson's first voyage], with four other men in our Boate ouer to the Northside, to sound the other Riuer, being foure-leagues from vs evidently the Narrows]. They found by the way shoald water two fathoms [Romer Shoal, etc]: but at the North of the Riuer eighteen, and twentie fathoms, and very good riding for Ships [He probably refers here to Quarantine]; and a narrow Riuer to the Westward betweene two Lands [the Kill Van Kull, between Staten Island, of the insularity of which Hudson probably had been informed by the Indians, and Bergen Neck, which, from its shape, they might easily have mistaken for an island] . . . So they went in two leagues and saw an open Sea [Newark Bay], and returned; and as they came backe, they were set vpon by two Canoes, the one hauing twelue, the other fourteen men . . . and they had one man slaine in the fight, which was an English-man, named Iohn Colman, . . . and two more hurt. It grew so darke that they could not find the ship that night, but labored too and fro on their Oares. They [had so great a streame, that their grappell would not hold them this evidently refers to the very strong tide setting through the Narrows].

"The seuenth . . . by ten of the clocke they returned aboard the ship [which was still at anchor near Sandy Hook], and brought our dead man with them, whom we carried on Land and buried, and named the point after his name, Colmans Point." (This must have been on Sandy Hook.)

The eighth they rode at anchor all day. "The people came aboard vs, and brought Tabacco and Indian Wheat, to exchange for Knives and Beades, and offered vs no violence."

On the ninth they "weighed and went off into the channell of the Riuer [towards the Narrows], and Anchored there all night."

On noon on the tenth they "weighed and went ouer, and found it shoald all the middle of the Riuer . . . and rode all night in soft Ozie ground. The banke is Sand." (It is readily seen from an examination of the government coast chart that these conditions correspond closely with those existing between Sandy Hook and Coney Island.)

On the eleventh, at one o'clock in the afternoon, they "weighed and went into the Riuer [the Narrows] . . . Our soundings were seuen, sixe, fise, sixe, seuen, eight, nine, ten, twelue, thirteene, and foureene fathomes [Such depths can only have been found in the Narrows]. Then it shoalded againe, and came to fise fathomes [which corresponds to conditions existing between Stapleton and Bay Ridge]. Then we Anchored, and saw that it was a very good Harbour for all windes . . ." (the Upper Bay).

On the twelfth, at two o'clock in the afternoon, they weighed and "turned into the Riuer two leagues and Anchored" (This would bring them to the mouth of the Hudson, off the Battery.) This morning at the first (watch) they rode in the riuer and "there came eight and twentie Canoes full of men, women and children . . ." (probably from Manhattan Island). Just here records: "It [the riuer] floweth South-east by South within," which, of course, is correct.

On the thirteenth they weighed anchor again and turned four miles into the riuer and in the afternoon ran 2½ leagues farther and anchored all night. (This would correspond to a point near Fort Lee.) From here Juet records that they "had as high point of Land, which shewed out to vs, bearing North by East fise leagues off vs." (This was undoubtedly the highland back of Tarrytown which has this appearance from Fort Lee.)

Hudson proceeded to the "end of the Riues Nauigableness," which Van Meteren gives as in latitude 42° 40', and De Laet as "about 43°," and, having sent the master's mate and four men in a small boat eight or nine leagues higher up, to a point near the confluence of the Mohawk, to sound the river, was convinced that it could not afford a passage to China, and therefore retraced his course, passing out of sight of Sandy Hook on October 4th, thus reluctantly relinquishing his cherished hope, and returning with the sad conviction that the thoroughfare which he had hoped to find did not exist, at least in those parts. Further explorations were, for this voyage, out of the question, and from the bay of this mighty river he turned his course toward England, "without seeing any Land by the way . . . And on the seuenth day of November, sile novo, being Saturday; by the Grace of God . . . safely arrived in the Range of Dartmouth in Deuonshire, in the yeere 1609."—Purchas His Pilgrimes, III: 591-93, 595.

The only other known contemporary account of Hudson's third voyage was written by Emanuel van Meteren, and appears for the first time in the 31st book, pages 275-76, of the folio edition of 1610 of his celebrated work, with the title Commentariorum aſte Memorien Van den Nederlantsen Staet, Handel Oorloghen ende Gheschiedenissen van onsen tyden, [etc.], the preface of which is dated "Anno 1610 in Februario."—See Nijhoff's reprint of Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, 64, 79; the same authority contains a transcription from the 1611 edition, and a rather unsatisfactory translation. Jameson's translation (Nar. N. Neth., 6-9), which is "revised from the text of the 1614 edition," shows that this edition differs materially from that of 1610, which was the last revised by Van Meteren himself, the 1611 quartos being a pirated edition, issued by the same publisher, and bearing the same title, as the well known issue of 1614. For notes regarding the various editions of this important book, see Bibliography. For reproduction, see Pl. I B, Vol. IV. See also 1610 and 1611. Van Meteren's narrative was written in London, apparently in the early part of 1610, soon after Hudson's return to England, and contains some facts which Juet does not give. It was probably based on information obtained from Juet's Dutch mate. It begins (translated by A. J. F. Van Laer):

"We have said in the preceding book [an error, as the last book contains nothing relating to this subject] that the Directors of the East India Company in Holland had sent out last March [1609], in order to seek a passage to China by the northeast or the northwest, a brave English pilot, named Henry Hutson, with a Vlie boat, having a crew of about 18 or 20 men, part English and part Dutch, well provided.

"This Henry Hutson sailed from Texel the 6th of April, 1609, he doubled the Cape of Norway the 5th of May and kept his course toward Nova Zembla along the northern coasts, but found the sea there as full of ice as the preceding year, so that they lost all hope [of succeeding] that year. Whereupon, on account of the cold, which some who had been in the East Indies could hardly endure, they, being English and Dutch, fell to quarrelling among themselves, whereupon the skipper, Hutson, proposed to them two things. The first was to go in latitude of 40 degrees to the coast of America, moved thereto mostly by letters and maps which one Captia Smith had sent him from Virginia, whereby he indicated to him a sea [which would enable him] to sail around their southern colony on the north side and from there to pass into a western sea, which, if it had been true (since [albeit] experience as yet points to the contrary) would have been a very advantageous matter and a short route to sail to India. The other proposition was to seek a way through Davis's Straits, to which they generally agreed; hence they sailed thitherward on the 14th of May and with a fair wind arrived on the last of May at the island of Faro, where they stayed but 24 hours to take in fresh water. After leaving [there], they sailed until, [on] the 18th of July, [they came] to the coast of Nova Francia, [in latitude of] 44 degrees, where they were obliged to run in to get a new foremast (having lost theirs), which they found there and set up. They found this place suitable for cod-fishing and also for the traffic of good hides and peltries or game, which were to be had there for trifling things. But the ship's crew behaved badly toward the natives, taking things by force, about which they began to quarrel with each other, the English fearing that they were outnumbered and the weakest and being therefore afraid to explore further. So they left there on the 26th of July and continued at sea until the third of August, when they approached the land in latitude of 42 degrees. Thence they sailed on until, [on] the 12th of August, they again came near the coast in latitude of 37° 45' [just north of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay]. Thence they sailed along the shore until they reached 40° 45', where they found a good entrance between two headlands. They entered it on the 12th of September [and discovered] as beautiful a river as one could find [the Hudson], wide and deep, with good anchoring ground, and vegetation ["was," probably for grass]

1609 on both sides. Finally they came in latitude of 42 degrees and 40
Apr. minutes with their big ship, but their ship's boat went higher up 4 the river. Near the entrance of the river they found bold and to warlike people, but inland, at the farthest point, they found Nov. friendly and civil people, who had an abundance of provisions and 7 many skins and peltries, martens and foxes and many other commodities, birds, fruits and even white and red grapes. They traded politely with the people and brought a little of everything with them. Now when they had been about fifty miles (leagues) up the river, they returned on the fourth of October and again put to sea.
More could have been accomplished if there had been good-will from the crew and if the want of some necessary provisions had not prevented it.

"At sea, they held counsel together and were of different opinions. The mate, a Dutchman, advocated to winter in Terra Nova [Newfoundland] and to explore the northwest passage of Davis. The skipper, Hutson, was opposed to this; he feared his mutilous crew, because they had at times threatened him roughly, and also that in the cold of winter they would consume their entire provisions and then be obliged to return, many of the crew being weak and sickly. No one, however, spoke of returning home to Holland, which gave the skipper various grounds for suspicion, so that he proposed to sail to Ireland, to winter there, to which they all agreed. So at last, they arrived in England, at Dartmouth, on the 7th of November, whence they notified their employers, the directors in Holland, of their voyage, stating that they were willing to explore the northwest, provided fifteen hundred guilders in money were spent in provisions, in addition to their wages and what they had in the ship. Hutson wished to have six or seven of his crew changed, bringing the number up to 20 men, etc. They were to sail from Dartmouth about the first of March, to be in the northwest toward the end of March and to spend there the month of April and the half of May in killing whales and [other] animals near the island of Panar and then to sail to the northwest, to pass the time there until the middle of September and thereafter to return to Holland around the northeast of Scotland. Thus this voyage ended and before the directors could be advised of their arrival in England a long time elapsed through contrary winds.
They ordered the ship and crew to come home at the first opportunity and as this was about to be done, the skipper, Herry Hutson, was by the authorities there ordered not to depart, but to serve his own country, [the same being required] also of the other Englishmen who were on the ship. To many, however, it seemed strange that the skippers were not allowed to render an account and make a report of their service and doings, etc. to their masters, having been sent out for the general benefit of navigation. This took place in January 1610, and it was thought that the English themselves wished to send him with ships to Virginia to explore there the aforesaid river further."

Although not strictly contemporary, Johan de Laet, in the first edition (1625) of his Nieuwe Wereldt, Book III, "Virginia," Section "Nieuw-Nederlandt," Chap. 7, gives an account of Hudson's discovery, that was probably based on the lost journal of Henry Hudson, or on his preliminary report, which, perhaps, the Amsterdam directors of the East India Company lent to the compiler. He says: "As to the first discovery, the Directors of the Chartered East India Company, in 1609, dispatched the yacht Half Moon, under the command of Hendrick Hudson, captain and supercargo, to seek a passage to China by the northeast.
But they changed their course and stood over towards New France;
and, having passed the banks of Newfoundland in latitude 43° 23', made the land in latitude 44° 15', with a west-northwest and northwest course, and went on shore at a place where there were certain natives with whom, as they understood, the French come every year to trade. Sailing hence, they bent their course to the south until, running south-southwest and southwest by south, they again made land in latitude 41° 43', which they supposed to be an island, and gave it the name of New Holland, but afterwards discovered that it was Cape Cod, and that, according to their observation, it lay fully seventy-five leagues to the west of its place on all the charts. From here they fell down to 37° 15', where they again saw land. The coast was low, running north and south; and it stretched a bank or shoal, inside of which there was a depth of eight, nine, ten, eleven, seven, and six and a half fathoms, with a sandy bottom. They called this place Dry Cape [probably Cape Charles].

"Running thence to the northward, they again discovered land in latitude 38° 9', where there was a white sandy shore, and within it an abundance of green trees. The direction of the coast was north-northeast and south-southwest for about eight leagues, then north and south for seven leagues, and afterwards southeast and northwest for five leagues. They continued to run along the coast to the north, until they reached a point from which the land stretched to the west-northwest, and there was a bay into which several rivers discharged. From this point land was seen to the east-northeast, which they took to be an island; but it proved to be the main land, and the second point of the bay, in latitude 38° 54'. Standing upon a course northwest by north, they found themselves embayed [in Delaware Bay], and, encountering many breakers, stood out again to the south-southeast. They suspected that a large river discharged into the bay, from the strength of the current that set out, and caused these sands and shoals.

"Contending their course along the shore, they observed a white sandy beach and drowned land within, beyond which the land was full of trees, the coast running northeast by north and southwest by south. Afterwards the direction of the coast changed to north by east, and was higher land than they had yet seen, along to a lofty promontory, behind which was situated a bay, where they ran up into a roadstead behind a low sandy point, in latitude 40° 18' [Sandy Hook]. There they were visited by two savages clothed in elk-skins, who showed them every sign of friendship. On the land they found an abundance of blue plums and the finest oaks for height and thickness that one could ever see; together with poplars, Lonen, and various other kinds of wood useful in shipbuilding. Sailing hence in a north-by-east direction, they ascended the river to about 43° north latitude, where it became so narrow and of so little depth that they turned back."—Jameson, *Nar. N.
Neth.*, 37-38.

An interesting contemporary side light is contained in a letter written on Dec. 2, 1611, by the Marqués de Guadeleste from Brussels to the Spanish king on affairs passing in Holland. See Vol. II, p. 44. This letter states that the "Company had equipped two famous ships, in order to trade with China, going by the way of Tartary; and also that an Englishman was willing to execute the plaç, and that his master had not allowed it." In other words, if the information be true, Hudson sailed against the express wish or order of the English King, which would go far toward explaining his retention in England after his return. The reference to the two ships may possibly be explained by the fact that the yacht "Hope" or "Good Hope" sailed for the Weygats (the strait between Nova Zembla and the mainland) at about the same time that the "Half Moon" left with instructions to sail north of Nova Zembla. It is conceivable that they sailed together, and that the "Good Hope" returned to Holland when Hudson turned and sailed westward.—See the "Ship Book" for 1608 (1609), and Register of the East India Co., in Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, 59, 116. vide infra, reference to Asher.

A description of the "Half Moon," based on investigations undertaken in Holland and America at the time of the construction of the replica for the Hudson-Fulton Celebration, may be found in
The Hudson-Fulton Celebration, I: 92-104, and in an article entitled
"Henry Hudson and the Discovery of the Hudson River," by Edward Hagaman Hall, in the 15th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1910), 259-71. See also Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, 57-60, where extracts are given from the "Sailing book" (Uitloopboekje) and "Memorandum book" (Memoriael), which were rediscovered in the archives of the East India Company at Amsterdam by Brodhead, in 1841, and which are referred to in his Hist. State of N. Y., notes pp. 24 and 43, as the "Ship book."
There are four entries referring to the "Half Moon"; the first, from the "Sailing book," records the fact that the yacht "Halve Maen," of 40 lasts, left Amsterdam in 1608 (evidently a mistake for 1609), destined for the north, and returned in 1610 (see Pl. 1, Vol. IV). The second, also from the "Sailing-book," under the date of May 2, 1611, records the sailing of the "Halve Maen" for the West Indies, in company with the "Banda," and under command of "Commander Laurens Reael." This entry also records the wreck of the "Banda," on March 6, 1615, on the island of Mauritius, and states that the "Halve Maen" remained (there). The third, in the "Memorandum book," under the heading "Ships outgoing A° 1608" (evidently an error for 1609) from Amsterdam, records the 1609 yacht "halve mane," 40 lasts, "Schipper Heijndrick Hoitsen" (see Apr. Pl. 1, Vol. IV). The fourth, also from the "Memorandum book," 4 under the heading "Ships sent under Commander Laurens Reael, 2d May 1611, from Amsterdam," gives the ship "Banda" and the Nov. yacht "Halve Mane," the latter in command of Melis Andries.

7 The last mention of the "Half Moon" is found in a list of ships which were in various places in the (West) Indies from July, 1616, until the end of the same year. In this list, which is contained in Begin en Voortgang der Oost-Indische Compagnie, II: 129, the "Half Moon" is mentioned as being at the island of Sumatra. Her ultimate fate has never been ascertained. See also ICONOGRAPHY, III: 854-55.

Brodhead's statement (Hist. State of N. Y., 43) that the "Half Moon" returned to Amsterdam on July 15, 1610, is not supported by any authority that we have been able to discover.

Hudson's course or "track" on his memorable third voyage is shown on the two maps of "Early Explorations" contained in Vol.
II, C. Pls. 58 and 59. For a contemporary cartographical representation of the information which he must have possessed, before sailing, see "The Virginia Company Chart," C. Pl. 21A, Vol. II, and for a similar representation of his discoveries on this voyage, and those made by his immediate successors in 1610, see the Velasco Map of 1610, C. Pls. 22 and 22A, and Cartography, pp. 51-61, Vol. II. See also Chaps. II, III, and V, Vol. II.

Asher, in his Henry Hudson the Navigator, civ, concludes that Hudson had two vessels, the "Good Hope" and the "Half Moon," and that the "Good Hope" may have returned after the mutiny near Nova Zembla; he also concludes (cvi) that one of the "maps
. . . sent from Virginia" was Verrazano's (C. Pl. 13, Vol. II), and that another may have been Ribero's (C. Pl. 10, Vol. II).

Hans Bontemantel, the well-known Dutch analyst and antiquary, and one of the directors of the Dutch West India Company, made a memorandum, sometime between 1653 and 1659, in regard to the first discovery of New Netherland. In this he said: "The country was first found and discovered in the year 1609 at the request of the chartered East India Company by the ship de halve maan (Half Moon), on the way to discover a passage to the Kingdom of China. The skipper thereof was a merchant, a certain Henry Hudson, an Englishman by birth, but who had intercourse a long while among the Netherlands, and was now in the service of the East India Company on monthly pay. This ship, sailing away from the Canary Islands, set its course toward the northwest.
Having thus sailed with moderate speed for twenty days, they met land, according to their conjecture in 320 degrees west, and made various proofs that no other Christians had been there before them, but that the land was now first discovered by them. Land then appearing, and observing the fitness of the coast and strand, they approached toward it. They took possession of the prospect at convenience, and gave to it the name of Nieu Nederland. It lies in the north parts of the new American world, commencing at the north by the equinoctial line, 38°, 53', along the seacoast to 42° degrees north latitude; these are the same elevations as those of Sardinia and Corsica, in the Mediterranean Sea, and of Spain and France along the ocean."—New Netherland Papers, original manuscripts in N. Y. Pub. Library, from which this item is an abstract, in translation, from folder 1217.

What is known concerning the aborigines of Manhattan Island and vicinity, at the time of Hudson's visit, in 1609, has been studiously analyzed by Alanson Skinner, assistant curator of Anthropology in the Am. Museum of Natural Hist., and published by him in two monographs. The first of these is an introductory statement on "The Manhattan Indians," in the N. Y. State Museum Bulletin, No. 158 (1911), printed also as a separate by the N. Y. State Education Dept. (Albany, 1912); the second is
The Indians of Greater New York (Cedar Rapids, Ia., 1915), No.
3 in a series of "Little Histories of North American Indians."

His sources of information, primary and secondary, are listed in a bibliography in the latter work. These include De Vries's Voyages, O'Callaghan's Doc. Hist. N. Y., Colden's Hist. of the Five Indian Nations, Ruttener's Hist. of the Indian Tribes of the Hudson River, Danckaerts and Sluyter's Journal; also M. R. Harrington's
"Some Customs of the Delaware Indians," in the Journal of the Museum of the Univ. of Penn., Vol. I, No. 3, and "Vestiges of Material Culture Among the Canadian Delawares," in the American Anthropologist, which Skinner describes as "forerunners of a much larger work [not yet published, 1921] based on personal archeological research about New York City, and ethnological 1609 study among the surviving Delawares of Canada and Oklahoma, Apr. which, when given to the public, will be the dernier mot on the 4 subject."

to Nov. 7

Mr. Skinner has himself done considerable field work in and around New York, and has published a map showing the locations of shell deposits on Staten Island, Long Island, and in Westchester Co., as well as at the northern end of Manhattan Island (at Inwood and along Spuyten Duyvil Creek).

This phase of the subject is found more fully treated in studies made in local archeology by Finch, Bolton, Harrington, and others besides Skinner, and published in the Anthropological Papers of the Am. Museum, Vol. III, under the title "The Indians of Greater New York and the Lower Hudson" (1909). Particularly noteworthy is the account by Reginald Pelham Bolton, entitled "The Indians of Washington Heights," in which he combines the stories of their eventful life and of his successful hunt for their relics.
Similar papers, by Rev. W. M. Beauchamp, are pub. in the Bulletins of the N. Y. State Museum, Nos. 16, 18, 22, 33, 41.

Skinner also calls attention to a curious document, known as the "Walum Olum" or "Red Score of the Delawares," purporting to be a copy of an original history of the Delaware nations, described by D. G. Brinton in The Lenapé and Their Legends (Phila., 1885).
From all of these and other sources of information, Skinner has been able to point out broadly the history and characteristics of the Indians of this vicinity, as well as to tell some of the tragic incidents, known to us in connection with New York City history and presented in the Chronology from original records. He presents, by numerous quotations from printed sources, a complete picture of the physical features, dress, dwellings, utensils, ceremonies, habits, and customs of the Indians of this region, in peace and war, and describes their relics unearthed in this vicinity in recent years.

He states (1911) that "Some time before the advent of the Dutch at New Amsterdam, a branch of the Lenni Lenapé or Delaware Indians split off from the parent stock, which had its abode south and west of the Hudson, and moved eastward and northward, forming the Mahikan tribe. They occupied Manhattan Island and the east bank of the Hudson as far north as the southern boundary of the Mohawk Iroquois. In time they became subdivided into several subtribes and bands, the chief of which, known as the Wapping Confederacy, was composed of the Wappinger, Kitchawank, Sintinck, Siwanoy, Weckwageeck, and Redgwagwawank. Of these people, the two tribes last mentioned were found by the Dutch inhabiting Manhattan Island. At that time, the Weckwageecks held the upper part of the island, above a line drawn from the Redcke's creek (later Harlem creek) to the ravine at what is now Manhattanville, and the Redgwagwawank occupied the lower part of the island. Both of these tribes also held territories on the mainland, where their principal abodes were situated.

"The name Manhattan referred to the portions of both tribes dwelling on the island, and it is said to mean 'Islanders.'" (For derivation of the name Manhattan, see remarks under Etymology in Vol. II, Chap. VII, pp. 121-22, and authorities there cited.)

In his treatise of 1915, Skinner names each tribal band in various localities of Greater New York and the surrounding country.
"As for the Manhattans or Redgwagwawans, as they are sometimes called, there is some little doubt as to whether they were a Mohegan or a Delaware band. The evidence seems to show that they were a subtribe of the Unami Delawares. They also occupied part of the mainland nearby."

"As shown in the Chronology, Verrazano (see 1524) gives us our first records of the Indians in the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island, and their kindred. These did not differ, he said, from the natives whom he had met elsewhere along the coast. They were of medium height, well proportioned, deep chested, and strong armed (see N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., 1: 45). He describes the dress of two of their kings, and of their women.

The next records in which a description of the natives is found is the journal of Juet (see Jameson's N. N. Neth., 18). Henry Hudson's own account of the natives dwelling in the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island, taken from De Laet's quotation from Hudson's lost journal, will be found (translated) in ibid., 48. Van der Donck (see ibid., 300-3) gave further first-hand evidence of the personal appearance and customs of those he saw. Good accounts are also given by Wassenaar, De Laet, De Rasière, Michaëlius, 1609 Megapolensis, and others, all of which will be found translated in Apr. ibid. One of the fullest descriptive accounts is that of Denton, in 4 1670 (q.v.). See also Bibliography, Vol. V.

to In this connection, although of very little historical importance,
Nov. it seems advisable to refer here briefly to the oft-quoted inter-7 views with the Indians of the Rev. John Heckewelder, a Moravian missionary to the Indians of Pennsylvania, regarding the tribal traditions in relation to the first arrival of the Dutch at Manhattan Island. He wrote in 1801:

"The following account of the first arrival of Europeans at York Island is verbatim as it was related to me by aged and respected Delawares, Monseys and Mahicanni near forty years ago. It is copied from notes and manuscripts taken on the spot."
The Indians said:

"A long time ago, when there was no such thing known to the Indians as people with a white skin, some Indians who had been out a-fishing, and where the sea widens, espied at a great distance something remarkably large swimming, or floating on the water, and such as they had never seen before. They immediately returning to the shore apprised their countrymen of what they had seen, and pressed them to go out with them and discover what it might be. These together hurried out, and saw to their great surprise the phenomenon, but could not agree what it might be; some concluding it either to be an uncommon large fish, or other animal, while others were of opinion it must be some very large house. It was at length agreed among those who were spectators, that as this phenomenon moved towards the land, whether or not it was an animal, or anything that had life in it, it would be well to inform all the Indians on the inhabited islands of what they had seen, and put them on their guard. Accordingly, they sent runners and watermen off to carry the news to their scattered chiefs, that these might send off in every direction for the warriors to come in.
These arriving in numbers, and themselves viewing the strange appearance, and that it was actually moving towards them, (the entrance of the river or bay,) concluded it to be a large canoe or house, in which the great Mannitto (great or Supreme Being) himself was, and that he probably was coming to visit them. By this time the chiefs of the different tribes were assembled on York Island, and were counselling (or deliberating) on the manner they should receive their Mannitto on his arrival. Every step had been taken to be well provided with a plenty of meat for a sacrifice; the women were required to prepare the best of victuals; idols or images were examined and put in order; and a grand dance was supposed not only to be an agreeable entertainment for the Mannitto, but might, with the addition of a sacrifice, contribute towards appeasing him, in case he was angry with them. The conjurers were also set to work, to determine what the meaning of this phenomenon was, and what the result would be. . . . Between hope and fear, and in confusion, a dance commenced. While in this situation fresh runners arrive declaring it a house of various colours, and crowded with living creatures. It now appears to be certain that it is the great Mannitto bringing them some kind of game, such as they had not before; . . . full of people, yet of quite a different colour than they (the Indians) are of; that they were also dressed in a different manner from them, and that one in particular appeared altogether red, which must be the Mannitto himself. They are soon hailed from the vessel, though in a language they do not understand; yet they shout (or yell) in their way. Many are for running off to the woods, but are pressed by others to stay, in order not to give offence to their visitors, who could find them out, and might destroy them. The house (or large canoe, as some will have it), stops, and a smaller canoe comes ashore with the red man and some others in it; some stay by this canoe to guard it. The chiefs and wise men (or councillors) had composed a large circle, unto which the redclothed man with two others approach. He salutes them with friendly countenance, and they return the salute after their manner. They are lost in admiration, both as to the colour of the skin (of these whites) as also to their manner of dress, yet most as to the habit of him who wore the red clothes, which shone with something [lace] they could not account for. He must be the great Mannitto (Supreme Being) they think, but why should he have white skin? . . .

" . . . the man with the red clothes returned again to them,
and distributed presents among them, to wit, beads, axes, hoes, stockings, &c. They say that they had become familiar to each other, and were made to understand by signs; that they now would return home, but would visit them next year again, when they would bring them more presents, and stay with them awhile. . . .

That the vessel arrived the season following [if this whole legend has any foundation in fact, this may be a reference to the mysterious expedition of 1610 (q.v.), to which De Laet refers,] and they were much rejoiced at seeing each other; but that the whites laughed at them (the Indians), seeing they knew not the use of the axes, hoes, &c., that he had given them, they having had these hanging to their breasts as ornaments; and the stockings they had made use of as tobacco pouches. . . . They took every white man they saw for a Mannitto, yet inferior and attendant to the supreme Mannitto, to wit, to the one which wore the red and laced clothes. Familiarity daily increasing between them and the whites, the latter now proposed to stay with them, asking them only for so much land as the hide of a bullock would cover (or encompass,) which hide was brought forward and spread on the ground before them. That they readily granted this request; whereupon the whites took a knife and beginning at one place on this hide, cut it up into a rope not thicker than the finger of a little child, so that by the time this hide was cut up there was a great heap. That this rope was drawn out to a great distance, and then brought round again, so that both ends might meet. That they carefully avoided its breaking and that upon the whole it encompassed a large piece of ground. That they (the Indians) were surprised at the superior wit of the whites, but did not wish to contend with them about a little land, as they had done. That they and the whites lived for a long time contentedly together, although these asked from time to time more land of them; and proceeding higher up the Mahicanittuk (Hudson River), they believed they would soon wait all their country, and which,
at this time was already the case."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., I: 69-74.

Apr. After 40 years of warfare under William of Orange and his son, 9 Prince Maurice, the federal republic of the United Netherlands, 4 now approaching the height of its greatness, concludes (at Antwerp) to with Spain a 12-years' truce. The provisions include an acknowledgement by Spain of the independence of The Netherlands.

May A second charter is granted to the London Company (the south-21 ern colony of the Virginia Company), erecting it into "a corpora-June tion and body politic," and enlarging and explaining its privileges.
2 The new charter extended the bounds of the colony to over 1,000,000 square miles, stretching 200 miles north and 200 miles south of Point Comfort, and from sea to sea. Under these limitations, the northerly boundary was fixed at about the fortieth degree, instead of the forty-first which was the limit fixed in the charter of 1606.— Brown, Genesis, 206 et seq. For the first charter, see April 10, 1606.

The Plymouth Company continued for eleven years longer to enjoy a nominal existence under its first charter; but, although several attempts were made to form new settlements, not a single permanent English colony was established, north of Virginia, until 1620.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 15.

July Samuel de Champlain is engaged in a great fight with the 30 Iroquois near Ticonderoga, on Lake Champlain.—Champlain,
Voyages (1612), 149-52.

Aug. The settlement at Jamestown, Va., is augmented by the arrival — of seven ships, containing over 300 colonists. The "Adventure," bearing the leaders of the expedition—Somers, Gates, and Newport—and about 200 colonists, was wrecked near Bermuda, so that these colonists (140 when they reached Virginia) did not arrive until May 10th of the following year. Capt. John Smith's Works, I: 161; Smith, Hist. of First Discovery & Settlement of Va., 102.

Oct. Shortly after this date, Capt. John Smith, who had been two 4=14 years in the Jamestown colony and had lately assumed the chief command, was sent back to England, suffering from injuries received in an explosion, "to answer some misdeameors, whereof I perswade me he can scarcely clear himself from great imputation of blame." Smith sailed on one of the ships of the Gates and Somers fleet, which had reached Jamestown Aug. 31, 1609, and which left for home shortly after Oct. 4.—Letter of John Radclyffe to Lord Salisbury, dated from Jamestown, Oct. 4, 1609, reproduced in Brown's Genesis, I: 335.

Nov. Hudson reaches Dartmouth, England, after his return from 7 the Hudson River, and, being himself forcibly detained there, sends to the directors of the Dutch East India Company a preliminary report, probably accompanied by a rough draft of his discoveries.—Van Meteren, History of the Netherlands, 328; see also Cartography, II: 43, et seq.

In February of this year, Emanuel van Meteren completed his "Commentaries and Memorial" of The Netherlands, which was printed under this year's date. This great work, which in its final form is known to us by a single copy, brings the history down to the Spring of 1610 (he died in England on Apr. 8/18, 1612), and contains Hudson's narrative in virtually the same form as that found in the pirated issues of 1611 and 1614.—See Apr. 4-Nov. 7, 1609, and 1611.

Although De Laet tells us that Henry Hudson returned to Amsterdam (in 1610) with his report, no evidence has been discovered to substantiate this assertion; and, as we know from Van Meteren that both Hudson and his companions, after their return from America, were forbidden to leave England, and in January, 1610 were still there, and that on April 17 Hudson sailed on his fourth voyage, in the employ of the Muscovy Company of London, it seems hardly likely that he returned to Holland in the interval. Van Meteren says: "A long time elapsed, through contrary winds, before the Company could be informed of the arrival of the ship in England. Then they ordered the ship and crew to return as soon as possible. But, when this was about to be done, Skipper Herry Hutson and the other Englishmen of the ship were commanded by the government there not to leave [England], but to serve their own country. Many persons thought it strange that captains should thus be prevented from laying their accounts and reports before their employers, having been sent out for the benefit of navigation in general. This took place in January, [1610]; and it was thought probable that the English themselves would send ships to Virginia, to explore further the aforesaid river."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 8-9.

De Laet, whose statements can generally be relied upon, tells us further that "in the year 1610 some merchants again sent a ship thither—that is to say, to the second river discovered, which was called Manhattes from the savage nation that dwells at its mouth. And in the subsequent years [on Oct. 11, 1614, q. v.] their High Mightinesses the States General granted to these merchants the exclusive privilege of navigating this river and trading there . . ."
—Ibid., 38. The versions of 1633 and 1640 add: "And our people wintered there."

It has been suggested that this 1610 expedition may have been the one promoted by Isaac Le Maire in the ship "De Vos," which is supposed to have sailed from Amsterdam in February or March, 1610, in Hudson's track. New light has been shed on the mysterious voyage of this year by Dr. Wieder's recent discovery in the Rijksarchief in The Hague, among the records of the admiralty, of memoranda to the effect that, on Feb. 2, 1610, Le Maire hired the yacht "De Vos" from the admiralty for a period of eight months, paying 160 fl. a month, expecting to return it earlier. He wanted the ship "for a certain voyage which he intended to have undertaken, and which he declared would be very desirable and profitable to the country, providing the said voyage succeeded fortunately, as without a doubt he hoped it would." On Feb. 10, he proposed to buy the yacht; on Feb. 12, the admiralty put a price of 2,400 fl. upon it, and on the same day he bought it for 1,400 fl. It will be noted that this transaction took place immediately after the report of Hudson's return must have reached Holland.—See Vol. II, p. 65. Nevertheless, in view of all the facts, it seems unlikely that "De Vos" should have visited the Hudson in this year, and that no positive record of the fact should have survived. Moreover, it is a matter of record (Jeannin's letter to Henry IV, referred to under 1608) that Le Maire's interest at this time was centred upon a passage by way of the north-east, and not the north-west. Furthermore, Le Maire was not one of the thirteen merchants to whom a charter was granted on Oct. 11, 1614, and who, we are told by De Laet, were the same who sent out the expedition of 1610. Moreover, it seems probable that any expedition sent out by the merchants of Amsterdam was primarily, if not wholly, a trading venture, whereas we know that Le Maire's sole object was the discovery of a passage to the Orient. Finally, from Jeannin's letter, it seems more than likely that Le Maire's expeditions of 1609 and 1610 were backed by the French monarch, in an attempt to forestall Hudson. (See Vol. II, Chap. III.) Having in mind the fact that Le Maire was a bitter rival of the East India Co., and was bent on finding a passage to the Orient that lay outside the limits of that company's charter, it is conceivable that, when Hudson's failure to find a passage by way of the north-east became known, and at the same time his hope of still finding one by way of the north-west, Le Maire may have dispatched the yacht "De Vos" in Hudson's track again with the determination of forestalling him, this time in the west.

In this connection, reference may be made to a letter of May 5, 1632, from the West India Co. to the states-general, complaining of the detention in Plymouth, Eng., by command of the English king, of the ship "Eendracht," with Director Minituit and Jan Lampo aboard. In this letter, reference is made to the Dutch rights in New Netherlands, as follows:

" . . . we have deemed it to be our duty to inform your High Mightinesses that, subsequent to the first discovery, by your subjects in the year 1609, of the North River (commonly called the Manhattas, also Rio de Montaigne and North river), and after some of your inhabitants had resort thither, in the year 1610 and following years, your High Mightinesses had finally, in the year 1615 [sic], granted some of your inhabitants a charter to trade to those countries, to the exclusion of all other persons, and that they established a fort and garrison there, which were maintained until the charter granted to the West India Company included these and other countries."—Mem. N. Y. Col. Doct., I: 51. For further details and references, see Vol. II, Chap. III.

It is possible that De Laet, writing in 1625, may have made a mistake of a year, and that the expedition here referred to was that sent out on "The Fox" and "The Crane," which expedition was doubtless planned in 1610, although it did not sail until March 28, 1611 (q. v.).

In or about this year, the world-map of Pisanus (C. Pl. 21, and pp. 38, 49, 60, 134-35, Vol. II), which is very advanced in its delineation of the North East Coast, and apparently shows the Hudson River, was issued.

Hudson, in the service of the Muscovy Company of London, starts in the "Discovery" on his fourth and last voyage. He sailed through Hudson (Lumley's) Strait, probably discovered by Cabot in 1497, into Hudson Bay, wintered in James Bay, and was cast adrift by his mutinous crew on June 21, 1611, shortly after leaving his winter quarters.

The "Discovery," after many vicissitudes, returned to England on Sept. 6, and the remnant of the crew made their way to Sir Thomas Smith, governor of the English East India Company, in whose custody Hudson's journal and maps of this voyage were in 1611 (see Vol. II, p. 46, citing letter of Dec. 1, 1611, in Simancas archives).

It is clear from such meagre information as has been preserved that Hudson died believing that he had discovered the entrance to the long sought for north-west passage.

For contemporary accounts of Hudson's fourth voyage, see "An Abstract of the Journal of Master Henry Hudson," in Purchas His Pilgrimes, III: 596-97; Abacvk Pricket's "Discoverie" (ibid., III: 597-609); "A note found in the Deske of Thomas Wydowne, Student in the Mathematickes, hee being one of them who was put into the Shallop" (ibid., III: 609-10), and Hessel Gerritz, second Latin ed. (1613), printed in Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, 130.

King Henry IV, of France, is assassinated.

Capt. Samuel Argall, in company with Sir George Somers, sailed on June 29 from the Chesapeake for the Bermudas, but, owing to contrary winds, they were obliged to change their destination, and to steer instead for Sagadahoc. Before reaching the coast, the two ships were separated in a heavy fog. Argall, after spending some time cruising along the coast between Sagadahoc and Cape Cod, set his course for home, and, on August 22, was in the neighbourhood of Sandy Hook. He reached Delaware Bay on the 27th, and Cape Charles on the 31st.

In his own journal (printed in Purchas, IV: 1758), Argall makes no mention of having explored the coast or of having entered any harbour between Cape Cod and Delaware Bay, although Strachey, first secretary of Virginia, in his history, apparently referring to this voyage, says: "Likewise, from the north point of our bay, which (as aforesaid) the Indians call Accommack, and we Cape Charles, hath the coast all along bene discovered, even to the river of Sachadahoc; for Captain Argall, in his returne from the search of the Bermudas, anno 1610, after he had lost Sir George Somers, 28 July, in a dangerous fogge, well beaten to and fro, fell with the mayne, standing for Cape Cod, and made good, from 44 degrees, what Captayne Barthe. Gosnoll and Captayne Waymouth wanted in their discoveries, observing all along the coast,

1610 and drawing the plots thereof, as he steered homewards, unto
Aug. our bay; and divers times went ashore, offering acquaintance 22= and trade unto the people; and in the latitude of 39 discovered Sept. another goodly bay [Delaware], into which fell many taylores of 1 faire and large rivers; and which might make promise of some westerly passage; . . . "—Stracey, The Hist. of Travails into Virginia Britannia, in Hakluyt Soc. Publications (1849), 42-43.

— On March 22, 1611, Don Alonso de Velasco, Spanish ambassador in London, sent to the Spanish King (Philip III) a copy of a map, now known as the "Velasco Map" (C. Pls. 22 & 21A, Vol. II), which, in an accompanying letter, he described as having been drawn by a surveyor, or engineers, sent to America during the preceding year, and "returned here about three months ago" (Dec., 1610, probably in the ship "Dainty"—see Brown's Genesis, I: 428). The portion of the letter referring to the map reads as follows: "This King [James I] sent last year [1610] a surveyor to survey that Province, and he returned here about three months ago and presented to him [King James] a plan or map of all that he could discover, a copy of which I send Y. M. Whose Catholic Person . . ."—Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I: 457.

The Velasco Map delineates the coast from the straits of Belle Isle to Cape Fear. The characteristics of the coast-line north of New England do not vary materially from the usual, rather inaccurate, representations of the period. It is, however, quite another matter with the portions of the coast occupied by the English—
New England and Virginia—and the still unoccupied stretch between these two settlements, including the tract explored by Hudson, all of which are shown with considerable detail and accuracy, there is every reason to believe from Hudson's own survey, or from information furnished by him personally.

The name Manhattan ("Manabata" and "Manahatin") appears for the first time on the Velasco Map.

The authorship of this very important document, in its final form, is unknown, although it evidently embodies, besides the surveys of Champlain and other foreigners, information derived from some at least of such English explorers and surveyors as White, Gosnold, Weymouth, Pring (see Oct. 1606), Popham, Hudson, Argall (see Aug. 22, 1610), Tyndall, Powell, Madison, and possibly others.

Stracey, as we have seen, referring to Argall's voyage from June to August, 1610, says that Argall "made good, from 44 degrees, what Captayne Bartho. Gosnold and Captayne Weymouth wanted in their discoveries, observing all along the coast, and drawing the plots thereof, as he steered homewards, unto our bay."—Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I: 457. This statement, if it could be substantiated, would satisfactorily establish the identity of the mysterious surveyor who visited the Hudson River and Manhattan Island in 1610, and doubtless completed this map, adding to Hudson's discoveries, and those of his predecessors, the stretch of coast between the Hudson River and Nantucket. Unfortunately, however, Argall's own journal (printed in Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1758) does not bear out Stracey's statement, as it seems clearly to indicate that Argall did not sight land between Cape Cod and Delaware Bay. Furthermore, it seems probable that the unknown surveyor of 1610 sailed along the coast from south to north, as otherwise he could hardly have failed to note the eastern entrance into Long Island Sound.

The copy of this map procured by Velasco is now in the Simancas archives in Spain. The original has not been found.

For a reproduction and such additional facts as are known regarding this map, including a discussion of the reasons for connecting it closely with Hudson, see Vol. II, Chap. II, Frontispiece, and C. Pl. 22. See also Brown's Genesis, I: 457, and First Republic, 146-47.

1611

— In this year, the English translation of the Bible authorized by James I, generally known as the "Royal Version" or "King James's Version," was first printed, at London, in a massive folio volume. It resulted from a conference of English divines, representing both the Established Church and the Puritans, called at Hampton Court by the king in 1604.—Anderson, Annals of the English Bible, II: 364-94. The proceedings of the conference are given contemporaneously by Barlow, Summe and Substance of the Conference, London, 1604.

— In this year, the second issue of Emanuel van Meteren's well known history, with the title Belgische Ofte Nederlantsche Oorlogen

ende Gheschiedenissen (Belgian or Dutch Wars and Events) was published. This pirated quarto, which was printed, shortly before Van Meteren's death, from his official folio edition of 1610 (p. 9-under Apr. 4-Nov. 7, 1609), has long been taken for the first edition.
The recent discovery, in the Library of Congress, of the only known copy of the splendid official folio edition of 1610, has robbed it of this long usurped honour. The existence of this book, which belonged originally to Mr. John Boyd Thatcher, although unknown to bibli-ographers, was noted in 1909 by Mr. Paltruis and Mr. Van Laer.

In this year, publication of the Mercurius Francicus, a journal of current events containing much material relating to voyages on the east coast of North America, was begun at Paris. It continued until 1646.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 300, and authorities there cited.

It is likely that in this year Hendrick Christiaensen, of Cleves, visited the vicinity of Manhattan Island, although it is equally possible that his visit, referred to in the following extract, occurred a year or two later, and even conceivable that it took place in 1610:

"This country, or the River Montagne, called by ours Mauritius, was first sailed to by the worthy Hendrick Christiaensen of Cleves, when he had been on a voyage to the West Indies, he happened near there. But his vessel being laden, and a ship belonging to Montickendam having been wrecked in that neighbourhood, he durst not approach that land; this he postponed, being desirous to do so another time. It so happened that he and the worthy Adriaen Block chartered a ship with the skipper Ryser, and accomplished his voyage thither, bringing back with him two sons of the principal sachem there. Though very dull men, they were expert enough in knavery."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verbael.

Jameson's translation (Nar. N. Neth., 78), by the use of a period, where a comma is apparently intended, after "Cleves," makes Wassenaer state that Christiaensen was the first to sail to the Mauritius River, which, of course, he cannot have intended to say. At all events, it seems evident that Christiaensen's accidental approach to the Hudson River, "when he had been on a voyage to the West Indies," even if made in 1610, was not the carefully planned trading expedition which De Laet tells us was sent out by the Amsterdam merchants in that year. After dissolving partnership with Block, he "made ten voyages thither, under a grant from the Lords States, who gave him that privilege for the first opening up of the place," that is, under the charter of Oct. 11, 1614 (p. v.). On one of his voyages he took, by order of his employers, some bucks, goats, and rabbits, but they were killed by poisonous plants.—Wassenaer, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 81.

On this day, in the states-general, was "Received and read a letter from the Commissioners of the Admiralty at Amsterdam, Feb.
dated for the 19th Inst. wherein they advise that the Ships destined to look for a Northern passage to China are so nearly ready for the voyage that they are beginning to embark their crew. Requesting, inasmuch as it is important that the aforesaid Ships should be provided with Letters from the Lords States General or His Excellency to the Princes or Kings of the countries at which they may arrive, written in such languages and characters as may be most useful, that their High Mightinesses would be pleased to have a draft made of such letters as their High Mightinesses shall think proper to give them, together with proper Commissions for the captains who will be in command; leaving the names of these in blank;
the Ships being called the Little Fox ["The Fox," or "De Vos"]
and the Little Crane ["The Crane," or "De Craen"]."

"After deliberation it is ordered, that the required Letters be drawn up, and the draft sent to the aforesaid Commissioners, to have it translated into such languages, as they shall consider necessary: And it is further resolved that his Excellency be requested to issue as High Admiral the aforesaid Commissions for the Captains."

— On March 28, the two vessels sailed under the command of Jan Cornelis May and Pieter Franz.—Muller, De Reis van Jan Cornelisz. May (etc.), Linschoten Vereneiging (1909), 3. The journal of the voyage, written by May, has been preserved, but the maps of the coast of Maine and New England, made by Pieter Franz, are lost. The explorers did not reach a point farther south than Cape Malabar.—See Cartography, II: 66, et seq. See, also, Aug.
13-14, 1614, for a later expedition of "De Vos" under Pieter Fransz.
It seems clear from the above records that May cannot have visited the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island in 1611.

1611 Fathers Peter Biard and Enemond Masse, Jesuit priests, arrive at Port Royal to do missionary work among the Indians. Biard visited all the coast as far as the Kennebec. Finding that little could be done at Port Royal, the Jesuits projected an independent mission settlement elsewhere. Their protector, Madame De Guercheville, obtained from the French king a grant of all the coast from the St. Lawrence to Florida. A vessel was sent out, the missionaries were taken on board, and a settlement was begun at St. Sauveur on Mount Desert Island. There a cross was planted, and Mass said at a rustic altar. But English vessels under Argall, from Virginia, attacked the ship and settlement, and the settlers were sent to France or carried prisoners to Virginia. This was the first Jesuit mission begun under French auspices.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 264, 292, 300, and authorities there cited.

Sept. 7 A petition is presented by "divers Merchants and Inhabitants, residing in the United Provinces" to the assembly of the states of Holland and Westvriesland, "regarding certain newly discovered Navigation," and the cities of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Hoorn, and Enckhuysen request a copy of the petition for their constituents, "which is delivered them."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 4. The records do not contain the petition or the answer thereto, but without doubt it referred to the newly discovered regions about the Hudson. Favourable action was probably taken upon this petition, and one or more of the five ships mentioned in the charter of Oct. 11, 1614 (q. v.), were doubtless despatched to the Hudson River in the following year (1612). Hendrick Christiaensz, who, as we have seen, perhaps first visited the neighbourhood of Manhattan in 1611, but who postponed his visit there until he had formed a partnership with Block, was, presumably, one of the 1612 adventurers.

— In this as well as in the following years, Christiaens, Block, and probably Jacob Elkens, as well as other Dutch adventurers whose names are familiar to us through their association in later years with the United New Netherland Company were doubtless engaged in explorations along the New Netherland coast, which eventually led to the granting of the charter of 1614.—See Sept. 7, 1611, and Oct. 11, 1614.

Apr. 25 "Upon the petition of some merchants, native subjects of the United Provinces, it is resolved as follows: The States, etc., declare that if the remonstrants are found to be the first to have discovered and navigated the route around the north to China or Japan, they shall receive the reward offered for that purpose by the resolution of the 13th of April anno 1596 [q. v.]; and furthermore, that then their further request will receive favorable attention and that proper action will be taken. Done in The Hague, the 25th of April, 1612."—Muller, De Reis van Jan Cornelisz. May, 192.

1613

Mar. 27 Jonas Witsz (Witsen), member of the city council and former schepen of Amsterdam, and Symon Willemsz Nooms, one of the organizers of the New Netherland Co. (See Johan E. Elias, De Vreedschap van Amsterdam, I: 431), appear before the admiralty, declaring that they have resolved with their company to equip a small vessel in order to search for a northern passage to China. They ask for the yacht "De Vos" and promise, if successful, a share in the reward of 25,000 florins offered by the states-general on April 13, 1596 (q. v.), which offer was renewed by a resolution of April 25, 1612 (q. v.), for the discovery of such a passage. The admiralty agrees to lend the yacht, and to equip it with six guns, the further expenses, such as monthly pay, provisions, etc., to be calculated pro rata. They appraise the vessel at 3,000 guilders, the "amount of the valuation and the expenses for equipping" to be the "share of the admiralty," and stipulate that the reward or eventual trade profits shall be divided in proportion to this amount, but that the admiralty shall have no further expense in case there be no profit. (Apparently, the statement in Vol. II: 65 to the effect that "De Vos" was purchased from the government, on March 29, 1613, is incorrect.)

The date of the sailing is not given, but on July 24, 1614 (q. v.), Jan de Wit, master of "t Vosten," appeared before the Admiralty, having completed an unsuccessful voyage to America.—From the Register of the Amsterdam Admiralty, in Muller, Geschiedenis der Noordsche Compagnie, 367-68. From the same source, we know that "De Vos" was sent to the American coast in command of Pieter Franz., who had accompanied Jan Cornelisz. May, as pilot.

He was to visit the Hudson River and to trade with the Indians. Franz., on this expedition, was killed by the natives, and his successor, Jan de Wit, did not reach the Hudson River, as we find expressly stated on Aug. 13-14, 1614 (q. v.), after he had returned to Holland.

Shakespeare's Globe Theatre burns on June 29/July 9. In this month, Captain Samuel Argall returned to Virginia from his second Acadian expedition. In 1648 there was published at London a pamphlet under the name of Beauchamp Plantagenet, entitled A Description of the Province of New Albion, in which, among other baseless fabrications, it was stated that "Sir Thomas Dale and Sir Samuel Argall," on a return voyage from the French settlements in Acadia, "landed at Manhates Isle in Hudsons river, where they found four houses built, and a pretended Dutch Governour, under the West-India Company of Amsterdam share or part; who kept trading boats and trucking with the Indians; but the said Knights told him their Commission was to expell him and all aliens Intruders on his Majesties Dominion and Territories, this being part of Virginia, and this river an English discovery of Hudson and [sic] English man, the Dutch man contented them for their charge and voiage, and by his Letter sent to Virginia and recorded, submitted himself, Company and Plantation to his Majesty, and to the Governour and government of Virginia; but the next pretended Dutch Governour in Maps and printed Cards, calling this part New Netherland, falling in paying of customes, at his return to Plymouth in England, was there with his Bever goods and person, attached to his damage of 1500 l. whereupon at the suit of the Governour and Council of Virginia, his now Majesty by his Embassadour in Holland, cōplaining of the said Aliens intrusion on such his Territories & Dominions, the said Lords the States of Holland by their publike instrument declared, That they did not avow, nor would protect them, being a private party of the Amsterdam West-India Company, but left them to his Majesties wil & mercy." (pp. 16-17).

For an argument against the authenticity of this account, and upholding the general unworthiness of the tract, see the Bibliography, Vol. V, under Plantagenet. See also Voyages from Holland to America, A. D. 1632-1643, by David Peterson de Vries, translated from the Dutch by Henry C. Murphy (New York, 1853), Note A, which presents an interesting and very complete survey of the progress of the Dutch, as given by themselves, in the territory of the state of New York, up to the time of the first settlement.

The above item was prepared by Mr. Paltsits. In the author's opinion, an equally plausible theory can be developed from the meagre facts to sustain the long-established tradition of Argall's finding a settlement, or encampment, on Manhattan Island. It has seemed advisable here and elsewhere in the Chronology, where opinions have differed, to state briefly the opposing deductions, as well as the facts themselves, so that the reader may be in a position to judge for himself. In this particular case, it seems to the author that, although the tract may in general be unreliable, nevertheless, the statements which it contains relating to Manhattan may be substantially correct. As Fort Nassau, which we know from De Laet was built in 1614, is shown on Block's Figurative Map, which is based on information carried back to Holland by Block and Christiaens, who reached Amsterdam before July 24, 1614 (q. v.), it must have been built in the winter of 1613-4. As we know also from De Laet that Christiaens "first commanded here [Fort Nassau], and in his absence Jacques Elckens" (Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 47), he must have spent this winter there, and left Elckens in charge in the early spring, when he went down the river in the "Fortuyn" and, picking up Block near Cape Cod, sailed for home, leaving Hendricks in the "Restless" to continue the exploration of the New Netherland coast.—De Laet, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 50.

If Block's ship, the "Tiger," had been burned in the vicinity of Albany, in the autumn or winter of 1613-4 (q. v.), it seems almost certain that Block would have attempted to join forces with his old partner, Christiaens. This he did not do; and we know, further, from the account of the Indians (Doc. Hist. N. Y., 4to ed., IV: 65), that they supplied him with food during two (doubtless intended for one) winters while he was building the "Restless."

Furthermore, De Laet, in referring to the cruise of the "Restless" in the early spring, starts in by saying that she "sailed through Hellegat into the great bay." If she had been launched up the river, or elsewhere than in the neighbourhood of Manhattan

It seems to me, therefore, that there is no valid reason for assuming that the "Tiger" was not burned in the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island, and that the "Restless" was not built on the island, or in its vicinity. I would go further. Argall's visit took place late in November, 1613. Why should not his statement regarding a "pretended Dutch Governour" and "four houses" refer to Block and his crew, and to their encampment? I do not think that a convincing argument against a "prehistoric" sojourn on Manhattan Island can properly be based upon the traditional cruelty or treachery of the local Indians, as there are as many instances of their friendliness to the whites as of the reverse.

The argument sometimes advanced that Father Biard, in his letters and Relation (See Brown's Genesis, II: 700 et seq.; also Champlain's Voyages), does not mention the visit to Manhattan falls to the ground when we examine the text of the Relation carefully; as it then becomes clear that he was not on the ship with Argall on the return to Virginia from the second voyage, but was with Capt. Turner on another ship, not being able to reach the Virginias, because of a great storm, sought refuge in the Azores, from whence Biard found his way to France.

The statement that Argall sailed from Port Royal "straight to Virginia" occurs in the record of the first, and not the second, voyage. In connection with the second voyage, we are told by Biard that he "reached Virginia in three weeks or thereabouts" after leaving Port Royal on Nov. 9, which would have allowed ample time for a visit to Manhattan Island.

In a complaint made on Oct. 25, 1634, against Jacob Jacobsen Elkens, for trading up the North River, on the pretence "that said river and adjacent country were in, and of, the Domain of his Majesty of Great Britain," the deputies of the "Assembly of the XIX," reminded the states-general that the right to trade had been conferred by them (in 1614) on certain merchants, and that, likewise, "one or more little forts were built," also under the jurisdiction of the states-general, "even before the year 1614, and supplied with people for the security of the said trade."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 93-95.

In a "Report of the Board of Accounts on New Netherland," Dec. 15, 1644, it is said: "For which purpose [i. e., as a shelter in winter] they erected on the North and South Rivers there, two little forts against the incursions of the Indians. A charter was afterwards, on the 11th October, 1614, granted," (etc.). N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 149.

These statements are evasive, uncertain, and largely unreliable; their origin can be traced to the work of De Laet, whose account is misinterpreted. Fort Nassau, on Castle Island, was erected in 1614, and there was no Dutch fort on the South or Delaware River until after 1623, when a fort, also called Fort Nassau, was built there; moreover, the Dutch first explored that river, under Hendricksen, in 1614 or 1615. Again, in 1646, Father Isaac Jogues, S. J., wrote his Novum Belgium, in which he gave his observations of a visit to New Netherland in 1643, but which was evidently elaborated from the French edition of De Laet, published in 1640. He wrote: "It is about fifty years since the Hollanders came to these parts. The fort was begun in the 1615; they began to settle about twenty years ago. . . . The first comers found lands fit for use, deserted by the savages, who formerly had fields here." We have here an exaggeration in the first sentence and the rest is taken from De Laet. He makes De Laet's statement of the fort "up the said river" refer to a fort on Manhattan Island; although, as the statement appears first in the 1630 edition, the reference, obviously, is to the fort built there after Minuit's arrival in 1626. Jogues refers to Fort Orange as "a miserable little fort called Fort Orange, built of logs, with four or five pieces of Breteuil cannon and as many pedereros." Cf. Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 38 and 54, with 261.

In the "Deduction, or brief and clear account of the situation of New Netherland" (etc.), in N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 133, transmitted on Nov. 5, 1660, we have an almost literal copy of the De Laet statement, with an interpolation of the words "about the Island Manhattans," hence again a misinterpretation. Such positiveness as is found in Moulton's Hist. of State of N. Y., part 2, p. 344, and in Booth's Hist. City of N. Y., 39, is wholly unwarranted by the evidence.

In this year, Pocahontas was baptised at Jamestown, Va., under the name of Rebecca.—Smith, General Historie (1624), 116-17, 121, 122.

That the French frequented the Massachusetts coast between 1614 and 1619 is proven by accounts of the destruction of two of their ships there at that time.—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation, I: 208-10; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 110 (footnote), and authorities there cited.

The "Tiger," of which Adriaen Block was skipper, was accidentally burned in New Netherland in the beginning of this year. (See Nov., 1613, for a statement of reasons for supposing that the "Tiger" was burned at an earlier date.) Block spent the remainder of this winter in building a small yacht, which was named the "Onrust." (Mr. Van Laer calls attention to the fact that the name "Onrust," given to Block's new vessel, is generally translated Restless, or Unrest, and looked upon as an appropriate and even prophetic name, although, as the Dutch are not an imaginative people, it is doubtful that the name was bestowed with any such intentional interpretation. More likely the ship was so named after the small island of Onrust, between the north point of the province of North Holland and the island of Texel, the last bit of land which ships pass in leaving Holland on sailing from the Texel. Cf. Oct. 9, 1618.) The "Onrust" was of "about eight lasts [sixteen tons] burthen," having "a keel thirty-eight feet long, forty-four and a half feet from stem to stern, and eleven and a half feet wide for beam. In this vessel he sailed through Hellegat [East River] into the great bay [Long Island Sound], and explored all the places thereabout; and continued therewith as far as Cape Cod, whence he came home in the ship ["Fortune"] of Hendrick Christiaensen, leaving the yacht on that coast for further trading," in charge of Cornelis Hendricksen, skipper, who continued to make new discoveries with her.—De Laet, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 44, 50-51 (De Laet tells us, in the same place, that the Dutch "built there [on the Hudson] several sloops and tolerable yachts."); N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 12, 13, 15. Although it has been asserted in numerous secondary authorities that the "Tiger" was burned at or near Manhattan Island, and that the "Onrust" was built on Manhattan Island, in 1613 or 1614, no positive evidence has been found for these claims. The only direct evidence is contained in the citations given above and it lends no hope to the Manhattan theory. There is, however, strong circumstantial evidence in the works of Van Meteren, De Laet, and Wassenaar, in support of the possibility that Block was in the vicinity of Albany during the experiences of this winter.

There is also no evidence in favour of the view expressed by some writers that Block and his party built huts near the southern point of Manhattan Island and that they were supplied with food by the Indians of that vicinity during that winter. One error has naturally followed upon another. The contemporary evidence, though meagre, shows that the Dutch traders carried on their barter with the Indians near Albany; that voyages were made there each year; that some people even wintered there for the purpose of trafficking with the natives; that Christiaensen and Block had been partners before the "Tiger" was burned; that Christiaensen was the first regular trader in New Netherland; that the first fort there had been built on Castle Island, near Albany, in 1614, "for the greater security of the traders," and that Christiaensen was the first who commanded in New Netherland; also that the region of the upper Hudson was noted for its unusual productivity, then as now, and for its fine timber, from which even Hudson's carpenter had made a fore-yard for the "Half Moon," and that the Mohawks near Albany, met by Hudson and his successors, were "friendly and polite people," and cultivated intercourse and friendship with the Dutch, whilst those resident near Manhattan Island, called the "Manhattans," were "warlike people," "a bad race of savages, who have always been very obstinate and unfriendly towards our countrymen." These latter are clearly not the same Indians who, at this early period, would have supplied them (Block and his party) with victuals and other necessities, and have "taken care of them for two [sic, for one] winters, till the ship was finished," as we are told in the Breedten Raedt, those Indians did who refused the demands made by Gov. Kieft, alleging that they were under no obligation to the Dutch. The exact words used, as translated in Doc. Hist. N. Y., IV: 65, are 1614 "Have we not supplied you Swannekens on your first arrival here and when you had no mochols (i.e., ships), with provisions for two whole winters, and had we not you would have died of hunger." The necessary shelter for Block and his men, and the hospitalities they received from natives in New Netherland, seem to have been associated with the upper Hudson in the vicinity of Albany. For the circumstantial evidence here analysed, see Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 7, 22, 38-39, 45, 47, 50-51, 67, 78, 81; Doc. Hist. N. Y., 4to ed., IV, 65.

The above item was prepared by Mr. Palstis, and embodies his interpretation of the known facts; for a statement of the author's reasons for reaching a different conclusion—that the "Tiger" was burned in the vicinity of Manhattan Island, probably in the autumn of 1613-14, and that Argall did find a "pretended Dutch Governour" encamped on Manhattan Island—see 1613, November.

Fort Nassau was erected early in this year by Hendrick Christiaensen, on Castle Island, in latitude 43°, a short distance south of the present city of Albany (see Brodhead, I, 55). "The fort was built in the form of a redoubt, surrounded by a moat eighteen feet wide; it was mounted with two pieces of cannon and eleven pederers, and the garrison consisted of ten or twelve men. Hendrick Christiaensen, first commanded here, and in his absence Jaques Elckens, on behalf of the company which in 1614 received authority from their High Mightinesses, the States General. This fort was constantly occupied for three years, after which it partly went to decay."—De Laet, Nieuwe Wereld, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 47-48. Fort Nassau is shown on the Figurative Map of 1614, and must therefore have been built during the winter of 1613-14.

From the time of Adriaen Block's wintering on the North River, in 1613-14, and possibly still earlier, it is likely that traders occasionally landed, and even camped, upon Manhattan Island. We may, however, be sure that nothing deserving the name of a settlement was established there during this early period, and that if any houses were built by Europeans they were of the most primitive type, and served merely for the occasional and temporary shelter of explorers or traders and their stores. See Vol. II, Cartography, pp. 103-4.

Early in this year, the states-general, anxious to encourage the foreign commerce of Holland, granted a charter to an association of merchants for prosecuting the whale-fishery in the neighbourhood of Nova Zembla, and for finding a new passage to China. The name of this company was De Noordsche Compagnie.—Groot Placaet-Boeck, I: 679; Wassenaar, VII: 95, VIII: 95, IX: 124.

Jean Vigne (or Vigne), son of Guillaume (also Gullian, Guylen, Willem) Vigue and Adrienne Cuville, Walloons, is said by numerous modern historians to have been born in this year on Manhattan Island, and to have been the first child of European parents born in New Netherland. This conclusion they base upon a statement made, in 1679, by the Labadist missionaries, Dankers and Slyuter, in the journal of their Voyage to New York (pub. in Memoirs of Long Island Hist. Soc., I: 114); but these merely say "in New Netherland," and that he was about sixty-five years of age when they wrote, in 1679 (Sept. 24, 9, v.). Jean Vigne died in New York City, on Dec. 21, 1689. See his will in Collections of N. Y. Hist. Soc. (1897), 401. His father probably died before April 30, 1632, on which date a report was made by two referees for his widow relating to an antenuptial contract for a settlement upon her children by her first marriage, as she was now to be married to Jan Jansen Damen. The date of the report has been questioned. It is given in O'Callaghan's Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, p. 1, under April 30, 1638. As the original instrument (N. Y. Col. MSS., I: 6) was destroyed in the Capitol fire, the date cannot be verified, although an English translation which survived gives the date as 1632. Rachel Vigne married Cornelis van Tienhoven, and it is possible that they came into possession of this contract and recorded it in 1638, and that this date is erroneously used in the Calendar. In this instrument her son Jean and daughter Rachel are spoken of as minors and provision is made for their education and for a trade to be taught to Jean, who was the younger of these two children. Had he been born in 1614, he would have been about eighteen in 1632, and it seems very unlikely that at this age provision would have been made for his education and the learning of a trade, as a "mior," and for the education of his sister, who was even older, although under the Roman-Dutch law the legal age was 25. Mr. Van Laer, who has a clear recollection of the report, is confident that it was dated 1632, and not 1638.

Sarah Rapelje, daughter of Joris Jansen Rapelje, is often called the first white girl born in New Netherland. She was born on June 7 or 9, 1625, and her mother was Catelina Trico, who spent her first three years after arriving in New Netherland (in 1624?) at Fort Orange (Albany); hence Sarah must have been born at that place. Her parents were Walloons, or Huguenots, and it seems safe to assume that Jean Vigne's birth was earlier than that of Sarah Rapelje, soon after the arrival of the first colonists at Fort Orange, in 1624. We know from a recently discovered deposition of Bastiaan Jansz. Krol, made at Amsterdam on Nov. 14, 1624, after his return from Fort Orange, where he was "Krankenbezoeker," that before he sailed for Holland children had been born there, and were awaiting baptism. From the same records we know that Krol was authorized to officiate at baptisms and marriages, as there was no ordained minister in New Netherland, and that he returned to Fort Orange to exercise this authority. Krol, as lay-reader and comforter of the sick, was peculiarly well situated to know the social happenings in the very small first colony at Fort Orange, and, as we have seen, he says that children (kinderen) had been born there before he left on his first return voyage from Fort Orange, which must have been either late in September or early in October, as his deposition was made at Amsterdam on Nov. 14, 1624.

The claim that Jean Vigne was the first child born in New Netherland is possible, but not proven; but the claim that Sarah Rapelje was the first girl born there is dubious and improbable.—Eckhof, Bastiaan Jansz. Krol (1910), 32, Appendix XXIII, documents 21 and 22; Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 75; Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 536, note, and his manuscript account of Jean Vigne (1885), in N. Y. Pub. Library; Bergen Family (1876), 24. According to Miller Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc., Rapelje family records give Sarah's birth as June 7, but this has been disputed, and June 9 has been chosen by some genealogists as the preferred date.

The states-general of the United Netherlands issue the following general charter, offering exclusive trading privileges to such citizens as discover any new passages, countries, or places; and order the same to be affixed "at the usual places in the United Countries":

"The States General of the United Netherlands. To all those who shall see these presents or hear them read, Greeting. Be it Known, Whereas We understand it would be honorable, serviceable and profitable to this Country, and for the promotion of its prosperity, as well as for the maintenance of seafaring people, that the good Inhabitants should be excited and encouraged to employ and occupy themselves in seeking out and discovering Passages, Havens, Countries and places that have not before now been discovered nor frequented; and being informed by some Traders that they intend, with God's merciful help, by diligence, labor, danger and expence, to employ themselves therat, as they expect to derive a handsome profit therefrom, if it pleased Us to privilege, charter and favor them, that they alone might resort and sail to and frequent the passages, havens, countries and places to be by them newly found and discovered, for six voyages as a compensation for their outlays, trouble and risk, with interdiction to all, directly or indirectly to resort or sail to, or frequent the said passages, havens, countries or places, before and until the first discoverers and finders thereof shall have completed the aforesaid six voyages: Therefore, We having duly weighed the aforesaid matter and finding, as heretofore stated, the said undertaking to be laudable, honorable and serviceable for the prosperity of the United Provinces, And wishing that the experiment be free and open to all and every of the Inhabitants of this country, have invited and do hereby invite, all and every of the Inhabitants of the United Netherlands to the aforesaid search, and therefore, have granted and consented, grant and consent hereby that whosoever any new Passages, Havens, Countries or Places shall from now henceforward discover, shall alone resort to the same or cause them to be frequented for four voyages, without any other person directly or indirectly sailing, frequenting or resorting, from the United Netherlands, to the said newly discovered and found passages, havens, countries or places, until the first discoverer and finder shall have made, or cause to be made the said four voyages, on pain of confiscation of the goods and ships wherewith the contrary attempt shall be made, and a fine of Fifty thousand Netherlands Ducats, to the profit of the aforesaid finder or discoverer. Well understanding that the discover [sic], on completion of the first voyage, shall be holden within fourteen days after his return from said Voyage, to render unto Us a pertinent Report of 1614 the aforesaid discoveries and adventures, in order, on hearing thereof We may adjudge and declare, according to circumstances and distance, within what time the aforesaid four voyages must be completed. Provided that We do not understand to prejudice hereby or in any way to diminish our former Charters and Concessions; And, if one or more Companies find and discover, in or about one time or one year, such New Passages, Countries, havens or Places, the same shall conjointly enjoy this Our Grant and Privileges; and in case any differences or questions concerning these, or otherwise should arise or occur from this our Concession, the same shall be decided by Us, whereby each shall have to regulate himself. And in order that this Our Concession shall be made known equally to all, We have ordered that these be published and affixed at the usual places in the United Countries. — Early in the spring of this year, John Smith set sail from England with two ships for the regions allotted in King James's charter of 1606 to the Plymouth or Northern Co. In an open boat, with eight companions, he explored and surveyed the coast from Penobscot to Cape Cod, while the rest of his company remained employed in fishing.—Smith's Generall Historie (1624), 204-5.

On his return to England in July, Smith presented his survey to Prince Charles, who bestowed upon the various places the names found on this map, and gave to the whole stretch of country covered the name of New England. This map was first published in A Description of New England, London, 1616; it was also issued as a "separate." For a full description of the various states of this important map, the first accurate map of New England, see the Church Catalogue, No. 169.

June Sir Ferdinando Gorges dispatches a ship, commanded by Capt. Hobson, to New England to discover gold mines. Hobson, accompanied by an Indian named Epenow who was to guide him to the gold, finally reached Martha's Vineyard. Here they were attacked by Epenow's relatives and Epenow fled. The expedition failed to accomplish its purpose.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 180, and authorities there cited.

July Hendrick Christiaens., skipper, having "lately returned from the most northern parts of America, carrying with him beaver skins," appears before the admiralty, accompanied by Tys Volckertsz. Mossel, a citizen of Hoorn named Pieter, and Jan de Wit, skipper of the vessel "t Vosken" (Little Fox). The person referred to as "Pieter" may have been Pieter Clementsen Brouwer—see Oct. 11, 1614—or possibly Cornelis Jacobsz. May. Muller, in his De Reis van Jan Cornelisz. May, liii, says that "On the American coast, de Vos had found four other Dutch ships, on which Cornelis Jacobsz. May, the nephew of our commander, and three others, were in command." Christiaens. is instructed by the admiralty not to unload his vessel or store the beaver skins before he has notified the freighters of the vessel "t Vosken;" to which he agrees.—From the Register of the Amsterdam Admiralty, in Muller's Geschiedenis der Noordsche Compagnie, 368.

Aug. Jonas Wit (Witsen) and Symon Nooms report to the Admiralty that their expedition in "De Vos" was a failure. They intended to sail north on the River Hudson with their cargo of "different articles of merchandise," but were prevented by the hostility of the Indians, who murdered the skipper, Pieter Franz, and two of the crew. The merchants ask for exemption from both import and export duty. The admiralty, wishing to encourage navigation, waives the import duty, and promises to discuss the matter of export duty when another voyage is made. In the meantime, it consents to the "free unloading and storage" of the merchandise returned.—From the Register of the Amsterdam Admiralty, in Muller's Geschiedenis der Noordsche Compagnie, 368-69.

The two resolutions embodying this action, and bearing the above dates, respectively, contain the earliest known application of Henry Hudson's name to the river discovered by him, which appears as "de riviere Hudson" in the manuscript book of "Resolutions." The name apparently did not appear in print until 1622 (q. v.), when it is mentioned in a Brief Relation of the Discovery and Plantation of New England, etc., published in London. See also Vol. II, Cartography, page 92.

Thirteen merchants of Amsterdam and Hoorn, claiming to have "discovered and found New Netherland, situate in America between New France and Virginia, the sea coasts whereof lie in the Latitude of forty to forty five degrees," jointly ask for the grant of exclusive trade promised "by their High Mightinesses' published placard" of March 27. They submit a report (now lost) and a "Figurative Map" (C. Pl. 23, Vol. II). The states-general promptly grants their request, for four voyages, to be made within three years, beginning January 1, 1615, or earlier. This document, which contains the names of the merchants and their ships, reads (translated) as follows:

"The States General of the United Netherlands to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Whereas Gerrit Jacob Witsen, former burghmaster of the city of Amsterdam, Jonas Witsen and Simon Morissen [an error for Simon Willemsen Nooms—see Aug. 13, 1614; which error occurs also in the 1644 report of the board of accounts (q. v.)], owners of the ship called the Little Fox, (het vosje,) Captain Jan de Wit, master; Hans Hongers [Hunger, in the charter of the Dutch East India Co., art. XVIII], Paul Pelgrom, and Lambrecht van Tweenhuyzen, owners of the two ships called the Tiger and the Fortuue, Captains Adriaen Block and Hendrick Corstiaensen [Christiaentzen], masters; Arnoudt van Lybergen, Wessel Schenck, Hans Claessen, and Barent Swaeten, owners of the ship the Nightingale, (Nochtgegal,) [Nachtgeael] Capt. Thyus [correctly given in Col. Docs., I: 11, as Thyus] Volckertsen, merchant in the city of Amsterdam, master; and Pieter Clementsen Brouwer, Jan Clementsen Kies, and Cornelis Volkertsen, merchants in the city of Hoorn, owners of the ship the Fortuue, Capt. Cornelis Jacobsen Mey, master, have united into one company, and have shown to Us, by their petition, that after great expenses and damages, by loss of ships and other perils, during the present year, they, with the abovesaid five ships, have discovered certain new lands, situated in America, between New France and Virginia, being the sea coasts between 40 and 45 degrees of latitude, and now called New Netherland:—

"And whereas, they further represent that We did, in the month of March, publish, for the promotion and augmentation of commerce, a certain consent and grant, setting forth that whosoever should discover new havens, lands, places, or passages, should be permitted exclusively to visit and navigate the same for four voyages, without permitting any other person out of the United Netherlands to visit or frequent such newly discovered places, until the said discoverers shall have performed the four voyages, within the space of time prescribed to them for that purpose, under the penalties therein expressed, &c., and request that We should be pleased to accord to them due testimony of the aforesaid grant in the usually prescribed form:

"Wherefore, the premises having been considered, and We, in our Assembly, having communication of the pertinent report of the petitioners relative to the discoveries and finding of the said new countries between the abovesaid limits and degrees, and also of their adventures, have consented and granted, and by these presents do consent and grant, to the said petitioners, now united into one company, that they shall be permitted exclusively to visit and navigate the above described lands, situate in America, between New France and Virginia, the sea coasts of which lie between the 40th and 45th degrees of latitude, and which are now named New Netherland, as it is to be seen on the figurative maps by them prepared and to navigate, or cause to be navigated, the same for four voyages, within the period of three years, to commence from the first day of January, 1615, or sooner, without it being permitted, directly or indirectly, to any one else to sail, to frequent, or navigate, out of the United Netherlands, those newly discovered lands, havens, or places, within the space of three years as above, on penalty of the confiscation of the vessel and cargo, besides a fine of fifty thousand Netherlands ducats, for the benefit of said discoverers. Provided, however, that by these presents we do not intend to prejudice or diminish any of our former grants and concessions; and it is also our intention that if any disputes or differences should arise from these our concessions, that they shall be decided by ourselves.

"We, therefore, expressly command all governors, justices, officers, magistrates, and inhabitants, of the aforesaid United Netherlands, that they allow said company peacefully and quietly to enjoy the whole benefit of this our grant, and to interpose no difficulties or obstacles to the welfare of the same. The original charter, on a single sheet of paper, is preserved in the National Archives at The Hague. It is reproduced on Pl. 2, Vol. IV. The map, beautifully drawn in colours on vellum, is also preserved there.

The name "New Netherland" is first given to these lands on Block's Figurative Map, and in this charter of the United New Netherland Company, which title was assumed by the associated merchants soon after the charter was granted.

25 J. F. Bruynigh, notary public at Amsterdam, declares that on this day, at the request of the directors of the "United Chartered Company of the lands situated between Virginia and Nova Francia, by us called New Netherland," he presented himself at the place of residence of skipper Erasmus Pietersz. and Albert Gerritsz. Ruyt, and in their absence served notice on the wife of said Pietersz. and the father of said Ruyt that the directors on the 11th of October obtained from the states-general a charter granting them for four voyages the exclusive privilege to sail to and traffic in the said lands between Virginia and Nova Francia; that the directors understand that said Pietersz. and Ruyt and their associates, with a ship equipped at Amsterdam, intend to sail to the region included in the charter, for the purpose of trading there, in direct violation of the charter; that for this reason the directors gave them timely warning that they must refrain therefrom and that, if they persist, the directors will hold them responsible for all loss and damage which will result from such voyage, and will recover the loss by execution against their persons, ship, and cargo as they shall see fit. Done at Amsterdam, in the presence of Sybrant Cornelisz. and Andries van der Laen, witnesses.—Protocol of Notary J. F. Bruynigh, Notarial Archives at Amsterdam, 1614-5, No. 119, fol. 114.

Nov. 3 J. F. Bruynigh, notary public at Amsterdam, declares that on this day, at the request of the directors of the "United Chartered Company of the lands situated between Virginia and Nova Francia, by us called New Netherland," he went to Albert Gerritsz. Ruyt, supercargo of the ship named "t'fortuyg," and in the name of the aforesaid directors served notice on him, and through him on all his associates and participants, that the directors, in reply to the answer of the participants to the notice served on them on the 25th of October (q. v.), are willing to purchase the aforesaid ship with its appurtenances and such merchandise as may be useful to them in the localities covered by their charter, according to an appraisement by impartial and competent men. The directors request the participants to accept this valid offer; and they declare that in default or refusal thereof, or in case of departure or attempt to do anything to the prejudice of the aforesaid charter, they will hold them responsible for all loss and damage, the same to be recovered as the directors shall see fit. Whereupon, the said Albert Gerritsz. Ruyt gave for answer that he persists in his former offer and protest and requested a copy of the present notice. Done at Amsterdam in the presence of Ellert van Dienen and Adriaen van der Laen, witnesses.—Protocol of Notary J. F. Bruynigh, Notarial Archives at Amsterdam, 1614-5, No. 119, fol. 130.

This item, and that of Oct. 25, show clearly the attitude of the newly formed directorate of the New Netherland Co. toward private expeditions to New Netherland, and, by analogy, strengthen the supposition that the "Mackeler" expedition of July 16, 1623 (q. v.), was in reality undertaken by the West India Co., probably as a sort of reconnoitering expedition, as is suggested under 1626 (q. v.).

1615

— So far as known, the earliest reference, in print, to the voyages of the Dutch in New Netherland, prior to and during the year 1614, and to the naming of the lands then discovered, is contained in a German publication by J. Francus, entitled: Relationis historice continuatio . . ., issued at Frankfurt a. M., in 1615. The passage reads (pp. 44-45, translated): "About this time [1614- (October?)] there arrived at Amsterdam some Dutch ships which had discovered a new country beyond Virginia and not far from New France, which they named New Holland, bringing with them from there two of the natives [This can hardly be a reference to Block and Christiaenssen and to Valentine and Orson, unless Francus is mistaken in the date of arrival of the ships.—See 1611; Sept. 7, 1611; 1612; Nov., 1613.]; it is said to be a very rich and productive country, especially in grain; therefore the Lords States determined to lay hold thereof, and to occupy the seacoasts with strong forts; the voyage from Holland, and there return, it is said, can be made within six weeks." See Bibliography.

"The Deduction, or Brief and Clear Account of the Situation of New Netherland," etc. (N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 133), presented by the West India Co. to the states-general in 1660, after referring to the grant of trading privileges to New Netherland made on Oct. 11, 1614 (q. v.), continues: "to which end [trading] they likewise, in the year 1615, built on the North river, about the Island Manhatans, a redoubt or little fort wherein was left a small garrison, some people usually remaining there to carry on trade with the Natives or Indians. This was continued and maintained until their High Mightinesses did, in the year 1622 [1621], include this country of New Netherland in the charter of the West India Company." The "Deduction" cannot, however, be accepted as authoritative in connection with this very early period.

Aug. 17 Under this date, Champlain, while on an exploring expedition in the country of the Hurons, refers in his journal to a place "on the 40° where the Dutch go to trade."—Champlain's Voyages (1619 ed.). As Fort Nassau was in 42° 40', this reference would seem rather to be to Manhattan Island. In the same place, he refers also to three Dutchmen who, in the preceding year (1614), had been captured by the Indians. This reference may be to Kleyntjes and his companion or companions, a note concerning whom, written by Hendricksen, is found upon the second Figurative Map (Pl. 24, Vol. II). It is possible that these Dutchmen were captured while on an exploring expedition from Fort Nassau to the Susquehanna and Delaware Rivers, as suggested by Brodhead, and that the discoveries in this neighbourhood shown on the second Figurative Map were made by Hendricksen on an expedition to ransom them. See II: 73 et seq., and Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 78. See also Aug. 18, 1616.

Oct. — "Sir Richard Hakings [Hawkins] undertook by authority from the Council of the second Colonie to trie what service he could do them as President for that year.

"Having received his Commission and Instructions, he departed in October 1615, and spent the time of his being in those parts [New England] in searching of the Country, and finding out the commodities thereof, but the [Indian] war was at the height and the principall Natives almost destroyed, so that his observation could not be such as could give account of any new matter, more than formerly had been received, from thence he past along the coast to Virginia, & stay'd there some time, in expectation of what he could not be satisfied in, so took his next course for Spain, to make the best of such commodities he had got together, as he coasted from place to place having sent his Ship laden with Fish to the Market before, and was all that was done by any of us that year."—Gorges, "A Briefe Narration" etc., 17 in Am. Painted to the Life (1659).

— In this year, Pocahontas visited England, and was received at court.

— In this year, the Dutch navigator, Jacques Le Maire, who had been sent out by his father, Isaac Le Maire, on a voyage of exploration to the South Sea, which he purposed reaching through the Strait of Magellan, accidentally stumbled upon a much more direct passage, to the east of Tierra del Fuego, which passage was named after him, Strait of Le Maire. This discovery was one of the great geographical "finds" of the day.—See Vol. II, p. 79 et seq.

Mar. 8-18 The ship "Nachen," commanded by Edward Brawne, sails from Dartmouth for New England. Brawne reached Monhegan on April 20 and afterwards went to Cape Cod to search for pearls.—Winsor, Nar. & Critt. Hist. of Am., III: 181-82 and authorities there cited.

Aug. 16 "Cornelis Henricks<sup>s</sup>, Skipper," appears before the states-general, "assisted by Notary Carel van Geldre," to make report of his discoveries between 38° and 40° N. L. in behalf of his patrons, the thirteen merchants whose names appear in the grant of Oct. 11, 1614 (q. v.). Before taking action, the assembly orders the report submitted in writing.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 12. See Aug. 18.

— In a memorial, accompanied by a second Figurative Map, and submitted this day, "Gerrit Jacob Witsen Burgomaster at Amster-

1616 dam, Jonas Witsen, Lambrecht van Tweenhuysen, Paulus Pelgrom
 Aug. cum suis," who style themselves "Directors of New Netherland 18 extending from 40 to 45 degrees, situate in America between New France and Virginia," represent that "they have, at great and excessive expense, discovered and found a certain country, bay and three rivers situate in the Latitude of from 38 to 40 degrees, (as is more fully to be seen by the Figurative Map hereunto an-nexed) in a small Yacht of about eight Lasts burthen, called the Restless, whereof Cornelis Hendricks<sup>22</sup> of Munickendam is Skipper —Which little yacht they, the Petitioners, caused to be built in the country there, and employed the aforesaid Cornelis Hendricks<sup>22</sup> in the aforesaid Countries during the space of [part of] three years, in the above mentioned little Yacht, looking for new countries, havens, bays and rivers. . . ." They ask that their High Mighti-nesses may be pleased to hear the report of Hendricksen, and examine the map, and that they, the petitioners, may secure a grant of exclusive trade to the new territory for four years, according to the placard (of March 27, 1614). The report made by Hendricksen was submitted on the following day. It reads thus:

"Report of Captain Cornelis Hendricks<sup>22</sup> of Munickendam to the High and Mighty Lords States General of the Free, United Netherland Provinces, made on the xviith August A<sup>o</sup> 1616., of the countries, bay and three rivers situate in the Latitude from 38 to 40 degrees, by him discovered and found for and to the behoof of his Owners and Directors of New Netherland, by name Gerrit Jacob Witsen Burgomaster at Amsterdam, Jonas Witsen, Lambrecht van Tweenhuysen, Paulus Pelgrom and others of their Company.

"First, he hath discovered for his aforesaid Masters and Directors, certain lands, a bay and three rivers situate between 38 and 40 degrees.

"And did there trade with the Inhabitants; said trade consisting of Sables, Furs, Robes and other skins.

"He hath found the said Country full of trees, to wit—Oaks, hickory and pines; which trees were, in some places, covered with vines.

"He hath seen, in the said country, Bucks and does, turkeys and partridges.

"He hath found the climate of the said Country very temperate,
 Judging it to be as temperate as that of this country, Holland.

"He also traded for, and bought from the inhabitants, the Miniques, three persons, being people belonging to this Company; which three persons were employed in the service of the Mohawks and Machicans; giving for them kettles, beads and merchandize."
 —N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 13-14. See also Aug. 17, 1615. The states-general postponed consideration of the grant, and Witsen and his partners again petitioned on Sept. 12, but the matter was again postponed. Further petitions were equally fruitless, and on Jan. 1, 1618, their previous grant expired. From this time until the formation of the West India Co., in 1621, trade was open to all.—Ibid., I: 14, 15, 21, 22.

"This second Figurative Map, drawn (on paper) by Cornelis Hendricksen, and accompanying and illustrating his brief report of discoveries made between 38° and 40° N. L., for his patrons (q. v.), is of special importance and interest, as probably being in the original autograph of the actual surveyor, whereas the Figurative Map of 1614, as well as the Velasco Map, are both copies from originals, now lost. The Hendricks map, which extends from 37° 15' to about 42° 45', and which ends at the north in what resembles, but cannot well be intended to represent, a boundless sea coast, is also important as recording, for the first time, a series of Dutch names along Hudson River—the oldest names bestowed by Europeans to these localities. On this map, Sandy Hook ("Sandhoek") appears for the first time. Curiously enough, Manhattan is not shown as an island, a retrogression from the delineation of the first Figurative Map which it is hard to explain. This map, which, also, is preserved in the National Archives, is reproduced and described in Cartography, Vol. II, Pl. 24, and pages 72-75.

Nov. Gerrit Jacob Witsen and partners again appeal for a charter 3 (see Aug. 16 and 18), but "the disposal thereof is again postponed."
 —N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 15. This charter, apparently, was never granted.—See 1618, Oct. 9.

A story that has had currency among historians of New York is the allegation, said to have a traditional origin, that "the first formal treaty of alliance between the red man and the Hollander" 1617 in New York was concluded in this year with the Five Nations,

 "on the commanding eminence which the Mohawks called Tawass-gunshee, overlooking the river at the mouth of the Tawasentha," the present Norman's Kill.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 81.
 More modern writers, however, discredit the so-called treaty of Tawasentha. There is absolutely no contemporary evidence to support it, either in documents or printed works. The first formal treaty with the Iroquois was made by the English, at Albany, on Sept. 24, 1664 (q. v.).—Beauchamp, Hist. of the N. Y. Iroquois (Albany, 1905), 172-73; 216; Ruttenber, in Proceedings of N. Y.
State Hist. Assn., VI: 180; General Entries, I: 41 (N. Y. State Library Bulletin, History No. 2, 110).

On a map by Willem Jansz. Blaeu, undated, but issued at about this time, the insularity of Manhattan Island is first shown on a printed map. This important map bears the title "Paskaart van Guinea, Brasilien en West Indien, [etc.], and is reproduced in Vol.
 II, C. Pls. 25 and 27. See also Cartography, Page 78 et seq. This is also the first printed map on which New Netherland ("Nieu Nederlant") appears, and the first approximately accurate detailed map of the east coast of North America.

In this spring, Fort Nassau, erected in 1613-4 on Castle Island, having been several times overflowed, was almost completely destroyed by high water and ice, and was therefore abandoned for a new position, on the west bank—the site of the later city of Albany.

About this time, Sir Richard Vines passed a winter on the New England coast, probably at Saco. He lived in the cabins of the Indians.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 182, and references there cited.

The following petition of the owners of the ship "Bontecoe" to the states-general, although not relating directly to New Netherland, is interesting as containing the names of David Pietersen (de Vries), Lambrecht van Tweenhuysen, and Jan Jansen Bleecker (perhaps the father of the early Albany settler of that name):

"To the High and Mighty Lords the States General, etc.

"Show with due reverence, Pieter Jansen Liorno, burgomaster of the city of Hoorn, Cornelis and Claes Veen, also burgomasters Outger Jacobz., Cornelis Teunisz., Willem Jansen Becker, David Pieterz., Lambrecht van Tweenhuysen and Hendrick Camper-beeck, all owners of the ship named the "Bonte Koe," of which Willem Isbrants van Hoorn is master, which ship, being of more than one hundred and thirty lasts burthen, sailed in August 1617
 from Amsterdam in this country, laden with all sorts of merchandise, and which aforesaid ship with its cargo was taken by the Turkish freethooters. And whereas it has now come to the knowledge of the petitioners that the aforesaid ship and goods have again been taken from the said pirates by the Spaniards and been brought in at Gibraltar, the petitioners intend to send Jan Jansen Bleecker to bring about that the petitioners may obtain the restitution of the aforesaid ship and goods, for so far as they have been taken by the Spaniards to Gibraltar. The petitioners therefore request that your High Mightiness may be pleased to grant them favorable letters of recommendation to his Royal Majesty of Spain and to the Governor and Admiral commanding at Gibraltar, in order that they, the petitioners, may obtain restitution of the aforesaid ship and goods, for so far as they may have been brought up.

This periodical is only partially indexed, and fills seventy-four volumes; although a careful search for this letter has been made, it has not been found. This is doubtless the first reference to the founding of an institution of learning in North America. See, further, May 26, 1619.

9 The exclusive charter of the New Netherland Company having expired by its own limitation on Jan. 1, 1618, and the states-general having refused to renew it, Henrick Elkkins and Adriaen Jansse Engel, with others, all partners in the New Netherland Co., now petition for the privilege of sending a trading vessel, "the Schilt" (probably named after "Het Oude Schilt," the principal seaport on the island of Texel), which they have "already prepared," to New Netherland without prejudice to or from their former associates (see list of merchants, Oct. 11, 1614).—*N. 8 The records of the privy council previous to May 1, 1613, were destroyed in the great fire of Whitehall, which occurred late in this year. Hudson's maps and papers were perhaps consumed in this fire.

— The following items, belonging to the years 1617, 1618, and 1619, although they do not relate directly to New Netherland, indicate a strong likelihood that, as there was a regular trade between Holland and the Spanish colonies in the West Indies and Brazil at that time, some of the ships went to Virginia, and even as far north as New Netherland:

On Dec. 16, 1617, Wynant Keyser, consul at Algiers, wrote to the states-general: "Having written this two days ago, there came in Soliman reys, who took as one of two prizes a small vessel from the West Indies, laden with tobacco, so that he has a good prize. He also took a flute from Schiedam, which after having robbed it of its guns and sail, he let go. . . ."—Heerings, Bronnen tot de Geschiedenis van den Levantschen Handel, (Rijks Geschiedkundige Publicatie, 10), Vol. I, part 2, p. 768.

Under date of Feb. 2-17, 1618, he recorded: "The 8th, being again at the paga and having obtained there a slave, who had come with a ship from the West Indies, where he had been a slave, I tried in every way to induce the captains to come ashore, but did not succeed. . . ."—From Journal of Wynant Keyser, in Heerings, Bronnen (etc.), 773.

On July, 1619, "They brought in also a ship from Brazil, floating the prince's flag, thinking thus to escape. . . ."—From letter of Keyser to the states-general, Sept. 2, 1619, in Heerings, Bronnen (etc.), 806.

1619

— In papers submitted to the common council on July 7, 1698, relating to the repeal of the Bolting Act, the statement is made that if the "Year of Our Lord 1619 The City of New York was founded by the People of the Neither Dutch Nation and had Granted to the Inhalitants tho Settled by the States Generall of the United Provinces And the West India Company the Several Rights and Priviledges Recited in A Schedule hereunto Annexed . . ."—M. C. C., II: 36, 43. As the West India Company did not receive its charter until June 3, 1621, this statement is manifestly in error, in so far at least as that company is concerned.

See A. — During the summer of this year, Capt. Thomas Dermer, who in 1616-8 had been associated with Capt. John Smith in Newfoundland, was employed by Sir Ferdinandoorges, of the Plymouth Company, for explorations along the coast, the principal object of which was the discovery of a western passage. He sailed from Kennebeck to Virginia, having determined, as he wrote Purchas, "with Gods helpe to search the Coast along, and at Virginia to supply our selues for a second discovery, if the first failed." On this voyage, he passed through Long Island Sound, Hellgate, and the Narrows. He described his experiences as follows:

"In my way I discovered Land about thirtie leagues in length [Long Island] heretofore taken for Mayne [This, of course, is untrue], where I feared I had beene imbayed, but by the helpe of an Indian I got to the Sea againe, through many crooked and streight passages. I let passe many accidents in this journey occasioned by the creacher, where we were compelled tyme to tye together by the caeres, once the Saugaes had great advantage of us in a streight, not aboue a Bowe shot, and where a multitude of Indians let flye at us from the banke, but it pleased God to make us victours: neere unto this wee found a most dangerous Cattract amongst small rockie Ilands, occasioned by two unequal tydes, the one ebbing and flowing two houres before the other [Hellgate]: here wee lost an Anchor by the strength of the current, but found it deepe enough: from hence wee were carried in a short space by the tydes swiftnesse into a great Bay (to us so appearing) but indeede is broken land [the Upper Bay], which gaue us light of the Sea: here, as I said, the Land treadeth Southerly. In this place I talked with many Saluaes, who told me of two sundry passages to the great Sea on the West [the Hudson and the St. Lawrence (?), or possibly the Delaware], offered me Pilots, and one of them drew mee a Plot with Chalke upon a Chest, whereby I found it a great Iland, parted the two Seas [cf. C. Pl. 14, Vol. II]; they report the one scarce passable for shoals, perillous currents, the other no question to be made of. Having recieved these directions, I hasten[ed] to the place of greatest hope, where I purposed to make triall of Gods goodnesse toward us, and use my best endeouour to bring the truth to light, but wee were but only shewed the entrance, where in seeking to passe wee were forced backe with contrary and overblowing winde, hardly escaping both our liues. Being thus ouercharged with weather, I stood along the coast to seeke harbours, to attend a favourable gale to recouer the streight, but being a harbourlesse Coast for ought wee could then perceiue, wee found no succour till wee arriued betwixt Cape Charles and the Maine on the East side the Bay Chestapeake."

Dermer arrived at "James City" and went from there to "Cape Wards his Platanco," where he, with others of his crew, will be engaged in decking the pinnace, was "brought euen vnto deaths doore" by fever. Winter (1619-20) having in the mean time set in, Dermer decided to "choose a more temperate season" for further exploration, "both for the general good and our own safeties. And thus," his letter to Purchas adds, "I have sent you a broken discourse, though indeede very vnwilling to haue given any notice at all, till it had pleased God to haue blessed mee with a throw search, that our eyes might haue witnessed the truth. I haue drawne a Plot of the Coast, which I dare not yet part with for feare of danger, let this therefore serue for confirmation of your hopes, till I can better performe my promise and your desire. . . ." Dermer ends his letter by the assurance that there is a great sea to the west upon which ships come "many dayes journey from the West." The letter was dated from Captain Martyn's plantation, Dec. 27, 1619.—Thomas Dermer's Letter, in Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1778-79.

Another account of Dermer's voyage in 1619 is contained in A brife Relation (etc.), London, 1622, not paged (see also Purchas, IV: 1827-32). Having arrived at the Kennebec from Newfoundland, expecting to join Rocratt, Dermer found him absent, and later heard from Virginia, "by a Ship that came from thence to fish for the Colony," of Rocratt's death. Dermer thereupon decided "to take the Pinnace, that the yeere before was assigned to Rocratt, for him to make the Trade with, and with her to proceed on his designe, and so embarked himselfe and his prouision and company in her. And leauing the Fisher-men to their labour, he coasted the shoare from thence, searching euery Harbour, and compassing euery Cape-land, till hee arriued in Virginia; where hee was in hope to meet with some of the prouision, or company of Rocratt, to help to supply him of what hee wanted; as also to lay a Decke vpon his Pinnace. . . ." For Dermer's return voyage, see 1620 (Summer).

"It was also by m<sup>r</sup> Tfer propounded to the Co<sup>r</sup>t as a thing most worthy to be taken in to consideration both for the glory of God, and hono<sup>r</sup> of the Company, that forasmuch as the King in his most gracious fauo<sup>r</sup> hath granted his Lres to the seuerall Bishops of this Kingdome for the collecting of monies to erect and build a Colledge in Virginia for the trayning and bringing vp of

1619 Infidels children to the true knowledge of God & understanding of May righteousness. And considering what publique notice may be 26 taken in forewarning to sett forward the acton, especially of all
 June those w<sup>ch</sup> hath contributed to the same, that therefore to begin 5 that pious worke, there is already towards it—1500<sup>l</sup>—or thereabouts, whereof remaining in cash 800<sup>l</sup>, the rest is to be answered out of the Stock of the General Company for so much w<sup>ch</sup> they borrowed, besides the likelihood of more to come in; for m<sup>r</sup> Treasurer<sup>s</sup> having some conference wth the Bishop of Lichfield, he hath not heard of any Collection that hath benee for that business in his Diocese; but prometh when he hath a war<sup>t</sup> thereto he will wth all diligence further the enterprise; Whereupon he concealed it the fittest; that as yet they should not build the Colledge, but rather forbear a while; and begin first with the meanes they have to provide and settle an Annuall revenue, and out of that to begin the erecton of the said Colledge: And for the performance hereof also moued, that a certaine peece of Land be Laid out at Henric being the place formerly resolved of w<sup>ch</sup> should be called the Colledge Land, and for the planting of the same according to order, and to haue halfe the benefit of their Labor and the other halfe to goe in setting forward the worke, and for maintenance of the Tutor<sup>s</sup> & Schollers. He therefore propounded that a Shipp might be provided against the beginning of August, to carry those fifty men wth their provisions, as also to send fifty persons more to the Common Land w<sup>ch</sup> may raise a Stock for the paying of duties there and defraying the Companies charge here, and to send provision of victuals wth them for a yeare: And for the defraying the charge hereof did also propound the meanes; first for the Colledge there was money in Cash, and besides it may save the Joint stock the sending out a Shipp this yeare, w<sup>ch</sup> for 4<sup>d</sup> a pound they will bring from thence all their Tobacco w<sup>ch</sup> may arise to five hundredth pound besides money that may come in otherwise to helpe to beare the charge of the voyage; W<sup>ch</sup> Proposition was well liked but the time and season not allowed of all; and by some objected, that the General Planta<sup>o</sup>n should receive much money if more men were sent over soe sodainly before those that are already gone have procured whereth all to subsist; as also being a matter of great consequence it did more properly belong to the deciding of a Quarter Court: but the former reasons being answered; and being further alleged if it were till then prolonged the time would be past for their provisions of beefe, heere, and meate. Whereupon after Long arguing and disputing thereof it was agreed to be putt to the question; W<sup>ch</sup> being propounded whether a shipp should be sett out to carry men for these two good vses and be sett out at the publique charge—(viz<sup>t</sup>) w<sup>ch</sup> 50 Passengers for the Colledge Land, and 50 for the Common Land, it was by general consent, and erecton of hand allowed and confirmed.—Recs. of the Virginia Company, I: 220-21. See Addenda. For prior mention of a college in Virginia, see June 25, 1618.

July A representative assembly, the first in the history of the new Minister, that it would please God to guide and sanctifie all our attention of the Virginia Company "fower seu'all paire of Inden-

The former directors of the New Netherland Company, to whom Feb. a charter was granted on Oct. 11, 1614, appeal to the Prince of 12 Orange for two war vessels to accompany a band of colonists. They explain that, their charter having expired, "so that every one is now at liberty to trade there, they have again sent thither two ships, in order to preserve the reputation [continuity?] of said trade;
 and that some vessels have likewise been sent by other traders, exclusive of the Company. Now it happens," they say, "that there is residing at Leyden a certain English Preacher, versed in the Dutch language, who is well inclined to proceed thither to live, assuring the petitioners that he has the means of inducing over four hundred families to accompany him thither, both of this country and England, provided they would be guarded and preserved from all violence on the part of other potentates. . . ." They declare that the King of Great Britain is disposed to "people the aforesaid lands with the English nation, and by force to render fruitless their possession and discovery, and thus deprive this State of its right, and apparently with ease surprise the ships of this country which are there, and are ordered to remain there the whole year. . . ."

They ask that "the aforementioned preacher [John Robinson] and four hundred families (the "Pilgrims" may be taken under the protection of the United Provinces and that two ships of war may be sent to secure, provisionally, the said lands of this government, since such lands may be of great importance whenever the West India Company shall be organized."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 22-23.

This petition was referred to the board of admiralty, which reported to the states-general on the 26th, and again on March 10 and on April 10, but before a final decision was made it was resolved to obtain "the opinion of his Excellency" (the Prince of Orange).
 In the end the petition was rejected.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 22, 23, 24. This final refusal of the Dutch government to assist these colonists was undoubtedly largely due to the ambitious plans of the promoters of the West India Company, which was at then in process of formation. The "Pilgrims," balked in their effort to secure a patent from the states-general, finally sailed in the "Mayflower," on Sept. 6, under a patent secured on Feb. 2/12, 1620 from the Virginia Company (see above), by which they were given permission to settle in the northerly parts of Virginia. For a discussion of this patent and an account of their voyage and settlement, in the unpatented territory of New England, see Sept. 6.

"The petition of the Directors of the New Netherland Company, that they, for the peopling of said Island, [Manhattan?] may be assisted with two ships of war, is again rejected."—*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, I: 24.

In this summer, Capt. Thomas Dermer, who had sailed south from Kennebec to Jamestown in the summer of 1619 (q.v.), made a return voyage, during which he explored all the coast "from Cape Charles to Cape Codd up Delaware River, and Hudsons River." This voyage is referred to in the Virginia Company Records as follows:

At a "Courte helde for Virginia the 10th July 1621," by the Virginia Company of London, "M<sup>r</sup> Deputie signified that the occasion of warninge the Courte this present day was to acquainte them with the arruall of the Booa Noua rydinge at anchor neer the Ile of Wight by w<sup>ch</sup> Ship having received divers letters, and one general letter from the Counsell of State in Virginia directed to the Company here hee thought fitt to imparte it vnto them att this meetinge ad therupon prayed they would attend the hearinge of them, w<sup>ch</sup> beinge read the p<sup>ic</sup>ular relations gaue the Companie verie great content to heare that so<sup>m</sup>e Staple Commodities, as Vines, and silke, began to be planted. . . . But fitt occasions likewise seems now to be offered of further Discoueries vp into the Countrie both for the findinge out of the South Sea and Certaine Mynes menconed in the said letters w<sup>ch</sup> will vndoubtedly conduce to the great hono<sup>r</sup> and enlargement of the generall Planta<sup>o</sup>n in a short time; Ther was also read vnto the Company a Relacon of three severall Voyages made this last Summer one to the Southward to Roanoke made by m<sup>r</sup> Marmaduk Rayner ware River, and Hudsons River beinge butt 20: or 30 Leagues from our Planta<sup>o</sup>n and within our lymite in w<sup>ch</sup> Rivers were and Counsell of State in Virginia earnestly to sollicite and invite the

Another account of Dermer's voyage in this year is given in A briefe Relation of the Discovery and Plantation of New England, London, 1622, not paged, but on the recto of signature C2, and without a date (contained, also, in Purchas, IV: 1827-32). After describing Dermer's voyage from Kennebec to Jamestown in 1619, the delays due to the illness of his crew, and the winter season, the account states that Dermer, "in time conuenient [probably in the early spring of 1620] put himselfe to Sea againe, resolving to accomplish in his journey back to New-England, what in his last Discouery he had omitted. In his passage he met with certaine Hollanders, who had a trade in Hudsons Riuer some yeeres before that time, with whom he had conference about the state of that coast, and their proceedings with those people: whose answer gaue him good content. He betooke himselfe to the following of his businesse, discouering many goodly Riuers, and exceeding pleasant and fruitful Coasts and Ilands, for the space of eightie leagues from East to West, for so that Coast doth range along, from Hudsons Riuer to Cape James."

Disputes over the patent to New England lasted for two years, "so as all men were afraid to ioyne with vs," and it was decided to recall Dermer; "but this worthy Gentleman confident of the good likely to ensue, and resolutely resolving to pursue the ends he ayimed at, could not be perswaded to looke backe, as yet; and so refusing to accept our offer, began againe to prosecute his Discouery, wherein he was betrayed by certaine new Saugues, who sdainely set vpon him, giuing him foureteen or fifteene wounds; but by his valour and dexterity of spirit hee freed himselfe out of their hands, yet was constrained to retire into Virginia againe the second time, for the cure of his wounds, where he fell sicke of the infirmities of that place, and thereof dyed: so ended this wortie Gentleman his dayes, after he had remained in the discouery of that coast two yeeres, giuing vs good content in all hee vnder-tooke. . . ."

Sir Ferdinando Gorges, in his "Briefe Narration" (pp. 19-20, 30), in America Painted to the Life (1659), refers to Dermer's discoveries in the years 1619, 1620, and 1621 as follows, but gives no exact dates: After failing to find Capt. Rocraft in the north, Dermer "shaped his course from Sagadahoc in forty-four degrees, to Capawike, being in forty-one and thirty-six minutes, sending me a journal of his proceeding, with the description of the Coast all along as he pas'd. Passing by Capawike, he continued his course along the coast from Harbour to Harbour till he came to Virginia, where he expected to meete with Rocraft (as afore) but finding him dead, and all lost that should have supply'd him, he was forced to shift as he could to make his returne. . . ." On this return voyage, at "Capawike," he was attacked by the Indians and returned to Virginia with fourteen wounds. "At the second retour he had the misfortune to fall sicke and die of the infirmity many of our Nation are subject unto at their first coming unto those parts. . . ."—From "A Briefe Narration" (etc.), 19-20, in America Painted to the Life (1659), in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (1837), 63.

It now seems clear that Dermer did not appear in person before the Virginia Co. on July 10, 1621, as is stated in Vol. II, p. 95, but that a report (relaçou) prepared by him was presented to the meeting.

Of Dermer's visit to the Hudson River in 1620, Gorges writes further as follows: "But as Captaine Dormal, who (as I said) was coasting that Country, met with some Hollanders that were settled in a place we call Hudson's River, in trade with the Natives, who in the right of our Patent forbad them the place, as being by his Majestie appointed to us. there answer was, they understood no such thing, nor found any of our Nation there, so that they hoped they had not offended; However, this their communication removed them not, but upon our complaining of their intrusion to his Majesty, order was given to his Embassadors to deal with the States, to know by what warrant any of their Subjects tooke upon them to settle within those limits by him granted to his Subjects who were royally seized of a part thereof; to which was answered, that they knew of no such thing, if there were any, it was without their authority, and that they had only had enacted the company for the affaires of the West-Indies; this answer being returned, made us to prosecute our businesse, and to resolve of the removing of those Interlopers to force them to submit to the Government of those to whom that place belonged. Thus," concludes Gorges, "you may see how many burthens I traualled under of all sides, and yet not come near my journeyes end."—Ibid., 31.

The protest made by Sir Ferdinando Gorges against the Dutch "Interlopers" resulted in an inquiry by the privy council at Whitehall, to Sir Dudley Carleton, English ambassador to The Netherlands, on Dec. 15, 1621 (q.v.). Gorges' reference to "some Hollanders that were settled in a place we call Hudson's River" is, so far as known, the earliest reference in print, in English, to a Dutch settlement on the Hudson River, and the earliest known designation, in an English work, of the river by Hudson's name. See under 1614 for earliest use of the name. See also Vol. II, Cartography, p. 93 et. seq.

The original merchants who had operated under the charter of Aug. 11, 1614, now represent to the states-general that, "having had a charter to trade exclusively to New-Netherland, discovered by them, situate from the thirty-fourth to about the fiftieth degree," no exclusive grant can properly be given to others "regarding the Trade on the Coasts, or any of the Rivers of New-Netherland," and begging that "the petitioners and other merchants of this Country" be allowed "to continue in the free trade they are pursuing there, and further [that they be granted permission] to equip some ships which they have in a sufficient state of forwardness."

This petition is made because the owners of a ship named the "Blyde Booschap" (Bootschap) (Glad Tidings), commanded by Corneelis Jacobsen [May] of Hourn, "having discovered some new Countries [between the Hudson and South Rivers] populous and fertile, abounding in all sorts of Timber and never discovered before," have asked for a grant or charter covering this territory. The petitioners, pro and con, are told to "consult together and see if they cannot agree in a friendly manner."—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 24-25.

It is to be noted that, whereas the original grant, of 1614, and the petition of 1616, included the territory from the 38th to the 45th degree, N. L., the petitioners now claim that their grant extends from the 34th to the 50th degree. As it proved impossible to reconcile the two groups of merchants, the "requested Charter" was refused, and the trade remained open to all.—Ibid., I: 25.

The "May-Flower" (Bradford does not give this name in his history; its first mention is found in his record of "The Falles of their grounds which came first our in the May-Floure, according as their lotes were cast, 1623"—Plymouth Col. Rec., XII: 4-), with the Pilgrims aboard, sails from Plymouth under a patent or charter granted by the Virginia Company on Feb. 2/12, 1620, to "John Peirce [John Pierce] and Associates, their heirs and Assignes."

We know from Bradford's journal that the charter which had been granted them in the name of John Wincoob (or Weyncop) on June 3, 1619 (Records of the Virginia Co., I: 220-28), had been finally abandoned. Although no absolute documentary proof has been found that they finally sailed under the Pierce patent, nevertheless, the available circumstantial evidence strongly supports such an assumption, which is now generally accepted. This evidence consists almost solely in the fact that Pierce's patent was "called in" at a court of the Virginia Company held on July 16, 1621, on the ground that the proposed settlement had never been made, Pierce having "taken a Patent of Sr Ferdinando Gorges and they vpon seating his Company w<sup>thin</sup> the lymite of the Northerne Plantacon as by som was supposed whereby he seemed to relinquish the benefit of the Patent hee tooke of this Company, that therefore his said patent might be called in unless it might appeare hee would bring to Plate w<sup>thin</sup> the lymite of the Southerne Colony, Hereuppon the Courte appoynted M<sup>r</sup> Roberts, M<sup>r</sup> George Smith, and M<sup>r</sup> Webb to treat with M<sup>r</sup> Peirce aboute itt and certifie at the next Courte what Answer they should receivee from him."—Records of the Virginia Co., I: 515. No further reference to the patent appears in the records. The statements contained in this minute seem clearly to refer to the "Mayflower" expedition, the Pilgrims, as we shall hereinafter see, having settled at New Plymouth, in New England, and not in the territory directly controlled by the Virginia Company, or rather by its subsidiary, the Loodon Company, which, in accordance with the second charter, of May 23, 1609 (q.v.), extended as far north as 1620 the 40th degree, or to a point just south of the mouth of the Sept. Hudson.

6-16 Although, at the time of the "Mayflower's" departure, a new and enlarged charter, within the limits of the original patent to the northern colony (40° to 45°), was under consideration, this was not granted until Nov. 3, 1620; so that the provisions of the first charter affecting this territory had never been revoked or modified, and were still in force.

In this northern territory, the only settlement which had been made was that of Popham and Gilbert, at the mouth of the Kennebec River, which had been abandoned in 1608. As the southern boundary of this colony, in accordance with the terms of the original grant, fell somewhat to the north of Boston, the country lying between this point and the Hudson constituted a sort of "No Man's Land." Cape Cod, where the Pilgrims landed, lay in this unassigned district. The Pilgrims may have had this fact in mind when they selected it as the site of their settlement, after they had been forced by the dangerous shoals and breakers off the Cape to abandon their original purpose of finding "some place about Hudsons river for their habitation."

Realizing that the selected site lay without the confines of the London Company, within whose jurisdiction their patent from the reorganized Virginia Company lay, and that in settling here they would, therefore, not be specifically subject to the control or regulations existing in the London Company's territory, nor to any other established government, they evidently thought it desirable, before landing, to bind themselves together under a "Compact," or form of government, which, as Bradford expressed it, "might be as firm as any patent, and in some respects more sure."

In taking this action, they may also have been influenced by an order of the Virginia Company, issued on Feb. 2, 1620, the very day that the patent to John Pierce and his associates was granted. This order provided that "such Captaines or leaders of Particuler Plantations that shall goe there to inhabit by vertue of their Grants and Plant themselves their Tennants and Servantes in Virginia, shall have liberty till a forme of Government be here settled for them, Associating unto them divers of the gravest and discretest[?] of their Companies, to make Orders, Ordinances and Constitutions for the better ordering and directyng of their Servants and busines Provided they be not Repugnant to their Lawes of England."—Records of the Virginia Company, I: 303.

Under the Pierce patent, and within the general jurisdiction of the Virginia Company, although outside of the boundaries of the London Company's patent, they were still possessed of certain powers of framing regulations for their own government, and in signing the "Compact" they clearly recognised and claimed this right.

Nov. 3-13 A new patent for New England is granted by the king to Sir Ferdinando Gorges, Sir Francis Popham, and "their associates and successors," forty in all, who are incorporated as "the council established at Plymouth, in the county of Devon, for the planting, ruling, and governing of New England in America." By the terms of this patent, the corporation was invested "with the absolute propriety and exclusive jurisdiction of the territories thenceforth to be known as 'New England in America,' extending from forty to forty-eight degrees of northerly latitude, 'and in length, by all the breadth aforesaid, throughout the mainland, from sea to sea.'" A qualifying clause provided that the premises intended to be granted "be not actually possessed or inhabited by any other Christian prince or estate," nor be within the bounds of Virginia.—Broadhead, op. cit., I: 95-96, citing Hazard, I: 103-18, where the patent is quoted in full.

10-20 Nathaniel Morton, in New England's Memorial (Cambridge, 1669), after relating the details of the voyage of the "Mayflower," with the Pilgrim contingent on board, records (p. 12) their arrival off Cape Cod on Nov. 10, 1620, and refers to their intended destination as follows:

"After some little deliberation had amongst themselves with the Master of the Ship, they tacked about to stand to the Southward, to finde some place about Hudsons River, (according to their first intentions) for their Habitations: But they had not sailed that Course above half a day, but they fell amongst perillous Shoales and Breakers, and they were so farre intangled therewith, as they conceived themselves in great danger; and the wind shrinking upon them withall, they resolved to bear up again for the Cape aforesaid: the next day, by Gods Providence, they got into the Cape harbour. Thus they arrived at Cape Cod, alias Cape

James, in November 1620." Cf. Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation, I: 152, which differs in some important particulars. Nov. 10-20

Then Morton, who had been the secretary of New Plymouth, adds this accusation: "Nevertheless, it is to be observed, that their putting into this place was partly by reason of a storm [Bradford, speaking of the deliberations, and of the 'stande for the southward,' remarks 'the wind and weather being faire,'] by which they were forced in, but more especially by the fraudulency and contrivance of the aforesaid Mr. Jones, the Master of the Ship: for, their Intention, as is before-noted, and his Engagement, was to Hudsons River; but some of the Dutch having notice of their intentions, and having thoughts about the same time of erecting a Plantation there likewise, they fraudulently hired the said Jones by delays while they were in England, and now under pretence of the danger of the Shoales, &c. to disappoint them in their going thither: But God out-shoots Satan oftentimes in his own Bow; for had they gone to Hudsons River as before expressed, it had proved very dangerous to them: for although it is a place farre more commodious, and the Soil more fertile, yet then abounding with a multitude of pernicious Salvages, whereby they would have been in great perill of their lives" (etc.). In the marginal note to the passage in which he charges the Dutch with fraudulently diverting the skipper of the "Mayflower," Morton adds: "Of this Plot betwixt the Dutch and Mr. Jones, I have had late and certain Intelligence."

Worthington C. Ford, commenting upon the destination of the "Mayflower," in his edition of Bradford's Hist. of Plymouth Plantation, I: 159-60, remarks: "No New England writer other than Morton mentions or suggests the incident, and it has been surmised that Thomas Willett, of the Leyden congregation, and the agent of the Plantation at Kennebeck, was the source of Morton's intelligence."

"Willett had gone to New York when it was captured by the English in 1664, and became the first mayor of the city. It is conjectured that Willett there learned of the intended 'perfidy' of Jones, and passed the information to Morton."

"As Secretary of the Colony Morton would hardly have given currency to a mere rumor or unsupported narrative. On the other hand, the claims of the Dutch in New York at the time would not be the best source of history, whether the reporter was friendly or otherwise to the conquering English. There exists no really valid reason for rejecting the story, while no entirely acceptable theory can be formed to account for its remaining so long untold."

"One piece of corroborative evidence may be cited.—Sir Joseph Williamson when preparing papers to serve as a justification of hostilities against the Dutch in New Netherland, wrote in 1663 as follows: 'Now in the year 1620 the difference formerly between Archbishop Whitgift and Mr. Cartwright, the leader of the Non-conformists, and others about church matters, was againe revived, soe that many persons removed into Holland for liberty of conscience, where afterwards being desirous to enlarge his Majesties empire in the west parts of the world, they in order thereunto, hyred a ship at Tarnere [Ter Verze] in Zealand of 500 tunns to transport themselves, beinge the number of 406 persons, to Hudson's river aforesaid, or the west eod of Longe Island, havinge bene informed they were places of incouragement, in respect of the temperature of aire, situation and conveniency for tradinge. But the Dutch which transported the said English brake faith with them most perfidiouslye, landinge them, contrary to the agreement, at their shippinge, 140 leagues from the place, N. E. in a barren Country, since called Plymouth Colonie in New England, where the Dutch havinge thus deceitfully lodged our English, they in the latter end of the same year 1621, settled a Dutch factorie in the said Hudson's River, through fraud and trechery, to the wearinge out of our English interest in that place, and contrary alsoe to their engagement given to Sir Samuel Argoll that they would come thither noe more. Soe that in pursuance of the said engagement, all they have there, both ships and goods, stands lyable to confiscation.'"—Letter of Sir Joseph Williamson, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proceedings, X: 385.

Ford continues: "It would be without profit to dissect this statement, and point out the many errors of fact contained in it, What gives it interest lies in the charge of treachery on the part of the Dutch against the Pilgrims, recorded one year before the taking of New Netherland, and in a paper prepared to justify that act. The charge, in all probability, accompanied the English

1620 Commissioners sent to take possession of New York, and by this Nov. 1620 channel reached the ears of Thomas Willett. Such a conclusion merely points to an English origin, and does not indicate the source from which Sir Joseph Williamson obtained it."

In John Poyry's (Poory's) manuscript description of Plymouth Colony, written about 1622, now preserved in the John Carter Brown Library and recently (1918) printed by Houghton, Mifflin Co., and edited by Champlin Burrage, on p. 35, in a letter from Pory to the Lord of Southampton, occurs the following passage:

"For whereas your Lordship knows, their voyage was intended for Virginia, being by letters from Sir Edwin Sandis and Mr Deputie Ferrar recommended to Sir Yardly, then gouernour, that he should giue them the best advise he could for trading in Hudsons river, whether it were by contrarieite of winds, or by the backwardnes of their maister or pilot, to make (as they thought it) too long a journey, they fell short both of the one and the other, arriving first at that statlie harbour called Cape Cod, . . . "—See Aug., 1622.

Thomas Dudley, in a letter to the Countess of Lincoln, begun at Boston on March 12, 1631, but not completed until March 28, 1631, says:

"Concerning the English that are Planted here: I find that about the Year 1620. Certain English set out from Leyden in Holland, intending their Course for Hudsons River.

"These being much Weather beaten and wearied with seeking the River, after a most tedious Voyage, Arrived at length in a small Bay, lying North-East from Cape Cod; where Landing about the Month of December, by the favour of a calm Winter, such as was never seen here since, began to Build their Dwellings in that place, which now is called New-Plymouth."—Massachusetts or The First Planters of New-England, The End and Manner of their coming thither, and Abode there: In several Epistles (Boston, 1696), 9.

1621

c.1621 Capt. John Mason, in a letter dated Apr. 2, 1632, endorsed by Secretary Coke, and probably addressed to him, says: "In y<sup>e</sup> year of o<sup>r</sup> Lord God 1621 or thereabouts certain Hollanders were upon the coast of New England trading wth y<sup>e</sup> Indians betwixt Cape Codd and Bay de la Warre. . . . The sayd Hollanders as Interlopers fell into y<sup>e</sup> middle betwixt the sayd plantations and at their returne of their voyage aforesayd, published a Mapp in y<sup>e</sup> Low Countries of y<sup>e</sup> sayd sea coaste comprehended betwixt Virginia and Cape Codd, und<sup>r</sup> y<sup>e</sup> title of New Netherlands, giving y<sup>e</sup> name of y<sup>e</sup> Prince of Aurange to y<sup>e</sup> countrie and river of Manahata, where y<sup>e</sup> Dutch are now planted, (w<sup>ch</sup> sayd countrey was many years before discovered by the Englishmen in their voyages to Virginia) and giving other Dutch names to other places to y<sup>e</sup> Eastward of y<sup>e</sup> sayd Manahata river as far as Cape Codd: all w<sup>ch</sup> had been formerly discovered and traded into diverse tymes by severall Englishmen, as may be proved. And Sr Samuel Argall Kn<sup>t</sup> wth many English planters were p<sup>r</sup>paring to goe and sitt downe in his lott of land upon y<sup>e</sup> sayd Manahata river at the same time when the Dutch intruded, w<sup>ch</sup> caused a Demurre in their pceding until King James, upon complaint of my Lord of Arundell wth Sr Ferdinando Gorges Kn<sup>t</sup> and the said Sr Samuel Argall (formerly Gov<sup>r</sup> of Virginia) and Cap<sup>t</sup> John Mason) of y<sup>e</sup> sayd Dutch Intruders in An<sup>o</sup> 1621 had, by his Ma<sup>ties</sup> order a l<sup>r</sup>e to y<sup>e</sup> Lord of Dorchester their Ambassadors at y<sup>e</sup> Hague, questioned the States of y<sup>e</sup> Low Countries for that matter. [Cf. ante, 1620, Summer.]

"Which y<sup>e</sup> Lords y<sup>e</sup> States by answer (as I take it) of their ambassador Sir Nowell Carrone did disclaime, disavowing any such act that was done by their people wth their authority: w<sup>ch</sup> my Lord of Arundell and I thinke y<sup>e</sup> Lord Baltimore (then Secretary of State) doe remember, and Sr Ferdinando Gorges and Captaine Mason can witness y<sup>e</sup> same. Nevertheless y<sup>e</sup> year following, w<sup>ch</sup> (as I take it) was 1622, the sayd Dutch under a pretended authority from y<sup>e</sup> West India Company of Holland, maintayned as they sayd by commission from y<sup>e</sup> said Prince of Aurange did return to y<sup>e</sup> foresayd river of Manahata and made plantation there, fortifying themselves there in two severall places, and have built ships there, whereof one was sent into Holland of 600 tunnes or thereabouts. And albeit they were warned by y<sup>e</sup> English plantation at New Plymouth to forbear trade and not to make any

c.1621 settlement in those partes, letting them know that they were the territories of y<sup>e</sup> King of England, yett nevertheless with proude and contumacious answers (saying they had commission to fight against such as should disturbe their settlement) they did persist to plant and trade, vileyfing of Nation to the Indians and extolling their owne people and countrey of Holland, and have made sundry good returns of commodities from thence into Holland; especially this year they have returned (as it is reported) 15000 Beaver Skynees, besides other commodities."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 16-17.

A charter is granted by the states-general to the West India Co., to take effect July 1, and to cover a period of 24 years. For a transcript of the more important provisions of this charter, see below. It was deemed necessary on June 10, 1622, and again on Feb. 11, 1623, to amplify the charter respecting the methods of subscription to the company, and concerning the salt trade.

The official Dutch text of this charter was printed originally in 1621, as a pamphlet. In the same year, an English translation appeared, also in pamphlet form. For bibliographical data, see West India Company, in the Bibliography, Vol. V. The full Dutch text of the charter, with an English translation by A. J. F. van Laer, appears in the Van Rensselaer Boesier MSS., from which, for purposes of easy reference, the essential features are here transcribed in full (translated), as follows:

"The States General of the United Netherlands to all who shall see these presents or hear them read, greeting. Be it known, that we, noticing that the prosperity of this country and the welfare of its inhabitants consist principally in navigation and trade, which from time immemorial has been carried on by this country with good fortune and great blessing with all countries and kingdoms; and desiring that the aforesaid inhabitants not only be maintained in their former navigation, commerce and trade, but also that their commerce may be increased as much as possible, especially in conformity with the treaties, alliances, conventions and covenants concerning commerce and navigation formerly made with other princes, republics and nations, which we intend shall be punctually kept and observed in all their parts; and finding by experience that without the common help, aid and means of a general company, no profitable business can be carried on, protected and maintained in the parts hereafter designated on account of the great risk from pirates, extortions and the like, which are incurred on such long and distant voyages; we, therefore, many other and different pregnant reasons and considerations also us thereunto moving, after mature deliberation of Council, and for very pressing causes, have resolved that the navigation, trade and commerce in the West Indies, Africa, and other countries hereafter designated, shall henceforth not be carried on otherwise than with the common united strength of the merchants and inhabitants of this country and that to this end there shall be established a general company which, on account of our great love for the common weal and in order to conserve the trade and welfare of the inhabitants of this country, we will maintain and strengthen with our help, favor and assistance, so far as the present state and condition of this country will in any way admit, and for that purpose furnish with a proper charter and endow with the privileges and exemptions hereafter enumerated, to wit:

"I. That for the period of twenty-four years no native or inhabitant of this country shall be permitted, except in the name of this United Company, from these United Netherlands nor even from any place outside of them, to sail to or trade with the coasts and countries of Africa, from the Tropic of Cancer to the Cape of Good Hope; nor to or with the countries of America, or the West Indies, beginning at the south end of Terra Nova, through the Straits of Magellan, le Maire, and other straits and passages situated thereabouts, to the Strait of Anjan [Bering Strait], neither on the North Sea nor on the South Sea, nor to or with any islands situated on the one side or the other, or between both; nor to or with the Australian or South Lands, extending and lying between the two meridians of the Cape of Good Hope in the east, and of the east end of New Guinea in the west, inclusive. . . . except only, that they, who before the date of this charter shall have sailed from these or other countries to any of the aforesaid coasts, shall be permitted to continue their trade till they have sold their goods and come back to this country, or otherwise until the expiration of their charter if they have been granted any before this date, and no longer. Provided that after the first of July, sixteen hundred and twenty-one, the day and time of the commencement of this charter,

1621 no one shall be permitted to send any ships or goods to the places
June comprehended in this charter even if this Company should not 3 be fully organized before that date. . . .

"II. That further the aforesaid Company, in our name and by our authority, within the limits hereinbefore set forth, shall have power to make contracts, leagues and alliances with the princes and natives of the countries therein comprised also to build any fortresses and strongholds there; to appoint, transfer, discharge and replace governors, troops and officers of justice and for other necessary services, for the preservation of the places, the maintenance of good order, police and justice, in general for the furtherance of trade, as according to circumstances they shall see fit; moreover, they may promote the settlement of fertile and uninhabited districts, and do all that the service of this country and the profit and increase of trade shall require. And the [directors] of the Company shall regularly communicate to us and transmit such contracts and alliances as they shall have made with the aforesaid princes and nations, likewise [report] the situation of the fortresses, strongholds and settlements by them begun.

"III. Provided that when they have chosen a governor general and prepared instructions for him, the same must be approved, and the commission given by us; and further, that such governor general, as also other vice governors, commanders and officers, shall be obliged to take the oath of allegiance to us and also to the Company.

"XI. And in order that this Company may have a good government, to the greatest profit and satisfaction of all the participants, we have ordained that the said government shall be vested in five Chambers of directors—one at Amsterdam which shall have the management of four ninths; one Chamber in Zealand, of two ninths; one Chamber on the Maze, of one ninth; one Chamber in the Noorder-quarter, of one ninth; and the fifth Chamber in Friesland together with Stadt ende Landen [province of Groningen], also of one ninth—upon the conditions set forth in the register of our resolutions and the agreement drawn up respecting it. And the provinces in which there are no Chambers shall be accommodated with as many directors, divided among the respective Chambers, as the number of hundred thousand guilders which they shall furnish to the Company.

"XII. That the Chamber of Amsterdam, shall consist of twenty directors; the Chamber of Zealand of twelve; the Chambers of the Maze and of the Noorder-quarter each of fourteen; and the Chamber of Friesland together with the Stadt ende Landen also of fourteen directors. . . .

"XVIII. That so often as it shall be necessary to have a general Assembly of the aforesaid Chambers, it shall be by Nineteen persons, of whom eight shall come from the Chamber of Amsterdam, four from Zealand, two from the Maze, two from the Noorder-quarter, two from Friesland and Stadt ende Landen; provided, that the nineteenth person, or so many more as we shall at any time think fit, shall be deputed by us for the purpose of helping to direct the affairs of the Company in the aforesaid Assembly.

"XIX. By which general Assembly of the aforesaid Chambers, all matters relating to this Company shall be considered and decided; provided, that in matters of war, our approbation of their resolution shall be asked.

"XX. The aforesaid general Assembly being summoned, it shall meet, whenever they are about to fit out, to resolve how many ships they shall send to each place for the account of the Company in general, and no individual Chamber shall be permitted to undertake anything not included in the aforesaid common resolution but [all] shall be bound to carry it into effect and to execute it. . . .

"XXI. The said general Assembly shall be held the first six years in the city of Amsterdam, and the following two years in Zealand; and so on alternately in the aforesaid two places.

"XXIII. And if it should happen that in the aforesaid general Assembly any weighty matter came before them, wherein they could not agree, or even in which one side should scruple to impose its decision on the other, the same shall be left to our decision; and whatever shall be determined upon shall be followed and carried into execution.

"XXV. The ships returning from a voyage shall come to the place they sailed from; and if, by stress of wind and weather, the vessels which sailed out from one district shall arrive in another—as those from Amsterdam or the Noorder-quarter in Zealand or the Maze; or from Zealand in Holland; or those from Friesland, with Stadt ende Landen, in another district—each Chamber shall nevertheless retain the direction and management of the ships and goods it sent out and be allowed to send and transport the goods to the places whence the vessels sailed, either in the same or other vessels. . . .

"XXXVII. Whenever any ship shall return from a voyage, the admirals or commanders of the fleets, ship or ships shall be obliged to come and report to us the success of the voyage within ten days after their arrival and shall make out and deliver a report in writing, if the case requires it.

"XXXIX. We have, moreover, promised, and do promise, that we will maintain and defend this Company against every person in [their rights of] free navigation and trade. . . .

"XLV. . . . We further promise that we will maintain and uphold the Company in the contents of this our charter, by all treaties of peace, alliances and covenants with the neighboring princes, kingdoms and countries, without suffering anything to be done or transacted that might tend to diminish its value. . . .
—From a translation by A. J. F. van Laer of the original charter in Van Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., 87-115.

Sir Dudley Carleton writes to Secretary Calvert from the Hague (extract): "Here hath been with me of late a certain Walloon [Jesse de Forest—see 1623, July 16], an Inhabitant of Leyden, in the name of divers Families, Men of all Trades & Occupations, who desire to go into Virginia, & there to live in the same condition, as others of his Majesty's Subjects, but in a Town or incorporation by themselves; which being a matter of some consideration, I required of him his demands in writing, with the Signature of such as were to bear part therein: both which I send your Honor herewith [i. e., the well-known "Round Robin" document—see A Walloon Family in America, by Mrs. Robert W. de Forest, Vol. I.]; & howsoever the demands are extravagant in some points, yet if his Majesty like of their going thither, they may be made more capable of the nature of the Plantation, to which purpose they will send one (upon the first word they shall have from me of his Majesty's pleasure) expressly to treat with our Company in England. The States [General] have by public Placart authorised a West-India Company (as I formerly advertised your Honor) to which Officers are appointed, & they have made their publications in print for the admitting of Adventurers; but they come in very slowly, & no Man can see where the Money for this purpose will be raised, yet do great effects many times succeed of less beginnings. I send your Honor herewith a translation [sic] of the States octroy for that Company."—Sir Dudley Carleton's Letters and Despatches, 1620-1622, being Vol. 23 of the Harwich Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library. See also Baird, Huguenot Emig. to America, I: 158-63.

The reply of the directors of the Virginia Co. was not favourable, and De Forest therefore presented his petition, in April, 1622, to the states of Holland and West Friesland, who referred the matter to the directors of the West India Co., still in process of formation. —See April 21, 1622. The eventual result of this petition was that De Forest and the other pres de familles sailed for Dutch Guiana, in the "Pigeon," on July 16, 1623 (q. v.).

Traders to Virginia (New Netherland) petition the states-general "to be allowed to send out some ships to bring their returns thence to this Country, as the trade and commerce thither are not to be lost before the West India Company be formed and ready." The petition is granted, on condition that the traders return to Holland before July 1, 1622.—N. F. Col. Docs., I: 25. On Sept. 15, a similar request was granted to Henrick Elkens, Hans Jooris Houten, and Adriaen Janssen Engel, "cum sociis," merchants in Amsterdam, to send a vessel called the "White Dove," Willem Janssen Houten, master, to "New Virginia," also upon condition that they return by July 1, 1622.—Ibid., I: 26. On Sept. 24, still another similar petition was granted upon the same terms to Dierck Volckertse, Doctor Verus (Velius?), and Doctor Carbasius, of Hoorn, Pieter Nannix of Medenblik, and Cornelis Volckertse and Pieter Dirxzen Schoders.—Ibid., I: 26. On Sept. 28, other merchants, 1621 including Petrus Plancius, "minister of the Holy Word," and Claes Sept. Jacobz. Harincarspel, "Councillor and ancient Schepen of the city 13 of Amsterdam," were permitted to send two vessels, one to New Netherland, "and the other to the aforesaid New River, . . . to trade away and dispose of their old stock which they have there, and afterwards to bring back into this country, their goods, cargoes, clerks and seamen, on condition that they must be home with their ships and goods before the first of July, 1622."—Ibid., I: 27.

On June 18, 1622, Harincarspel, heir of Petrus Plancius, petitioned for an extension of six months "to bring over the returns from New Netherland," but the decision was postponed.—Ibid., I: 28. The states-general seem to have granted no further requests of private traders to sail to New Netherland.

Dec. In a letter addressed to Sir Dudley Carleton, English ambassador 15-25 to The Netherlands, sent on this day by the privy council at Whitehall, England, it is stated that, "Whereas, his Maj<sup>ties</sup> Subjects have many yeares since taken possession of the whole precinct, and inhabited some parts of the North of Virginia (by us called New-England) of all which countries His Maj<sup>ties</sup> hath in like manner, some yeares since by Patent granted the quiet and full possession unto particular persons, Nevertheless we understand that the yeare past the Hollanders have entered upon some parte thereof, and have left a Colonie and given new names to the severall parts appertaining to that part of the Countrey, and are now in readinesse to send for their supply six or eight shippes, whereof His Maj<sup>ties</sup> being advertised, we have received his royall commandment to signifie his pleasure that you should represent these things unto the States General in his Maj<sup>ties</sup> name (who jure primae occupationis hath good and sufficient title to those parts) and require of them that as well those shippes as their further prosecution of that plantation, may be presently stayed. . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 6.

On Feb. 5, 1622, Sir Dudley Carleton replied, concerning the planting of a Dutch colony, that he had investigated the matter fully, and "could not fynd eyther by such merchants w<sup>ch</sup> whom I have acquaintance at Amsterdam, or by the Prince of Orange & some of the States of whom I made enquire, any more in the matter, but that aboute fower or five yeares since two particular companies of Amsterdam merchants, began a trade into those parts betwixt 40 and 45 degrees, to w<sup>ch</sup> after their manner they gave their own names of New Netherlands a south & a north sea, a Texel, a Viheland, & the like; whither they have ever since continued to send shippes of 30 and 40 lasts at the most to fetch furs, w<sup>ch</sup> is all their trade; for the providing of w<sup>ch</sup> they have certain factors there continually resident trading wth savages, and at this present time there is a ship at Amsterdam bound for those parts; but I cannot learne of anie Colonie eyther already planted there by these people, or so much as intended; & I have this further reason to believe there is none, because w<sup>ch</sup> in these few months [see July 19, 1621] divers inhabitants of this country to a considerable number of families have bene senters unto me, to procure them a place of habitacion amongst his Maj<sup>ties</sup> subjects in those parts; w<sup>ch</sup> by his Maj<sup>ties</sup> order was made known to the Director<sup>s</sup> of the plantacion, and yf these countrey men were in any such way themselves, there is small apparence they would desire to mingle wth strangers & be subject to their government. . . ."—Ibid., III: 7-8. ## 1622

— The earliest known English reference in print to the Dutch on the Hudson, and the earliest known printed designation of the river by Hudson's name, is contained in A Briefe Relation of the Discovery and Plantation of New England, printed in London in this year. See 1620.

— In this year also, Mouris' Relation was published in London. This contains the first printed account of the voyage of the "Mayflower," and of the landing of the Pilgrims. It covers the period from Sept., 1620, to Dec. 11, 1621. It was probably written by Bradford and Winslow, although the name "Mourit" is subscribed to the preface.—Church Catalogue, No. 393. To the same year belong A Briefe Relation . . . (see above), Church Catalogue, No. 394; and Cushman's Sermon, Church Catalogue, No. 391.

— On Blaeu's globe of this year, the insularity of Manhattan Island appears for the first time on a printed and dated map. See Cartography, II: 84, and C. Pl. 30, Vol. II.

In this year, the Bishop of London raised £1,000 toward the college in Virginia.—Fiske, Old Virginia and her Neighbours, I: 234-35. See also June 25, 1618, and May 26, 1619.

— The first edition of the well-known poem, Bewijz vande waren Gadsdienst (Proof of the true Religion), written by Hugo Grotius while imprisoned in the castle of Loevestein, was published in this year. Some lines of this poem give a description of America, in which we find the words:

"Waeren een schoon Landout met Florida beledt Werd met den steent naem van Nederlandt bekent."

This is the earliest book in which this name is found.

Jan. Sir Dudley Carleton sends a protest to the states-general against 30- Feb. any Dutch settlement in the lands to which the king of England has already given a patent, he "having incontestably the right to the said country." The Dutch are warned not to send the ships "already equipped for said voyage," and to stop "the ulterior prosecution of said plantation."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 8. See Dec. 15, 1621, and March 16, 1622.

Mar. "Sir Carleton, Ambassador from the King of Great Britain, recommended that their High Mightinesses would adopt a resolution on his proposition relating to Virginia. It is, therefore, resolved to request Burgomaster Pauw that he would be pleased to write to the partners in the trade to the Island of New Netherland, to the effect that their High Mightinesses desire to be informed of the state of the matter contained in the aforesaid proposition."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 27. See Feb. 9, 1622.

Apr. The directors of the West India Company, having examined 21 the paper relative to the families to go to the West Indies, approve of the plan, but think it better to postpone action until "the Directors should be formed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 28. See July 19, 1621. The families who were thus planning to settle in the "West Indies"—a term then used to designate not only the islands now known as the West Indies but North and South America as well—were the Walloons, under Jesse de Forest. Their sailing was postponed for over a year, but on July 16, 1622, eleven "pères de familles," including Jesse de Forest and Jehan Mousnier de la Montagne, "estudiant en médecine," left for the "Wild Coast" (Guiana), in the "Pigeon," it being deemed inadvisable by the directors of the W. I. Co. to risk the lives of women and children until a site for a colony had been selected and some preparation made to safeguard the families. Accompanying the "Pigeon" party, went the "Mackerel," bound for New Netherland. No record exists of the name of the captain, nor of the number or character of the passengers on the "Mackerel," except that we know from Wassenaar that the "worthy Daniel Van Kriedebeck" went along as supercargo, and that she arrived at the Hudson River on Dec. 12, 1623 (q. v.).—De Forest, A Walloon Family in Am., II: 191 et seq., 205; Wassenaar, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 75, 76.

27 Ambassador Carleton having "recommended that a resolution be passed on the communication he had made on the part of his Majesty, regarding the Island of Virginia," the states-general resolves "that the said communication shall be examined, together with what has been published in print at Amsterdam on this subject."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 28.

Aug. At its meeting on Nov. 21, 1621, the Virginia Co. granted a commission for fishing and trading to Capt. Thomas Jones, master of the "Discovery," a vessel of 60 tons. Jones reached Jamestown in April, and on his return to England visited New Plymouth in August. Bradford, in his History, records his arrival, and that of "a gentleman by name Mr. John Pory; he had been secretarie in Virginia, and was now going home passenger in this ship." Speaking of Jones and the "Discovery," he says "They were set out by some marchants to discover all the harbors betweene this and Virginia, and the shoudls of Cap-Cod, and to trade along the coast where they could."—Bradford, History of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), I: 276-78.

John Porey wrote a journal, which was recently acquired by the John Carter Brown Library. This journal was published in 1918, with an introduction and notes by Champlin Burrage. From Part III of this book, the following "copy of a part of Mr Porey's Letter to the Governour of Virginia" is taken:

" . . . Now whether there be anie cod or noe to the south

1622 of the place (as the Companie desire to be informed), although Aug. M<sup>r</sup> Vengham, a man of experience in those partes, do seeme to — doubt, yet a Flemmish pilot, who is to conduct Captaine Agoll his pinnace into Hudsons river, putteth downe in his plot, a place some 15 leagues to the west of Elizabeths Iland which he calleth Cod Iland. And by the way that you may know how stronghe the Flemmings make title from 40 to 44 degrees, they call Hudson his river Prince Maurice his river; Cape-Cod the Stakes Hookes; Sagadahoc or thereabouts Prince Henricks river and the great bay (wherein Port-Royall taken by Captaine Agroll from the French was seated), Grave Williams Bay." And in the same place they confine Virginia within "the Cape Henrie & Charles, as if it had no further extension both north & south. Also to the south of Hudsons River they name the countrie Apuahaacke."

10-20 Sir Ferdinando Gorges and John Mason obtain a patent for lands between the Merrimac and Kennebec Rivers, called Laconia.
 Within this patent, which included the present states of New Hampshire and Maine, settlements were made, in 1623, on the sites of Dover and Portsmouth.—Col. of State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1660, 32; Belknap, Hist. of New Hampshire, I: 4-5.

It is alleged, evidently through an error, that New Netherland in this year became a political entity, was formally constituted a "Province," and formally granted the armorial rights of a county. The error has descended from Dr. O'Callaghan who, in Doc.
Hist. N. Y., IV: 1 (40 ed.), presents an item on the "Seal of New Netherland" and a plate of a "Seal of New Netherland 1623 to 1664." Copied from an impression in the Office of the Secretary of State." In his account of this plate, O'Callaghan says: "This is the first public seal of the Province, and is thus described: Argent, a Beaver, proper Crest, a Coronet; Legend, Sigillvm. Novi.
Belgi. In a paper by Van der Donck, entitled, "Further observations on the Petition of the Commonalty of New Netherland," it is stated that New Netherland was called a Province, because it was invested by their High Mightinesses with the arms of an Earl.
 The engraving is copied from an impression of the seal in the office of the Secretary of State." His footnote reference shows that the seal he copied was found in the first volume of the series known as Land Papers. There is, however, no very early document in this volume with a seal of New Netherland. It is evident that an impression of a seal on a late document of the Dutch period was used for the plate, and that the date 1623 was assumed here, as also in his Hist. N. Neth., I: 99, because he had found in a volume of transcripts, known as Holland Documents, IV: 39, the attribution cited by him as by Van der Donck. The transcript was one of a series procured in Holland by J. Romeyn Brothhead. Later, the series was printed as Vols. I and II of N. Y. Col. Docs., where, in I: 262, the statement attributed to Van der Donck appears as the first annotation to the "Additional Observations" filed with the states-general by the petitioners representing the commonalty of New Netherland. The additions were signed by the "Eleven Men," July 26, 1649. In explanation of the name "Province," the annotation says: "It is called a Province because it was invested, by their High Mightinesses, with the Arms of an Earl."
 Although nowhere else in the records has a reference to the earldom or county been found, it is possible that the reference implies an expressed intention on the part of the states-general to constitute New Netherland a province of equal standing with the seven home provinces forming the Dutch Union, which provinces, having originally been countyships, were entitled to bear the arms of a count.

No seal is extant of 1623, as alleged. Not even in Holland was a province always in coordinate relations a county. The explanation is perhaps found in the fact that a seal was adopted by the directors of the West India Co. in 1630 (see Dec. 28, 1630, and Frontispiece, Vol. IV), which is surmounted by a coronet. When the petitioners of 1649 sought the support of the states-general, they endeavoured to make their appeal rest upon convincing grounds, not without exaggeration, in this case as in others. The statements of O'Callaghan have been accepted by later writers, sometimes with expanded interpretations, but never with a grain of doubt as to their accuracy. For example, see Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 41. For further data regarding countyship, see Dec. 28, 1630.

"Into New Netherland, and upon both these rivers [the North and South Rivers] . . . several colonies have been sent by the Directors of the Chartered West India Company, from the very commencement of that company, to wit, from the year 1623, in order to continue the possession of those quarters, and to maintain the trade in peltries."—De Laet, "Nieuwe Wereldt" (1630 ed.), in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 53-54.

"At the same time that the forts were laid out on the North and Fresh rivers, since the year 1623, Fort Nassau was erected upon this river, which, in common parlance, is called the South River.
 It was the first of the four, and was built with the same object and design as all the others. . . ."—From the Representation, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 313.

In a memorial addressed Nov. 25, 1623, by K. Van Rensselaer to the W. I. Co. (q. v. in Van Rensselaer-Bowier MSS., 235), reference is made to the fact that "sundry colonists, as early as 1623, had been conveyed thither [New Netherland] with instructions to dwell there as free persons and to carry on trade, principally in the furs abounding in that country."

In this year, the first collected edition of Shakespeare's plays was published, in London.

It has been stated that about this year a blockhouse was erected on Manhattan Island, on the site where Fort Amsterdam was later built.—Moulton, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 167; Innes, New Amsterdam and Its People, 151-52; etc. There is no valid basis for this assumption. Innes makes the statement, but does not assign a date. Moulton is very often untrustworthy. In this case he refers to unverifiable tradition and to Lambrechtsen's Korte Beschrijving (1818); but Lambrechtsen bases his statement upon De Laet's Nieuwe Wereldt (1630), and De Laet plainly refers to Fort Orange (Albany), built in 1624. The references of De Laet to "another fort of greater importance at the mouth of the same North River, upon an island which they call Manhattes or Manhatans Island," clearly relates to the fort staked out in 1626, when the purchase of the island was made by Minuit.—Jameson, Nar.
N. Neth., 54; cf. also p. 47, in relation to the earlier Fort Nassau, on Castle Island; and 1624, for building and settlement of Fort Orange.

"The governor [of New Plymouth] also, with Hobamak and others, go to Manomet [in Buzzard's Bay], a town near twenty miles south of Plymouth . . . ; either the Dutch or French or both used to come."—Prince, N. Eng. Chron., 208. Jan.

"While the captain was at Manomet, news comes to Plymouth that Massasoit is like to die, and that a Dutch ship is driven ashore before his house so high that she could not be got off till the tides increase."—Prince, N. Eng. Chron., 211. Mar.

According to the second statement of Catalina Trico, she arrived in New Amsterdam at about this time, on the ship "Unity." For a discussion of her two statements, and conclusions therefrom, see 1624 (May). May?

In the spring of this year, the first settlement in New Hampshire was made, by David Thomson at Little Harbor, on the south side of the mouth of the Piscataqua River.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 326, 366, and authorities there cited.

In the month of June, Francis West arrived at Plymouth in New England, with a "commission to be admiral of New England, to restrain interlopers and such fishing ships as came to fish and trade without a license from the Council of New England." Finding he could accomplish nothing in this matter, West went to Virginia. He returned to New England in August and probably joined Robert Gorges.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III:
 304, and authorities there cited. June

Toward the end of June, but evidently before the 21st, "The Directors of the West India Company, finding that the inhabitants of these lands [Netherlands], by order of the Lords States, have left the coasts of the West Indies, in order to maintain the continuity of trade, send three ships out of the country: The Orange Tree, the Griffon, and the Love, in the hope of securing the first advantages for the Company [the organization of] which is not yet consummated. [This may refer to the fact that the subscriptions had not yet been completed.—See June 21, article IX.] The Lord give them happiness and good fortune, whose glory all serves."— Wassenaer, Historisch Verhael, part v, fol. 102, (translated). These ships sailed to the West Indies and Buenos Aires, as we know from subsequent entries by Wassenaer, who records the return of the "Grypende Arent" in December, 1623, of the "Liefde" in January, 1624, and "Oranje Boom" in March, 1624. In marginal notes, Wassenaer states that these were, respectively, the first, second, and third ships sent out by the West India Company. It is clear 1623 from the above facts that this expedition did not visit New Netherland.

At last, after numerous "conferences, communications and deliberations," extending over a period of two years, the directors and chief participants of the Chartered West India Company now adopt certain articles of agreement, which are finally approved by the states-general.

The 9th article provides that subscriptions to the company must all be in by the first day "after the last of October," and that within eight days thereafter a copy of the subscription-list to every chamber must be sent to the other chambers, "provided, that the equipment already begun shall continue for the use of the Company, and that those who have furnished money in advance of others, or shall yet furnish it, shall receive interest thereon at the discretion of the Nineteen." The organization of the West India Co. is now complete, and it is ready to prosecute with energy the objects of its incorporation. The agreement, which was made between the directors and the chief participants of the West India Company, reads (translated) as follows:

"Agreement made between the directors and the chief participants of the West India Company, with the approval of the High and Mighty Lords the States General. Dated June 21, 1623.

"The States General of the United Netherlands, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Be it known, that whereas, in a memorial directed to us by certain deputies of the chief participants of the chartered West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam, setting forth that they presented themselves several times before the Assembly of the directors and also held a number of meetings with the committee appointed by them to the end that in due time proper rules and regulations might be adopted and established to the satisfaction of the good participants and that the business might the better and with the more profit be set in motion as soon as possible and subsequently be brought into proper operation, our approbation was requested of several articles presented to us for that purpose, either in the way of an amplification of their charter or else by framing an order for the aforesaid Chamber of Amsterdam or in such manner as we should find advisable; and whereas, before adopting any resolution thereupon, we thought fit, to send a copy of the articles to the respective Chambers of the West India Company, that they might carefully examine them, confer with the chief participants and send to us deputies from themselves, as well as from the chief participants, fully empowered and authorized, for this purpose and whatever might serve to promote so necessary a business, to meet in mutual conference and if possible to come to final agreement, subject to our approval; and whereas these deputies of the respective Chambers, directors and chief participants, thereupon came here in proper number and, in the presence and on the suggestion and persuasion of our delegates, after the holding of several conferences, communications and deliberations, finally, as managers, directors and chief participants, without prejudice to the provinces and respective cities, for promoting the West India business mutually agreed upon the following articles [the most important parts of which, only, are here given]:

"I. That no alteration, extension or interpretation of the charter or acts depending thereon shall be sought by the directors or by the chief participants or any others, except after previous meeting, discussion and the approval of a majority of the directors and chief participants who shall be present at the meeting. . . .

"IV. That all accounts mentioned in the fifteenth article of the charter shall be rendered in business form to the committee to be nominated by the chief participants, and admitted under oath, within the time mentioned in the said fifteenth article, which committee shall make report thereof, only in gross to the other chief participants. But the said committee shall be bound by oath not to divulge, but to keep everything secret which the directors must keep secret. They shall moreover during the time of two years be subject to the prohibition in regard to buying or selling placed upon the directors by the thirty-first article of the charter.

"VII. . . . And that the other Chambers also may know of the business transacted by the said Assembly, the associate member from the Chamber of Amsterdam shall inform the chief participants of the Noorderkwartier and Stadt ende Landen and the associate member from the Chamber of Zealand those of the Mast of the business of the aforesaid Assembly, as far as it shall be communicable. June

"IX. Whereas, in order to satisfy everyone, it is necessary that the time for subscribing and contributing to this Company shall be extended further, for the satisfaction of our own inhabitants as well as of foreigners, therefore, be the aforesaid subscriptions extended for inhabitants to the last of August, and for foreigners to the last of October next, both new style, and the fact made known by posting of notices; after that date, no person may be received or admitted, but every Chamber must close its subscription lists the first day after the last of October, and eight days thereafter send a copy to each of the others; provided, that the equipment already begun shall continue for the use of the Company, and that those who have furnished money in advance of others, or shall furnish it, shall receive interest thereon at the discretion of the Nineteen.

"X. And as to the general accounting, mentioned in article sixteen of the charter, and the changing of a third part of the directors in article fourteen, to maintain good order and a general basis in all the Chambers, it is deemed necessary that the said general accounting be made (six years from the date of granting the charter, beginning the third of June 1621, new style) according to mercantile custom in public, in the presence of the aforesaid committee of the chief participants of the respective Chambers, and so on regularly every six years a like general accounting. . . . And the first change of a third part of the directors shall take place six years after the ninth of June this year 1623, and so on regularly every two years agreeable to the charter. [The copy of the Agreement in the introduction to De Laet's Historie ofte Laetlijck Verhaal has the third of June this year 1623, which is evidently the date intended.]

"Therefore having examined and considered the foregoing [12] articles and being desirous of promoting unity and concord between the directors and chief participants as well as the advancement of the West India Company, we have, with the advice of the Prince of Orange, thought fit to agree to and approve of, and do hereby agree to and approve the same and demand that they with the articles of the charter shall be strictly followed and observed by the directors, participants and every person concerned therein, in the same manner as if they were inserted in the charter; for we find this to be for the best interests of the West-India Company.

"Given under our great seal, paraph and the signature of our secretary, at the Hague, the twenty-first of June, sixteen hundred and twenty-three."—Van Rensselaer Bewier MSS. (translated by A. J. F. van Laer), 127-35.

Jameson, in Nar. N. Neth., comments upon the formation and purposes of the West India Co. as follows: "The chief event of New Netherland history, in the period between the voyages of Block and the publication of Wassenaar's first narrative, was the incorporation by the States General of the West India Company, June 3, 1621, under whose control New Netherland remained from that time to the English conquest in 1664. Willem Usselinx, the founder of that company, . . . had been for thirty years agitating the formation of a West India Company which might repeat in the western world the achievements and prosperity of the Dutch East India Company, and might also play a more warlike part by attacking the King of Spain in his own colonial dominions. Party dissensions in the Dutch republic had hindered the promotion of the project, and the Twelve Years' Truce had stopped it for a time; but with the overthrow of Oldenbarneveld and the resumption of war with Spain it was revived, and the company was chartered.

"The 'Chartered West India Company' was given a monopoly of trade between Dutch ports and the west coast of Africa and all the coasts of America. Within these ample limits it could form alliances with active princes and tribes, appoint and discharge governors and other officers, administer justice and promote trade and colonization. Under the superior control of the States General, its government was vested in five federated chambers or boards of managers, the chief one at Amsterdam, others representing the investors of Zealand, of the towns on the Maas, of North Holland and of the northern provinces of Friesland and Groningen. General executive powers were vested in the College of the Nineteen; and the government promised aid and protection. New Netherland was not specifically mentioned, and in all colonies the position and rights of

and commerce. Throughout all the earlier part of the company's 21 history, its interest in New Netherland was far less than in the conquest of Brazil from Spain, the maintenance of Brazil as a Dutch colony, and the war against the Portuguese for its retention, ending with its loss in 1654.

"It was two years from the granting of the charter (June, 1621-June, 1623) before the West India Company had perfected its internal organization and become ready to prosecute with energy the objects of its incorporation. Meanwhile voyages of private adventurers had continued, the Pilgrims had made their settlement permanent at Plymouth, and the English government had begun the long series of diplomatic attacks upon the Dutch title to New Netherland which ended in the English conquest of 1664."—*Nar.
N.Neth.*, 64-66.

16 The yacht "Mackerel," bound for New Netherland, sails from the Texel in company with the "Pigeon," which carries Jesse de Forest and his band of Walloons, destined for the Amazon (see July 19, 1621). The vessels are to accompany each other "as far as the Amazons." On Sept. 14, however, they parted company near the Madeira Islands, in 31° 54' N. L., the "Mackerel" taking her course towards New Netherland.—*Journal du voyage . . .
pour visiter la coste de Gujane* (Sloane MS. 179b, in British Museum) translated in Mrs. Robert W. de Forest's A Walloon Family in America, II: 191, 195, 205.

The "Mackerel" did not arrive in New Netherland until Dec.
12, which "was indeed somewhat late, but it wasted time in the savage islands, to catch a fish [a Spanish prize], and did not catch it, so ran the luck. The worthy Daniel van Kriekbebeck, for brevity called Beek, was supercargo on it, and so did his duty that he was thanked." (Mr. Van Laer thinks that this statement is ironical, and means that he was discharged.) The "Mackerel" remained in the river (probably near Castle Island) during the winter of 1623-4, and was still in the river in the spring of the latter year when skipper May arrived with the Walloons off Manhattan Island. See April 1624.—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhael in Jameson's, Nar. N.Neth., 76. Wassenauer gives the date of sailing of the "Mackerel" as June 16, but in the Journal of Jesse de Forest both the "Pigeon" and the "Mackerel" are recorded as finally sailing from the Texel at two o'clock on the afternoon of July 16 (perhaps June 16 was the day on which the latter left Amsterdam). The "Pigeon" had left Amsterdam on the first of the month, a few days only after the "Orange Tree," "Eagle" ("Griffon"), and "Love," which, as "the fleet fitted out for Guinea," the author of the Journal further states that it was the intention that the "Pigeon" should sail in company with this fleet, but that on account of a few hours delay caused by a mishap to the "Mackerel," they were left behind.

Aug. or Sept. In August or September of this year, Robert Gorges arrived in Massachusetts Bay with passengers and families. He decided to settle at Wessagusset, but remained only a short time; his colonists dispersed, some returning to England and some going to Virginia.
—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 304, and authorities
there cited.

Nov. 3 At a session of the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Company "there was heard also Adriaen Jorisz. Thienpont, skipper of Mr. Coerten [Pieter Boudaen, director of the W. I. Co., chamber of Zealand, for Middelburgh], having been in the Virginis [New Netherland] and declaring they still have there in the rio de Montagne [Hudson R.] some goods, 2 sloops and people. Requests therefore that they may have permission to make ready a yacht to trade their merchandise and bring home their people (volck).
Whereupon, deliberation being had, it is resolved that those who have any goods or merchandise left there shall be dealt with fairly, in the same way as shall be done with those on the Gold Coast, for which a committee has been appointed to draft an order, with the advice of the Commander.

"As to bringing home the people, it is thought necessary to send a ship to the Virginias, which shall be equipped by the Chamber of Amsterdam with the necessary cargo to continue the trade, for which purpose they may also take with them 5 or 6 families of the colonists (v off vj Familien vande Colonien), in order to make a beginning of settlement there and on that occasion bring back here the goods secured in return for the aforesaid merchandise and the people."—Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, item 45, trans. by A. J. F.

van Laer. See also Jessurun, Kiliaen van Rensselaer, app. 1.

If the theory developed under 1626 (q.v.), that the "Nieu Verdriet" was in reality identical with the "Nieu Nederlandt," or rather that the former name is merely a misreading of the latter in the Muller catalogue description of Van Rappard Document A, the only place where it is known to appear, proved to be erroneous, the natural conclusion would follow that, as a direct result of this resolution, the "Nieu Verdriet" sailed about March 30, 1624 (Van Rappard Doc. A), preceded early in the same month by the "Nieu Nederlandt."—See March, 1624.

This document, described for the first time in Vol. II of this work, goes far to corroborate the story of Catalina Trico that she came to New Netherland in 1624, under "Governor Ariso Jorissen" (Tienpont), or, as the later deposition reads, "with a Ship called ye Unity, whereof was Commander Arico Jorise," although she was probably mistaken in giving the "Unity" as the name of the ship on which she sailed.—See 1623-4. Further corroboration of at least a part of her account is contained in a report dated Dec.
15, 1644 (q.v.), on the condition of New Netherland. In this report occur the following statement: "In the years 1622 and 1623 [probably an error for 1623 and 1624], the West India Company took possession, by virtue of their charter of the said country, and conveyed thither, in their ship, the New Netherland, divers Colonists under the direction of Cornelis Jacobsz. Mey, and Adriaen Jorisz.
Tienpont [Tienpont] . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 149.

Again, in the Representation of N.Neth. (1649), it is stated that:
"After their High Mightinesses, the Lords States General, were pleased, in the year XVI<sup>e</sup> and twenty-two [1621], to include this Province within the Charter of the West India Company, the latter considered it necessary to take complete possession of this naturally beautiful and noble Province; this, indeed, did follow in course of time, but according as circumstances permitted, as in all beginnings; for since the year of our Lord XVI<sup>e</sup> and twenty-three, four forts have been built there by order of the Lords Majors, one in the south point of Manhattan island, at the junction of the East and North rivers, and named New Amsterdam, where the staple right of New Netherland is designed to be. Another, called Orange, is in the Colonie Rensselaerswyck, thirty-six leagues higher up on the west side of the last named river, three leagues below the Kahoos, or Great falls of the Mohawk kill; but there never has been, as yet, any difference with foreigners about that (North) river. On the South river stands fort Nassou, and on the Fresh river, the Good Hope. In these four forts there has always been some garrison from the beginning to the present time, though just now they are all in a very poor condition, both as regards themselves and the garrison.

"These forts, as well north and south, were located not only to close and command the said rivers, but as far as property by occupation extended, to possess as well all the lands comprehended between them as round about them, and on the opposite side of the river; to declare them the Hon. Company's own, and to guard them against all nations whether foreign or indigenous, that would attempt to seize the same against its will and consent. . . .

"All the islands, bays, harbors, rivers, kills and places, even a great way on the other side of New Holland or Cape Cod have Dutch names, which were given them, long before they had any others, by our Dutch navigators and traders when they first began to discover and trade to those parts. . . ."—Ibid., I: 283-85.

In the Deduction also, one of the documents submitted to the states-general in 1660 (q.v.), concerning the boundaries of New Netherland, the statement is made that the W. I. Co. had built,
"since the year 1623, four forts, to wit: two on the North river, namely Amsterdam and Orange; one on the South river, called Nassau, and the last on the Fresh river, called The Hope. From the beginning, a garrison has been always stationed and maintained in all these forts. . . ."—Ibid., II: 433. It should be noted that the Representation and the Deduction make the same error in giving 1622 as the date of incorporation of the West India Co., and that both are, in other respects, inaccurate.

In his letter to Samuel Blommert, possibly written in the autumn of 1627, but more probably in the autumn of 1628 (q.v.), 1623
1624
Nov. Isacker de Rasière says: "The six farms, four of which lie along the River Hellgate, stretching to the south side of the island, have at 1623 least 60 morgens of land ready to be sown with winter seed, which or at the most will have been ploughed eight times." As it was the cus-1624 tom to plant twice yearly—in May and September—this may indicate Nov. that the colonists had planted eight seasons (twice in 1627, twice in 1626, twice in 1625, and twice in 1624), which, in itself, were the letter written in 1627, would constitute pretty good proof that the settlement was established as early as 1623, as it would have taken some time to clear so large an amount of ground and prepare it for cultivation. If, however, the letter was written in 1628, which is more probable (see Autumn, 1628), the argument would, of course, suggest 1624 as the year of settlement.

1624

- In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 25,569 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in two ships to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhael, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 4,000 beavers and 700 otters, valued at 27,125 guilders.—Ibid., 29.
- In this year, the name Hudson River ("Hudsons R") appears for the first time on a map. This map, which was engraved by A. Goos, is found in Athanasius Inga, West-Indische Spiegel. The name appears again the following year in Brigg's map of "The North part of America," engraved by R. Elstracke, and published in Purchas His Pilgrimes, III: 82-53 (Vol. I of which appeared in 1624). It is altogether likely that the author of Inga's map, as well as Brigg's, copied from an earlier original, now lost. See Cartography, II: 45, and 95-96. For the earliest mention of the name Hudson River, see Aug. 13, 1614.
- Cardinal Richelieu becomes first minister in the council of Louis XIII, of France.
- The birth of the Dutch Reformed Church in North America took place in this year, at Fort Orange (Albany), under Bastiaan Jansz. Krol, as "krankenbezoeker" (visitor of the sick) or "zieken-trooster" (comforter of the sick), who came over with the first colonists to New Netherland, while Cornelis May was the first director there. The first call for "krankenbezoekers" to go to the West Indies was made by the Church Consistory of Amsterdam, in September, 1623. Krol, who had been a "cawffaewer" (silk or satin worker), at this time living on the Bloemgracht, in Amsterdam, was among those who presented themselves before this council, on Oct. 12, 1623, when he was aged 28 years, hence born in 1595. Krol had entered into a prenuptial contract, on Feb. 7, 1615, with Anneken Chrystovel, aged 21 years, and the bans were published for three consecutive Sundays thereafter. At this time he could not write, and therefore added his sign manual to the contract, whilst his betrothed wrote her name in full. On Aug. 16 of that year, their first child, a son, was baptized "Thonis" or Teunis, in the Oude Kerk of Amsterdam, and this son is found in New Netherland for many years thereafter, principally employed as a skipper. Krol himself was baptized on Feb. 23, 1616, in the Nieuwe Kerk of Amsterdam, the church in which he had been married. He was not accepted at once by the church council for the post to which he aspired, but passed through a further examination, on Nov. 30, 1623, and, on Dec. 7, the council exhorted him to enter the service for the West Indies. Illness prevented his acceptance at this time, or he would have been destined for Pernambuco.

The principal duties of a "krankenbezoeker" were to read common prayers every morning and evening, as well as before and after meals; to faithfully instruct and comfort all the sick; to speak in particular to those who desired or had need of exhortation in the Scriptures, and, at opportune times, according to his calling, to read chapters from the Scriptures or from books by authors of the reformed religion, and even to read a sermon. He could not exercise functions allowed only to the ordained clergy, as, for example, the administering of the sacraments.

Krol's first voyage and residence in New Netherland lasted only a short time. Evidently, he spent the summer months of 1624 there; but on Nov. 14, 1624, we find him at a session of the church consistory of Amsterdam, where he related that the colonists desired a regular clergyman, because children had been born in "de Virginis," or New Netherland, who awaited baptism. The council did not approve of sending a minister, because there were so few families in the colony. The colony referred to was in all probability the pioneer colony, at Fort Orange (Albany), and not, as Eckhof says, at New Amsterdam. Krol now sought and obtained authority to baptize and marry in New Netherland. The consistory vested him with this authority, on Nov. 21, 1624, on condition that he would prepare himself by learning certain formulas for baptizing and marrying, from books by Bullinger and others, and cautioned him to abide by the texts and not presume to use words of his own composition. He returned to New Netherland a second time, no doubt with the colony that departed in April, 1625. From this time until 1626, when he is found with Minitui's new colony on Manhattan Island, we have no information of his activities.—Eckhof, Bastiaen Jansz. Krol (1910), 18, 25-32; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, index under Crol, Anthony. For his career from 1626, see below, and also under that date.

The following additional information regarding Krol is copied from a footnote in "Minutes of the Amsterdam Chamber of the Dutch West India Company, 1615-6 (translated by A. J. F. van Laer), in N. T. Genealogical and Biog. Rec., XLIX: 223:

"Bastiaen Jansen Crol, or Krol, from Harlingen, Friedland, was a caffa werker; or silk worker, by trade. He married in 1615, at Amsterdam, at the age of 20 years, Annetjen Stoffel's daughter, from Eesen, aged 21. Krol made his first voyage to New Netherland as comforter of the sick in Jan. see below, Jan. 25 and 28], 1624, and on Nov. 14, 1624, was back at Amsterdam. He sailed again for New Netherland, probably in May or June, 1625, and was commander of Fort Orange from Sept., 1626, to 1629, when he returned to Holland. He sailed for the third time to New Netherland shortly after Jan. 12, 1630, and was once more commander of Fort Orange until the end of February, or beginning of March, 1632, when he succeeded Peter Minitui as Director General of New Netherland. He held the latter office until the arrival of Wouter van Twiller in April, 1633; then, at the latter's request, returned for a few weeks to Fort Orange to prevent Elkens from trading there, and finally sailed for Holland in July, 1633. He seems to have remained there for three or four years, but in 1638 he was again commissary of Fort Orange. In 1643 he was still in New Netherland, but on Sept. 21, 1645, he was back in Amsterdam. The date of his death is unknown."

The following transcript is copied from an "Examination of Bastiaan Jansz. Crol, former director of New Netherland, being 39 years of age, conducted at the request of the patroons by Notary Justus van de Ven, at Amsterdam, the 30th of June 1634," in Van Restenlaer Bowier Manuscripts, 302:

"I. In what capacity, and for how long he [Bastiaen Jansz. Krol] was in the service of the West India Company in New Netherland.

"He states that he set out as comforter of the sick and made a voyage and stay of 7½ months in that country. He went out for the second time in the same capacity, and after he had been away about 15 months, he was appointed to the directorship at Fort Orange on the North River and held the same for three years. The third time he went out again as director of Fort Orange and to the best of his recollection served again for about two years. After which he was elected director general of New Netherland at Fort Amsterdam on the island Manhattes, lying at the mouth of the aforesaid North River also named Mauritius, and served in this office 13 months." For the remainder of this examination, see June 30, 1634, where, by mistake, the document is given under the date of the examination instead of being entered under the date of the events which it records.

In this year, the General History of Virginia, by Capt. John Smith, was first printed, in London.—Church Catalogue, No. 402.

In the "Copie-Boek" of the Church Consistory of Amsterdam in Holland, folio 30, recto, under date of Dec. 7, 1623, the following statement is made, referring to a set of formal instructions that were issued on said date with respect to the duties of visitors of the sick (krankenbezoeker):

"With the same instructions Bastiaan Jansen [Krol], after being restored to health, sailed to the West Indies, on Jan. 25, 1624, (perhaps on the "Orange Tree;" see Jan. 23—although it is possible that this was the ship on which his predecessor, Geryt Pietersz., sailed, and that he himself left somewhat later).—Eckhof, Bastiaen Jansz. Krol.

The entry of Jan. 25, 1624, is followed by entries of other appointments to the East and West Indies, of March 1625 and later years, so that the clerk's entry of Jan. 25, 1624, does not, necessarily, mean that Krol sailed on this day. The entry may indicate the date on which he received his final instructions as a 1624 visitor of the sick. When Krol had been prevented by illness from sailing in December, 1623, Geryt Pietersz. went in his place.

Wassenaer records, under this month, the preface to the section being dated June 1, 1624, as follows: "Numerous voyages realize so much profit for adventurers: that they discover other countries, which are afterwards settled and planted with people. Virginia, a country lying in 42½ degrees, is one of these. It was first peopled by the French, afterwards by the English and is to-day a flourishing colony."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 67. (For reproduction of title-page of Vol. I, see Pl. 3, Vol. IV.)

" Also under February (preface dated June 1), Wassenaer (see Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 73) records: "A ship is being fitted out [Jameson erroneously translates "was fitted out"] under a commission from the West India Company, and freighted with families, to plant a Colony among this people [the reference is to New Netherland]. But to go forward safely, it is first of all necessary that they be placed in a good defensive position and well provided with forts & arms, since the Spaniard, who claims all the country, will never allow anyone to gain a possession there; . . ." This reference, which occurs in a section the preface to which is dated June 1st, evidently refers to the fitting out of the "Nieu Nederlandt" expedition, which sailed shortly after March 30 (q. v.).

Jan. In a letter written by J. Sherley, from New Plymouth, and 25- addressed to "Most worthy and loving Friends," in England, there Feb. were enclosed "audrice objections [against Plymouth as the site of 4 a permanent settlement] concerning which he thus writeth. "These are the cheefe objections which they that are now returned make against you and the countrie. I pray you consider them, and answer them by the first convenientie." These objections were made by some of those that came over on their percutular and were returned home, as is before mentioned, and were of the same suite with those that this other letter mentioens."

Objection 11 is as follows: "The Dutch are plantet nere Hudsons Bay [the bay of Hudson's River], and are likely to over throw the [our] trade." The answer given to this objection is: "They will come and plante in these parts, also, if we and others doe not, but goe home and leave it to them. We rather commend them, then condemne them for it."—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), I, 354-57.

Jan. A letter bearing this date (possibly 1625, as given by Brodhead 28- and Acts of Privy Council, Colonial Ser., London, 1916), written
 Feb. at Whitehall to Sir John Elyot, vice admiral, the mayor of Ply-7 mouth, and Sir Ferdinando Gorges, authorizes the arrest of a Dutch ship "ryding in the haven at Plymouth called the Orange Tree of Amsterdam, being of the burthen of one hundred and fifty tunes, or thereabouts, and bound to a place in America which is comprehended in a grant made by his Majesty upon just consideration to divers of his subjects." The captain of the ship must exhibit his commission "and the plat which he hath" and in the meantime a "stay of the ship" is commanded.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 12. It is possible that Bastiaan Jansz. Krol sailed on this ship.—See Jan. 25.

Mar. Wassenaer, writing under the month of April of the settlement or in New Netherland, in part VII of the Historisch Verhaal (Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 74-76), the preface to this part being dated Dec. 1, 1624, says: "The West India Company being chartered to navigate these rivers, did not neglect so to do, but equipped in the spring a vessel of 130 lasts, called the Nieu Nederlandt, whereof Cornelis Jacobsz. Myt of Hoora was skipper, with a company of 30 families, mostly Walloons, to plant a colony there. They sailed in the beginning of March [see March 28 and 30], and directing their course by the Canary Islands, steered towards the Wild Coast [Guiana], and gained the west wind which luckily [took] them in the beginning of May into the river called, first Rio de Montagnes, now the River Mauritius [Hudson], lying in 40½ degrees. He found a Frenchman lying in the mouth of the river, who would erect the arms of the King of France there; but the Hollanders would not permit it, forbidding it by commission from the Lords States General and the Directors of the West India Company; and in order not to be frustrated therein, with the assistance of those of the yacht Maeckerel, which had lain above [see July 16, 1623], they caused a yacht of two guns to be manned, and convoyed the Frenchman out of the river, who would do the same thing in the South River, but he was prevented by the settlers there.

"This being done, the ship sailed up to the Maykans, 44 leagues, and they built and completed a fort named 'Orange' with four bastions, on an island, by them called Castle Island." (Wassenaer continues: "They also placed a fort which they named 'Wilhelmus' on Princes Island, heretofore called Murderer's Island; it is open in front, and has a curtain in the rear and is garrisoned by sixteen men for the defence of the river below." Jameson adds, in a footnote, after Murderer's Island: "Site not certain." Is it, perhaps, possible that this is a reference to Nutten or Governors Island?) It is also possible that it may refer to the fort at the mouth of the Delaware, which, on the Buchelius Chart (C. Pl. 38, Vol. II), bears this name. "They forthwith put the spade in the ground and began to plant, and before the yacht Maeckerel sailed, the grain was nearly as high as a man so that they are bravely advanced. On leaving there [Hudson River], the course lies for the west wind, and having got it, to the Bermudas and so to the Channel and in a short time to the Fatherland."

Wassenaer errs, in this account, respecting the settlement of Fort Orange (Albany), which was not on an island. He and De Laet evidently confused Fort Orange with the earlier Fort Nassau, which was on an island. His statement that the "Nieu Nederlandt" sailed "in the spring" has been interpreted by Brodhead, Jameson, and other historians to mean the spring of 1623, but more recent investigations prove that the "New Netherland" sailed in the spring of 1624, when the "Mackerel" is known to have been in New Netherland. Mrs. De Forest, in A Walloon Family in America (I: 33-35), discusses the date of arrival of the "New Netherland" as follows:

"We have said that the date of the arrival of the New Netherland has for years been a subject of dispute among historians, some claiming that it was 1623 and some that it was 1624. Our journal would clearly settle the date even were there no other positive proof, for from it we learn that the Mackerel left the Pigeon off the Island of Madeira in September, 1623, her objective point being New Netherland. The meeting with the ship New Netherland could not, therefore, have taken place until May, 1624, because it would have been manifestly impossible for the little Mackerel to have been in the harbour of Manhattan Island in May, 1623, and to have returned to Holland in time to have sailed from there on the sixteenth of June [July], 1623, according to van Wassenaer's contemporary testimony."

Mrs. De Forest suggests the possibility, even the probability, that among the Walloons sailing on the "New Netherland" were some of the pères de familles who went to South America on the "Pigeon" with Jesse de Forest in 1623, for they left the Wiapoco on Jan. 1, 1624, which would have given them two months to reach Holland and reëmbark for New Netherland.

The following "Articles" are taken from a contemporary copy made from the "Resolution Book" of the "Assembly of the Nineteen." Algemeen Rijksarchief, The Hague, "W. I. C. Oude Compagnie, No. 1. March 28, 1624, point no. 54."

"The XXVIIth of March, 1624. Ante Meridiam.

"And whereas the colonists [colonen] who go from New Netherland for the Chamber of Amsterdam will be enrolled [gemonstert—literally, mustered] to-morrow, the articles for the colonists [coloniërs] drawn up by Messrs. Albert Coenraets, Samuel Godyna and Johannes de Laet (the committee heretofore appointed for the purpose by the Chamber of Amsterdam) are read and approved, and accordingly adopted, as follows:

"Provisional conditions on which the respective colonists are engaged and sent out to New Netherland in the service of the West India Company, to take up their abode on the River of Prince Maurice, or at such other places as shall be assigned to them by the Commander and his Council."

"1. The colonists, besides observing the respective articles and instructions, shall during the voyage and their residence and in changing their location be bound to obey and carry out without contradiction the orders of the Company already given to them or yet to be given, as well as all regulations as to matters of police and justice received from the aforesaid Company.

"2. They shall within their territory hold no other services than those of the true Reformed Religion, in the manner in which they are at present conducted here in this country, and thus by their Christian life and conduct try to lead the Indians and other blind persons to the knowledge of God and His Word, without however persecuting any one on account of his faith, but leaving to every one freedom of conscience. But if among them or within their jurisdiction any one should wantonly revile or blaspheme the name of God or of our Savior Jesus Christ, he shall be punished by the Commander and his Council according to circumstances.

"3. The Commander and other officers already set or yet to be set over them shall in accordance with the authority given them by the Company have power to enter into alliances and treaties with foreign princes and potentates located there in the country and near their colonies, on such conditions as may be judged most advantageous to the service of the Company, without seeking by such treaties to further any one's private interests. Which conditions the colonists collectively and each of them individually shall be held to fulfil, although by so doing they should be involved in war with some of their other neighbors, and even have to take the field.

"4. They shall take up their permanent residence at the place to be assigned to them by the Commander and his Council and use all diligence to fortify the same by common effort and also jointly to erect the necessary public buildings and to establish the trade there as far as possible. And if any one should be found remiss therein, or the Company or the colony through his negligence should suffer damage, he shall be fined or punished according to the circumstances of the case.

"5. In all public proceedings of a political or military character as well as in those of justice, the Nether-Dutch tongue only shall be employed by them, on pain, if this be not done, of having all public despatches and proceedings that are written in other languages considered as null and void of and of no effect.

"6. The colonists shall without paying any recognition therefore receive from the Company the costs of transportation, as well as the places and lands which shall be assigned to them for cultivation by the Commander and his Council, according to the size of their families and the instructions given on that subject.

"7. Furthermore, whereas in the beginning all necessities will have to be sent over from this country, the Company will make arrangements that the colonists for the space of two years shall be provided with the necessary supplies and clothes from the Company's storehouses and that at a reasonable price, which the colonists receiving such supplies, if they can not pay the amount at once, shall be bound to pay and satisfy from time to time in instalments. And they shall be debited on the Company's books for the goods received by them and must deliver signed receipts therefor to the receivers of the Company. The Commander and the commissary are ordered to take good care that there be no neglect herein; also, that they give out no supplies on credit, except to the needy, without letting any squanderers, or those who neglect their property, enjoy the benefit hereof, but letting them bear the discomfort which they bring upon themselves.

"8. The colonists shall be free to carry on and prosecute the inland trade without objection on the part of any one, on the express condition that they shall sell their purchased or collected wares to no one but the Company's agents, and this provisionally, until other arrangements are found necessary.

"9. They shall also be free to engage in all sorts of sport or fowling, hunting and fishing, and this provisionally as above.

"10. All minerals, newly found or yet to be discovered mines of gold, silver, copper, or any other metals, as well as of precious stones, such as diamonds, rubies and the like, together with the pearl fisheries, shall be worked and exploited exclusively by the servants of the Company.

"11. But if any one of the colonists, during his sojourn [there], should happen to discover anything of the kind aforementioned, he and his heirs shall receive one tenth of the net proceeds of the aforesaid mines and pearl fisheries, and this for the period of the first six consecutive years, to be reckoned from the day that the Company took over or exploited the same.

"12. With the understanding that all costs of exploitation and of the necessary tools pertaining thereto shall first be subtracted and deducted. And as the first discoverer shall be regarded he who first reported the same to the Commander [there], or here to the aforesaid Company. And in case, any such discovery being made, it is deliberately kept silent, the discoverer shall according to circumstances be arbitrarily punished, yes, even receive corporal punishment.

"13. They shall also have no right to engage in, or teach others, any handicraft involving commerce, especially weaving, except by special consent from the Company or its agents, under penalty, if any one should act to the contrary, of being excluded as a perjurer and of being arbitrarily punished according to the circumstances of the case.

"14. They shall not permit any strangers (whereby are meant all persons who are outside of the Company or its authority) to come to their shores to do any trading, nor enter into any understanding with them whereby they in any way may learn the profits, needs, or situation of the place, on pain of being punished thereof according to the circumstances of the case.

"15. Furthermore, the colonists shall under solemn oath promise to keep secret all transactions and affairs of the Company which may in any way come to their knowledge; likewise, they shall not be at liberty to divulge the same after they have given up their allegiance to the Company; nor shall they at any time hereafter be free to associate themselves with any but those of the Company to come within the limits of the charter, wherever it may be.

"16. They shall also be bound to remain with their families for the space of six consecutive years at their destined place, unless a change therein be made by order of the Company; but at the expiration of their term, or sooner, in case of removal by order of the directors or their hooors' agents, they may trade or sell their houses, cultivated fields and live stock to some one else of the remaining colonists. [The text as printed by Jessurun has nieniant anders, no one else, which is evidently a mistake.]

"17. They shall at first plant and seed their lands and fields with such crops and fruits as the Commander and his Council shall order them to plant, without making any changes therein on account of any personal views, on pain of subjecting the offender to arbitrary punishment according to circumstances.

"18. They shall especially see to it that they faithfully fulfil their promises to the Indians and their other neighbors, whether in connection with trade or other matters, and that without occasion they give them no offense, whether in regard to their persons, their wives, or their property, on pain of being severely punished therefor.

"19. The directors shall at all times have the right to transport thither as many people as in their good judgment they shall think fit.

"20. Finally, they shall take the oath of fidelity and allegiance to the High and Mighty Lords the States General and to the Company, and in all things comport themselves as good and loyal subjects are bound to do."

The Dutch text of this document, which is of great interest in connection with the early settlement of New Netherland, was found by Dr. Wieder during researches made for this work in 1912, as first announced in the second volume of the present work. It was first printed by Jessurun, in Kiliana van Rensselaer (The Hague, 1917), from which the foregoing translation was made by Mr. Van Laer.

The contents of this very important document had, however, been known since June, 1910, when another contemporary copy, dated March 30, 1624, known as Van Rappard Document A, and, according to the catalogue description, containing the name "Nieu Verdriet," was sold at auction by Frederick Muller & Cie, in Amsterdam, as part of a series of six documents relating to New Netherland and the West India Company, 1624-6, belonging originally to the collection of the Chevalliers Van Rappard, and now forming part of that of Mr. Henry E. Huntington, which documents are fully described under March 30, 1624 (2. v.).

In the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Company, "the gentlemen from Zeeland" deliver "a petition of Mr. Willem Snellen . . . which is referred to a committee [of five], one from each chamber"

On the following day, the "Assembly of the Lords Nineteen" passed a resolution that the commissary or skipper of the ship about to sail to New Netherland, immediately after arrival there, should "formally protest against the commissary, skipper and crew of the said MF Snellen, and let them depart peacefully, without however permitting them to sell any merchandise." In this manner "the rights of the Company will be sufficiently protected and the Company will be able to keep the ship of MF Snellen under arrest after her return hither in the name of justice or on the ground of the Company's Charter.

"And the commissary or skipper of the Company's ship shall give enough virtuals to MF Snellen's skipper, to enable him and his crew to reach their place of destination conveniently. But receipt shall be given therefor together with promises of restitution by Mr. Snellen or by the skipper himself after his arrival here.

"At this meeting, furthermore, it has been resolved that 1624 (whereas lately few or no ships, except those of the Company, have

Mar. departed from this country to the Coast of Guinea, to New Nether-29 land, or to the West-Indies) the Company's Charter and the consequences thereof shall be maintained with vigor, without any excuse or exception. And the commissaries, skippers and crews in the Company's service shall have instructions to attack ships, which have sailed from these United Provinces against the provisions of the Charter. And after having mastered any such ship, they shall send it home with its crew to a province or a city, different from the one from which it had formerly sailed."—Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, items 54-55, transcribed from the original document by Dr. Wieder, in 1912, and translated from another copy of the original by A. J. F. van Laer, in 1920.

Does this, perhaps, refer to the "Mackerel" expedition?—See Nov. 3, 1614, and July 16, 1623.

A resolution, passed on this day in the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co., reads: "And it is . . . further resolved (as it is understood that there are but few if any more ships from this country [Holland], outside of those of the Company, on the coasts of Guinea, New Netherland, or the West Indies), that henceforth the Charter [of the West India Co.] with the amplifications thereof, without any connivance or excuses based on precedents, shall be rigorously enforced."—Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, item 56, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer. See July 6 and 13, 1626.

"Whereas we repaired this morning to the meeting of the Directors of this city, and, after sundry conversations, explained to their Honors that we understood that a certain ship was fitting out here with design to go to the Virginias under French commission, intending to take along good carpenters and shipwrights to construct a store, houses and ships there in order to be employed elsewhere within the limits of the charter. This then appearing to be a matter of great consequence, we both deemed it proper to wait on the Magistrates of Hoorn, as we did forthwith, and after explanatory introduction, requested them, as Judges and administrators of the laws, to maintain us against this contravention of the charter, and its amplification. Whereupon they answered, that we might certainly rely on them, and they resolved, with our previous advice, to summon the Skipper, he was busy taking out his ship, and about to sail forthwith, to demand of him an inventory thereof, and of all that is, or will be received on board. The Skipper appearing in our absence, refused to comply, saying he wishes to go to France, wanting to know who acted thus, threatening to complain, as if the King of France's crown were attacked. The Burgomasters finding him thus obstinate, said that he was then arrested until he should give satisfaction herein, against which he has protested, and demanded certificate of arrest. We thought proper that this should be done in the name and on behalf of the Assembly of the XIX., though we are not expressly authorized herunto. We request your advice whether the arrest shall continue, and what further shall be done in the premises. You may be assured that a certain person of credit is here, who was lately offered a share of that ship, well knowing that some owners reside here and at Amsterdam: therefore, the matter ought, in our opinion be prosecuted, for the sake of example, and thereby to discourage others, who are disposed to go the same road."—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 31. For the action of the "Assembly of the XIX.," see March 30.

30 In a session of the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co., "Mr. Schotte delivers . . . a letter brought by his servant from Hoorn from the delegates of the XIX., which being read, it is learned that they, having understood that a certain ship was being equipped there [at Hoorn, the home of Skipper David Pietersen de Vries] for the Virginias in the name of those of Rochelle, were nevertheless informed that the owners thereof reside in this country, for which reason they had decided to attach the said ship and to inform the Burgomasters, whereupon the skipper, in turn, had attacked them, on all of which they ask the approval and advice as to what they are to do further in the matter. Meanwhile, Mr. Godyn can state that the skipper, or supercargo, is called Jan Gysen, he having come only last fall from the Virginias on account of Lambert van Tweenhuyzen and Co. and that the copper utensils (Coperwerck) were made on the Niewendyck, in the Coper Meulen, which said copper articles are serviceable nowhere but in the Virginias; and Mr. Menten [declares] that the skipper is called David Pieterz. [de Vries]." It is further resolved "that a letter shall be sent by the Assembly to the States General, inclosing a copy of the letter of the delegates of the XIX., with the request that their High Mightinesses would be pleased promptly to provide therein in such a way that the charter and the amplifications thereof may not be violated, the States of Hollaod to be requested that the rudder and sail may be taken from that ship until the facts in the matter can be ascertained."—Records of old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, items 58-59, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer. See April 6.

This date (according to the Muller catalogue) is found on a contemporary MS. copy of the "provisional order" issued by the West India Company to colonists about to sail for New Netherland on the "Nieu Verdriet" (New Sorrow), which left Holland for New Netherland on or about March 30 (Van Rappard Document A). This order, translated from another contemporary copy, dated March 28, 1624, is given in full under that date. For a discussion of the facts leading to the conclusion that the name of this vessel has been wrongly transcribed, and should be "Nieu Nederlandt," see 1626. These manuscripts are contemporary copies of six, until recently unknown, West India Company documents, the originals of which have disappeared. The copies, according to Dr. Wieder, are in Zealand Dutch, and were, he believes, made for the Zealand chamber of the West India Company.

These manuscripts, which, as already noted, belonged to the Chevaliers Van Rappard, and were sold at auction on June 16, 1910, by Frederik Muller & Cie of Amsterdam, are known as "The Van Rappard Documents." They were bought by John Anderson, Jr., Mr. Stokes being the under-bidder.

Mr. Anderson had them translated by J. A. J. de Villiers, chief of the Map Room of the British Museum. They were afterward bound by Rivière, with the accompanying translations, and are now in the collection of Mr. Henry E. Huntington, see Cartography II: 106 et seq. These documents are believed to contain information which would throw much new light upon the settlement or settlements on the Hudson River during the years 1624 and 1625 (and possibly earlier). As Mr. Huntington contemplates their separate publication, he has, quite naturally, been unwilling to have them extracted, or even examined, for inclusion or comment in the present work. Except for Document A, of which a duplicate copy, as already noted under March 28, was found by Dr. Wieder in 1912, and which is printed under that date (March 28) in full, the only information available regarding these manuscripts is that contained in the catalogue of the sale; that obtained by Mr. Stiles, of Henry N. Stevens, Son & Stiles, who represented Mr. Stokes at the auction, and was permitted to make a cursory examination of the manuscripts; and, finally, that supplied by Mr. Anderson, who turned over the leaves of Mr. De Villiers' translation in the author's presence, and commented briefly upon a few of the salient facts therein contained. Although it has been impossible to verify these facts or statements; nevertheless, in view of the absence of more definite information, it has seemed desirable to print them here for what they are worth. The catalogue descriptions are as follows, the material following in brackets being added from the information supplied by Mr. Stiles and Mr. Anderson, and referred to above: "Item 1795, Documents concerning New Netherland, 1624-1626."

A. (Translated from the Dutch) "Copy [of the] Provisional Order, in accordance with which the respective Colonists are accepted and despatched in the service of the West India Company to New Netherland, in order to take up their abode on the river of the Prince Maurice, or at such other places as the Commander and his council shall indicate to them." (Cataloguer's note, translated from the French)—"30 March 1624. Manuscript of the period, 9 pages. fol. Copy of the regulations with which the colonists sent by the West India Company to New Netherland on the vessel "Nieu Verdriet" were required to comply." For a full translation of this document, see March 28. [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from Mr. De Villiers' translation: "These instructions were sent over by the hand of Cornelisz. [Jacobsz.] May; they contained full directions in connection with the first attempt at colonization in the vicinity of New Amsterdam."]

C. (Translated from the Dutch) "[Copy of the] Instructions for Willem van Hulst, Commis on the voyage to New Netherland and provisionally director of the colonists who are already there and are still to be taken thither until the Company shall be pleased to establish other government there." (Catalogue's note, translated from the French.)—"Without date (1625). Manuscript of the period. 22 pages. fol. Copy of the instructions given to Willem van Hulst, Commissary during the voyage to New Netherland, and provisionally director of the colonists in that country. The second series of instructions to Van Hulst (of which a copy is described under the following No.) is dated 22 April 1625." [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from Mr. De Villiers' translation: "These included instructions to the directors and the colonists, and prescribed regulations for government, etc.; exceedingly interesting."]

D. (Translated from the Dutch) "[Copy of the] Further Instructions drawn up by the Directors of the West India Company in the chamber of Amsterdam, for Willem vander Hulst, Commis, and also for those of the Council, residing in the rivers, islands, and mainland of New Netherland, forwarded by Gerrit Fongers., Under-Commis, and Gerrit Isbrants., skipper of the yacht Mackerel, according to which said Vander Hulst and the Council, besides the common farmers and all others who prior to this, as now with the ships Mackerel, Horse, Cow and Sheep have gone and now go there, shall have to regulate themselves with all obedience, loyalty and diligence, as also to take up their abode on the South or the North-river or such other places as shall be serviceable to the Company and her management." (Catalogue's note, translated from the French.)—"Amsterdam 22 April 1625. Manuscript of the period. 24 pages. fol. [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from Mr. De Villiers' translation: "This document contains further instructions for the guidance of the Colonists. It was sent from Amsterdam to Van Hulst after he was on the spot, by a messenger, whose name is given. The instructions are given in greater detail than in Document C."]

E. (Translated from the Dutch) "[Copy of the] Particular instructions for the engineer and surveyor Cryn Fredericxsz. as also for the Commis and Councilors to regulate themselves accordingly, concerning the fortifications and the building of houses when the Council shall have discovered a suitable place to settle down according to our instructions with all the animals." (Catalogue's note, translated from the French.)—"22 April 1625. Manuscript of the period. 19 pages. fol. [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from Mr. De Villiers' translation: "This document was sent over by Cryn Fredericks. It includes references to a plan (now lost) for laying out the settlement and for the building of the fort; the specifications are given in detail—nothing left to chance. Every street in the city is laid out in feet and inches. Even where the people shall live is indicated."] [Information supplied by Mr. Stiles: "Instructions for the building of a Fort and Town in New Netherland. The Fort was to be four sided, one side of which was to face the water, but no definite position is assigned. The three sides facing land were to be surrounded by a rampart and moat, the dimensions of which are given. A bridge over the moat was to give access to the fort on one side, but which side it is difficult to determine, as the references are lettered to correspond to an accompanying plan which is not attached to this copy of the specification. All the male population were to be impressed into the work of building the fort so that it should be built as soon as possible. Indians were also to be employed as well as sailors of the Fleet, special rates of pay being given to the latter. Ten houses were to be built outside under the wall for the use of the architects and foremen of the works. The dimensions and style of these houses are mentioned. A school, hospital, prison and church were to be built, and dimensions are given. The fort was to be named Amsterdam.

Mar. 30 A broad street was to be laid down one side of the fort, and smaller streets, which were to be numbered, were to lead out of the broad street at regular intervals, the intervening ground to be used for growing supplies. The number of houses to be built on each street and their size are stated."]

F. (Catalogue's note, translated from the French.)—"Copy of the report of Isaac de Rasière [Rasière], addressed to the Directors of the West India Company, written in the fortress of Amsterdam on the island Manhattes, 23 September 1626. Manuscript of the period. 40 pages. fol. Copy of a detailed report in which is found a full description of the life and of the difficulties which the first Dutch colonists encountered in New Netherland." [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from Mr. De Villiers' translation: "This document is a copy of the first known letter written from New Amsterdam, antedating the Michélius letters and the De Rasière letter of 1628. It gives a most intimate relation of the doings and happenings in New Amsterdam, including the acts of the Council and other important matters."]

The Catalogue adds: "We have been unable to find any trace of the originals. These documents seem to us to be of the greatest importance for the history of New Netherland." Mr. Anderson, commenting on the documents as a whole, says: "In these papers are given instructions to Minuit to go and buy the Island of Manhattan from the Indians. They determine definitely the fact that the Dutch did not settle first on Manhattan Island, but on Governor's Island. They also bring out the fact that Minuit was here two years before his supposed arrival in May 1626."

In this connection, we have an extract from De Rasière's letter, which reads as follows: "On our arrival [by ship from Holland] we did not find Minuit here [New Amsterdam], he having gone to Fort Orange [Albany] to inquire into a calamity caused by Kriekenbeek's outrageous conduct, and whereas nothing of this transpired in the council, I will refer your Honors to his [Minuit's] letter. On Minuit's arrival here [i. e., his original arrival in New Netherland] he was placed in command by the council because of the ill behaviour of Verblust [then Commander of New Netherland]. On the evening of Friday the 31st [July] the Director [Minuit] arrived here [i. e., on his return from Fort Orange to New Amsterdam], and on the 7th of August I handed him your honors letters in the council." [Information supplied by Mr. Stiles: "This document, although of great historical importance, does not give any special topographical details, but relates to the state of the colony as it existed on the arrival of Isaac de Rasière [Rasière]. He states that very little progress had been made with the building of the Fort, that the governing of the Colonists was in a bad state, and that great insubordination existed, which he had been obliged to repress with a firm hand. The fines and punishments inflicted are stated. He also states that a fort was to be built at Orange for the protection of the colonists and trade with the Indians. He emphasizes the importance of sending over a better class of Colonists, if better results are desired by the West India Company."]

The interest and importance of the Van Rappard documents is apparent from these extracts and comments, and it is much to be hoped that they will soon be published, or at least made accessible to students.

The states-general sends the following communication to the "Assembly of the XIX" in answer to its letter of March 30 (q. v.): "Honorable: By the annexed petition, presented to us by Captain David Pieters [de Vries], you will be able to learn what he hath communicated and requested on the part of his owners residing at Rochelle.

"And whereas we so regard the matter that the Incorporated West India Company ought not to enter, in the beginning, into a dispute with the subjects of neighboring Kings and Princes, but much rather observe good correspondence and friendship towards them.

"We have, therefore, deemed it proper and necessary to send Your Honors the aforesaid Petition, and reflecting on the consequences which may arise to the injury of the Company by disputes with the French, hereby recommend you to endeavor that this matter be arranged by agreement; either that your Honors receive the ship and cargo by purchase from the petitioner, or, should this not be effected, cause him to enter into bonds, that the ship will not go within the limits of your Charter; or that some other amicable arrangement may be discovered whereby both sides may be satisfied."—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 32. De Vries, who 1624 May? Catalina Trico, "aged four score years or thereabouts," made a deposition on Feb. 14, 1684/5 (q.v.), before Gov. Dongan, stating that "she Came to this Province either in the year one thousand six hundred and twenty three or twenty four to the best of her remembrance, and that four Women Came along with her in the same Ship, in which ship the Governour Ariën Jorisen [Tienpont] Came also over, which four Women were married at Sea and that they and their husbands stayed about three Weekes at this place [Manhattan Island] and then they with eight sennow more went in a vessell by ord<sup>r</sup> of the Dutch Governof to Delaware River and there settled. . . ."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 31.

In a later deposition, made Oct. 17, 1688, before William Morris, justice of the peace at the Waal-bogt, "Catelyn Trico, aged about 83 years born in Paris," declared that "in y<sup>e</sup> year 1623 she came into this Country wth a Ship called y<sup>e</sup> Unity, whereof was Commander Ariën Jorise [Tienpont] belonging to y<sup>e</sup> West India Company being y<sup>e</sup> first Ship y<sup>e</sup> came here for y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> Company; as soon as they came to Mannatons now called N: York they sent Two families & six men to harford River & Two families & 8 men to Delaware River & 8 men they left att N: Yorke to take Possession and y<sup>e</sup> Rest of y<sup>e</sup> Passengers went wth y<sup>e</sup> Ship up as far as Albany which they then Called fort Orange. Although the accuracy of this deposition has often been questioned, there seems no adequate reason for asserting the falsity of the date of arrival—1623 or 1624—or that of the other statements therein contained. For further facts tending to corroborate Catalina Trico's statement, see Nov. 3, 1623; 1623 or 1624 (Nov.), and 1626.

If Mr. Anderson's quotation from Van Rappard Document A is correct, and Cornelis Jacobsen May was the skipper who sailed on the "Nieu Verdriet," under "provisional orders" dated the 30th of March, 1624 (q.v.), a different explanation of the facts connected with the first settlement than that outlined above must be sought, for we know from Wassenaer and other sources that May was the skipper of the ship "New Netherland," which, Wassenaer says, sailed from Holland for the Hudson River early in March, 1624, and it is clear that he cannot have taken part in both expeditions. The seemingly contradictory facts could easily be reconciled by assuming that the use of the name "Nieu Verdriet" (which name, so far as we know, appears only in an editorial note in the Muller catalogue) was used erroneously for that of "Nieu Nederlandt." If this explanation be accepted, the two expeditions of March 1624 are reduced to one,—the well known expedition of that year under May in the "Nieu Nederlandt." This theory would also explain the statement made by Wassenaer that the Hollanders (evidently the officers of the "New Netherland") would not permit the Frenchman lying in the mouth of the Hudson River to erect there the arms of the King of France, "forbidding it by commission from the Lords States General and the Directors of the West India Company." This explanation would, it is true, require us to assume that the settlers referred to in this same passage as being already at the South River had been dispatched thither by May between the date of his arrival and that of the arrival of the French ship; or else that this settlement was already in existence,—which seems possible, as we are told in the "Representation of New Netherland," 1650 (see Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 312), that "the discovery [of the South River] . . . took place at the same time with that of the North River, and by the same ship and persons, who entered the South Bay before they came to the North Bay."

The principal statements contained in Catalina Trico's depositions are in harmony with this theory, except that she refers to Ariën Jorissen (Tienpont) as governour; but as, if we eliminate the "Nieu Verdriet," the "New Netherland" expedition must have been the direct result of Tienpont's petition to the W. I. Co. of Nov. 3, 1623, it is practically certain that he accompanied this expedition in some official capacity (see N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 149, and Nov. 3, 1623). It is even possible that there was more than one ship on this expedition, and that Tienpont, in command of one party, went up the river, while May went to the Delaware, and afterwards returned to New Amsterdam, and assumed general direction of affairs in New Netherland. For a more complete discussion of this theory, see 1626.

In a report to the Amsterdam Chamber concerning the Swedish settlements on the Delaware, Stuyvesant enclosed an account of an examination of three sachems, held at Fort Nassau on the South River on July 9, 1651. During this examination, one of the Indians, Mattahoorn by name, declared "that the Dutch nation have been the earliest comers and discoverers of the river, who also, first of all, settled thereon among them, and that they have always maintained good friendship and commerce with the Dutch; adding thereunto an account of presents which were exchanged between them and the Dutch Nation. As a further evidence and declaration, he also added, that one Cornelis with one eye, or a film on his eye, was the first who coming here, made his dwelling on the river."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 597. This reference to Cornelis is clearly to Cornelisz Jacobsz. May, who is known to have had but one good eye.

The first appearance, in print, of the full name "New Netherland" is given under February in Wassenaer's Historisch Verhaal, part VI, folio 144 (verso), translated in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 68. The reference to this section is dated June 1, 1624.

In this entry, Wassenaer describes the transatlantic voyage to New Netherland as follows: "This country now called New Netherland is usually reached in seven or eight weeks from here [Holland]. The course lies towards the Canary Islands; thence to the savage islands, then towards the mainland of Virginia, steering across, in fourteen days, leaving the Bahamas on the left, and the Bermudas on the right hand, between which the winds are variable with which the land is made."—Ibid., 68.

Virginia becomes a royal colony. James I arbitrarily annuls the liberal charter of the London Company.—Neill, Hist. of Virginia Co. of London, 417; Brown, First Republic in Am., 601-2, 633-48.

At a meeting of the "Assembly of XIX," a programme outlining the proposed action for the next meeting of the West India Company is sent out to all of the component chambers.—MS. Minutes of the "Assembly of the Lords Nineteen" of the West India Company, recently (1912) noted by Dr. Wieder in the Rijksarchief, at The Hague.

Section 12 of this programme provides that, "when the deputies of the chamber of Zeeland shall have been duly informed of the situation of New Netherland, they shall report the same to the said Chamber and wait for further instructions. They shall be furnished also with instructions how to vote in regard to the equipment of the ships [going] to New Netherland, and in regard to the extension of the colonies already established there, as well as concerning the religious and political constitution of the said colony."

In the resolutions of the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co. appears the following interesting record: "Upon the twelfth point [see Sept. 10], reading as follows: 'They shall also come instructed to resolve in regard to the equipment of New Netherland [and] the strengthening of the settlements already commenced [de Colomen daer reede begost te leggen—the significance of the plural form is apparent], as well as the proper organization of the said colony, both in ecclesiastical and political matters, it is decided that the Chamber of Amsterdam, without any prejudice to the other chambers, may at its discretion still send a ship to New Netherland and transport therein besides the necessary mer-1624 chandise some cows, sheep, hogs and other necessary animals; also some Dutch families, among whom, if they can be found, shall be a capable political director and a godly and learned minister, and furthermore whatever may be necessary. The instructions, merchandise and orders whereof shall be communicated to the respective members at the next meeting of the XIX."—Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 4, item 67, transcribed from the original document by Dr. Wieder, in 1912, and lately translated from the original by A. J. F. van Laer.

Oct. 2. A resolution of the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co., of this date, reads as follows: "Whereas Isacus Plancius offers for sale to the Company all the maps and journals of his deceased father, Domine Petro Plancio, including those relating to the West Indies as well as the remaining limits of the charter, the same is thought advisable and the Chamber of Amsterdam is hereby authorized to purchase them for the benefit of the Company."—Records of old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 4, item 129, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer.

Nov. 18. "Doctor Claes vao Wassenaer and Gregorius vanden Broeck having requested the Assembly that the Provinciaal and his Socius and servaot, on account of his sickness and discomfort might be transferred from the place where he is at present to some other more suitable place, under such reasonable guaranty as the directors shall see fit;

"Answer is given that they are to notify the Provinciaal to make [arrangements for] his ransom and to give security therefor and that the directors will then release him from prison. Meanwhile, Messrs Reael and vander Marckt are appointed to inspect other places, both here in the house [meaioing apparently the West India Company building] and the Clarisse convent, and make report thereof."—Minutes of the XIX, 1623-24, Records of the old Dutch West India Co., No. 1, part 5, at The Hague.

The above Provinciaal, was Dominicus Cohello, Pater Provincialis of Brazil, who with other Portuguese officials was taken prisoner at the taking of Bahia and sent to Amsterdam, where he was confined in the convent of St. Clara. Wassenaer had a number of interviews with him and gives an interesting account of him in Historisch Verhael, pt. VIII, fol. 3-5, under date of October 1624. Mr. Van Laer infers from this entry that Wassenaer stood in some official relation, as physician, to the West India Company, and that he had, therefore, excellent opportunities of collecting all the news relating to that company. If this is true, we may perhaps infer that he would be apt to mention all the ships that were sent out in the early stages of the settlement of New Netherland and that, as he makes so elaborate statement about the ship "New Netherland" and about the expedition sent out by Hulft, but says nothing of a ship by the name of "Nieuw Verdriet," no such ship existed. Mr. Van Laer also agrees with the statement in the Chronology that this is a most unlikely name for a ship, and feels confident that the entry in the Muller catalogue is wrong.

25. In the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co., the following resolution is passed, viz.: "Resolved, that the members of this Assembly shall make inquiries in regard to two or three capable persons to be sent to New Netherland to examine the mines there to see if there are no gold, silver, or other metals in them."—Records of old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 5, item 100, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer.

Autumn. For a discussion of facts and theories regarding the earliest settlement of Manhattan Island, derived from De Rasière's letter to Blommaert written in the autumn of 1627 or 1628, see 1623 (November).

"Inasmuch as the multitude of people, not only natives but foreigners, who are seeking a livelihood in the United Provinces is very great, so that where one stiver is to be earned there are ten hands ready to seize it, especially in Holland which is the reservoir of divers Kingdoms and countries. Many are obliged, on this account, to go in search of other lands and residences where they can obtain a living more easily and at less expense. Accordingly, in the year 1624, as in previous years, divers families went from Holland to Virginia in the West Indies, a great portion of them being English, called Brownists, whom King James will not permit nor suffer to live in his land, because they hold and maintain divers points of religion uprobated by the present church of England.

"A ship arrived in August from that part of Virginia called New Netherland, which had conveyed some families from Holland thither. [Either this date is wrong or the "Mackerel" and the "Nieu Nederland" are here confused, the former, which we know from Wassenaer (Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 76) sailed from New Netherland when "the [summer] grain was nearly as high as a man," is evidently the ship referred to as returning in August, and the latter, as the same authority records (Jameson, 77), left when "the harvest [the winter grain] was far advanced," and must have arrived in Holland before Nov. 14, on which day Krol, who must have returned on this ship, appeared before the classis at Amsterdam (Eekhof, Bastiaen Jansz. Krol, XXIII). For further information, apparently showing that she arrived before Oct. 28, see below.] This vessel brings many and various letters from private individuals, each written to friends and acquaintances, whereof the following is the general tenor—

"We were much gratified on arriving in this country; Here we found beautiful rivers, bubbling fountains flowing down into the valleys; basins of running waters in the flatlands, agreeable fruits in the woods, such as strawberries, pigeon berries, walnuts, and also . . . wild grapes. The woods abound with acorns for feeding hogs, and with venison. There is considerable fish in the rivers; good tillage land; here is, especially, free coming and going, without fear of the naked natives of the country. Had we cows, hogs, and other cattle fit for food (which we daily expect in the first ships) we would not wish to return to Holland, for whatever we desire in the paradise of Holland, is here to be found. If you will come here with your family, you will not regret it.

"This and similar letters have roused and stimulated many to resolve to emigrate thither with their families, in the hope of being able to earn a handsome livelihood, strogly fancying that they will live there in luxury and ease, whilst here on the contrary, they must earn their bread by the sweat of their brow."—Extract in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), IV: 84, translated from Willem Baudart's Memorijen . . . der gedenckeverdictste geschiednissen van Nederland . . . (Arrnhem, 1624-5). These letters were probably written from Fort Orange (Albany). Cf. De Laet, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 56, for description of the country.

"As soon as our people arrived there [New Netherland], they proceeded to clear and plant. Before this vessel [the "Nieu Nederlandt"] had left, the winter harvest was far advanced. . . .

"As regards the prosperity of New Netherland, we learn by the arrival of the ship ["Nieu Nederlandt"] whereof Jan May of Hoon [evidently, Cornelis Jacobsz. May is meant] was skipper, that everything there was in good condition. The colony began to advance bravely and to live in friendship with the natives. The fur or other trade remains in the West India Company, others being forbidden to trade there. Rich beavers, otters, martins and foxes are found there. This voyage five hundred other skins, and fifteen hundred beavers, and a few other skins were brought hither, which were sold in four parcels for twenty-eight thousand, some hundred guilders."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhael, under Dec., 1624, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 77-78. The preface to this part is dated May 20, 1625.

Wassenaer's Historisch Verhael, pt. VIII, fol. 106, under date of Dec. 1624 (preface dated May 20, 1625), records the sale on this day of the "New Netherland" cargo. As this sale was ordered at a meeting of the Assembly of the XIX, held before Oct. 28, the "New Netherland" must have arrived before that date.

De Laet, in the Jaerlyck Verhael, Appendix, 26, 29, records that two ships brought peltries from New Netherland to Holland in this year. These ships must have been the "Mackerel," which sailed for home in the early summer of this year, and the "Nieu Nederlandt," which returned in November (see above).

Bradford, in his History of Plymouth Plantation, commencing upon letters received, in the spring of 1627 (p. v), from New Amsterdam, says that the "Dutch had traded in these southern parts, diverse years before they came [the Plymouth settlers, in 1620]; but they began on plantation here till .4. or .5. years after their coming, and here begining."

1625

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 8,772 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in various ships to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhael, 26, in his Historie ofte Jaerlyck Verhael (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 5,295

1625 beaver and 463 otter peltries, valued at 35,825 guilders.—Ibid., 29.
 In this year was published at Leyden the first edition of Johan (or Johannes) de Laet's Nieuwe Wereld, ofte Beschrijvinghe van West-Indien ("New World, or Description of the West-Indies," i. e., America).—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 31-60; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 417, and authorities there cited.

— Also in this year, were published, in London, Vols. II, III, and IV of Purchas His Pilgrimes.—Church Catalogue, 401A.

— By this year, William Blaxton, or Blackstone, was established in solitary grandeur on the Shawmut peninsula, the present site of Boston, while Samuel Maverick had fortified himself on Noddle's Island, in the harbour.—Fiske, The Beginnings of New Eng., 92.

— The Dutch are said to have had three fortresses on the South River in 1625 and 1626—"in the north, in the middle, and above on the river, together with a trading-house surrounded by palisades"—etc. For this and a further account of the occupation there by the Dutch, prior to the Swedes, see Oct. 30, 1655.

Jan. — "During the whole month of January there was no east or north-east wind whereby the fleet of the West India Company under Jan Dircksz Lam, part of whose fleet also lay in Zealand, could run out to sea, on account of which the others, which lay in Falmouth in England, in the last part of January, having a good north-west and north wind, made a new admiralship to proceed to Bahía, their admiral being detained by contrary wind. The ship with the families lay at Plymouth. Getting a favourable wind, it also wished to go to sea, but was visited by the plague in such a way that already eleven persons had died and twenty more were still sick, belonging to the families of the Walloons who were to be transported thither to the colony. The assistant supercargo [under Coopman] had also been sick, but was now getting better."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, pt. VIII, fol. 123.

End of Feb. — "It is said that some farmers [baulieden] were to be sent to Virginia to cultivate the land in some region discovered by our countrymen [in eenige contrayen te de onse ontdeckt]."—Notes by Arnoldus Buchelius on the E. I. and W. I. Cos., 1619 and following years. (Koloniale Aanwinsten, 212 B, fol. 104 vo., General Archives, at the Hague.)

— On March 31, 1626, the states-general resolved to write to Pieter Martensz. Coy, agent in Morocco, "to bring about the release, at the request of the directors of the West India Company, of Jan Pieter Schel, the son of a minister, and of J. de van Groningen, a sailor, who, in 1625, on their way to New Netherland with skipper Willem Joosten Boot, were taken by a Turkish ship commanded by a renegade, a born Frisian. They were, it was said, at first set free, but again detained, because Keyser had said that another consul was expected." (Hearing, Bronnen tot de Geschiedenis van den Levantschen Handel, Rijks Geschiedkundige Publicatien, 10, vol. 1, part 2, p. 979.) This may refer to the ship mentioned above under Jan, or to that mentioned above as sailing in Feb. with the farmers (baulieden). Wassenaer, pt. X, fol. 149 vo., under date of March, 1626, mentions the capture by the Algerian pirates in Dec. 1625 of Pieter Yebrantz Halfhoorn, but does not refer to the capture of the ship to New Netherland.

Mc. 27- Ap. 6 — James I dies, and Charles I ascends the throne. His reign lasted until Jan. 30, 1649.

— "Though good care was taken by the directors of the West India Company in the spring to provide everything for the colony in Virginia, by us called New Netherland on the river Mauritius, near the Maykans [the Mohegans, a tribe inhabiting the region below Fort Orange], an extraordinary shipment was sent thither this month [April], to strengthen it with what was useful, as follows:

"As the country is well adapted for agriculture and the raising of everything that is produced here, the aforesaid gentlemen [the directors of the West India Co.] resolved to take advantage of the circumstance, and to provide the place with many necessities, through the worthy Pieter Evertsen Hult [a brewer of Amsterdam and formerly, in company with Paulus van Beest van Heemskerck, owner of the "Company of the black, green, and white lions," so called on account of the three ships owned by this company, which was dissolved in 1607.—Johan E. Elias, De Vroedschap van Amsterdam, II: 535], who undertook to ship thither, at his risk, whatever was asked of him, to wit: one hundred and three head of live stock—stallions, mares, bulls and cows—for breeding and multiplying, besides all the hogs and sheep that they thought expedient to send thither; and to distribute these in two ships of one hundred and forty lasts, in such a manner that they should be well foddered and attended to. Each animal has its own stall, with a floor of three feet of sand, arranged as comfortably as any stall here. Each animal has its respective servant who attends to it and knows what he is to get if he delivers it there alive. All suitable forage is there, such as oats, hay and straw, and what else is useful. Country people have also joined the expedition, who take with them all furniture proper for the dairy; all sorts of seed, ploughs and agricultural implements are also present, so that nothing is wanting. What is most remarkable is, that nobody in the two ships can discover where the water is stored for these cattle. In order to use the same plan another time if needful, I shall here add:—the above-named manager caused a deck to be constructed in the ship. Beneath this were stowed in each ship three hundred tuns of fresh water, which was pumped up and thus distributed among the cattle. On this deck lay the ballast and thereupon stood the horses and bulls, and thus there was nothing wanting. He added the third ship as an extra, so that, should the voyage, which is ordinarily made in six weeks, continue longer, nothing should be wanting and he should be able to fulfill his contract. So, in the eyes of the far-seeing, this colony, which lies right beside the Spanish passage from the West Indies, has great prospects.

"In company with these, goes a fast sailing yacht at the risk of the Directors. In these aforesaid vessels also go six completely equipped families, with some single persons, so that forty-five new comers or inhabitants are taken out, to remain there. The natives of New Netherland are found to be very well disposed so long as no injury is done them. . . .

"Poisonous plants have been found there [New Netherland], which those who cultivate the land should look out for. Hendrick Christiaensen carried thither, by order of his employers, bucks and goats, also rabbits, but they were found to be poisoned by the herbs. The Directors intended to send thither this spring voyage [1625] a quantity of hogs which will be of great service to the colony; and cows, with young calves, as shall follow."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 79-81.

It is clear that this expedition is the same as that referred to below, in Van Rappard Documents C and D (q. v., under March 28), and which shall bearing instructions for Provincial Governor Verhulst, dated April 23, 1625, and that it must therefore have left Holland shortly after that date.

Wassenaer records that, in this year, Willem Verhulst (or vander Hulst) became the second director of New Netherland (probably receiving his commission in April, just before the fleet sailed for New Netherland)—Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 84. A contemporary manuscript copy of his [sailing] instructions, undated, and "further instructions," dated April 22, 1625, in conformity with which latter he was to conduct the government under the West India Company, is still in existence, belonging to Mr. Henry E. Huntington, but the text has not been made public. For such information as is available concerning these documents, which are known, respectively, as Van Rappard Documents C and D, see March 30, 1624.

It is not clear whether these two sets of instructions were given to Verhulst before he sailed. Mr. Anderson, reading from the De Villiers' translation, states that the second set was sent over to him by messenger, "after he was on the spot," and the "further instructions" themselves contain the statement that they were "forwarded by Gerrit Pongersz. Under-Commiss and Gerrit Isbrantsz. skipper of the yacht Mackerel, after, said Vanderhulst & the Council, besides the common farmers & all others, as now with the ships Mackerel, Horse, Cow & Sheep have & now go there," etc.

Although all known contemporary sources of information have been searched, no record has been found of any other ship sailing to New Netherland in April, or during a period of several months immediately preceding or following that month, except the ships of Hult's expedition, which Wassenaer records as sailing in April, the same author's earlier reference to the "good care" taken "in the spring" to provide everything for the colony in Virginia, the ships referred to under Jan. and Feb., 1625 (q. v.), and Wassenaer's further statement that the "Mackerel" left the Texel on April 25th for New Netherland, and was captured on the 27th (q. v.).

If the "Mackerel" left Holland in company with the other ships of Hult's expedition, the fact was not recorded by Wassenaer, or anywhere else, so far as we have been able to ascertain, except in the document now under consideration. However, as the "Mackerel" was a fast-sailing yacht, she may well have left slightly in advance

1625 of the rest of the fleet, to act as a sort of scout, and perhaps with the Apr. 27
 22 intention that she should rejoin the other ships belonging to the expedition after the dangers of the channel were safely passed. Furthermore, as she was a small vessel, of only 60 tons burden, it seems very unlikely that Verhulst (and the council) would have sailed on her rather than in one of the larger ships. If he had, it is probable that Wassenaer would have recorded the fact, whereas, in describing her capture, he specifically mentions only one person on board, a member of the crew "who had assisted in the capture of Bahia."

The only reasonably satisfactory explanation seems to be that the "further instructions" were forwarded on this boat because she was faster than the larger ships, and that Verhulst sailed earlier, but probably in the same month, on another boat, of which no record has yet been found. It is, however, conceivable that there were two ships named the "Mackerel," and that the one captured on the 27th was not the one belonging to Hulft's expedition. It is of course also possible that Wassenaer is mistaken in some of his statements or dates, but, even if this were so, the fact would remain that we are told in Document D that "further instructions" were forwarded by messenger to Verhulst, who must therefore have already started.

Although Wassenaer says that this expedition was fitted out by Pieter Evertsen Hulft, we know from Van Rappard Document D that it had an official character, and was dispatched by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., also that it comprised the ships "Paert" (Horse), "Koe" (Cow), and "Schaep" (Sheep), accompanied, as we have already noted, by a fast-sailing yacht, named the "Macreel" (Mackerel), which, according to Wassenaer, apparently was captured on April 27, and taken to Dunkirk.

Under Nov., 1626 (preface dated June 14, 1627), Part XII, Wassenaer, evidently referring to Verhulst's expedition (although he cites part XI, whereas this expedition is recorded in part IX), says: "In our preceding discourse [part XI] mention was made of New Netherland and its colony planned by the West India Company, situate in Virginia on the river called by the French Montaigne, and by us Mauritius, and that some families were sent thither out of Holland, now increased to two hundred souls; and afterwards some ships, one with horses, the other with cows, and the third with hay; two months afterwards a fly-boat was equipped carrying sheep, hogs, wagons, ploughs and all other implements of husbandry."

Willem Verhulst, who, as we have seen, came over as "commis" or commissary, with, or just before, this first expedition, and as "provincial director" of the colony of New Netherland, was accompanied or followed by Gerrit Fongersz. as deputy or "Onder-Commis," and Cryn Fredericksz. as engineer and surveyor. The cattle were, "on their arrival, first landed on Nut Island, three miles up the river, where they remained a day or two. There being no means of pasturing them there, they were shipped in sloops and boats to the Manhates, right opposite the said island. Being put out to pasture here, they thrived well, but afterwards full twenty in all died. The opinion is, that they had eaten something bad from an uncultivated soil. But they went in the middle of September [1625] to meadow grass, as good and as long as could be desired." (Under Nov., recording the same event, Wassenaer says: "The cattle carried thither were removed upwards to a convenient place abounding with grass and pasture.")—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, II, part IX, p. 38, and translation in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 79-83; Van Rappard Documents C, D, and E, Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 158.

This date is found also in Van Rappard Document E., which consists of "particular instructions" given by the West India Co. to the engineer and surveyor Cryn Fredericks, who sailed with Verhulst, for the construction of a town and fortress in New Netherland. Although the text of this document, which now belongs to Mr. Henry E. Huntington, has not been made public, the character of its contents is known, and will be found described under March 30, 1624.

23 Maurice, Prince of Orange, after many years of active participation and leadership in the affairs of Holland, dies. He was succeeded as captain and admiral-general by his brother, Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 160.

27 Concerning the capture of the "Mackerel," which Wassenaer records on this date, he observes (translated): "Prudence is the foster mother of all wisdom; imprudence causes misfortune; such has experienced a small ship, sailing for New Netherland loaded with some necessities, measuring about 30 lasts (60 tons), when on the 27th of the same month [April, 1625], she left the Texel, and on the 27th was already in the enemy's possession, when flying the Orange colours, discovering it in a fog, called to the skipper just to come on board; he being a simple man unhesitatingly complied and was immediately captured. Thus the little vessel was also conveyed to Dunkirk, to the loss of the West India Company. She had a crew of 12 among them one who had assisted in the capture of Bahia, doubtless being a source of danger, because similar people are not by them considered as traders but as men of war's men."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, Vol. II, part IX, p. 39. This record from Wassenaer, and Brodhead's remarks on the same (Hist. State of N. Y., I: 158), are certainly perplexing, as it seems clear from Van Rappard Document D that the "Mackerel" started out in company with the ships "Horse," "Cow," and "Sheep."

Under this month (the preface is dated Dec. 1, 1625), Wassenaer records: "At the same time arrived a small ship from New Netherland, mostly with furs. As far as good order is concerned, all goes well there. The vessels with the cattle had not yet got there; the crops which our colonists had planted, looked well, but there was no certain information thereof. The next will bring their owners good news" (should be translated full information).—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 82.

It is alleged by Innes (New Amsterdam and Its People, 4, 152, 271) that a common pasture was laid out in this summer on Manhattan Island, which "was commenced at once" after the arrival of the colonists, and that this was the beginning of the later well-known Schaapen Weide, or Sheep Pasture which lay at the upper end of the present Broad St., reaching to the Strand (present Pearl St.). No evidence has been found to substantiate this claim; the colonists who arrived in the summer of 1625 put their cattle on Nut (Governors) Island for a "day or two," but "there being no means of pasturing them there, they were shipped in sloops and boats to the Manhates." Here they thrived well for a time, but afterwards about twenty died, probably from eating poisonous vegetation. The cattle, were then "removed upwards" in the middle of September "to a convenient place abounding with grass and pasture." Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 82, 83. The statement above quoted is ambiguous, and "upwards" may refer to pasturage farther north on Manhattan Island, or to some point higher up the river, perhaps in the neighbourhood of Fort Orange (Albany). These colonists and animals probably arrived either late in June or early in July, 1625, and the surviving animals were removed "in the middle of September to meadow grass, as good and as long as could be desired."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 79, 82, 83. The first known reference to the Sheep Pasture is in a deed dated July 1, 1625 (q. v.).

The Treaty of Southampton is signed, by which the Dutch and English are brought into closer alliance against Spain, the common enemy. One clause of the treaty provides that the ports of each signatory shall be open to the war and merchant vessels of the other.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 161, 182.

"A ship came, at the same time, for the aforesaid Company from Nova Germania, laden mostly with peltries; and had had a favorable voyage. [The margin has the reading "Nieu Nederland," and the reference is clearly to New Netherland; although it is interesting to note that Wassenaer, pt. VII, fol. 89, under date of June, 1624, speaks of: "the coast of wild Brazil" by Domine Petrus Plancius called Nova Germania, because the Nether Dutch and especially the worthy Dirck Claesz. Burch, have had agents there on nearly all the rivers."] On fol. 90, Wassenaer says: "The entire Wild Coast (by the worthy Petrus Plancius called Nova Germania, a little too soon) is completely plundered by the Spaniards." The cattle carried thither were removed upwards to a convenient place abounding with grass and pasture. Only two animals died on the passage. This gave great satisfaction to the freighter, who had managed the transportation so, neatly."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 82. The expedition here referred to is evidently that which sailed in April, 1625 (see April 22—Van Rappard Document D).

Pieter Minuit proposed to leave Holland on this day.—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 87. Apparently, however, he did not sail until Jan. 9, 1626—Ibid., 88. See March 30, 1624 (next to last paragraph).

CHAPTER I

B.—THE DUTCH PERIOD

1626—1664

1626 — IN this year, goods and merchandise valued at 20,384 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in two ships to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 7,258 beavers, and 857 otters and other peltries, valued at 45,050 guilders.—Ibid., 29.

1623—
1626 — Although it has not proved possible to determine with absolute certainty the date of the first settlement on Manhattan Island, nor to clear away completely the mystery which has so long surrounded and obscured those remote days, nevertheless, the recent discovery of the Van Rappard Documents, the appearance of several new side-lights, and a re-examination of the known facts in the new light which these documents furnish, enable us to present a picture of Manhattan Island during the two years immediately preceding Minuit's arrival, which, although sketchy and lacking in detail, is, nevertheless, in all probability, true in its essential features.

The extreme limits of what may be termed the period of first settlement are marked, respectively, by the start, shortly after March 30, 1624 (q. v.), of the expedition on the "Nieu Nederlandt," which now appears, without reasonable doubt, to have been the first definite step in the settlement of New Netherland following the completion of the organization of the West India Company, on June 21, 1623 (unless we accept the theory that the "Mackerel" expedition was an official one, and that some of her passengers remained on Manhattan Island—see below), and the arrival at Manhattan Island, on May 4th, 1626, of Peter Minuit.

Although, as various items in the Chronology indicate, it is not impossible, and in the author's opinion it is even likely, that explorers and traders, possibly in some cases including women, camped upon the island, and erected temporary shelters, or even groups of huts, as early as 1614, perhaps even before that time; and although, further, it seems to him not impossible that this occasional occupation may, in the aggregate, have covered a considerable portion of the period between 1614 and 1626, nevertheless, that nothing approaching a permanent settlement can have existed prior to 1623 is pretty conclusively shown by the succession of events here recorded; and the episode of the expulsion, in the Spring of 1624, by May, aided by the crew of the "Mackerel," of the "Frenchman" who sought to set up the arms of the French king at the mouth of the Hudson constitutes also pretty definite proof that no settlement existed in this neighbourhood in the early summer of 1624, and that the settlers who accompanied May were, therefore, the first permanent colonists to reach the Hudson River.

This expedition was perhaps hastened by the appearance of Adriaen Joris (Tienpont) before the "Assembly of XIX," on Nov. 3, 1623 (q. v.), and it is altogether likely that he accompanied it, possibly on a second ship, the "Eendracht," or "Unity," as indicated by Catalina Trico (see May's, 1624?), although no record of such a ship, sailing to New Netherland in this year, has been found.

There may, indeed, well have been two ships, as a vessel of 130 lasts seems hardly large enough to have accommodated 30 families, in addition to the officers, crew, and other passengers, on a transatlantic voyage. The fact that the "Nieu Nederlandt" alone is mentioned by Wassenaer cannot be accepted as conclusive proof that she was not accompanied by another vessel, or vessels; Wassenaer is sometimes careless in such respects. It is even conceivable that the expedition included the "Eendracht" and the "Nieu Verdriet," as well as the "Nieu Nederlandt," which theory would go far toward reconciling all of the seemingly conflicting statements.

The description of the Van Rappard papers in Muller's catalogue brought to light for the first time the name "Nieu Verdriet," or "New Sorrow," and the dates March 28th and March 30th on the two contemporary copies of Van Rappard Document A, coupled with Wassenaer's statement that the "Nieu Nederlandt" sailed "early in March," led, at first, to the supposition that there were two distinct expeditions in March, 1624. An examination of all available facts, however, has led to the conclusion that there was, in reality, but one expedition, the well-known expedition under Cornelis Jacobsz. May, in the "Nieu Nederlandt," and that this expedition sailed on, or immediately after, March 30, under "provisional orders," now known to us through Van Rappard Document A, which are given in full, in translated form, under March 28th, 1624 (q. v.).

Furthermore, it seems clear, as we have already noted, that Adriaen Joris (Tienpont) accompanied this expedition in some official capacity, and was possibly in command of a second ship, a supposition which is strengthened by a Report on the Condition of New Netherland, dated Dec. 15, 1644 (q. v.), in which occurs the statement that the colonists arriving in New Netherland were "under the direction of Cornelis Jacobsz. Mey & Adriaen Jorisz. Tienpont, which Directors, in the year 1624 built Fort Orange on the North River, and Fort Nassau on the South River, and after that, in 1626, Fort Amsterdam on the Manhattes."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 149.

This explanation, which would be in harmony with most of the statements made by Catalina Trico, is based upon a belief that the name "Nieu Verdriet," which name, so far as we know, occurs only in the catalogue description of the Van Rappard Documents, is, in reality, a mis-reading for "Nieu Nederlandt." If the two names are written side by side, in the old Dutch script, the great similarity in form becomes at once apparent. Furthermore, "New Sorrow" seems an altogether unlikely name to choose for a ship (cf. p. 60). Unfortunately, it has not been possible to verify this theory by reference to the original document, but, in view of all the known facts, it seems to furnish the most reasonable solution of what otherwise appear to be hopelessly irreconcilable statements.

This theory is further strengthened by the fact that May and his Walloons, when they expelled the "Frenchman" lying in the mouth of the Hudson, forbade the erection of the arms of the French king "by commission from the Lords State General & the Directors of the West India Company;" in all likelihood a reference to May's "provisional orders" (Van Rappard Document A). Moreover, if we accept this theory in general, there seems no reason for doubting Catalina Trico's definite statement that "as soon as they came to Manatans [the earlier deposition says about three weeks after they arrived] . . . they sent Two families & 6 men to harford River & Two families & 8 men to Delaware River & 8 men they left att Nieuw York to take Possession, & y<sup>e</sup> Rest of y<sup>e</sup> Passengers [about 18 families] went yth y<sup>e</sup> Ship up as farr as Albany, which they then Called fort Orange."

It is true that, in order to reconcile Catalina Trico's statement that 8 men and 2 families were sent to the Delaware River about three weeks after the arrival of the expedition at Manhattan Island with Wassenaer's statement that the "Frenchman" did not attempt to enter the Delaware River, "because of the settlers already there," it is necessary to assume that these latter had been dispatched thither by May between the date of his arrival and that of the arrival of the "Frenchman," or else that this settlement was already in existence, which is unlikely; unless we assume that, coming from the direction of the Gold Coast, and therefore

1623- approaching the Hudson from the south, May put ashore a first 1626
1626 installing of settlers in passing the Delaware, in which case those mentioned by Catalina Trico would have been a second installment. In this connection, see May?, 1624?

If, as Catalina Trico states, Tienpont was in command at Fort Orange, it is not likely that he acted as May's deputy, and that May himself, while retaining the supreme command in New Netherland, went, shortly after his arrival, to the Delaware, where indeed he is referred to, in a Report Concerning the Swedish settlements on the Delaware, made by Stuyvesant, on Jan. 28, 1656 (p. v.), to the Amsterdam chamber, as "the first who coming here [the Delaware] made his dwelling on the river," and that he afterward joined the 8 men who, Catalina Trico tells us, had been left on Manhattan Island "to take Possession," probably making it, or possibly Noten Island, his head-quarters, as gouverneur, until the arrival of Ver Hulst in 1625?

Wassenaer's statement, under Nov., 1626, that "Cornelis May of Hoorn was the first Director there in the year 1624;" and that "Willem Van Hulst was the 2nd, in the year 1625," occurs in the midst of a consecutive narrative dealing solely with progress on Manhattan Island, and the word "there" seems from the context clearly to refer to Manhattan, rather than to Fort Orange, or to New Netherland as a whole.

A careful reconsideration of the old and new facts and side-lights has led the author to the conclusion that Catalina Trico's much maligned depositions furnish, after all, the most plausible and likely solution of this difficult problem, and that she arrived at Manhattan Island on the "Nieu Nederlandt," or in another vessel accompanying that ship, early in the summer of 1624. It can hardly have been early in May, as Wassenaer states, as the voyage probably consumed at least six weeks.

Her statement that a group of colonists destined for the Delaware River "went in a vessel . . . & there settled;" the probability that the group going to the Hartford River also went by water, and the fact that the ship on which Catalina Trico herself sailed went up to Albany, suggest the possibility that three ships, and not one, were engaged in this expedition. Were we to assume that this was the fact, Catalina Trico's seemingly contradictory statements regarding the number of women and families taking part in the expedition would be easily reconciled, for they would then indicate that she and the four women came on one ship, and the families on the others. In general, her statement describes just such a series of facts as we should expect to find in connection with the first official expedition of settlers sent by the West India Company to New Netherland, viz:—

The expedition carried carefully prepared instructions regarding the selection of places suitable for settlements on the Hudson River and elsewhere in New Netherland.

Immediately upon its arrival, steps were taken to take possession of the mouths of the three great rivers (the Hudson, Fresh, and South Rivers), which together controlled the entire inland trade of New Netherland; and for this purpose permanent settlers, including families, were sent to the last two named points, and settlers, doubtless including also families, took up their abode on Manhattan Island, or in its immediate vicinity. As we know that the expedition included 30 families, whereas Catalina Trico states that only "about 18" went to Albany, and 2 each to the Fresh and South Rivers, the remaining 8 families presumably stayed on Manhattan Island, with the 8 men left there "to take Possession," or perhaps on Noten Island, or some of them may have settled at the Wallabout, or elsewhere in the neighbourhood.

The settlements here referred to on the Fresh and South Rivers were, without doubt, the earliest real settlements made at these points, although, as in the case of Manhattan Island, the records regarding them, most of which date from a considerably later period, are confusing and somewhat contradictory, in the majority of cases giving 1623 as the date of settlement.—See O'Callaghan, Hist. of N. Neth., 100; cf. Oct. 30, 1655. This date we may, however, safely assume is erroneous, as no official Dutch settlement could have been undertaken before the approval by the states-general of the final steps in the organization of the West India Co. in June of this year, and there is, as we have seen, no record of any expedition to New Netherland having been sent out thereafter (except that on the "Mackerel," which, sailing on July 16, 1623, immediately after the final organization of the chartered West India Co., must have had an official standing, and was perhaps

1626 Amsterdam chamber to obtain some advantage, by being the first in the field) until that which sailed in the following spring (1624) in the "Nieu Nederlandt," of which expedition Catalina Trico clearly must have been a member. It will be remembered that she herself states that the ship on which she came belonged "to y<sup>e</sup> West India Company, being y<sup>e</sup> first Ship y<sup>t</sup> came here for y<sup>e</sup> S<sup>d</sup> Company."

The fact that she gives the "Unity" ("Eendracht") as the name of the ship on which she arrived, may, as we have said, indicate that this vessel accompanied the "Nieu Nederlandt," or, it may be explained by supposing that she confused the name of the ship with that of another vessel which, a few years later, became very familiar on the Hudson River, serving for many years as the principal transport for colonists to Rensselaerswyck. It is even possible that the name of the "Nieu Nederlandt" may have been changed to "Eendracht."

It is significant that, in the first of two broadsides, issued respectively on Sept. 2 and 8, 1643, by Kiliaen van Rensselaer, and reproduced and translated in Van Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., opp. pp. 682 and 697, it is stated that Kiliaen van Rensselaer's patent was granted to him "as patron of the earliest colony on the North River" (p. 683), and that in the second he is referred to as "patron of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, the first and oldest on this [North] river" (p. 697). It is also interesting to note that as, in 1624, there was already the nucleus of a settlement at Fort Orange, and, as no mention of this was made in the "Articles," the West India Co., as promoters of the "Nieu Verdriet" (or "New Netherland") expedition, probably had in mind some other locality for their first and principal settlement when they instructed their colonists "to take up their abode on the River of the Prince Maurice, or at such other places as shall be assigned to them by the Commander and his Council." See March 28, 1624.

Until the Van Rappard manuscripts are made public, or other transcripts of the original documents come to light, or new documents of a similar character are discovered, we can not hope to arrive at a complete solution of this much vexed question; perhaps not even then.

Mr. Van Laer, after reading this brief summary of facts and theories in connection with the date of the first settlement of Manhattan Island, suggests the addition of the following facts:—

Wassenaer (pt. V, fol. 57), under date of May 1623, says that toward the end of the month there arrived in Zealand one Pieter Schouten, first a chirurgien, then a physician, and finally a free trader (freebooter), with a valuable prize, worth 80,000 guilders, which he captured in the Gulf of Mexico. He is said to be well acquainted with that coast, so that he would be very serviceable to the West India Company.

Under date of July 1623, Wassenaer (pt. V, fol. 109) mentions Willem Schouten, skipper of Isaac le Maire, whose ship took fire in the river Disire.

Under date of Sept., 1624 (pt. VII, fol. 154), he mentions a brave Zeelander, named Schout, who entered the service of the West India Co., and who sailed with Admiral Wilkens to the Gulf of Mexico. This is apparently the Commander Schouten mentioned under date of Sept. 24, 1624 (p. v.).

In pt. IX, fol. 60, under date of May, 1625, Wassenaer mentions the funeral at Amsterdam of Willem Schouts [De Laet, Kort Verhaal, p. 10, gives his name as Pieter Schouten], who in his lifetime had done much for the W. I. Co., as he was well acquainted with the Gulf of Mexico and had taken good prizes there. Evidently Pieter and Willem were one and the same person.

The "Minutes of the XIX," under date of Sept. 21, 1624, contain the following entry (translated): "Letter from the chamber of Zealand expressing surprise that they have not been informed of the arrival of the prize taken by the 'Eendracht,' nor of the arrival of the ship 'de Hoop,' although private persons, who are not directors of the Company, knew about it."—"Records of the old West India Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 4, item 60. The Minutes of Sept. 24 contain the following: "There was read a copy sent to the Assembly of a certain letter written by Commander Schouten on the 26th of July last from the ship 'de Hoop,' on the coast of Florida, to the chamber of Zealand, wherein he gives an account of his voyage and of various attacks which failed, as may be seen more in detail in the said copy."—Ibid., item 70.

Historisch Verhaal, part VIII, fol. 104-104 v.o., under date of December, 1624, as follows: "As we have come to the account of the Zealanders, it may not be amiss to relate what was done by Admiral Schout. As he had brought in a good booty, he was sent thither by the West India Company with three ships to infest the Sinum Mexicanum, called the Bay of Honduras, and there to seek his adventure. He himself [meaning his own ship] was admiral, named 'de Hoop,' provided with one hundred and fifty men; the Vice-Admiral, Garbrandt van Middelburgh, with fifty men and eight small pieces, was the 'Eendracht,' and the yacht, with thirty men and some pieces, was called 'de Trouwe.'" See above (in this summary) under May, 1623. Wassenaer goes on to state that the vice-admiral took a fine prize, valued by the Spanish at 16 tons of gold (1,600,000 guilders), and returned to Zeeland. The admiral abandoned his large ship, "de Hoop," which he sent home, and took command of the yacht. Cf. De Laet, Kort Verhaal, in his Jaarlyck Verhaal, p. 10. Wassenaer, pt. V, fol. 42 v.o., under date of May 1623, mentions a prize taken by "de Eendracht," of Enchuyzen, belonging to the fleet under Admiral l'Herminette. This fleet Turkish ships near Port à Port. The prize taken by the "Eendracht" was taken shortly after that time and sent to Amsterdam, where it arrived apparently in June (p. 43 v.o.). This may have been the same ship as the vice-admiral, mentioned above. It was evidently a man-of-war, and presumably not the ship of which Catalina Trico speaks in her deposition. It is possible that the ship "New Netherland" was conveyed by "de Eendracht," and that Catalina Trico got the names mixed.

The above items present an interesting example of Wassenaer's method of dating. The return of "de Hoop" and "de Eendracht," which occurred in Sept., is entered under Dec., whereas he enters under Sept., 1624, the sailing of Schouten on the ship "de Hoop."

1626 Peter Minuit arrives at Manhattan Island, to succeed Willem
 May Verhulst as director-general of New Netherland. He had sailed from Holland on Jan. 9 (p. v.) in the ship "Zee-meew," or "Meeuwen" (Sea-Mew), of which Adriaen Joris (Tienpoint) was skipper.—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 83, 87, 88.

Sum- Soon after Minuit had established his colony on Manhattan
 mer Island, he ordered the outlying families and most of the men at Fort Orange (Albany), as well as all who were at Fort Nassau (Gloucester, N. J.) to concentrate at Manhattan. We know from Wassenaer that by November the "fort at the South River" had already been vacated (Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 86), and that the 8 families at Fort Orange "were to leave this year," . . . "ten or twelve seamen in the Company's service" alone remaining.—Ibid., 85. The "Arms of Amsterdam," which had sailed from New Netherland on Sept. 23, and arrived at Amsterdam on Nov. 4, carried news of this plan to the Fatherland. As already noted, the population of all New Netherland had "now increased to two hundred souls." The purchase of Manhattan Island from the Indians had been effected (see Nov. 5). Director-General Minuit, and Isaac de Rasière, chief commercial agent of the West India Co. in New Netherland, lived together, whilst the others lived in "thirty ordinary houses on the east [sic] side of the river" — i. e., near the strand on the east side of the island, and in temporary hovels built "of the bark of trees." Jan Lempou was schoot, an officer who exercised a composite authority, like that of an English sheriff and a public prosecutor. Concerning the administration of law and order and the occupations of the people, Wassenaer made the following record: "The council there administers justice in criminal matters as far as imposing fines, but not as far as corporal punishment. Should it happen that any one deserves that, he must be sent to Holland with his sentence. . . . Everyone there who fills no public office is busy about his own affairs. Men work there as in Holland; one trades, upwards, southwards and northwards; another builds houses, the third farms. Each farmer has his farmstead on the land purchased by the Company, which also owns the cows; but the milk remains to the profit of the farmer; he sells it to those of the people who receive their wages for work every week."—Historisch Verhaal, under Nov. 1626, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 82-86 (preface dated June 14, 1627); De Laet, New World, in ibid., 54; Schaghen's letter (see Nov. 5).

" Among the first buildings erected upon Manhattan Island, after its settlement under Minuit, was "the counting-house" of the West India Co., "a stone building, thatched with reed."—Wassenaer's Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 83. It was the headquarters of the company's stores, and here its business was transacted under the supervision of its "koopman" or chief commercial agent, Isaac de Rasière, who had arrived in the "Arms of Amsterdam," on July 27 of this year (see Sept. 23).—Letter of de Rasière, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 102. This building did not survive long. It may have been burned in the conflagration which we know early destroyed one of the mills of the company. When Kieft arrived as director-general, in March, 1638, its site could with difficulty be discovered.—Joint deposition of April 16, 1639, in Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 6; see below. In a declaration made by Adam Roelantsen, on Oct. 13, 1638, "the late warehouse for cargoes" is placed near the Strand, on the East River.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 4; Educational Review, XXXVIII: 383. Cf. Hartzers Venn (Pl. 1, Vol. I), in which one of the two or three substantial buildings shown occupies this position. The evidence is so meagre as to make its exact location impossible. It may have been on the Marktvelde (Whitehall) between Bridge and Pearl Sts., as stated by Innes, in New Amsterdam and Its People, 18, 52-53.

The earliest known reference to a mill on Manhattan Island is given by Wassenaer, under November (preface being dated June 14, 1627), as follows: "François Molemaecker [Francis, the millwright] is busy building a horse-mill, over which shall be constructed a spacious room sufficient to accommodate a large congregation, and then a tower is to be erected where the bells brought from Porto Rico will be hung."—Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 83-84. This information is part of the news brought to Holland by the "Arms of Amsterdam," which sailed from Manhattan on Sept. 23, 1626, and shows, therefore, that up till this time one mill was in course of construction, and at the very time that the first crops of grain were ready to be ground into grist. That this "horse-mill" was a grist-mill, and not a bark-mill, as Innes declares, seems to be established by every bit of very early evidence. Michaëlius, the first minister, who organized the first church corporation in New Amsterdam, in his known letters of Aug. 8 and 11, 1628 (p. v.), emphasized the fact that "much lumber" was being cut, "for the purpose of exporting to the Fatherland whole cargoes of timber fit for building houses and ships," and that they were then "making a windmill to saw lumber." He referred also to a mill already in operation. In his letter of Aug. 11, he wrote: "we also have a gristmill."—Letter of Aug. 8, in Versteeg's Manhattan in 1628, 69; letter of Aug. 11, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 131. These two mills, one a saw-mill and the other a grist-mill, are shown in the Manatus survey of 1639. They stood near the forts and are both indicated as wind-mills. The site of the horse-mill is nowhere mentioned in the early records; but there is strong presumptive evidence that it was the mill that was burned some time before the arrival of Michaëlius in 1628. The conflagration, merely hinted at by Michaëlius, is mentioned in a joint deposition made before Kieft, on April 16, 1639, by Jacob Stoffelsen, overseer, Gillis Pietersen van der Gouw, house carpenter, and Tymen Jansen, ship carpenter. They declared that upon the arrival of Kieft, in March, 1638, there were, among other things, "One grist and saw mill in operation; another out of repair, and a third burned."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1847), 279; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 6. This seems to indicate that the grist-mill and the saw-mill near the fort were then the only mills in operation; that the one "out of repair" was the company's saw-mill on Noten (Governors) Island, which was leased on Sept. 13, 1639, to Evert Evertsen Bischoep and others (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 11), and that the "third burned" mill was the horse-mill. This explanation would account for all of the mills known to have been built in the neighbourhood of the Manhattan colony during the first decade after its settlement. In the light of these circumstances, the horse-mill must have been near the "counting-house," also built in 1626, which was destroyed by fire, and whose location we know to have been near the Strand of the East River. Innes, in New Amsterdam, (etc.) 155 et seq., and in a special monograph, in Federation (periodical), Vol. 3, No. 5, avers that the horse-mill of 1626 was a "bark mill" for grinding bark for the tan pits, and he says it was on "the north side" of the lane "early called the Slyck Steegh, or 'muddy lane,' and upon a site now [1903-4] occupied by the buildings Nos. 32 and 34 South William Street." His arguments are not, however, supported by the evidence. There is an hiatus of decades between the erection of the horse-mill in 1626 and the land records that he cites as cumula-

mer tive evidence. These later records do not furnish a connecting link with the horse-mill; moreover, they do not even suggest identification. The supposed building with a "conical roof" which he sees in the so-called Dankers View, and on which he bases so much of his identification, is clearly not a building, but merely a hayrack.—See description of Frontispice, Vol. I.

" The earliest allusion to Christian worship on Manhattan Island is given by the Dutch annalist, Wassenaer, in the passage above quoted regarding the construction over the horse-mill "a spacious room sufficient to accommodate a large congregation," as follows: "Sebastian Jansz. Crol and Jan Huych, comforters of the sick, who, whilst awaiting a clergyman, read to the commonalty there, on Sundays, texts of Scripture and the commentaries [met de glossen]."—Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 83-84.

It is not known in what building the two comforters of the sick first conducted religious services on Manhattan Island, by reading to the people on Sundays; but it was not in the horse-mill, which was only being built, and "over which" it was planned to construct "a spacious room" as a place of worship. The "bells" were, no doubt, among the booty captured at Porto Rico during the expedition of Admiral Boudewijn Hendricksz., in 1625.—De Laet, Jaerlijck Verhael (1644), 59-64.

Bastiaen Jansz. Krol, as he is properly named, was for a time the only "krankenbezoeker" with Minuit's colony on Manhattan, as Jan Huygen (also written Huych), of "Cleve" (Kleeft), who was Minuit's brother-in-law, was still in Amsterdam on April 2, 1626, when he was examined by the church consistory, to be recommended for service in the West Indies as a "sieckentrooster."—Eekhof, Bastiaen Jansz. Krol (The Hague, 1910), 32-33, and app. XXIII. Huygen, therefore, must have come over in the "Arms of Amsterdam," with Isaac de Rasière, arriving on July 27. When, in 1628, Michaëlius, the first regular minister, organized formally the first church society, the consistory comprised the minister, Minuit, Huygen, by that time "the storkeeper of the Company," and Krol, then of Fort Orange.—Letter of Michaëlius, Aug. 11, 1628, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 124, 125.

Krol, apparently, did not long remain a "krankenbezoeker" after the arrival of Huygen in 1626. When the "Arms of Amsterdam" sailed from Manhattan, on Sept. 23, there went home in her Pieter Barentsz., who had been "kommies" and commander at Fort Orange, and Krol was appointed to the vacant post. He seems to have gone to Fort Orange at once, as it is known he "remained there since the year 1626, when the others came down" to augment Minuit's Manhattan colony.—Wassenaer, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 87, 88. It is not likely, therefore, that Krol was either a "krankenbezoeker" or a resident at Manhattan when the horse-mill was ready for religious services. If not, then Huygen was the only active occupant of that office in New Netherland, and the first to conduct a religious service in the first regularly-established place of worship on Manhattan Island.—Cf. Eekhof, op. cit., 34-35.

From 1626 until 1629, Krol commanded at Fort Orange. In the latter year he went back to Holland. Upon his return to New Netherland, in 1630, he was again "kommies" at Fort Orange, and representative of the patroon, Kiliaen van Rensselaer, until 1632. Early in that year, Minuit was recalled to answer for his acts as director-general, and Krol succeeded him in office, from about February or March, for a period of thirteen months, or until the arrival of his successor, Wouter van Twiller, in March, 1633.—Eekhof, 36, 37, 40, 41; Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 302. For earlier history of the Reformed Dutch Church and Krol in New Netherland, see 1624.

July 6 A ship from Virginia with tobacco, in which Director Willelm Snelle is interested, arrives at Vlissingen. This being in violation of the charter, the directors object to his taking his seat until he has purged himself of his offense.

Willelm Snelle refuses to purge himself of the offense, maintaining that he appears by order of his masters, to whom the chamber should address themselves.—Resolution Book of the chamber of Zeelaad, 1626-1674 (Records of the old W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 20). See also March 29, 1624.

Sept. 4 In an inventory of this date giving the effects of the West India Co., mention is made of "Two ships destined for the trade and settlement of the Colony in New Netherland," and of a "ship of about 130 lasts" and a "yacht," which are "well equipped, destined for the trade and colonization of New Netherland, estimated" to be valued "at least, at 120,000 florins."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 35.

The larger ship undoubtedly was the Wapen van Amsterdam, Sept. 4 which was already in the service.—Wassenaer, in Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 83, 87, 88, 102.

Isaac de Rasière, chief commercial agent of the West India Co. and secretary of New Netherland, came over to the province in the ship, the "Arms of Amsterdam," arriving at Manhattan Island on July 27, 1626. On her return voyage to Holland, the "Arms of Amsterdam" reached Amsterdam on Nov. 4. She carried a detailed report by De Rasière, written at "Fort Amsterdam, on the Island of Manhattes," on Sept. 23 (the day that the ship left the colony), and addressed to the directors of the West India Co., in which he gave a full description of the life and difficulties of the Dutch colonists. The original manuscript is lost; but its contents are preserved through one of the Van Rappard papers, known as Document F, a contemporary MS. copy of the original document (40pp., folio). Cf. Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 83, 97-115.

This report is the earliest known extant text of a letter written from Manhattan Island. Although the contemporary copy is now in America, having been bought, with the other Van Rappard Documents by Mr. Henry E. Huntington, in 1911, it has not yet been made public. For such information as is available concerning this very important document which deals with the state of the settlement on Manhattan Island as it existed at the time of De Rasière's arrival, see March 30, 1624.

Wassenaer records the following facts and events under this Nov. month, his preface being dated June 14, 1627. (Although some of these facts and events have been noted in describing conditions existing at Manhattan during the summer of this year, it has seemed best to repeat them here in their proper sequence, just as Wassenaer gives them.)

"The colony is now established on the Manhattes, where a fort has been staked out by Master Kryn Frederyckx, an engineer. It is planned to be of large dimensions. The ship which has returned home this month ["The Arms of Amsterdam," on Nov. 4—see above] brings samples of all sorts of produce growing there, the cargo being 7,246 beaver skins, 675 other skins, 48 mink, 36 wild cat, and various other sorts; many pieces of oak timber and hickory.

"The counting-house there is kept in a stone building, thatched with reed; the other houses are of the bark of trees. Each has his own house. The Director and Koopman [chief commercial agent of the company, acting also as secretary of the province] live together; there are thirty ordinary houses on the east side of the river, which runs nearly north and south. The Honorable Pieter Minuit is Director there at present; Jan Lempou schout; Sebastian Jansz. Crol and Jan Huych, comforters of the sick, who whilst awaiting a clergyman, read to the commonalty there, on Sundays, texts of Scripture and the commentaries, . . .

. . . Cornelis May of Hoorn was the first Director there, in the year 1624; Willem Van Hulst [Verhulst] was the second, in the year 1625. He returns now. . . . The houses of the Hollanders now stand outside the fort, but when that is completed, they will all repair within, so as to garrison it and be secure from sudden attack.

"Those of the South River will abandon their fort [Fort Nassau], and come hither. At Fort Orange, the most northerly point at which the Hollanders traded, no more than fifteen or sixteen men will remain; the remainder will come down [to the Manhattes]. Right opposite is the fort of the Maykams which they built against their enemies, the Maquas [Mohawks], a powerful people. . . .

. . . The families were to leave there [Fort Orange] this year — the fort to remain garrisoned by sixteen men, without women — in order to strengthen with people the colony near the Manhattes, who are becoming more and more accustomed to the strangers. . . . [see Oct., 1628].

"When the fort, staked out at the Manhattes, will be completed, it is to be named Amsterdam. The fort at the South River is already vacated, in order to strengthen the colony. Trading there is carried on only in yachts, in order to avoid expense.

"The Sickennes [or Sequins, dwelling on the Connecticut River] dwell toward the North, between the Brownists and the Dutch. . . .

"The Brownists, who live beyond them, are Englishmen, who removed thither by consent of the King. They call themselves Puritans, because they seek after purity in the Orthodox religion. They wished not to live in England; desiring not wealth, but merely necessities and a moderate condition."—Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 82-86.

1626 Peter Minuit "now sends [to Holland] for his wife thither" (New Amsterdam).—Wassenaar, under Nov., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 87.

5 Pieter Jansen Schaghen, deputy in the states-general from the States of Holland and West Friesland, writes from Amsterdam to the states-general, in session at The Hague: "High Mighty Sirs:

"Here arrived yesterday the ship The Arms of Amsterdam which sailed from New Netherland out of the Mauritius River on September 23; they report that our people there are of good courage, and live peaceably. Their women, also, have borne children there, they have bought the island Manhattes from the wild men for the value of sixty guilders, [It] is 11,000 morgens in extent. They sowed all their grain the middle of May, and harvested it the middle of August. Thereof being samples of summer grain, such as wheat, rye, barley, oats, buckwheat, canary seed, small beans, and flax. The cargo of the aforesaid ship is: 7246 beaver skins, 1784 otter skins [178 half otter skins?], 675 other skins, 48 mink skins, 36 wild-cat [lynx] skins, 33 mink, 34 rat skins. Many logs of oak and nut-wood. Herewith be ye High Mighty Sirs, commended to the Almighty's grace, In Amsterdam, November 5, Ao, 1626

"Your High Might's Obedient,
P. Schaghen."

—The above translation is taken from Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 159; see also N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 37. The validity of this purchase was questioned in 1632, during the diplomatic negotiations between the states-general and England.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 48, 58. For reproduction of the original letter, in the National Archives at The Hague, see Pl. 3, Vol. IV. On Nov. 7, the states-general entered this minute in its book of resolutions: "Received a letter from Mr. Schagen, written at Amsterdam, the 5th inst., containing advice of the arrival of a Ship from New Netherland, which requires no action."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 38.

6 P. van Courten (see Nov. 3, 1623) writes from Middelburg to the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam in regard to a "claim of Jan Prjce [Price], barber [surgeon], which has been several times presented by Sieur de Bats," but "has until oow not been complied with." He says: "The skipper Arjaen Joris [Adriaen Jorisz. Thienpont] has now arrived from New Netherland." Apparently, the surgeon-barber came with him and sought a settlement of his accounts. The letter says of the latter: "Since 8 July, 1623, he has been in your Honore's actual service and continued until now to the day which can be ascertained from the Journal; his barber's [surgeon's] chest, as also the chest in which the peltries were (whereof vander Hulst has received the half), although the said barber [surgeon] has earned the said peltries by [surgeonally] bleeding the Indians, be [vander Hulst] obtained possession of unjustly; his old father, who is being supported by the Poor[-masters], prays most earnestly that still the earned wages may be paid over to him and also that the chests and their contents be handed to Joos and Jan de Bats, and we secure the Honorable Gentlemen [of the Company] against all further claims."—Dutch West India Co. Papers (also called Boontemantel Papers), box 1, in Hist. Soc. of Pa. Skipper Adriaen Joris Thienpont arrived on the 4th instant, which see in Schaghen's letter of Nov. 5.

18 St. Peter's at Rome, which was started in 1506, is dedicated on this day by Urban VIII.

26 On this day, at a meeting at Middelburg in Zealand, a petition, sent by P. Courten to the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., for payment of Jan Price, a surgeon (barbier), is considered, which states that "the skipper Arjaen Joris [Thienpont] has now arrived from New Netherland." This refers to the return of the ship "Arms of Amsterdam" (Wapen van Amsterdam), of which Adriaen Joris Thienpont was skipper, who went to New Netherland on Dec. 19, 1625, with the ship "the Sea-Mew" and conveyed Peter Minuit to the province of which he had been named as director, as stated by Wassenaar (Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 87).—Brasil Papers, box 1, in Hist. Soc. of Pa.

14th of this month the following goods. . . . The aforesaid gentlemen having the management at Amsterdam also caused to be sold publicly various kinds of peltries, [such as] beaver skins, minks, otter skins and lynx, sent to them from New Netherland; as also large quantities of logs, of oak and nut trees, which grow there in great abundance and which with the permission of the natives there are cut down and shipped, being very useful here for many necessary purposes."—Wassenaar, pt. XII, fol. 58-58 vo.

The earliest known view of New Amsterdam, which, if it be authentic, probably depicts the little settlement at this time, appeared in a small volume entitled Beschrjvinghe Van Virginia, Nieuw Nederlandt (etc.) and issued by Joost Hartgers, in Amsterdam, in 1651. For a reproduction and description of this view, see Pl. 1, Vol. I, and Bibliography, Vol. V.

As we have already seen, Kryn Fredericksz. accompanied the New Netherland colonists of 1625, as engineer and surveyor. By his "particular instructions," of April 22, 1625 (Van Rappard Doc. E—see March 30, 1624), he was charged by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. with the construction of a fortification, as well as houses, in such suitable places as might be discovered by the council in New Netherland. Nothing is known definitely of this engineer's work in New Netherland during the year 1625; but after the arrival of Minuit, in 1626, we find him associated with the new director at the newly-established colony on Manhattan Island, "where," in the words of Wassenaar, "a fort has been staked out by Maester Kryn Frederyksz, an engineer. It is planned to be of large dimensions."—Wassenaar, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 83, 86. This reference to the fort is followed in the original by the words: "en compt met het schip dese maent gearveert wederom met monsters van alderhande ghewas aldaer." This, coming directly after the statement about Kryn Frederyksz, can hardly be interpreted otherwise than: "and [he] returns by the ship arrived this month with samples of all sorts of produce there." In other words, we have here a statement of the return to Holland of Kryn Frederyksz in November, 1626. This is earlier than has been inferred from statements in Van Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., 217, 218, and elsewhere, but not necessarily contradictory thereof. The above was the plan entertained prior to Sept. 23, 1626, when the "Arms of Amsterdam" sailed from Manhattan for Holland. At this time it was also deemed expedient to have a fort of "large dimensions" for the accommodation of all of the people within its enclosure, instead of in houses outside, "so as to garrison it and be secure from sudden attack."—Wassenaar, op. cit., 84. De Laet explains this early fear. He says: "On the east side, upon the main land, dwell the Manhattans, a bad race of savages, who have always been very obstinate and unfriendly towards our countrymen."—De Laet, New World, in Jameson, op. cit., 45. The plan of concentration within a large fort was never carried out. Instead, a poor earthwork of a fort was constructed, so poor, indeed, that in less than two years' time "the ramparts crumbled away like sand," and Minuit, in 1628, had resolved on the building of a new fort at Manhattan, "having four bastions and faced outside entirely with stone."—Wassenaar, in Jameson, 88.

"The small fort, New Amsterdam," was now deemed necessary only as a protection against foreign invasion.—Letter of De Rasière, in Jameson, 104; letter of Michaëlius, Aug. 8, 1628, in Versteeg's Manhattan in 1628, 69. Its construction proceeded at a snail's pace. Minuit was succeeded by Krol, and he by Wouter van Twiller, in 1633, but the fort was still incomplete. Jacob Stoffensden, who was overseer of the company's negroes, deposited, on March 22, 1639, that, during the administration of Van Twiller, he had been steadily employed with the negroes "in building Fort Amsterdam, which was completed in the year 1635."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 18. See also Aug. 14, 1636.

In connection with the reverses suffered by the company about this time, we learn that the fort had cost 4,172 guilders, 10 stuivers ($1,666).—Hazard, Historical Collections (1792), I: 397. The subsequent history of the fort proves that the plan of 1628, for facing the fort outside entirely with stone, was not executed.

The following additional notes on the fort (1628 to 1653) are, for the most part, taken from the Chronology, where they will be found under their respective dates. They are gathered together here for more ready reference:—

From the letter of Secretary De Rasière to Samuel Blommaert, written in 1627 or 1628 (see Autumn, 1628), we learn that the "Fort 'New Amsterdam' is building;" and again that "The small

1626-1635 fort, New Amsterdam, [is] commenced to be built."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 102. In Oct., 1628, according to Wassenaar, there was a population of 270 souls, including men, women and children, who "remained as yet without the fort, in no fear, as the natives live peaceably with them." Also, we learn from the letter of Michælius, Aug. 11, 1628, that they were "busy now in building a fort of good quarry stone," being stone near at hand. In his letter of Aug. 8, 1628, he wrote "A new fortress is in course of construction, not so much for protection against the savages . . . as against enemies from abroad."—Ibid., 88.

When Jogues visited Manhattan, in 1643, he found a fort with "four regular bastions," which, with the "curtains," were "but mounds, most of which had crumbled away, so that one entered the fort on all sides. There were no ditches. . . . They were beginning to face the gates and bastions with stone."—Novum Belgium (1646), in ibid., 259.

The desirability of reconstructing Fort Amsterdam of stone, and otherwise repairing it, was again discussed in the report of Dec. 15, 1644, of the "Board of Accounts," which included a suggestion to that effect from the director and commonalty; but the "Board of Accounts," although agreeing with the necessity of immediately repairing the fort, was yet of the opinion that it could be effected in an economical manner by the use of "good clay and firm sods" (N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 152-53).

These latter ideas were actually included in the "instructions to the Director and Council of New Netherland," July 7, 1645 (ibid., I: 161).

By 1648, there were "whole streets full of houses close under Fort New Amsterdam" (N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 94-96), as Van Slichtenhorst, director of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, states in a protest against Stuyvesant.

Stuyvesant, in his report on the surrender of 1664, said that when he arrived, in 1648, the fort resembled a molehill rather than a fortress, being without gates, and the walls and bastions trodden under foot by men and cattle (Jameson, 459). In this he agrees with Jogues's observations of 1643, and with the "Memorial of the Eight Men to the States General," Nov. 3, 1643 (N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 139), as well as with that of the "Eight Men" to the "Assembly of XIX," on Oct. 24, 1643 (ibid., 190).

In the "Remonstrance of New Netherland," July 28, 1649 (printed as the Vertoogh, 1650), we are told that the fort "lies like a molehill or a tottering wall." From the first it has been declared that it should be repaired, laid in five angles, and put in royal condition.—"Representation of New Netherland," in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 331.

In the "Defence of Hendrick van Dyck, Fiscal in New Netherland," dated Sept. 18, 1652, Van Dyck said, with regard to the aforementioned instructions of July 7, 1645, that "In the year 1648, the Director, independent of the Deputy and me requested the Select men to lend a hand to finish the fort, who gave for answer, that they understood nothing about it [etc.] . . . After which, in the year 1651, the Director . . . had the outside of the fort faced with flat sods by the Company's Negroes. But as the soil is sandy and the foundation weak, the sods mostly sagged and fell to pieces, so that the inhabitants' swine damaged the fort. . . . After that, the Director through Willem Beckman, also one of his Select men, borrowed firewood here and there, with which the fort is now [1652] set off."

From the foregoing memoranda, it would appear that Kryn Fredericzk staked out a fort in 1626, after the settlement of the colony under Minuit; that it was planned to be of large dimensions, so as to accommodate the entire colony within its walls; that meanwhile thirty ordinary houses built of the bark of trees, perhaps some of them dugouts, were used as temporary shelters by the inhabitants; that these houses were all outside of the fort, because the fort was not completed; that in October, 1628, a fort having four bastions was being built, and faced outside entirely with stone, because the former ramparts had crumbled away like sand, and were now (1528) to be made more substantial; that this 1628 fort was called a small fort; that the population of 270 souls "remained as yet without the fort," having no fear of the natives; that, as we know from the letter of Michælius dated Aug. 11, 1628, they were then busy building a fort of good quarry stone, which stone was obtainable close at hand; that, as we know further from the letter of Michælius dated Aug. 8, 1628, "a new fortress is in course of construction;" that this fort had not been completed by Aug. 14, 1636 (q. v.), but that by 1643, when Jogues described it as having "four regular bastions," the curtains were mounds, most of which had crumbled away, leaving embrasures to be entered on all sides, and that then (1643) they were beginning to face the gates (gateways) and bastions with stone; that meanwhile, and by 1648, whole streets of houses had been built close to the walls of the fort (note that many of the houses had been destroyed by the Indians in 1643—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 190-91); that the fort resembled a molehill from 1643 to 1649; that a suggestion was made in 1644 for immediately repairing the fort; that this suggestion from the director and commonalty contemplated constructing Fort Amsterdam of stone, and otherwise repairing it; but that the "Board of Accounts" favoured economy and, as a counter suggestion, proposed that the fort be repaired with "good clay and firm sods;" that the director and council were instructed from Holland, on July 7, 1645, to carry out the plan of the Board of Accounts, that the director, in 1648, sought the coöperation of the selectmen of the town, who, however, evaded him; that he then, in 1651, had the outside of the fort faced with flat sods by the negroes of the company, but these, on account of the sandy soil and weak foundation, mostly sagged and fell to pieces within a year; that in 1652, the director borrowed firewood and had it used to "set off" the fort.

The above facts, taken collectively, would seem to show that there was no solid stone fort; that the one begun in 1626 was an earthwork; that the one begun in 1628, to replace the former, was only partly of stone, perhaps only the foundations; that the ramparts and bastions were sodden; that an attempt was made in 1643 to strengthen and render more permanent the gateways and bastions by facing them with stone, and that Stuyvesant, on his arrival in 1648, found the fort "more a molehill than a fortress, without gates, the walls and bastions trodden under foot by men and cattle."

No doubt proposals were made and considered from time to time for the use of stone, but the evidence shows that these proposals were generally not carried out, certainly not in full.

1627

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 56,170 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in four ships to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 7,520 beavers and 370 otters valued at 56,420 guilders.—Ibid., 29.

Isaac de Rasière, secretary of the Dutch colony at New Amsterdam, begins an interesting correspondence with the English colony at New Plymouth. Bradford, in his history entitled Of Plymouth Plantation, writes:

"This year also they [the government at New Plymouth] had letters, and messengers from the Dutch-plantation, sent unto them from the Governour ther, written both in Dutch and French. The Dutch had traded in these southerne parts, diverse years before they came; but they begane no plantation here till 4. or 5. years after their [the New Plymouth colonists'] coming, and here beginning. Their letters were as followeth. It being their manner to be full of complementall titles. [Here follows the letter from Isaac de Rasière, secretary of the Dutch colony at New Amsterdam, to the governour of the Plymouth plantation, reading as follows:]

"Edele, Eerenfeste Wyse Voorsinnige Heeren, den Gouverneur, ende Raeden in Nieu-Pliemuen residentende; onse seer Goede vrienden.

"Den directeur ende Raed van Nieu-Nederlands, wenssen vae Ede: eerfeneste, ende wijse voorsinnige gdeluck salichit [gluckzaligheid], In Christi Jesu onsen Heere; met goede voorspoet, ende gesontheit, naer siele, ende lichaem, Amen."

"The rest I shall render in English, leaving out the repetition of superfluous titles.

"We have often before this wished for an opportunite or an occasion to congratulate you, and your prosperous and praiseworthy undertakings, and Government of your colony ther. And the more, in that we also have made a good beginning to pitch the foundation of a colonic hear; and seeing our native country lies not far from yours, and our forefathers (diverse hundred years agoe) have made and held friendship and alliance with your ancestors, as sufficiently appears by the old contractes and entercourses . . . against our commone enimie the Spaniards . . .

1627 " And also seeing it hath some time since been reported unto
Mar. us, by some of our people, that by occasion came so farr northward 9 with their shalop, and met with sundry of the Indians, who told them that they were within halfe a days journey of your plantation, and offered their service to cary letters unto you; therefore we could not forbear to salute you with these few lines, with presentation of our good will and service unto you, in all friendly kindnes and neighbourhood. And if it so fall out that any goods that comes to our hands from our native country, may be serviceable unto you, we shall take ourselves bound to help and accommodate you ther with; either for beaver or any other wares or merchandise that you should be pleased to deale for. And if in case we have no commodity at present that may give you contente, if you please to sell us any beaver, or otter, or such like commodities as may be usefull for us, for ready money, and let us understand therof by this bearer in writing, (whom we have apoynted to stay . 3 . or . 4 . days for your answer), when we understand your minds therein, we shall depute one to deale with you, at such place as you shall appointe. In the mean time we pray the Lord to take you, our honoured good freinds and neighbours, into his holy protection.

" From the Manhathas, in the fort Amsterdam, March . 9 . Anno 1627."—Governour Bradford's Letter Book, printed in Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed., Boston, 1912), II: 19-24. Commenting on De Rasiere's letter, Ford says: "There can be no question that Manhattan received from the West India Company a better assortment of Indian goods than New Plymouth enjoyed, and, being a trading settlement, developed a keener commercial sense and a wider experience than did the settlers at New Plymouth.
This experience was marked by some great errors and blunders which impelled their relations and friendship with the Indians;
but on the whole the Dutch, lying as they did between two hostile tribes, the Mohawks and the Molegans, evidenced quite as high skill in maintaining trade connections with the natives as did the French. Had Rasiere realized the interest of New Plymouth in the development of a trade for furs, made all the more necessary by the agreement with the London Adventurers, he would not have made a proposition that could be interpreted only as one injurious to the interests of New Plymouth. Bradford meets it by asking prices and if other produce would be taken, and suggested the measure for controlling the trade in furs."

"Rasiere was a French [speaking] Protestant, a Walloon, and had become 'Oppeer Koopman' or chief commissary under Director Minuit at New Netherland, acting at the same time as Secretary of the Colony. He went out on the ship Arms of Amsterdam, which arrived at New Netherland on July 27, 1626 (N. S.)."—Ibid., II: 24. See Sept. 23, 1626; Van Rappard Doc. F. De Rasiere is believed to have returned to Holland in the late autumn of 1627 or 1628 (q. v.), when his letter to Blommaert was written.

Referring in his "Letter Book" to this same correspondence, Bradford says:

"This year we had letters sent us from the Dutch plantation, of whom we had heard much by the natives, but never could hear from them nor meet with them before themselves thus writ to us, and after sought us out; their letters were writ in a very fair hand, the one in French, and the other in Dutch, but were one verbatim, so far as the tongue would bear."—From Bradford's "Letter Book," quoted in Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), II: 19;
Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1st ser., III: 51.

No trace has been found of any similar correspondence, during these early years, between New Netherland and Virginia. Indeed, De Vries, writing from the South River, tells us in his Journal, under date of March 5, 1633, that "There had never been any one there from this quarter, I said, as I had escaped [afgesteen] the danger in the South river, I would be [also] the first one of our nation to venture to the English in Virginia, from these parts, as the distance is not more than thirty miles from the South river [Suyd-Bay] or Cape Hinlopen."—Voyages of De Vries (trans. by Murphy), 46.
On the 11th, recording his interview with the English governour at Jamestown, he quotes the latter as saying that the Virginia colonists had not visited the South River since Lord Delaware "had encountered foul weather there some years ago, and finding the place full of shoals, thought it was not navigable. They had, therefore, never looked after it since, but it was their King's land, and not New Netherland . . . He had, indeed, heard that we had a fort in the fortieth degree of latitude, at Hudson's river as they call it, and that a sloop was sent there last September, with seven or eight men, to see whether there was a river there, who had not returned.

. . ."—Ibid., 50-51.

Gov. Bradford of New Plymouth replies to the letter written by Isaack de Rasiere at Fort Amsterdam on March 9 (q. v.):

"To the Honourable, etc. [The Letter Book gives the superscrip-tion: "To the Honourable and Worshipful and council of New Netherland our very loving and worthy friends and christian neighbours"]

"The Governour] and Councell of New-Plim[outh] wisheth your Honors and worshipps all happiness, and prosperity in this life, and eternal rest and glory with Christ Jesus our Lord in the world to come. We have received your letters, etc. wherein appeareth your good wills and friendship towards us; but is expressed with over high titles, more then belongs to us, or is meete for us to receive.
But for your good will, and congratulations of our prosperitie in these smale beginnings of our poore colonie, we are much bound unto you, and with many thanks doe acknowledge the same; taking it both for a great honour done unto us, and for a certaine testimony of your love and good neighbourhood.

"Now these are further to give your Worshippes to understand, that it is to us no smale joye to hear, that his majestie hath not only bene pleased to confirme that ancient amitie, alliance, and friendship, and other contracts, formerly made and ratified by his predecessors of famous memorie, but hath him selfe (as you say) strengthened the same with a new-union the better to resist the pride of that commone enemy the Spaniard, from whose cruelty the Lord keep us both, and our native countries. Now forasmuch as this is sufficiente to unite us to gather in love and good neighbourhood, in all our dealings, yet are many of us further obliged, by the good and courteous entreaty which we have found in your country; having lived their many years, with freedome, and good contente, as also many of our freinds doe to this day; for which we,
and our childeen after us, are bound to be thankfull to your Nation, and shall never forgett the same, but shall hartely desire your good and prosperity, as our owne, for ever.

"Likewise for your friendly tender, and offer to accommodate and help us with any commodities or merchandise you have, or shall come to you, either for beaver, otters, or other wares, it is to us very acceptable, and we doubt not but in short time we may have profitable commerce and trade together. But may you please to understand that we are but one particular colony or plantation in this laod, there being divers others besides, unto whom it hath pleased those Honourable Lords of his Majesty's Council for New England, to grant the like commission, and ample privileges to them (as to us) for their better profit and subsistence; namely to expulse, or make prize of any, either strangers or other English, which shall attempt, either to trade or plant within their limits (without their special licence and commission) which extends to forty degrees: Yet for our parts, we shall not goe to molest or trouble you in any thing, but continue all good neighbourhood and correspondence as far as we may; only we desire that you would forbear to trade with the natives in this bay, and river of Naragansett and Sowames, which is (as it were) at our doors:
The which if you do, we think also no other English will go about any way to trouble or hinder you; which otherwise are resolved to solicit his Majesty for redress, if otherwise they cannot help themselves. But for this year we are fully supplied with all necessaries, both for cloathing and other things; but hereafter it is like we shall deale with you, if your rates be reasonable. And therefore when you please to send us againe by aoy of yours, we desire to know how you will take beaver, by the pounce, and otters, by the skine; and how you will deal per cent; for other commodities, and what you can furnish us with. As likewise what other commodities from us may be acceptable unto you, as tobacco, fish, corne, or other things, and what prizes you will give, etc.

"Thus hoping that you will pardon and excuse us for our rude and imperfect writing in your language, and take it in good part, because for wante of we cannot so well express that we understand, nor haply understand everything so fully as we should.
And so we humbly pray the Lord for his mercie sake, that he will take both us and you into his keeping and gracious protection.

19-29 Following this letter, Bradford records: "After this ther was many passages between them both by letters and other entercourse; and they had some profitable commerce together for diverse years, till other occasions interrupted the same, as may happily appear afterwards, more at large."—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), II: 25-26, 27; *Mass. June Gov. Bradford of New Plymouth writes to the council of New 15-25 England and to Gorges concerning the Dutch plantation at Manhattan, and, with his letter to the council, forwards De Rasière's letter of March 9 (q.v.). In a note in his "Letter Book," he gives his reasons for this: "We well knew likewise, that this dealing and friendship with the Dutch (though it was wholly sought of themselves) yet it would procure us envy from others in the land, and that at one time or other, our enemies would take occasion to raise slanders and frame accusations against us for it; therefore, to prevent their malice, as also to shew the sincerity of our dealing and our loyal and dutiful respect to his Majesty and the Honourable Council for New England; we sent their first letter (with their [our?] answer thereto and their reply to the same) unto the Council as may appear more particularly by our letters following [To the Council of New England]

"Right Honourable,

"We held it our bounden duty to inform and acquaint your Lordships and Honours, with all such occurrences and matters of note as do here befall, and may any way concern the estate of this country, in either the good or hurt thereof, which, next his Majesty, stands under your honourable governments and protection; or which may, in any sort, be worthy your wise and prudent considerations. May it please your Honours and Lordships to understand, that of late we received letters from the Dutch plantation, who usiog to trade near unto us, had order to stay for an answer from us; and the effect of their letters being friendly and congratulatory, we answered them in like sort; since which time, we received another from them, but had had as yet no opportunity to give answer thereto. Their first letters were two loose in French, the other in Dutch, but both one in effect and verbatim, so far as the proprieties of the tongues will bear; the French, with the copies both of our answer and their reply, we have here enclosed sent unto your Honours' view, that according to your honourable directions thereto, we may govern ourselves, in our dealings with them. We further understand that for strength of men and fortification, they far exceed us, and all in this land. We cannot likewise forbear to complain unto your Lordships, of the irregular living of many in this land, who without either patent or licence, order or government, live, trade, and truck, not with any intent to plant, but rather to forage the country, and get what they can, whether by right or wrong, and then be gone; So as such, as have been and are at great charge to settle plantations, will not be able to subsist, if some remedy be not provided, both with these and the inordinate course of fishermen, who begin to leave fishing, and fall wholly to trading, to the great detriment of both the small beginning here, and the state of Eogland, by the unprofitable consumm of the victuals of the land upon these salvages: Whereas plantations might here better raise the same in the land, and so be enabled both to subsist and to return the profit thereof into England for other necessities, which would be beneficial to the commonwealth. Our humble suits therefore to your good Lordships is, that you would take some such order for redress herein, as shall seem best to your honourable wisdoms, for the relief of all the plantations in the land. So in all humbleness we commit ourselves to your honourable direction, and you to the protection of the Almighty, resting

"Yours ever at commaundment,

[The other letter, to Sir Ferdinando Gorges, follows:]

"Honourable Sir,

"My humble duty remembered; we have of late received letters from the Dutch plantation, and have had speech with some of them; I hold it my duty to acquaint your Worship and the rest of the Honourable Council therewith, unto whom we have likewise writ and sent the copies of their letters, that, together with their aud your honourable directions, we may know how to order ourselves hereint. They have used trading there this six or seven and twenty years, but have begun to plant of later time, and now have reduced their trade to some order, and confined it only to their company, which heretofore was spoiled by their seamen and interlopers, as ours is this year most notoriously, of whom we have made complaint in our letters to the Council, not doubting but we shall find worshipful furtherance thereto. We are now upon concluding with our adventurers, and shall be put upon hard straits of great payments, which we are enforced to make, for sundry years, or else to leave all, which will be to us very difficult; and, to say the truth, if these disorders of fishermen and interlopers be not remedied, no plantations are able to stand, but will decay, whereas otherwise they may subsist and flourish: Thus in all humbleness I take leave, and rest,

"At your service,

"William Bradford.

"Plymouth, June 15, Anno 1627.

"P. S. Besides the spoiling of the trade this year, our boat and men had like to have been cut off by the Indians, after the fishermen were gone, for the wrongs which they did them, in stealing their skins and other abuses offered them, both the last year and this; and besides they still continue to truck pieces, powder, and shot with them, which will be the overthrow of all, if it be not looked unto."—From "Governour Bradford's Letter Book" in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (1810), 57.

The Dutch at Manhattan sent Jan Jacobsen of Wieringen with a letter to the governour and council of the English colony at New Plymouth, to which Bradford, in his "Letter Book," after quoting the letter of March 19, thus refers, under date of Aug. 7, 1627: "Next follows their reply to this our answer, very friendly, but maintaining their right and liberty to trade in those parts, which we had desired they would forbear; alleging that as we had authority and commission from our king, so they had the like from the States of Holland, which they would defend." The text of the letter is known only through the above comment by Bradford.—Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (1794), 53. It brought forth a threat from the English governour under date of Aug. 14, 1627 (q.v.), which was communicated, probably by Mianit, to the "Assembly of the XIX" in Holland, with a request for forty soldiers to maintain the Dutch settlement against English invasion. See Nov. 16, 1627.

Gov. Bradford sends the following letter to the Dutch at Manhattan, in reply to their letter of Aug. 7, sent by Jan Jacobsen, maintaining their right to trade by authority and commission of the states-general:

"We have received your letters, dated the 7th of August, and with them a rundlet of sugar, and two Holland cheeses, by John Jacobson of Wiring; for which we give you many thanks, and must remain your debtors till another time, not having any thing to send you for the present that may be acceptable: Further, you shall understand that it is also our resolution and hearty desire to hold and continue all friendship and good neighbourhood with you, as far as we may and lies in our power; we desire also that we might have opportunity (according as you write) by word of mouth, to confer together touching our mutual commerce and trading in such things as our countries afford; and would now have sent one, but that one of our boats is abroad, and we have much business at home: But if by the next you would please to depute one (according as you have propounded) to come hither and to confer hereabouts, we should be glad, and he should be welcome. If not, we shall send as soon as conveniently we can (after harvest) if we can know when your bark comes this way. We cannot likewise omit (out of our love and good affection toward you and the trust you repose in us) to give you warning of the danger which may befall you, that you may prevent it; for if you light either in the hauds of those of Virginia, or the fishing ships, which come to New Eogland, peradventure they will make prize of you, if they can, if they find you trading within those limits; as they surprised a colony of the French, not many years since, which was seated within these bounds: For howsoever you allege in your former letter, that you have navigated and traded in these parts above this twenty-six years, and that your company have now authority from the States and the Prince of Orange to do so; yet you must understand, that her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth, of famous memory, hath begun to navigate and plant in these lands well nigh forty years ago, as appeareth by her patents

Oct. De Rasière, secretary of the New Netherland Colony, at the send a deputy to the English colony to confer on trading matters, arrives off Frenchman's Point, in Manomet or Buzzard's Bay, in the ship "Nassau," whence he sends the following letter to the English governour:

"Monsieur Monseigneur, William Bradford, Gouverneur in Nieu-Plemeën. [The letter is "put in English" by Bradford.]

"After the wishing of all good unto you, this serves to let you understand, that we have received your (acceptable) letters, dated the 14th of the last month, by John Jacobson of Wiring who besides, by word of mouth, hath reported unto us your kind and friendly entertainment of him; For which cause (by the good liking and approbation of the Directors and Council) I am resolved to come myself, in friendship to visit you, that we may by word of mouth friendly communicate of things together; as also to report unto you the good will and favour that the Honourable Lords of the authorized West-Indian company bear towards you. And to show our willingness of your good accommodation, have brought with me some cloth of three sorts and colours, and a chest of white sugar, as also some seawan, &c. not doubting but, if any of them be serviceable unto you, we shall agree well enough about the prices thereof. Also John Jacobson aforesaid hath told me, that he came to you over land in six hours, but I have not gone so far this three or four years, wherefore I fear my feet will fail me; so I am constrained to entreat you to afford me the easiest means, that I may, with least weariness, come to congratulate with you: So leaving other things to the report of the bearer, shall herewith end; remembering my hearty salutations to yourself and friends, &c. from aboard the bark Nassau, the 4th of October [Sept. 24, 1627]; before Frenchman's point."

"So," Bradford notes, "according to his request, we sent our boat for him, who came honourably attended with a noise of trumpeters; he was their upper commis, or chief merchant, and second to the Governour; a man of a fair and genteel behaviour, but soon after fell into disgrace amongst them; by reason of their factions; and thus at length we came to meet and deal together. We at this time bought sundry of their commodities, especially their sewan or wampampack, which was the beginning of a profitable trade with us and the Indians: We further understood, that their masters were willing to have friendship with us and to supply us with sundry commodities, and offered us assistance against the French if need were. The which, though we know it was with an eye to their own profit, yet we had reason both kindly to accept it and make use of it: So after this sundry of them came often to us, and many letters passed between us, the which I will pass by, as being about particular dealings, and would not be here very pertinent; only upon this passage we wrote one to their Lords and masters [on Oct. 1/11]; as followeth:

1=11 "Right Honourable and Worthy Lords, &c.
 "We understand by your agent, Mr. Isaac Razier, who is at this present with us (and hath demeaned himself to your Honours' and his own credit) of your honourable and respective good intea-tions towards us, which we humbly acknowledge with all thankfulness, and shall ever be ready in the performance of all offices of good and christian neighbourhood, towards your colony and plantation here, and in all satisfactory correspondence to your Honours, so far as in us lieth, and may stand with our allegiance to the King's most excellent Majesty, our sovereign lord, the King of Great-Britain; acknowledging ourselves tied in a strict obligation unto your country and state, for the good entertainment and free liberty which we had, and our brethren and countrymen yet there have and do enjoy, under our most honourable lords the States; and so shall be ready to accommodate ourselves to your good satisfaction: For the propositions of your agent concerning the matter of trade and commerce, we will have due and respective consideration, wishing it had been sooner propounded at the beginning of the year, before we sent our factor into England and Holland about our trade and supplies; for, till his return, we can determine of nothing, not yet knowing certainly what issue there will be of the business between the merchants our partners, and ourselves; and therefore desire suspension of our determination and resolution herein till the next year, we being not yet altogether free in respect of our engagements unto them: In the mean time we will digest it in our best cogitations: only we desire your Honours, that ye would take into your wise and honourable considerations, that which we conceive may be a hindrance to this accommodation, and may be a means of much future evil, if it be not prevented, namely, that you clear the title of your planting in these parts, which his Majesty hath, by patent, granted to divers his nobles and subjects of quality; least it be a bone of division in these stirring evil times, which God forbid: We persuade ourselves, that now [sic] may be easily and seasonably done, which will be harder and with more difficulty obtained hereafter, and perhaps not without blows; so there may be assured peace and good correspondence on all parts, and our selves more free and able to contract with your Honours. Thus commending our best service to our most noble Lords, praying for the prosperous success of your worthy designs, we rest your Lordships'

Commenting on this visit, in his history of Plimoth Plantation, Bradford notes under the year 1628 (an error for 1627):

"This year the Dutch sent againe unto them [New Plimoth] from their plantation, both kind letters, and also diverse commodities, as sugar, linen cloth, Holand finer and coarser stufes, etc. They came up with their barke to Manamete, to their house ther, in which came their Secretarie Rasiere; who was accompanied with a voyse of trumpeters, and some other attendants; and desired that they would send a boat for him, for he could not travell so far over land. So they sent a boat to Manonsussett, and brought him to the plantation, with the cheefe of his company. And after some few days entertainment, he returned to his barke, and some of them wente with him, and bought sundry of his goods; after which beginning thus made, they sente often times to the same place, and had entercourse together for diverse years; and amongst other commodities, they vendded much tobacco for linen cloth, stufes, etc., which was a good benefite to the people, till the Virginians found out their plantation."—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), II: 41-42.

Possibly in the autumn of 1627, but more likely in the autumn of 1628 (q. v.), Isaac de Rasière, who arrived in New Amsterdam on July 27, 1626 (q. v.), as commercial agent of the West India Company, and was secretary of the province, wrote to his superior, Samuel Blommaert, one of the directors of the W. I. Co. (Amsterdam chamber), from Holland, probably shortly after his return there from New Netherland, giving a detailed account of the Dutch settlement at New Amsterdam, and also some very interesting facts concerning the Plymouth Plantation. For extracts from this letter, and a discussion of its probable date, see Autumn, 1628.

A committee of four members of the "Assembly of the XIX," Nov. submits a report to the states-general, the fourth item of which 16 reads: "The last letters from New Netherland bring word, that the English of New Plymouth threaten to drive away those there, — At some time prior to 1628, the West India Co. laid out six farms or bouweries on Manhattan Island.—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth. 104. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 5, 6, 19, 20. For description of Bouwery No. 1, often referred to as "the Noble Company's Great Bouwery," see Manatus Maps, II: 187-88; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946. See also April 22, 1618.

Bouwery No. 2 was south of Bouwery No. 1; that is, on the modern map, bounded west by The Bowery and Third Ave., north by Stuyvesant St., east by the river, and south by a line which ran irregularly a little north-eastward from 4th St. to The Bowery to 8th St. at the East River.—See Liber GG: 207 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pls. 41, 42 and 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

Bouwery No. 3, Bylevelt's Bouwery (Van Rensselaer Bouwre Manuscripts, 225-29, 317-18), was east of a line which, beginning a little south of the present intersection of Eldridge St. with Rivington St., ran northward and north-eastward to about the intersection of 9th St. and Avenue A, thence eastward to the river, which was its eastern boundary; the southern boundary was a line which ran north-eastwardly straight from the point above referred to, near Eldridge and Rivington Sts., to the river, somewhat south of 5th St.—See Liber GG: 120 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pls. 41, 42, and 42a, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

The north line of Bouwery No. 4 extended from The Bowery, just south of Delancey St., north-eastward to the line of Corlar's plantation, which bounded it on the east, from Suffolk St., just north of Stanton St., south-east to Clinton St., a little south of Broome St. The southerly line of this bouwery ran thence westwardly to The Bowery at Canal St.—See Liber GG: 134 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pls. 41, 42, and 42a, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

Bouwery No. 5 was on the south, bounding No. 4 from Canal St. and The Bowery to a point in Stanton St. just north of Broome St.; its east line running thence southerly to the intersection of Division and Attorney Sts., the southern boundary running through the centre of Division St. to Chatham Square.—See Liber GG: 129 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pls. 41, 42, and 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

The north line of Bouwery No. 6, the southernmost of the West India Company's farms, ran from Chatham Square north-eastwardly up Division St. to Ridge St., thence south-eastwardly to Henry St. near Grand, to Cherry. The west boundary ran along Catharine St. to Cherry St., which formed the south line of the farm.—See Liber GG: 195 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pls. 41, 42, and 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

— The earliest known picture of New Amsterdam—the Hartgers View, perhaps drawn by Cryn Fredericxsz, and, to a certain extent, anticipatory—dates from this period, or possibly a year or two earlier. For reproduction and description, see Vol. I, Pl. 1-a.

— The population of Manhattan Island in this year was 270 "souls, men, women and children."—Wassenaer in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 89.

— There were no shipments of goods and merchandise in this year by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. from Holland to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 6,951 beavers and 734 otters and other peltries, valued at 61,075 guilders.—Ibid., 29.

— In this year, William Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood.

Jan. — "Thunder and wind storms from October until the 23d of January were so frequent that there are few who have witnessed the like before. Ships were seen at the Texel that had three times cut down their masts and set them up again. Finally, after the wind had blown mostly from the west and the north, it veered on the 23d to the north-east, whereof the fleet, 210 strong, took due notice and so put to sea. Among them were 18 West India [vessels], both ships and yachts, of which mention has been made before, as also the ship the 'Drie Coninghen' bound for Virginia [Virginia], and the ship 'Schiedam' for East India and many for the Strait of Gibraltar, equipped pursuant to the order of the Lords States [General]."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, pt. XIV, fol. 75 vo. In the margin appears the printed note: "Fleet put to sea on the 24th of this month." This is the ship the "Three Kings" (the Dutch name for Epiphany), which returned in October 1628 from New Netherland. See Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 87-88. The ship was quite likely intended to be despatched on the 6th of January, 1628, but was delayed by storms. Michaëlius (Jameson, 122) says that he sailed on the 24th of January, so apparently he came out in this ship. See Addenda.

In this month, the Rev. Jonas Michaëlius arrived in New Amsterdam, and "From the beginning," established "the form of a church."—Letter of Jonas Michaëlius, Aug. 11, 1628, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 122, 124. This church organization continues to-day, as the Collegiate Church of New York, the oldest communion of the Dutch Reformed Church in America.

The "Petition of Right" is reluctantly assented to by King Charles I. In this document, famous for its emphasis on the rights of Englishmen, the house of commons declares against (1) arbitrary punishment, (2) billeting of soldiers and sailors, (3) martial law, (4) forced loans.—Gardner, Const. Docs. of the Puritan Revolution (3d ed.), 66-70.

The Rev. Jonas Michaëlius writes from New Amsterdam on this day a letter, the original holograph of which still exists and is the earliest known to be extant written from Manhattan Island. It is addressed to "Sir, D. Joannes Forest, Secretary to the Hon. Lords of the Executive Council of the States of North Holland and West Friesland." For facsimile reproduction, see Pl. 4, Vol. IV. For the earliest known text of a letter written from Manhattan Island (extant only in a contemporary copy), see Sept. 23, 1626. Michaëlius says, in part:

... After having waited long and impatiently for a favorable wind in the Texel, on January 24th of the present year we at last set sail with a large fleet of vessels. The voyage lasted rather long and was difficult and perilous, especially about the Bermudas and the rough coasts of this country. Our treatment on board was rather severe and mean through the fault of a very wicked and ungodly cook, and of our skipper Evert Croeger, with whom, prior to this, I had made long voyages, but never before did I know him well. At that time he was under orders of Mr. Lam, and resembled more a child than a man; but now, being in supreme command of the ship, he appeared like a petty king in authority, but as unmannerly as a big buffalo. . . . We reached here only the 7th of April, much tired out. . . . I cannot say whether or not I shall remain here any longer after the three years shall have expired. I expect to be governed in this matter by the fruits of my ministrations, and the convenience I shall find in living here with my family. Food here is scanty and poor. Fresh butter and milk are difficult to obtain, owing to the large number of people and the small number of cattle and farmers. . . . We need nothing so much as horses and cows, and industrious workers for the building of houses and fortresses, who later could be employed in farming, in order that we may produce sufficient dairy products and crops. . . . True, this island is the key and principal stronghold of the country, and needs to be settled first, as is already done; but it is somewhat less fertile than other spots, and causes more trouble on account of the multitude of roots of shrubs and trees. Recently we have explored some favorably situated lands near by, which have good soil, and which, on account of their proximity, could be easily protected. If the Lords Masters, being now informed about this, would agree to send us cattle and people, we should be, humanly speaking, secure. At the upper end of the river near Fort Orange, lies open for us a large tract of remarkably fertile and pleasant land, as its inhabitants, the Mohicans have abandoned it, having fled from there for fear of the Mohawks, their enemies, who are too strong for them; and also for fear of us, because they had faithlessly schemed to murder our people, and treacherously plotted to surprise the aforesaid fort. . . . We lack only sufficient people to occupy that country, as well as the one nearer to us. For a small sum of money we can buy of them a large quantity of land; and besides there are enough old and fresh causes to take possession of their land. . . . by way of confiscation, on account of much treachery and many offenses committed against us. These have never been forgiven them, nor adjusted by any treaty, but have been reserved for the certain purpose, at the propitious time, to make use of them to the advantage of the Company and of this place. The air here is very healthful, yet the changes of heat and cold are usually sudden. The days in summer are somewhat shorter, and in winter are a little longer, than in the Fatherland, as your 1628 Hooor will be quite well able to deduce from the difference of the climate. The country produces many species of good things which greatly serve to ease life: fish, birds, game, and groves, oysters, tree-fruits, fruits from the earth, medicinal herbs and others of all kinds. But all is as yet uncultivated, and remains in a wild state as long as no better regulations are made to have things arranged by people who understand the work and make it their business, which, apparently, will be gradually done. A new fortress is in course of construction, not so much for protection against the savages. . . . as against enemies from abroad. They are meanwhile beginning to build new houses in place of the hovels and holes in which heretofore they huddled rather than dwelt. They are also cutting wood and erecting another mill for the purpose of exporting to the Fatherland whole cargoes of timber fit for building houses and ships. And for building purposes there is a greater lack of laborers than of materials. For besides many kinds of good timber, there is here clay for the making of bricks and tiles though rather poor, but the quarry stones, not far away, are better for our use, and there are large quantities of oyster shells to burn for lime. The promise of the Lords Masters to grant me 6 or 7 morgens of land to support myself in place of free board, which otherwise would be my requisite, is worth nothing. For their Honors themselves knew perfectly well that neither horses nor cows nor laborers are to be had here for money. And this is the first item of the bill; time will show what else will follow. Thus we lead a hard and sober existence like poor people. Verily it should not be so, though suffering is salutary, as the saying is among the nuns; for they [the Lords] themselves also well know that empty cupboards make mad Beguines. Everything begins to succeed now better than before, for much labor and expense have been in vain. The Masters have been misled in many respects through false reports and advice. Some Directors and Heads, by bad management, have rather kept back than helped the people and the country, and many among the common people would have liked to make a living and even to get rich, in idleness rather than by hard work, saying they had not come to work; that as far as working is concerned they might as well have staid at home, and that it was all one whether they did much or little, if only in the service of the Company. Such expressions were the burden of the song one heard all day long. And this sort of people were all, in course of time, reshipped home as useless ballast. Here and there many forts, also, founded on uncertain resolutions, had been projected, and were left half finished because it was yet undetermined where, in the end, a permanent settlement would be made. Through the Lord's mercy we have begun to establish here a Christian congregation. . . . Further, should your Honor wish to learn any more concerning myself or regarding this country, the bearer of this letter, Jan Janssen Brouwer, will be able . . . to satisfy you, because he has long ranged these coasts as skipper and trader. . . . It is too soon for me to know much about rare or beautiful objects here, because having only recently arrived I have been very busy, and besides I could not very well attend to this, owing to scant accommodations in the household. . . . However, I cannot neglect sending your Honor some of the few I have, namely two small bones which the savage women here wear upon their bodies as finery and ornament, and of which they are quite proud. These small bones are taken from beavers. It is said here that in the Fatherland, as a novelty, they are used for spoonhandles, with a little knob joined to one end and a spoon bowl to the other. . . .

"From the Island of the Manhates in New Netherland, this 8th of August, anno 1628.

"In all things your Hooor's willing servant in Christ,
"Jonas Michaëlius."

—From Versteeg's Manhattan in 1628 as described in the recently discovered autograph letter of Jonas Michaelius written from the settlement on the 8th of August, 64-69. The original letter is owned by William Harris Arnold, Esq., of Nutley, N. J. It was bought from Frederick Muller, of Amsterdam, and is described in his catalogue for 1902. See, further, Aug. 11.

We learn from this letter that the colonists on Manhattan Island were "beginning to build new houses in place of the hovels and holes in which heretofore they huddled rather than dwelt." Cornelis van Tienhoven, in 1650, described the early method of building as follows: "Those in New Netherland and especially in New England, who have no means to build farm-houses at first according to their wishes, dig a square pit in the ground, cellar fashion, six or seven feet deep, as long and as broad as they think proper, ease the earth inside all round the wall with timber, which they line with the bark of trees or something else to prevent the caving in of the earth, floor this cellar with plank and wainscot overhead for a ceiling, raise a roof of spars clear up and cover the spars with bark or green sods, so that they can live dry and warm in these houses."—N. T. Col. Docs., 1: 168.

The Rev. Jonas Michaëlius writes from New Amsterdam, on this day, the second letter written from Manhatan Island now known to be extant in the original (see Pl. 5, Vol. IV). It is addressed to "The Reverend, Learned and Pious Mr. Adriaens Smoutius, Faithful Minister of the Holy Gospel of Christ in his Church, dwelling upon the Heeregracht, not far from the West India House at Amsterdam." In this letter he says, in part:

"Our coming here was agreeable to all, and I hope, by the grace of the Lord, that my service will not be unfruitful. The people, for the most part, are rather rough and unrestrained, but I find in almost all of them both love and respect towards me; two things with which hitherto the Lord has everywhere graciously blessed my labors, and which in our calling, as your Reverence well knows and finds, are especially desirable, in order to make our ministry fruitful.

"From the beginning we established the form of a church; and as Brother Bastiaen Crol very seldom comes down from Fort Orange, because the directorship of that fort and the trade there is committed to him, it has been thought best to choose two elders for my assistance and for the proper consideration of all such ecclesiastical matters as might occur, intending the coming year, if the Lord permit, to let one of them retire, and to choose another in his place from a double number first lawfully proposed to the congregation. One of those whom we have now chosen is the Honorable Director [Minuit] himself, and the other is the store-keeper of the Company, Jan Huygen, his brother-in-law, persons of very good character, as far as I have been able to learn, having both been formerly in office in the Church, the one as deacon, and the other as elder in the Dutch and French churches, respectively, at Wesel.

"At the first administration of the Lord's Supper which was observed, not without great joy and comfort to many, we had fully fifty communicants—Walloons and Dutch; of whom, a portion made their first confession of faith before us, and others exhibited their church certificates. Others had forgotten to bring their certificates with them, not thinking that a church would be formed and established here; and some who brought them, had lost them unfortunately in a general conflagration, but they were admitted upon the satisfactory testimony of others to whom they were known, and also upon their daily good deportment, since one cannot observe strictly all the usual formalities in making a beginning under such circumstances.

"We administer the Holy Supper of the Lord once in four months, provisionally, until a larger number of people shall otherwise require. The Walloons and French have no service on Sundays, otherwise than in the Dutch language, for those who understand no Dutch are very few. A portion of the Walloons are going back to the Fatherland, either because their years are expired [As the contract period was almost always four years, this would seem to indicate that they arrived in 1624], or else because some are not very servicable to the Company. Some of them live far away and could not well come in time of heavy rain and storm, so that they themselves cannot think it advisable to appoint any special service in French for so small a number, and that upon an uncertainty. Nevertheless, the Lord's Supper is administered to them in the French language, and according to the French mode, with a sermon preceding. . . .

"In my opinion it would be well that the Honorable Directors should furnish this place with plainer and more precise instructions to the rulers, that they may distinctly know how to conduct themselves in all possible public difficulties and events; and also that I should some time have here all such Acta Synodalia, as have been adopted in the synods of Holland. . . .

"As to the natives of this country, I find them entirely savage and wild, strangers to all decency, yea, uncivil and stupid as garden poles, proficient in all wickedness and godlessness; devilish men, who serve nobody but the Devil, that is, the spirit which in their language they call Menetto; under which title they comprehend everything that is subtle and crafty and beyond human skill and power. They have so much witchcraft, divination, sorcery and wicked arts, that they can hardly be held in by any bands or locks. They are as thievish and treacherous as they are tall; and in cruelty they are altogether inhuman, more than barbarous, far exceeding the Africans.

"I have written concerning this matter to several persons elsewhere, not doubting that Brother Crol will have written sufficient to your Reverence, or to the Honorable Directors; as also of the base treachery and the murders which the Mohicans, at the upper part of this river, had planned against Fort Orange, but which failed through the gracious interposition of the Lord, for our good. . . . How these people can best be led to the true knowledge of God and of the Mediator Christ, is hard to say. I cannot myself wonder enough who it is that has imposed so much upon your Reverence and many others in the Fatherland concerning the docility of these people and their good nature, the proper principia religionis and vestigia legis naturae which are said to be among them; in whom I have as yet been able to discover hardly a single good point, except that they do not speak so jeeringly and so scoffingly of the godlike and glorious majesty of their Creator as the Africans dare to do. But it may be because they have no certain knowledge of Him, or scarcely any. If we speak to them [the Indians] of God, it appears to them like a dream; and we are compelled to speak of him, not under the name of Menetto, whom they know and serve—for that would be blasphemy—but of one great, yet, most high, Sackiema, by which name they—living without a king—call him who has the command over several hundred among them, and who by our people are called Sachemakers; . . .

"Their language . . . is entirely peculiar. . . . For these people have difficult aspirates and many guttural letters, which are formed more in the throat than by the mouth, teeth and lips, . . .

" . . . maid servants are not here to be had, at least none whom they can advise me to take; and the Angola slave women are thievish, lazy, and useless trash. . . .

"The promise which the Honorable Directors of the Company had made of some morgens or acres of land for me to sustain myself, instead of a free table which otherwise belonged to me, is void and useless. For their Honors well knew that there are no horses, cows, or laborers to be obtained here for money . . . butter, milk, etc., cannot be here obtained; . . . The rations, which are given out here, and charged for high enough are all hard stale food, such as men are used to on board ship, and frequently not very good, and even so one cannot obtain as much as he desires. I began to get considerable strength, by the grace of the Lord, but in consequence of this hard fare of beans and gray peas, which are hard enough, barley, stockfish, etc., without much change, I cannot fully recuperate as I otherwise would. . . . The savages also bring some things, but one who has no wares, such as knives, beads, and the like, or seewan, cannot come to any terms with them. . . .

"The country yields many good things for the support of life, but they are all too unfit and wild to be gathered. Better regulations should be established, and people brought here who have the knowledge and implements for seeking out all kinds of things in their season and for securing and gathering them. No doubt this will gradually be done. . . . We want ten or twelve more farmers with horses, cows and laborers in proportion, to furnish us with bread, milk products, and suitable furs. . . .

"The business of furs is dull on account of the new war of the Maechibaes [Mohawks] against the Mohicans at the upper end of this river. . . . Much timber is cut here to carry to the Fatherland, but the vessels are too few to make much of it. They are making a windmill to saw lumber [vide infra] and we also have a gristmill. They bake brick here, but it is very poor. There is good material for burning lime, namely, oyster shells, in large quantities. The burning of potash has not succeeded; . . .

"We are busy now in building a fort of good quarry stone, which is to be found not far from here in abundance. May the Lord only build and watch over our walls. There is good opportunity for making salt, for there are convenient places, the water is salt enough, and there is no want of heat in summer. Besides, what the waters yield, both of the sea and rivers, in all kinds of fish; and what the land possesses in all kinds of birds, game, and woods, with vegetables, fruits, roots, herbs and plants, both for eating and medicinal purposes, and with which wonderful cures can be effected, it would take too long to tell, nor could I yet tell accurately. Your Reverence [Adrianus Smoutius] has already obtained some knowledge thereof and will be able to obtain from others further information. The country is good and pleasant, the climate is healthy, notwithstanding the sudden changes of cold and heat. The sun is very warm, the winter is fierce and severe and continues fully as long as in our country. The best remedy is not to spare the wood, of which there is enough, and to cover one's self with rough skins. . . .

"The harvest, God be praised, is in the barns, and is larger than ever before. There has been more work put on it than before. The ground is fertile enough to reward labor, but they must clear it well, and till it, just as our lands require. Until now there has been distress because many people were not very industrious, and also did not obtain proper sustenance for want of bread and other necessities. But affairs are beginning to go better and to put on a different appearance, it only the Directors will send out good laborers and exercise all care that they be maintained as well as possible with what this country produces. . . .

"From the island of Manhatas in New Netherland, this 11th of August, Anno 1628, by me, your Reverence's very obedient servant in Christ, Jonas Michaelius.

—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 122-33. The original letter is in the N. Y. Pub. Library, having been acquired for $145 at the sale of the Moore Collection, Feb. 7, 1894.

"The 'windmill to saw lumber,' above referred to, stood, on the modern map, in State St., south of Bridge St. It may have been demolished shortly after 1639.—See description of Manatus Maps, II: 206, note. It is not mentioned in grants covering the land itself, or that adjoining.—See Liber GG: 170 and 221 (Albany); see also Manatus Maps, C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962. See also Addenda, Aug. 11, 1628.

Nicolaes van Wassenaer's Historisch Verhael, under October, 1628 (preface dated June 1, 1629), contains the following entry:

"The government over the people of New Netherland continued on the 19th of August of this year in the aforesaid Minoit, successor to Verhulst. He went thither from Holland on January 9, Anno 1626, and took up his residence in the midst of a nation called Manates, building a fort there, to be called Amsterdam, having four bastions and faced outside entirely with stone, as the ramparts crumbled away like sand, and are now to be more substantial. The population consists of two hundred and seventy souls, including men, women and children. They remained as yet without the fort, in no fear, as the natives live peacefully with them. They are situate three leagues from the sea, on the river by us called Mauritius, by others, Rio de Montague.

"These strangers for the most part occupy their farms. Whatever they require is supplied by the Directors. The winter grain has turned out well there, but the summer grain which ripened before it was half grown in consequence of the excessive heat, was very light. The cattle sent thither have thriven well, and everything promises increase, as soon as the land is improved, which is full of weeds and poor.—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 88.

Admiral Heiny captures in Matanzas Bay the Spanish "Plate fleet," consisting of twenty sail, loaded with gold, silver, and other valuables, estimated to be worth $5,000,000. From this and other conquests made at about the same time, the company's dividends advanced to about fifty per cent.—O'Callaghan, Hist. of New Neth., 111; Brodhead, op. cit. I: 184-85, and authorities there cited.

Endicott, having obtained a grant from the council for New England, arrives, and starts a settlement at Salem.—See Addenda.

"There are now no families left at Fort Orange. . . . They have all been brought down. Five or six and twenty persons, traders, remain there. Bastiaen Jansz Crol is vice-director there; who has remained there since the year 1626, when the others came down.

"Those of the West India Company have also removed all those who were at the South River. They retain only one vessel trading there.—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 88.

Possibly in the autumn of 1627 (q. v.), but more likely in that of 1628, Isaac de Rasière, who arrived in New Amsterdam on July 27, 1626 (q. v.), as commercial agent of the West India Company, and was secretary of the province, wrote to his superior, Samuel Blommaert, one of the directors of the W. I. Co. (Amsterdam chamber), from Holland, probably shortly after his return there from New Netherland, giving a detailed account of the Dutch settlement at New Amsterdam, and also some very interesting facts concerning the Plymouth Plantation. His letter reads (in part, translated) as follows:

know not how otherwise to recompense you than by this slight memoir, (wherein I have in part comprised as much as was in my power concerning the situation of New Netherland and its neighbors, and should in many things have been able to treat of or write the same more in detail, and better than I have now done, but that my things and notes, which would have been of service to me herein, have been taken away from me [possibly as a result of his falling into disgrace at Manhattan—see below—but more likely by theft, as the words "afhaadich gemaecht" seem to indicate]), I will beg you to be pleased to receive this, on account of my bounden service, etc.

"On the 27th of July, Anno 1626, by the help of God, I arrived with the ship The Arms of Amsterdam, before the Bay of the great Mauritse River, sailing into it about a musket shot from Godyn's Point, into Coenraet's Bay; (because there the greatest depth is, since from the last point there stretches out a sand bank on which there is only from 9 to 14 feet water), then sailed on, northeast, and north-northeast, to about half way from the low sand bank called Godyn's Point, to the Hamel's-Hoofden [the narrows], the mouth of the river, where we found at half ebb 16, 17, 18 feet water, and which is a sandy reef a musket shot broad, stretching for the most part northeast and southwest, quite across, and, according to my opinion, having been formed there by the stream, inasmuch as the flood runs into the bay from the sea, east-southeast; the depth at Godyn's Point is caused by the tide flowing out along there with such rapidity. . . .

"The Hamel's-Hoofden being passed, there is about a league width in the river, and also on the west side there is an inlet, where another river runs up about 20 leagues, to the north-northeast, emptying into the Mauritse River in the highlands, thus making the northwest land opposite to the Manhatas, an island eighteen leagues long. It is inhabited by the old Manhatans [Manhatesen]; they are about 200 to 300 strong, women and men, under different chiefs, whom they call Sackimas. This island is more mountainous than the other land on the southeast side of the river, which opposite to the Manhatas is about a league and a half in breadth. At the side of the before-mentioned little river, which we call 'Achter Col,' there is a great deal of waste reedy land; . . .

"The Island of the Manhatas extends two leagues [sic] in length along the Mauritse River, from the point where the Fort 'New Amsterdam' is building. It is about seven leagues [sic] in circumference, full of trees, and in the middle rocky to the extent of about two miles in circuit. The north side has good land in two places, where two farmers, each with four horses, would have enough to do without much clearing at first. The grass is good in the forest and valleys, but when made into hay is not so nutritious for the cattle as here in Holland, in consequence of its wild state, but it yearly improves by cultivation. On the east side there rises a large level field, of from 70 to 80 morgens of land, through which runs a very fine fresh stream; so that that land can be ploughed without much clearing. It appears to be good. The six farms, four of which lie along the River Hellgate, stretching to the south side of the island, have at least 60 morgens of land ready to be sown with winter seed, which at the most will have been ploughed eight times. But as the greater part must have some manure, inasmuch as it is so exhausted by the wild herbage, I am afraid that all will not be sown; and the more so, as the managers of the farms are hired men. The two hindermost farms, Nos. 1 and 2, are the best; the other farms have also good land, but not so much, and more sandy; so that they are best suited for rye and buckwheat.

"The small fort, New Amsterdam, commenced to be built, is situated on a point opposite to Noten Island; [the channel between] is a gun-shot wide, and is full six or seven fathoms deep in the middle. The point might, with little trouble, be made a small island, by cutting a canal through Blommaert's valley, so as to afford a baven winter and summer, for sloops and ships; and the whole of this little island ought, from its nature, to be made a superb fort, to be approached by land only on one side (since it is a triangle), thus protecting them both. The river marks out, naturally, three angles; the most northern faces and commands, within the range of a cannon shot, the great Mauritse River and the land; the southernmost commands, on the water level, the channel between Noten Island and the fort, together with the Hellegat; the third point, opposite to Blommaert's valley, commands the low-land; the middle part, which ought to be left as a market-place, is a hillock, higher than the surrounding land, and should always serve as a battery, which might command the three points, if the streets should be arranged accordingly.

Autumn

"Up the river the east side is high, full of trees, and in some places there is a little good land, where formerly many people have dwelt, but who for the most part have died or have been driven away by the Wappenos."

[Here follows an elaborate account of the life and customs of the Indians, after which occurs a break where at least four pages are missing. The letter continues.]

"Comiog out of the river Nassau [Sakonnet River], you sail east-and-by-north about fourteen leagues, along the coast, a half mile from the shore, and then you come to 'Frenchman's Point,' at a small river where those of Patucet have a house made of beun oak planks, called Aputuctet [Maoumet on Buzzard's Bay], where they keep two men, winter and summer, in order to maintain the trade and possession. Here also they have built a shallop, in order to go and look after the trade in sewan, in Sloup's Bay and thereabouts, because they are afraid to pass Cape Mallabaer, and in order to avoid the length of the way; which I have prevented for this year by selling them fifty fathoms of sewan, because the seeking after sewan by them is prejudicial to us, inasmuch as they would, by so doing, discover the trade in furs; which if they were to find out, it would be a great trouble for us to maintain, for they already dare to threaten that if we will not leave off dealing with that people, they will be obliged to use other means; if they do that now, while they are yet ignorant how the case stands, what will they do when they do get a notion of it? [New Plymouth is here described.]

"The tribes in their neighborhood [New Plymouth] have all the same customs as already above described, only they are better conducted than ours, because the English give them the example of better ordinances and a better life; and who also, to a certain degree, give them laws, in consequence of the respect they from the very first have established amongst them."—From original letter in the National Archives, The Hague, discovered in 1847 in a bundle of manuscripts then recently acquired by the Royal Library, translated in Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 102-15.

The date of this letter is somewhat in doubt. De Rasière's visit to New Plymouth took place early in October, 1627, as we know from his letter dated Oct. 4, 1627 (see Sept. 24/Oct. 4), and written on board the "Nassau" at Manomet (Buzzard's Bay). It was during this visit that De Rasière sold the 50 fathoms of sewan to the English settlers, an event which Bradford also records, in his history.—Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed., 1912), II: 43. Bradford describes "this visit under the year 1628, which is evidently an error, and probably resulted from the fact that his notes were not made until about three years after the event. We have no certain knowledge that De Rasière returned to Manhattan after his mission to New Plymouth, and no record has been found of him in New Netherland after his departure on his mission to Bradford. It is probable that he did return, and that he bore with him Bradford's letter of Oct. 1 (see Oct. 1/11). The only definite reasons for assuming that he did return are his reference to "The small fort, New Amsterdam, commenced to be built," and Bradford's note, following De Rasière's letter of Oct. 4, 1627 (q. v.), that he "soon after fell into disgrace amongst them [the Dutch], by reason of their factions."—Ibid., II: 24. De Rasière's reference to the six farms "ready to be sown with winter seed" seems to indicate that this part of the letter at least was written at the time of his departure, and in the month of September when the winter crops were usually sown.

If he did not return from New Plymouth to Manhattan, but dispatched Bradford's letter by another messenger and himself sailed direct for Holland, his letter was probably completed on the voyage homeward, and therefore dates from 1627, which date would agree with the statement contained in the letter that the sale of sewan to the New Plymouth colonists took place in "this year"—1627—the year in which the letter, under this assumption, would have been written, and in which, as we know from Bradford (ibid., II: 43), the sale actually took place. If, on the other hand, De Rasière returned to Manhattan with Bradford's letter, unless he sailed again immediately for Holland, his letter to Blommaert probably was written in the following autumn, an assumption which is strengthened by his reference to "The small fort, New Amsterdam, commenced to be built;" it is even possible that it was written in the autumn of 1629 or 1630, in September of which latter year we find his successor officiating as secretary of the province. This, however, is unlikely, as Blommaert ceased to be a director of the W. I. Co.

1628 in the summer of the former year, 1629. See April 23, 1634. The Autumn assumption that it was written in the autumn is based, as we have seen, on his reference to the land being "ready to be sown with winter seed." This reference to the six farms "ready to be sown with winter seed, which at the most will have been ploughed eight times," is ambiguous, and may possibly refer to four double planting seasons. We know from many contemporary sources that it was the custom in New Netherland to plant twice yearly, in May and September. If the letter was written in the autumn of 1628, the eight ploughings may perhaps indicate eight successive cultivations of the ground before sowing the crops: two in 1628, two in 1627, two in 1626, and two in 1625; and, as a considerable number of months must have elapsed between the arrival of the colonists and the preparation of these farms for plowing, this theory, if true, would greatly strengthen the argument for accepting 1624 (1623, if the letter was written in 1627) as the year of first settlement. It is, however, of course, possible—even probable—that the words refer to eight successive cultivations of the soil, extending over a shorter period, and not corresponding with the periods of planting. Attention is drawn to this possible interpretation simply because every plausible suggestion or new sidelight in connection with the interesting and elusive problem of determining the year of first settlement is worthy of attention.

Blommaert's Vly or Valley was the name applied to a depression on the present line of Broad Street from the shore of the East River inland, through which the Dutch subsequently excavated a ditch or gracht. The earliest mention of the name is in the foregoing letter from Isaac de Rasière to Samuel Blommaert, who was one of the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam, and it is not unlikely that the name was derived from his. See Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 105; also Castello Plan, II: 318.

In the same letter, De Rasière referred to Indian wampum, thus: "As an employment in winter they [Indians] make sewan, which is an oblong bead that they make from cockle-shells, which they find on the sea-shore, and they consider it as valuable as we do money here [Holland], since one can buy with it everything they have."—Jameson, op. cit., 106. This is the earliest reference to wampum as money in New Netherland. See also June, 1634.

1629

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 55,778 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in three ships to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 5,913 beavers and 681 otters valued at 62,185 guilders.—Ibid., 30.

"While in England, [Isaac] Allerton produced an effect upon the friends of the Winthrop migration [of 1630] which may not have been intended. His words gave the impression that the Bay was not so well situated for settlement as other parts of the country, and, for example, as Hudsons River. Humfrey wrote to Winthrop, December 12, 1630, suggesting a removal to a more southern part, and cited Allerton on the Hudson, "which as Mr. Allerton affirms meetes with Canada;" and Downing, writing four days earlier, advanced some of the same arguments for removal, and added: "If yt be true that Mr. Allerton reports of Hudson's river, there is noe place comparable to yt for a plantation, and t'will quitt cost for you to remove thither, though all be lost in the place where you are, for he sayth that Hudsons river goes into Canada and those 2 make New England an Island, if this be true ytys like they meet in the great lake [Iroquois], and soe may Merry-mack."—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), II: 63-64, editorial footnote. Isaac Allerton removed to New Amsterdam about 1638, and became one of the city's most influential citizens.

In this year, England captured Quebec; this was followed by the complete surrender of Canada by the French.

The king begins to rule without parliament.

At some time prior to this date, Wouter van Twiller received a grant from the West India Co. (De Lancey Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.), confirmed by a spoken-brief in 1638 (Liber GG: 23, Albany), for land which is later granted of as a tobacco plantation near Sapokanicon on the North river with palisades around it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 3, 13, 19. This bouvery lay at some distance to the westward of the Bowery Road (The Bowery) and south-west of Greenwich Ave. Here is the first mention of record of the Indian village of Sapokanickan, later Greenwich Village.

See Manatus Maps, II: 190-91; C. Pls. 41, 42 and 42a, Vol. II; June 7

The West India Co. endeavours to encourage colonization by granting a "Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions" on this date to "those who shall establish colonies in New Netherland." This resulted in the foundation of patroonships. In Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 136-52, the editor, A. J. E. van Laer, gives the original text from the original printed edition (Vryheden, etc. Amsterdam, 1630), with a revised English translation.

In this "Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions," the West India Co. announces its intention of peopling the island of Manhattan first, and makes it, provisionally, the staple port for all products and wares "found on the North River and lands thereabouts," except "such as can not without great loss to their owners be brought there," in which case measures will be taken as required by circumstances.—Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 143. Some historians, beginning with O'Callaghan (Hist. N. Neth., I: 155), have mistakenly placed the beginning of the staple right at New Amsterdam in 1633. See also Addenda.

New Hampshire is granted to John Mason.

1630

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 57,499 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in two ships to New Amsterdam.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 6,041 beavers and 1,085 otters, valued at 68,012 guilders.—Ibid., 30.

The names Manhattan ("Manhattans"), New Amsterdam ("N. Amsterdam"), and North River ("Noordt Rivier") appear for the first time on a printed map, De Laet's map entitled "Nova Anglia, Novum Belgium et Virginia." Reproduced in Vol. II, Cartography, Pl. 31, and described there on pages 86-87. This map appeared first in the second (folio) edition of De Laet's Nieuwe Wereldt ofte Beschryfinge van West-Indien, published this year.

Johannes de Laet, who was at this time a director of the West India Co., makes the following statement in this edition of his well-known work: "Into New Netherland, and upon both these rivers described by us in the foregoing chapters [Delaware and Hudson Rivers], several colonies have been sent by the Directors of the Chartered West India Company, from the very commencement of that company, to wit, from the year 1623, in order to continue the possession of those quarters, and to maintain the trade in peltries. They have there, at the uppermost part of the North River, in the latitude of 43 degrees or thereabouts, a small fort, which our people call Fort Orange, round about which several colonizers have settled themselves under the patronage of the aforesaid company. And again another fort of greater importance at the mouth of the same North River, upon an island which they call Manhattes or Manhatans Island, because this nation of Indians happened to possess the same, and by them it has been sold to the company. Here our people have made, as it were, their headquarters or principal colony, which they call New Amsterdam."—Trans. in Nar. N. Neth., 53-54. See also Schaghen's letter under Nov. 5, 1626.

In this year the Dutch West India Co. built a large ship in New Netherland, which was named for the province. Numerous modern historians have, with varying degrees of elaboration, claimed that the ship was built on Manhattan Island, usually giving the year as 1631.—See, e. g., Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 212, 219; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., I: 168; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 102. Neither the place nor date of completion is positively known. Gilles Hosset (or Housset), a sailor seeking lands suitable for Killian van Rensselaer's patroonship, whilst sailing up the Hudson River, arrived, on July 27, 1630, "at the place where Jan Jansz. Meyns [or Meyndz.] was encamped with his men to cut down logs [iron-hout—spars?] for the new ship." To this place "there also came by chance Kottomack" and several other Malianca Indians, who were the owners of the lands above and below Fort Orange (Albany), for whose purchase, on behalf of Van Rensselaer, a contract was made with these Indians, on Aug. 6, by Minuit and others, which was consummated, on the 13th (q. v.), by a certificate of purchase.—Facsimiles of the original instruments, with translations, are in Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., I: 163-64; cf. Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 166, ff. In these documents, mention is made of "the mill creek," evidently because a mill was in operation there. This is easily identified as the now well-known Normans Kill,

1630 in the present town of Bethlehem, Albany Co., and here very likely — the lumber for the ship was being cut. As the men were "encamped," they may have built the ship at this place, or the lumber may have been conveyed to Manhattan Island, Fort Orange, or some other place on the river. At any rate, it is known from a letter which Symon Dircksz. Pos, a councillor of New Netherland, wrote to Van Rensselaer from Manhattan, on Sept. 16 of this year, that "a certain new ship" was being built, was then almost ready, and had proved a success; although it was feared "injury [to it] may arise, since a strong ice-flow runs here [where it was building]; yet [it] is hoped to be able to withstand it well."—Oud Holland, VIII (1890): 70-71.

— The Charter of Privileges and Exemptions (Vryheden, etc.) of June 7, 1629 (q. v.), was first printed in this year, at Amsterdam, and was the earliest separate publication relating to New Netherland.
 It was the foundation of the system of patroonships and is most important in other respects for the history of the Dutch province.

— About this year, the house of the director-general of New Netherland was built within the enclosure of Fort Amsterdam. It is known that he lived outside of the fort or in the village from 1626 to 1628.—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 83, 84, 88. During Van Twiller's administration—namely, after 1633—the "commander's house, standing in the Fort," was repaired.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 16. Father Isaac Jogues mentions "the house of the Governor" in the fort as existing in 1643 when he saw the town and fort.—Jameson, op. cit., 259.

— The Buechelus Chart, a crude draft of Manhattan Island and its immediate surroundings, copied by the Dutch antiquarian Buechelus from a drawing of this period, was made, perhaps by Peter Minituit himself, or under his direction, some time between 1630 and 1634, probably to indicate the position of grants to Godyn, Pauw, and Coenraets. Reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 2.

See A. Jan. 8 On April 27, 1634, Kiliaen van Rensselaer notified the directors of the West India Co. that a certain contract for cattle and farming implements between the company and six farmers had been signed in accordance with conditions agreed to in writing by both sides on Jan. 8, 1630; and that to each of these farmers had been leased a farm of about 50 morgens (on Manhattan Island), including farms No. 2 and 3, "for the term of six years, beginning the first of May, 1630."—Van Rensselaer Bowier MSS., 290.

Mar. — Wassenaer (op. cit.) records under this date: "After the Right — Honorable Directors of the Chartered West India Company in the United Netherlands had provided everything for the defence of New Netherland and put everything there in good order, they taking into consideration the advantages of said place, the favorable nature of the air and soil, and that considerable trade and goods and many commodities may be obtained from thence, sent some free emigrants thither with all sorts of cattle and implements necessary for agriculture, so that in the year 1628 there already resided on the island of the Manhattes two hundred and seventy souls, men, women and children, under Governor Minituit, Verhulst's successor, and lived there in peace with the natives.
 But as the land, being extensive and in many places full of weeds and wild growth, could not be properly cultivated in consequence of the scantiness of the population, the said Directors of the West India Company, the better to people their lands, and to bring the country to produce more abundantly, resolved to grant divers Privileges, Freedoms and Exemptions to all patroons, masters or individuals who should plant any colonies and cattle in New Netherland, and they accordingly have constituted and published in print [at Amsterdam, 1630] these following exemptions [of June 7, 1629], to afford better encouragement and infuse greater zeal into whosoever should be inclined to reside and plant his colony in New Netherland."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 89.

— The Puritans, under Winthrop and Dudley, arrive at Salem.—
 See Addenda.

June 12-22 July 15 On this day, Minituit and his council sign in Fort Amsterdam the Godyn and Blommaert patent (a deed from the Indians executed before the court) for lands at South Hoeck. This was the earliest extant official document of Minituit's administration of New Netherland until it was destroyed in the Albany capitol fire of March 29, 1911.—Reproduced in Avery, Hist. of the U. S., II:
 220.

 On this day, Minituit and his council sign, in Fort Amsterdam, the letters patent for Rensselaerswyck. The original patent, bearing one of the two signatures of Minituit and his council known to exist in this country, is now in the author's collection. It is reproduced in Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: opp. p. 164. The contract (now in the State Museum, at Albany) was signed in the fort on Aug. 6. These are the earliest contract and deed for land in the state of New York.—Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 166.

Sec A. Sept. 16 Symon Dircksz. Pos writes a letter to Kiliaen van Rensselaer from Fort Amsterdam "in New Netherland at the Manathans," in which he says: "[Now] concerning the occurrences [at] the farms on the Manathans, there is much land ploughed everywhere daily by the peasantry. I have now great hope that the Hon. Lords Directors, after their long waiting, shall be released for once from the great charges, as well as to be able to deliver a number of lasts of rye and wheat, raised on land here, in order to meet their heavy expenses. [Now] concerning the current year, we shall need much seed, as we are clearing, harrowing and ploughing much land. Moreover, I cannot neglect advising your Honor of the questions that arise here in this place, where there are not more than two hundred or three hundred souls."—Newly translated from Oud Holland,

See A. 25 Oct. 19-29 Dec. 28 The first general court in America is held, at Boston.
 A catalogue of a sale held by Frederik Muller & Co., of Amsterdam, in May 1869, contains the two following items:—

"No. 1367. [Dated] 1630. Project of a coat-of-arms for the city of New Amsterdam (N. York). (The same coat-of-arms as that of Amsterdam in Holland but surmounted by a beaver.) Contemporary drawing in colours, in the form of a medallion, diameter 100mm. . . .

"No. 1368. [Dated] 1630. Another Project for the coat-of-arms of the same city, representing the arms of Amsterdam, surmounted by the imperial crown, and between two beavers instead of the two lions. One of the directors, H. Bontemantel (the famous antiquary), has written at the bottom of the drawing that it was a Project which was not executed. Contemporary drawing in colours 330mm. wide; 270mm. high." The catalogue adds: "These two Projects have remained unknown up to the present time and there exist no copies in the archives."

The present whereabouts of these two important items was long sought by the author, who was only able to learn, through Dr.
 Wieder, of the old firm of Frederik Muller & Co., that one of the drawings had been bought at the sale by the present head of the Pauw family, Ridder Pauw van Wieldrecht, but had been destroyed in a fire which consumed his castle and family papers at Leersum in 1906, while the other was bought at the sale by Westerman &
 Co. of New York, for 39 florins.

In 1919, one of these documents, No. 1367 in the catalogue, was discovered and recognized by Mr. Victor Hugo Paltsits, in the Manuscript Division of the New York Public Library. It is reproduced, for the first time, as Frontispiece I, in the present volume.

This document, which measures 410 x 325 mm., is endorsed, in contemporary ornamental script, "Arms of Nieu Nederlandt in Amsterdam" (!) On the face of the sheet are grouped three drawings:—

1.—The seal (Sigillum) of New Amsterdam, in a circle 90 mm. in diameter (not 100 mm. as given in the catalogue description).

2.—A very similar design, but having beavers instead of lions as bearers, and evidently intended for the city arms, not as a seal only, as there is no circle. A note explains that "This coat-of-arms was [submitted as] a Project, but was not found good [approved]."

3.—A design for a coat-of-arms for New Netherland, having two lions as bearers.

Adjoining this last design is an inscription reading as follows:—
 "Extract from the resolutions of a meeting of the XIX of the general Chartered West India Co., held at Middelburg in Zelandt.
 "Saturday the 28th decemb. 1630: Post Meridiam.
 "Exhibited by Mr. Michael Paauw, a design of a coat-of-arms for Nieu-Nederlandt, being a black beaver on a wooden field [veld], with a border [on a band?] of white Zeewant [Wampum], on a blue ground, embellished with the Crown of a Count, and is also found good by the approval of the Lords High Mightinesses."

Just as this page was going to press, Miss Jennie F. Marcarthy found, among some papers presented to the New York Historical Society by Mr. J. Carson Brevoort, the second project, No.
 1368 in the Muller catalogue, which was supposed to have been 1630 destroyed by fire in Holland. This document, which is exactly Dec. 28 similar to the discarded arms of the city reproduced in the frontpiece, is drawn on a sheet measuring  $14\frac{1}{2}'' \times 12\frac{1}{2}''$ , the beavers being 7'' in height. It bears the same inscription as is found adjoining this drawing in our reproduction, except that under the beaver is written "1 otter." In the left upper corner of the sheet is an outline in red chalk ( $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times 1\frac{1}{2}''$ ) of a lion rampant, very similar to the one in the New Netherland arms here reproduced. An accompanied typewritten inscription states that this drawing was presented to the Society by Mr. Brevoort in May 1885, and that it came from the papers of J. Bontemantel, the famous Dutch antiquary.

It is quite clear that these documents are identical with those sold by Frederik Muller & Co. in 1869. Possibly Mr. Brevoort secured the second projet in Holland from Ridder Pauw van Wieldrecht. This Muller sale is the same at which the New Netherland Papers now in the N. Y. Pub. Library and those in the Hist. Soc. of Penn. were sold.

See 1623, and July 26, 1649, where references to the investiture of New Netherland with the "Arms of an Earl" are doubtless to the provincial arms above described.

1631

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 17,355 guilders
were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in one ship to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 26 in his Historie (1644). There seem to have been no return shipments of beavers and otter skins this year as was usual; but compare the Holland imports of 1632.—Ibid., 30.

Roger Williams reaches Boston from England.—See Addenda.

1632

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 31,320 guilders
were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in one ship to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 27, in his Historie (1644). There were shipped to Holland from New Netherland 13,513 beavers, and 1,661 otters and other peltries, valued at 143,125 guilders.—Ibid., 30.

See A. The Jesuit Relations began in this year and continued to 1672.
In this year, the Plymouth Pilgrims began to explore the Connecticut Valley. In 1633, they started settlements there.— Winsor, III: 279-80.

Feb. In Feb. or March, 1632, Bastiaen Jansz. Krol was appointed director-general of New Netherland, as Minuit's successor. He held the office thirteen months, until the arrival of Wouter van Twiller, in March, 1633.—Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts,

Mc. 19-29 The treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye is signed.—See Addenda.

Apr. 5 The "Eendracht," belonging to the Dutch West India Co., with Director Minuit and Jan Lampon on board, "coming from New Netherland and touching at Plymouth, in England," was "seized there" with her cargo of peltries. The seizure was made under pretence that "the cargo of the ship was procured in the English Colonies; next, that the Company had appropriated some countries belonging to the English." On April 5, 1632, the matter was brought to the attention of the states-general and negotiations were begun through the Dutch ambassador and his deputy in England for the release of the ship, its personnel, and cargo. The Dutch ambassadors sent a remonstrance to Charles I. In May assurances were given by the lord high treasurer of England that he would "give orders for the release of the aforesaid vessel, saving and without prejudice to his Majesty's right."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 45-60. See also Brodhead's Hist. State of N. Y., I: 213-17. This ship arrived at Amsterdam in June, bringing some thousands of beaver skins, as well as otter skins. On the ship came Jan van Vorst, son of Cornelis van Vorst, director of Michiel Pauw's colony of Pavonia, who brought a letter from his father, and a seaspider ("Clusius cancrum marinum vocavit, quale ipse in suis exoticis expressit, a me sibi a Wolfenckel exoratum, missum"). "He said on the strand there [about Manhattan] many great and small were found."—Kol. Aantw., 212, fol. 111, verso, in the archives of The Hague.

Sec. A. In an ante-nuptial agreement made this day between Adriaentge
30 Cevelyn (Adrienne Cuville), widow of Guillaume Vigne, and Jan Jansen Damen, it is provided, among other things, that her two minor children shall be kept at school and be taught a trade. The agreement appears in a report of arbiters, dated "in New Netherland on the Island Manhatets and Fort Amsterdam."—

This instrument was recorded by Secretary Cornelis van Tienhoven at Fort Amsterdam, on May 7, 1638. We have here the earliest recorded instance of the education, on M. I., of minor orphan children in accordance with the established orphanage law of Holland.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 6 (Albany).

June Lord Baltimore receives a patent for Maryland, or the territory 20-30 lying between 40° N. L. and the Potomac River.—Winsor, III:

July In this month, Kiliaen van Rensselaer, patroon, having deter— mined "to erect a brewery" in his colony of Rensselaerswyck, "to provide all New Netherland with beer, for which purpose there is already a brew kettle there," instructs his representatives in his colony to ask the director "for the large brewing kettle and brandy kettle which is at the Manhattes and sell the brandy and beer either at Fort Orange or at the Manhattes or elsewhere."—Van Rensselaer

Wouter van Twiller is appointed director-general of New Netherland. He sailed from Holland in the "Souterbergh" (Salt Mountain) after July 20, 1632, and arrived in New Amsterdam in March, 1633, when he assumed his office.—Van Rensselaer Bouvier

New Albion (including New Jersey) is granted to Sir Edward Plowden, the viceroy of Ireland.—Cal. State Papers, Colonial, 1574-

1633

Some time prior to this year, the bakery of the West India Co. was erected.—Colonial MSS., I: 81 (Albany). It stood at what is now the south-east corner of Pearl and State Sts., where the Chesebrough building stands.

At some time prior to this year, the brewers' bridge, crossing the Heere Gracht (the canal in Broad St.), was erected. It's situation was at the present Stone St., crossing Broad St.; it, as well as the two other bridges spanning the Gracht, is shown on C. Pl. 82, Vol. II.

There were no shipments of goods and merchandise in this year by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. from Holland to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 27, in his Historie (1644).
There were shipped into Holland from New Netherland 8,800 beavers, and 1,383 otters and other peltries, valued at 91,375 gul-ders.—Ibid., 30.

Before Wouter van Twiller came over as director-general, in 1633, five large stone houses, used as shops by the West India Co., were built on Winckel St. (now no longer in existence, the bed of the defunct street being now covered by the Kemble building.) They occupied the east side of the street, between Brouwer (Stone) and Brugh (Bridge) Streets. Among the buildings listed in a deposition as built during Van Twiller's administration was a "goathouse standing behind the Five Houses," which shows that these five buildings were in existence before his time.—N. Y.
Col. Docs., XIV: 16. They were all under one roof, as shown on The Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82, Vol. II). During the Dutch period they remained the property of the company, and as such were confiscated upon the occupation by the English in 1664, as property of the Duke of York.

They were demolished prior to Oct. 15, 1680, as is shown by four grants of this land by Gov. Andros, as "being part of the ground of the five houses belonging to his Royal Highness" (the Duke of York). The earliest of these grants was to Philip Welles, Oct. 15, 1680; and the three others were to Capt. Anthony Brock-holes (Dec. 6), John Darvall (Dec. 15), and Stephanus van Cortlandt (Dec. 15).—Patents, V: 5, 8, 9, in sec. of state's office, Albany.
The sites of the five houses are now occupied by the buildings Nos. 2 and 4 Stone St., and 19 and 21 Bridge St.—See The Castello Plan, II: 259-60; Key to the Dutch Grants, II: 381; C. Pls. 82, 82e, 87,
Vol. II. Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

Numerous buildings were erected during the administration of Wouter van Twiller (1633-1638), as is revealed in a deposition of March 22, 1639, which Gillis Pietersen van der Gouw, the then "master housecarpenter on the Island Manhattans," made before the provincial secretary. Those erected on Manhattan Island were:
"In Fort Amsterdam, the guardhouse with lattice work and a roof;"
"a small house for the soldiers to live in;" and "a large cellar [which] was dug and built up with stones to the level of the ground and [had] beams across to lay planks on for the floor of the house."

"On the Island outside of the Fort," there were erected in this year: a "new bakery;" a "small house for the midwife;" a "goat-house standing behind the Five Houses;" and the "church with a house and stable behind it" (on the north side of Pearl St., between Whitehall and Broad Sts.). The "smith's, corporal's and cooper's house, which had been raised, was completed and covered with pan tiles;" and the "large shed, where the sloop and yachts are built, and the sailmakers' loft above" were erected.

At the Bowery No. 1, a very good barn, dwelling house, boat-house, and brewery covered with tiles" (sold in 1651 to Director Styvessant); and the "house upon Mr. Twiller's plantation" were built, and repairs were made in "the commander's house, standing in the Fort," where much had been broken. The "saw and grist mills were at divers times provided with axes and arms and other requisites." Much work had been done "at Corlaer's Bowery," as well as "at la Montagne's," and "Fort Amsterdam was built up with platforms for the guns in the Fort."

Other work done, in outlying parts, is enumerated, including Fort Orange to the north, Fort Hope to the north-east, and Fort Nassau to the southward.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 16-17.

The church, built this year by Director-Gen. Wouter van Twiller, with the house and stable behind it (vide supra), was on the site of the present 39 Pearl St. The location has been ascertained from searches made for this work, and agrees with Jones, op. cit., 58. In 1642 it was still used as a church, and was spoken of as a "mean barn" (De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 212); but after the erection of the church in the fort, begun in that year, it was used for some time as a warehouse of the West India Co. (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 373; Inacs, 59). A summary of its later history is as follows:

On April 4, 1656, the director-general and council of New Netherland resolved "that on Saturday, the 8th of April, the house, lot and buildings thereon called the Old Church and formerly tenanted by Capt. [Bryan] Newton," should be "sold at auction to the highest bidder" (N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 346), and at this sale it was purchased by Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 383), who received a deed from the director-general, on June 30 (Liber III, part ii, 58, in sec. of state's office, Albany). He became involved in debt to Pieter Jacobsen Marius, who obtained a judgment against him, and, in compliance with the order of the court, the property was sold and conveyed to Isaac de Forest (Rec. N. Am., II: 153-54; Liber A: 71, N. Y. County register's office), who, having covered this lot with a house, applied for and obtained, on April 16, 1664, a grant of the adjoining lane, to build thereon a woodshed, etc. (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 383). Gov. Richard Nicolls gave De Forest a confirmation of title, on Feb. 11, 1668. His widow and executrix, Sarah, conveyed the property, then called "the old church on Strand," on June 30, 1682, to Allard Anthony, for 10,200 guilders. By his will, executed on Dec. 12, 1685, the property was left to his wife, Henrica, and by her will, executed in August, 1702, and proved in May, 1707, it passed to her three grandsons, Nicholas, Allard, and Henry Anthony, and, on Sept. 25, 1718, was conveyed by the two former to the latter. On July 23, 1719, Henry Anthony gave a mortgage for £40 to Bridgett Matthews on the same property.—Liber XII: 93, 95, N. Y. County register's office; ibid., Liber XXVIII: 527, 530; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892), 441: ibid. (1893), 409. On Oct. 24, 1754, Henry Cregier mortgaged to Peter de Lancey the premises "formerly called Old Kirk or Old Church" in the sum of £12818.—Liber Mortgages, II: 11. During the American Revolution, the property, then in the tenure of William Bayard, retained, was numbered among the forfeited estates, as shown by a deed from the commissioners of forfeiture to Richard Varick, Jan. 13, 1785, in consideration of the purchase price of £545.—Liber Deeds, CXLI: 55; Flick, Loyalism in New York (1901), 227.

Between this year and the end of Wouter van Twiller's administration as director-general of New Netherland, the following ships were built or repaired in New Netherland, as is shown in a declaration made by Tymen Jansen, ship-carpenter, dated "at Fort Amsterdam this 22<sup>d</sup> of March A<sup>o</sup> 1639." He testified "that it is perfectly true, that he . . . during the administration has worked as ship's carpenter and has been engaged on all old and new work, which Mr. Twiller, ordered to be made," the summary whereof is as follows: In 1633 the ship "souterberk" was provided with new knees; "other carpenters" worked long on the ship "Hope of Groeningen and Omlanden;" a yacht called "Hope," which had been captured in 1632 by Van Twiller, was "entirely rebuilt and planked up higher;" the "Prins Willem" was built; the yacht "Amsterdam" was "almost finished;" "a large open boat" was built; "an orlop and caboose were made" for the yacht "Wesel," and likewise for the yacht "Vreede." Other boats built or repaired included the "Omwal," at Fort Orange (Albany), a "yacht with a mizzen sold to Barent Dircksen" of New Amsterdam, "the wood cutters' boat," "divers farmboats and skiffs" which were "sold to various parties," and "many boats and yawls made for the sloops." Besides all this work, "the carpenters constantly repaired and caulked the old craft."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 17.

In this month, the Rev. Everardus Bogardus, having sailed with the newly-appointed director-general, Wouter van Twiller, in the "Souterbergh" (Salt Mountain), arrived at New Amsterdam. He had been a "sieckentrooster" (comforter of the sick) in Guinea; had been ordained to the ministry by the classis of Amsterdam, on June 14, 1632; and, on July 15 of that year, had been formally recorded before the church council as accepting service for West Netherland, and presented to the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. with a "Classicale Testimonium." So far as known, the first mention of him in New Netherland is in a letter from Kiliaen van Rensselaer to Wouter van Twiller, April 23, 1634.—Eekhof, Bastiaen Jansz. Kool (1902), 22, Appendix XXIV, XXV; Ecles. Rec., I: 81-83; Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 269, 287; Corwin, Manual of Ref. Church in Am. (ed. of 1902), 320.

Wouter van Twiller, governor of New Netherland, writes a letter to the governor of the "Engelische Collyonye at the Massachusetts Baye," which, translated, reads as follows:

"That which you alleadge concerning the use of the River w<sup>ch</sup> you instance the Kinge of England hath granted to his subjects and therefore itt seemes strange unto yow that we have taken possession thereof; It seemes very strange unto mee, who for my owne parts could wishe that his Ma<sup>tie</sup> of England and the Lords of the States Generall concerning the limitts and parting of this quarters, would agree. And as good neighbors we might live in these heathenlike countries. And therefore I desire yow see longe to deferre y<sup>o</sup> p<sup>te</sup>nce or claim of the said River untill the Kinge of England and our superior Magistrates or goverours bee (as concerning the same) agreed. I have in the name of the Lords the States Generall and the authorizd West India Company taken possession of the forementioned River, and for testimony thereof have sett upp an howse on the North side of the said River, with intent to plant &c. It's not the intent of the States to take the land from the poore Natives, as the Kinge of Spaine hath done by the Pope's Donation, but rather to take itt from the said Natives at some reasonable and convenient price, w<sup>ch</sup> God be prayesd we have done hitherto. In this parte of the world are divers heathen lands that are emptye of inhabitants, see that of a little parte or portion thereof theree needs not any question. I should bee very sorry that we should bee occasion that the Kinges Ma<sup>tie</sup> of England and the Lords the States Generall should fall into any contention. Wherewith ending, I commit you wth y<sup>o</sup>r wholl family unto the protection of Almighty God, being and restinge

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 29,562 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in one ship to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhael, 27, in his Historie (1644). There were no return shipments of beavers and otters in this year as usual.—Ibid., 30.

In this year, the Dutch West India Co. suffered reverses. A statement of the company's accounts, drawn up in 1635, indicates that there had been expended upon Fort Amsterdam, 4,172 guilders, 10 stuivers ($1,669); and for all New Netherland the sum of 412,800 guilders, 11 stuivers ($165,120.22).—Hazard, Historical Collections, I: 397.

1634 — the house in which they lived upon their bowery,—which tract at a later date became the property of Trinity Church. See Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 806; and Liber Patents, IV: 28 (Albany). The farm-house stood in the block now bounded by Harrison, Jay, Washington, and West Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 950; and Pl. 174, Vol. III. Cf. 1636.

— William Wood's New England's Prospect is published; the first detailed account of Massachusetts.—Church Catalogue, No. 427.

See A. Apr. — In this month, the "Eendracht" left Amsterdam for Rensselaerswyck bearing probably the first "red flag with the arms of the colony, to float on the breeze on proper occasions."—Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 67, 266, 315.

" — Lubbert van Dincklagen leaves Hollaod this month to assume his duties of fiscal and schout of New Netherlaod, succeeding Coenraet Nobelman. He antagonized Director-Gen. Wouter van Twiller, and was summarily removed from office. This led to long-standing proceedings on charges before the states-general, involving the West India Co.—Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 72, 77, 297, 320, 352, 465; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 100-4, 117, 126, 137 ff. In October, 1644, when the company's delegates were debating the recall of Kieft on account of his conduct in the Indian war, they proposed to send Dincklagen over to New Netherlaod again, this time as a provisional director-general.—Ibid., I: 148-49.

See A. Ap. 23 My 8 June — The patrons of New Netherlaod inform the lords of the states-general as follows: "Wampum being, in a manner, the currency of the country, with which the produce of the interior is paid for, must be considered as obtained goods, being representative thereof."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 87. This marks the official recognition of wampum as money in New Netherlaod. See earliest reference under 1628; and for first recorded regulatory ordinance, see April 18, 1641. On the use of wampum, see Hodge, Handbook of the American Indians, II: 904-9 (source references 909); Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 61-62, 67; Beauchamp, Wampum and Shell Articles used by the New York Indians, 351-56; Rosendale, Evolution of Wampum as Currency (1896), pamphlet (also in N. Y. Times), and his "Wampum Currency," in Sound Currency, III: 483-90 (March 15, 1896); Weeden, Indian Money as a Factor in New Eng. Civilization, in Johns Hopkins Studies, 2d ser., (1884), VIII and IX.

30 — The "Examination of Bastiaen Jansz Crol, former director of New Netherlaod, being 39 years of age, conducted at the request of the patrons by Notary Justus van de Ven," is held at Amsterdam. The questions asked and the answers given are as follows: "1. In what capacity, and for how long he was in the service of the West India Company in New Netherlaod.

"He states that he set out as comforter of the sick and made a voyage and stay of 7½ months in that country. He went out for the second time in the same capacity, and after he had been away about 15 months, he was appointed to the directorship at Fort Orange on the North River and held the same for three years. The third time he went out again as director of Fort Orange and to the best of his recollection served again for about two years. After which he was elected director general of New Netherlaod at Fort Amsterdam on the island Manhates, lying at the mouth of the aforesaid North River also named Mauritius, and served in this office 13 months.

"2. Whether, when residing at Fort Orange, he did not hear from the chiefs of the Maquas that there had formerly traded with them a certain Hans Jorisz Hontom, who had first for skipper Jacob Elkens, whom he later employed as his supercargo.

"Yes.
"3. Whether a misunderstanding did not arise between himself and Hontom, who had taken prisoner one of the chiefs.

"Yes. . . . .

"5. Whether in 1633, while he, Crol, was still director of New Netherlaod, the above named Hans Hontom did not come in the capacity of director of Fort Orange and councilor in New Netherlaod.

"Yes.

"6 Whether he did not see that a month after the arrival of Hontom, there had also arrived Jacques Elkens, coming with his fleet from London, and whether he did not at once go up the river to Fort Orange.

"Yes.

"7. Whether he was not asked by his successor, the new director van Twiller, to go again to Fort Orange in the service of the

W. I. Company, in order to prevent Elkens from trading there.
"Yes.

"8. Whether, when he came up there Jacques Elkens was not already there and trading in a tent he had erected behind Castle Island on the mill creek.

"Yes.

"9. Whether the sloop of Elkens was not lying directly in front of the wall of Fort Orange and trading there.

"Yes.

"10. Whether he [Crol] did not station himself with his boat in the Maguaskil above the fort, in order to cut off the Maquas from reaching Elkens.

"Yes.

"11. Whether on the following day, Hontom did not tell him that he might as well go away as he could manage the matter himself.

"Yes.

"12. Whether Elkens did not go often to the fort and whether Hontom did not often eat in the tent.

"Yes.

"13. How long Elkens traded there.

"Four to five weeks.

"How many skins he obtained.

"About 400.

"14. Whether he, when he was at Fort Orange, was not present, when Saggadoeychta, head chief of the Maquas, came, and seeing Hontom, at once packed up his skins and rising up, said "That man is a scoundrel, I will not trade with him."

"Yes.

"15. Whether soon afterwards, the Company's yacht de Bever was not burned by the savages near Fort Orange.

"Yes.

"16. Whether the tribe of the Macquas, shortly before he left Fort Orange did not tell him, as he understood their language, that they would kill the said Hans Jorissen Hontom the first time they should find him alone, and whether he had not warned Hontom about this.

"Yes.

"What answer Hontom made thereto.

"That the Macquas might do their best, or something to that effect.

"17. Whether, on the 20th July, 1633, as he, Crol, lay ready to sail for the fatherland, a Mahican savage, named Dickop, did not come bringing the tidings to the island Manhates, that all the cattle in the neighborhood of Fort Orange had been killed.

"Yes.

"18. Whether the director Pieter Minuiet, the predecessor of Crol, had not ordered Cornelis van Vorst to keep two of the four young cows which were with calf.

"Yes.

"Where this happened.

"In the house of Cornelis van Vorst at Pavonia, in the presence of Pieter Bijlevelt and shortly before the departure of Minuiet.

"19 Whether Andries Hudden, commis of stores, did not also furnish a cow to van Vorst.

"Yes.

"20. Whether Wouter van Twiller, director, in March 1633, about 10 months after the delivery, took away these cattle from Cornelis van Vorst.

"Yes.

"For what reason?

"He said he had bought them from Minuiet.

"21. Whether van Twiller did not give van Vorst three other cows in their place.

1635

— In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 28,875 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in one ship to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhaal, 27, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 14,891 beavers, and 1,413 otters and other peltries, valued at 134,925 guilders. The total valuation of such imports from 1624 to 1635 inclusive amounted to 705,117 guilders.—Ibid., 30.

— Jacob Stoffelsen deposed on March 22, 1639 (q.v.), among other things, that Fort Amsterdam "was completed in the year 1635."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 18. Cf. letter of Van Twiller and his council of Aug. 14, 1636.

— During this year, a small party of Englishmen, commanded by George Holmes, was sent out by West, the provisional governor of Virginia, and captured Fort Nassau on the Delaware River from the Dutch. A bark was despatched by Director Wouter van Twiller to dislodge them. They were taken on board the Dutch skipper De Vries's ship bound for Virginia. De Vries, after wintering there, arrived at Sandy Hook on May 8, 1636, and, on May 16 (q.v.), careened his leaky ship at the Smits Vly in New Amsterdam.—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 195-97. O'Callaghan's version (Hist. N. Neth., I: 170) is not correct. Perhaps De Vries brought with him several Englishmen to settle in New Netherland. If so, Holmes and his servant Thomas Hall, the earliest Englishmen met with in the records, must have been among them. Fifteen years afterwards, Secretary Van Tienhoven charged that Hall "ran away from his master" during the expedition of 1635 against Fort Nassau, and "came to the Manhattan and hired himself as a farmer's man to Jacob van Curlur" (Curler).—Jameson, op. cit., 375. But the friendly associations existing between Holmes and Hall on Manhattan Island would seem to discount these charges, based solely upon the word of the corrupt provincial secretary, who, in 1635, held only the subordinate post of bookkeeper of wages paid by the company to its servants. Regarding Holmes and Hall, see, further, March 22, August, and Sept. 7, 1639.

— Blaeu's Map "Nova Belgica et Anglia Nova" (copied from the Figurative Map of Adriaen Block) appeared in this year, in the first edition of Blaeu's World Atlas. This map, although a close copy of the first Figurative Map, has been brought up to date. The principal point of interest which the map possesses for us is its indication, for the first time, of the full name "Nieu Amsterdam," and its depiction as a fort. The form "Manathaus" appears also for the first time on this map. For reproduction, see Cartography, Pl. 32, and description, II: 88.

— Writing in 1792, Ebenezer Hazard said: ". . . from a state [ment] of their [the West India Co.'s] accounts drawn up in 1635 [part of which was in possession of Mr. Henry Kip, late of New York, deceased, and from which this extract was made], it appears that Fort Amsterdam, in New Netherland Cost the Company 4,172 Guilders to Stuyvers, and that New Netherland (the Province) cost 412,300 Guilders 11 Stuyvers."—Hist. Coll. of State Papers, I: 39.

Jan. 22 The following minute is made at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam: "Messrs. Blommet, Hamel and Trip, patrons of colonies in New Netherland, request and have requested to be permitted to have their bonds. Whereupon they have been informed, to hand over to us their map and further contracts, and then we shall deliver the above [bonds]." These were the patronships on the South (Delaware) River.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XLIII, fol. 7 vo., 17 vo., in National Archives at The Hague. Regarding discovery of these important documents, see Sept. 10 and 23, 1624. Such of these minutes as have been translated by Mr. Van Laer are so noted. The others are taken from translations made by Mr. Versteeg from Dr. Wieder's transcripts.

Feb. 3=13 At a "meeting of the Lords for the dividing of the Coast," the "bounds were thus laid out; Beginning from the Westernmost parts of our bounds Eastwards, where the Lord of Mongray began his limits, and ended the same at the river called Hudsons river, to the Eastward of the river was placed the Duke of Lenox," etc. Sir Ferdinando Gorges' patent was from the "middle of Merincke to the great River of Sagadohecke being Sixty miles, and so up into the Maize land one hundred and twenty miles."—Sir Ferdinando

Gorges, "A Briefe Narration," 44-45, in Am. Painted to the Life (1659); Cal. State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1660, 195. See also Feb. 3=13 Addenda.

The following record is made in the Resolutieboek of the chamber at Amsterdam: "Henrick Arentsen Keertekoe, having plied [by ship] to Canada, requests to serve the Company in New Netherland, or where their Honors shall be pleased to employ him. [Conclusion thereupon] There is no opening."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XLVI, fol. 20. See also N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 219.

"Mr. Joris requests to serve the Company as map maker (caertemaker). Will be considered when the time and occasion present themselves."—From "Min. of the Amsterdam Chamber of the Dutch W. I. Company, 1635-1636" (translated by A. J. F. van Laer), in N. Y. Genealogical and Biog. Rec., XLIX: 218.

In the Resolutieboek of the chamber of Amsterdam, this record Apr. 30 appears: "A letter was read from Mr. Ambassador Joachim from London, dated the last of March, concerning damage done to New Netherland by the English owing to their pretensions."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XLIX, fol. 28.

An entry in the Resolutieboek of the West India Co., chamber May 10 of Amsterdam, states: "Willem Riewerts is appointed skipper of the 'Sevenster' [the Pleiades, literally the Seven Stars] going to New Netherland, on the old wage scale formerly received by him at Campen."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LII, fol. 31 vo. See also N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 220.

A minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam, that "Simon Jansen, of Durgerdam, has been accepted as mate on the 'Sevenster' [which is bound] for New Netherland, at 35 guilders per month."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LIII, fol. 32 vo.

The directors at Amsterdam resolve "that the commissioners for New Netherland shall inform themselves concerning a capable under-commis for the commerce of New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LIV, fol. 32 vo.

The directors at Amsterdam resolve to send, after it has been read in meeting, "the drafted letter to the Director and Council of New Netherland." This is one of the lost texts.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LV, fol. 34.

The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam, 24 "Gysbert on dea Dyck is engaged as under-commis, [to sail] on the 'Sevenster' going to New Netherland, and in case he should be needed on land, he shall also serve there, and is engaged at 18 guilders per month, and upon such further conditions as the commissioners for New Netherland have set down in the book."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LVI, fol. 34 vo.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam "a petition of Bastiaen Jansen Crof [Kroll] is read and "referred to the commissioners for New Netherland." The text is one of the lost documents.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LVIII, fol. 41.

"Isaac de Rasiere requests an order for the payment of his itemized bill signed by skipper Tonemann and Commsy Jongeneel, amounting to 47 gld. and 18 st. Habear."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 47.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, the following record is made in the minutes: "Mr. Couradus submits, that the wife of [Pieter Pietersz] Bylevelt, demanding damages and interest in New Netherland, exceeding 7000 guilders, on account of the recall of her people from New Netherland, besides Mr. de Vries, has been to see Mr. Bicker and Renselaar, and that Mr. Bicker thinks she was wronged, but that Mr. Renselaar declares, that Bylevelt has departed in the service of the Company, and not as a freeman. That now she offers, in hope of an agreement, to come to terms. Whereupon, it was resolved, that the old and new commissioners for New Netherland shall confer with her, and to report to this assembly for a final conclusion."—Records of old Dutch West India Co., No. 14, LX, fol. 51. See also Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 301; and June 14, Addenda.

This minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "Daniel Dintlagen [Lubbert van Dincklagen], fiscal of New Netherland, returned home by way of England, has handed over his journal, which [Mr.] Conradus shall read and hand over to the commissioners of New Netherland." This journal is one of the lost records.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIII, fol. 61 vo.

The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: 17 "Lubbert van Dincklagen [sic for Dincklagen], former fiscal in New

- 1635 Netherlands, requests a copy of the invoice of the winchel ende Nov.
Sept. Keldergederen of New Netherland, in order that he may examine 12 17 the same, and further to receive some money on account for living expenses. It is referred to the commissioners for New Netherland, who shall examine the letter which Mr. Courndrus has written concerning the matter.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIV, fol. 67 vo.
- Oct. 1 A minute, as follows, is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "Louys Luca, merchant of this place, requests according to the obligation [bond] of Director Wouter van Twiller, to receive the sum of four hundred and four guilders for various goods furnished by Samuel Chendeler to the people in New Netherland. The matter is deferred until the ship, now expected, arrives from New Netherland, as we have no advice from the said party."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXVI, fol. 72 vo.
- 11 The minutes of the chamber at Amsterdam state: "The father of Petrus Stuyffant, comms, or supercargo, at Fernando Norunho [Fernando de Noronha], requests that his son, going from there to Pernambuco [Brazil], may be advanced to whatever position he may be able to fill. Referred to the XIX [Assembly of the Nineteen] to be mentioned in the general letter."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 77 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 221).
- 18 The directors at Amsterdam make this minute: "Aeffgen Cornelis, mother of Cornelis Jansen, who sailed as smith to New Netherland, petitions to receive, without having been granted authority thereunto, six months of his wages. It was disallowed."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIX, fol. 80 vo.
- 29 "Lubbertus van Dincklagen, formerly fiscal in New Netherland, requests that he may receive some money on account. Referred to the Commissioners of [for] New Netherland. Also requests some medicines from the apothecary shop to cure his dropsy and bad health contracted on the voyage."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 83 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 221).
- Nov. 3 This record is made in the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam: "A letter of Wouter van Twiller, Director in New Netherland, dated Aug. 28, 1635, was read." This letter is one of the lost records.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXII, fol. 86.
- 8 The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "Jan Pietersen, of Enckhuysen, having sailed as second mate [styrman] in the 'Gelderlandt,' and appointed at St. Martyn skipper of the yacht 'Goede Hoop,' was driven thence by the Spaniards and by necessity forced to go to New Netherland, and detained there by the Director van Twiller until his present return hither on the 'Eendracht,' requests his pay and presents himself for service. Referred to the commissioners for New Netherland, to investigate the matter and make a report to this assembly."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXIV, fol. 87 vo.
- 12 At a meeting of the chamber at Amsterdam, "a letter was read from Jacques Bentjen [Jacques Bentyng, a member of Van Twiller's council], written from New Netherland." This letter is one of the lost records of the company.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 89 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 222).
- " The widow of Hans Jarissen Hontom (or Hunthum, who had been commis at Fort Orange and was killed in April, 1634, by Cornelis van Vorst, director of the colony of Pavia [Jersey City]), "causes to be attached in the warehouse of the Company [in Amsterdam, Holland] a case of beavers, marked No. 2, belonging to Cornelis van Vorst, which was sent to Mr. Hamel," one of the directors of the company. On Dec. 3, a petition of the relatives and kinsmen of Joris Hontom, killed by Cornelis van Vorst," was considered by the directors at Amsterdam. His family wanted "to have a certificate of the murder," but were informed that the directors had "received no certification other than that the Director [of New Netherland] writes that the murder took place."—Records of old West India Company No. 14, fol. 91 vo. and 99 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 222, 223). Buchelius (Kon. Aenv. 212B) says that Cornelis van Vorst refused to have the ordinances of the director-general and council posted in Pavia, for which he was arrested; he also refused to obey the officer of the company, in whose custody he was "sulck dat by v. V. ter lesten den vice commandeur heeft doorsteeken." A deposition dated Feb. 25, 1636, concerning the murder of Corn. Martz van Buren, 30 years of age, made at the request of Ybel Hendrick, widow of
- Hans Jorisz Hontuns, before Notary Jan Cornelisz Hogheboom, Nov.
12 in that notary's protocol at Amsterdam, marked No. 843. (Gemeente Archief, Amsterdam).
- " The following reference to Hendrick Hendricksen Kip (also called Snijder), founder of the Kip family in New York, appears in the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam: "Hendrick Hendricksen Snijder, requests for the account of Henrick Jansen Snijder according to the bill of exchange, dated August 15, 1635 and signed by Wouter van Twiller and Marten Gerritsen, the amount of 326 guilders, 19 stivers, 8 pennies." His request is referred to the commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXV, fol. 90 vo.
- 19 Lubbert van Dincklagen, former fiscal of New Netherland, whose recall is a subject of inquiry by the directors at Amsterdam, "requests, that in accordance with his interrogatories, the people arrived from New Netherland shall be examined." It is evident from this that he had drawn up a series of questions, which he wished to be put at the inquiry, in his defense.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXVIII, fol. 92.
- " "Micheil Simoonsen, skipper of the 'Eendracht' returned from New Netherland, requests [for] the directors at Amsterdam] that his crew may be paid."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXIX, fol. 93.
- " The following important reference to negroes in the employ of the company appears in the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam: "There was read a petition from five negroes arrived here from New Netherland, claiming to have earned eight guilders a month, requesting a settlement. Referred to the Commissioners for New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXX, fol. 93 vo. Cf. Sept. 25, 1639, Addenda.
- 21 A minute of the directors at Amsterdam reads: "Mr. Gras proposed, that Sieur Jan Bicker requests 63 rolls of tobacco brought from New Netherland, and resolved to communicate about the same with the commissioners of trade."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXI, fol. 94.
- 22 The directors at Amsterdam adopt the following resolution: "Samuel Chendeler requests payment of 404 guilders by virtue of a bond and assignment of Wouter van Twiller, under date of May 9, 1635. Resolved, to pay the same and charge it to the account of Wouter van Twiller, until he shall have been properly apprised thereof. There is in addition a mistake of two guilders."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXIII, fol. 94 vo.
- " From the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam it is shown that "some officers and sailors" now request the payment of the wages they have earned. They are those "who sailed from here [Holland] to New Netherland in the 'Eendracht' and who have returned home in the same; others having departed in the yacht 'De Goede Hoop,' from St. Martyn to New Netherland [Was Hendrick de Forest one of these?—Cf. April 16, 1633; and Sept. 11, 1636], remaining there for two years; the third party having sailed with the ship 'New Netherland,' now called 'de Soutbergh'." It is resolved "to pay the people who went out with the ship 'Eendracht' and are now returned, besides the others, if the commissioners interpose no objections."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXIV, fol. 95.
- " The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "The mate of the 'Eendracht' from New Netherland, requests his wages. The mate of the yacht 'de Goede Hoop' does the same. Three sailors from New Netherland, who remained three months in this country aboard the ship, request three months' [pay] in addition."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXVI, fol. 97.
- " From the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam we learn that "Barent Jansen, woodsawyer, who prior to this has served some years in New Netherland, requests to go as a freeman to Brazil, provided that the gentlemen will advance to him 18 guilders on account, under security, if it could not be arranged otherwise. The commissioners are requested to induce these persons and others without enjoying such aid."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXII, fol. 94 vo.
- " A petition is read at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam "from the wife of Jan van Remunde," who was a secretary of New Netherland under Peter Minuit and bitterly opposed both Miouit and Wouter van Twiller, in which she requests "payment of her husband's salary, prize money from the captured prize, proceeds of the sale of clothes, commissions on the skins for the Company and release of the surties." She is referred to the commissioners for

 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 222).

26 The chamber of Amsterdam receives "a letter from Tryntgen Jonas, midwife in New Netherland, requesting an increase in wages and some necessities." The letter is one of the lost records of the company.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 96 v. o. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 222).

Dec. 3 The following record is made in the minutes of the chamber at Amsterdam: "Arent Steffener, who sailed as a sailor in the ship 'Eendracht' to New Netherland and was wounded by the Magas [Mohawks] and also broke his leg in the service of the Company, claims damages." His case is referred "to the Commissioners of Munitions."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 98 v. o. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 222).

" The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "There was presented to this body by Mr. Jan Bicker a bill of lading, according to which 65 rolls of tobacco, at 30 stivers freightage for each hundredweight, were sent from New Netherland on the 'Eendracht.' He requests to have the tobacco received according to the bill of lading. Motion prevailed, that the commissioners go into the matter thoroughly, and learn what the Assembly of the Nineteen have resolved therein, in order to refer the same to the meeting and come to a decision."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXVIII, fol. 98 v. o.

6 Michiel Simons, skipper of the "Eendracht," returns from New Netherland, and requests his monthly wages. The commissioners for New Netherland are authorised to act in the matters as the service of the company demands.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XCI, fol. 99 v. o. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 223).

" Lubbert van Dinclagen, former fiscal [of New Netherland], petitions as in his request to have reimbursement for all his expenses." It is left to the discretion of the commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XCII, fol. 99 v. o.

" At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, the following action is taken: "Upon request of Mr. Johan Bicker, to receive the tobacco arrived from New Netherland in the ship 'Eendracht,' provided he pay the freightage according to the bill of lading. After examining the report of Messrs. van Ceulen and van der Dussen from the Chamber of the Northquarter [Hoor], and the resolution of the Assembly of the Nineteen, of date April 14, 1635, against Davidt Pietersen [de Vries], it was resolved, that he [Bicker] may receive the tobacco under security, save and without jeopardizing the just cause which the Company believes it has against Davidt Pietersen and associates."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XCIII, fol. 100.

17 On this date, and on Jan. 3 and 7, 1636, the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam had before them a request from Bastiaen Jansen Crol (or Krol) for the payment "of an account which has been outstanding for over four years," and which he originally sent over "to his wife" from New Netherland, where he was commander at Fort Orange. On Jan. 10, 1636, he again requested "the balance of his account," and on the 14th, "the presiding officer" of the Chamber at Amsterdam stated "that Bastiaen Jansen Crol claims payment according to his account for the delivery of brick burned in New Netherland and that upon inquiry it appears that the said brick was worthless." Therefore, the directors "decided to make further inquiry through the Commissioners" for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 103, 108 v. o., 110 v. o., 112 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 223-24).

27 At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, this minute is made: "Mr. President reported, that 6 beaverskins had been sent from New Netherland by W. van Twiller as a gift to H. Schaeff, J. Alrichs, and J. Timonsen. This delivery of the skins was unanimously disapproved until further information shall have been received about the same."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XCIX, fol. 107 v. o.

— Anneke and Roeloff Jansen receive a grant of land from Director Van Twiller. For description, see under date of the confirmation, March 24, 1667; see also July 4, 1654. Cf. 1634.

Jan. 14 The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "Mr. President reported, that Cornelis van Vorst has passed an obligation and assignment in behalf of Claes Cornelis Swits amounting to 420 guilders. The holder of which requests payment from Jan. the Company. The matter was discussed, because the same was 14 dated December 5, 1633, and originates in the delivery of animals to the colony of Pavonia [Jersey City], which this Company took over absolutely from Mr. Paew and paid for to his Honor. It was resolved, that Mr. Paew must free the Company from these debts and accordingly that they [the above papers] be sent back to his Honor."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, C, fol. 112.

"Lubbertus van Dinclagen, former fiscal in New Netherland, 28 requests that this body [the directors at Amsterdam] be pleased to examine his request and the accompanying documents, and that they take favorable action with regard to them, inasmuch as he has received no satisfaction from the commissioners. Then was read the remonstrance sent in by the fiscal van Dinclagen, in which he requests his complete three years' salary. After inquiry, opinion prevailed that he would have to content himself with what the Commissioners for New Netherland would allow him, as they shall deem proper, the indemnification for the wrong, which he pretends was committed unjustly against him by some persons in New Netherland, tabled without the meeting taking any action therein. In regard to his earned wages, they dismiss him."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CII, fol. 114 v. o.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, "Mr. van Ceulen Mar. proposes, that in the cellar of the Company there is stored a quantity of tobacco arrived from New Netherland for the account of 10 Jan Bicker, shipped by Davidt Pietersen [de Vries], and, whereas the Company has a claim upon it, whether it was not advisable to sell the tobacco, and to leave the mummy in consignment. Resolved, to submit the matter to the Assembly of the Nineteen."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CV, fol. 123.

Davidt Pietersz. de Vries, during his second voyage to these parts, May cared his leaky ship in the "Smits-Vleye," a tract of lowland 16 on the East River shore, between Wall and Beckman Sts., and repaired it.—De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 197. The date in the original Dutch work is misprinted the "6th." This is the first known mention of the Smits Vly, Smith's Valley, or Smith's Flats. De Vries's work was first printed in 1655; but it is probable that the name was recorded in his journal in 1636, as it is also mentioned in a patent as given as May 22, 1640 (q. v.).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 365; Liber GG, 34, in office of sec. of state, Albany; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1009, showing origin of the name.

At a meeting of the Amsterdam chamber, there are appointed, June pursuant to the allotment of the commissions accorded that chamber 1 for commissioners for New Netherland and Curaçao, Messrs. Albert Coenraets Burgh, Samuel Blommaert, Daniel van Liebergen, and Frederick de Vries.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CIX, fol. 154.

Roger Williams, having been banished from Massachusetts, — founds Providence, the first settlement in Rhode Island.—Winsor, III: 335-36.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, "Mr. Kiliaen July van Renselaer reports that he has engaged a great company of 7 people numbering 30 or 40 to be sent to New Netherland, some of whom, owing to the long delay, have run away, and some are become mutinous; therefore, he requests that the same be sent over with a ship of the Company, or at least with his own ship (the "Renselaerswyck" which he is permitted to send to the West Indies under proper recognition to bring his people over to New Netherland, as more fully set forth in his submitted petition. Whereupon, it was resolved to put his petition in the hands of the Commissioners for New Netherland, to examine the same and to report to this body."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CX, fol. 156. See July 14, 1636.

"Came to the meeting [of the directors at Amsterdam] Kiliaen 14 van den Renselaer, requesting that on his petition of the 7th inst. [q. v.], a final disposition be made, and that a copy may be furnished him of all that which has been averred against him and his nephew, Wouter van Twiller, by the fiscal Dinclage. After deliberation it was resolved, first, to allow him to freight a ship for New Netherland with a permit to reload with wood and salt according to the freedoms and exemptions of New Netherland and West Indies, respectively; besides taking along a supercargo commissioned by his Honor. Concerning the second item of his petition, it is resolved, that the Commissioners for New Netherland shall give him satisfaction therein," who "are requested to inquire what

- 1636 goods or people the Company has to send thither."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXI, fol. 158 vo. Aug. 14
- 21 "Came to the meeting [of the directors at Amsterdam] Mr. Kiliaen van Rensselaer, declaring that he is about to buy a small ship to be sent to New Netherland, offering to hire or buy a larger one, in case this meeting should find it desirable to send some cargoes requesting thereupon a definite answer, as he is obliged to make his decision on this day. Whereupon thanking his Honor, he was informed, that whereas the business is so pressing and the Commissioners for New Netherland cannot be in such a hurry, in order not to detain him, [it is resolved] that he may buy such a ship as seems best to him, and should there be space in the same, and the Company is in condition to send any goods, it will send some cargo with the same."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXII, fol. 160 vo. Sept. 1
- Aug. 8 "The 8th of August, the gunner of the fort [Fort Amsterdam] gave a parting feast [to De Vries], and had a tent erected on one of the bastions of the fort, where a table and benches were set and many people bidden."—De Vries' notes in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 198. 9
- 14 Wouter van Twiller writes to the directors at Amsterdam: "We very patiently await daily your honors' answer, together with general [instructions for] redress, which is needed. All that is wanted here is to apply the rod of justice, for which [we] must be properly authorized by the supreme authorities. "As to the trade, it would go reasonably well if the English did not interfere with it by many underhand means. They offer here abundant supplies of Dutch merchandise for sale, under pretext of coming to trade with the Indians, which trade they think is open to them as well as to us. Those on the Fresh River [Connecticut] pretend that they do not come to trade, but to spend the rest of their days, but they are well stocked with goods and do not let any skins go by, if they are to be had. "The house on the South [Delaware] River is already under cover. I am at present busy to send four iron pieces thither to keep possession of the same. "No English come here, or have ever been here, who behave otherwise than as becomes good friends and allies. If the Company maintains that they solely occupy these places for purposes of trade to the exclusion of them [the English], I fear that, getting into dispute, they will be defeated. " . . . The crops this year have succeeded very well. We hope that we shall have bread enough for ourselves for one year. If agriculture were promoted a little, we could manage to have enough of everything, with the exception of salt, oil and vinegar. "Cornelis van Voorst still resides in the Manor of Pavonia [Jersey City]. He does a great deal of mischief. The disputes between the patrons and the Company have undermined the respect for the Company, to the sorrow of those who would fain uphold it." " On the same day, Director Wouter van Twiller and his council send a letter to the directors of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., which shows that Jacobus van Curler and the elder Claes van Elsland are councillors of New Netherland, that Andries Huddle is provincial secretary, and that Jacques Bentin is the scout or chief prosecuting official at this time. As this general letter introduces us to a number of hitherto unknown facts relative to conditions on Manhattan Island and in the province, the following paragraphs are included here: "Domine E. Bogardus, minister here [New Amsterdam], has very earnestly requested us [to secure] a schoolmaster to teach and train the youth of both Dutch and blacks, in the knowledge of Jesus Christ and to serve also as sexton and precentor. [See Aug. 4, 1637.] "It would in our opinion also be advisable if the carpenters who are already here or are still to be sent, were put on a daily wage, in order that the Company might employ them according to their capacity. It would in that case be necessary to pay them every week, in order to stimulate their interest and inclination to work. "As to our fort, it falls entirely into ruin, as it is built up of wooden palisades which at present are completely decayed. It is very necessary that it be entirely built of stone (as it was begun), as the palisades can not stand more than 3 or 4 years at the most, which would put your honors to excessive expense; and in case your honors should resolve to have this done, it would be necessary to have regard thereto in the sending over of men and materials, in which case the men doing the work ought to have extra wages, as in Pernambuco and other places, in order thereby to keep the men in a state of proper obedience and ready to perform their bounden duty. "It is further suggested whether it would be advisable to explore the coast from Terra Neuff to Florida to see what trade might be carried on there. If your honors should be in favor of this, be pleased to advise us."—From contemporary copies of two Dutch letters, recently discovered, and translated by A. J. F. van Laer in the Quarterly Jour. of the N. Y. State Hist. Assn. (Oct., 1919), 44-50. Sept. 1
- Kiliaen van Rensselaer requests of the directors at Amsterdam "in a petition, in case there was no cargo of the Company in New Netherland, to be permitted to trade his own cargo and under what conditions. It was resolved to put the petition in the hands of the Commissioners for New Netherland, to act upon the same and to report concerning that petition, as well as on the manner of redress, which should be inaugurated in New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXIII, fol. 173 vo. 9
- A minute of the meeting of the directors at Amsterdam states that the commissioners for New Netherland, "having been in conference with Mr. Rensselaer, have reported, that through more extensive presentation on his former remonstrance [see Sept. 1], as recorded, the Messrs. Commissioners were requested to prepare duplicate drafts, concerning the way the trade on New Netherland can be thrown open [to everybody]." The item is important as showing an impelling cause for the establishment of free trade in New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXIV, fol. 177. Trade to Brazil was thrown open in 1638. See A. 11
- "Jan Jansen from Ipendam, captured in Porto Calvo, and returning home by way of Bahij [Bahia], and now going to New Netherland as supercargo on the ship of [Mr. Kiliaen] van Rensselaer, [the "Rensselaerswyck"—see Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 355], requests payment for his remaining wages to the amount of 60 guilders. Referred to the masters of accounts."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXV, fol. 177 vo. " "Henrick de Forest requests [of the directors at Amsterdam] a patent for 100 morgens of land granted him by the Council in New Netherland subject to the approval of this Chamber, on condition that he pay the dues prescribed by the regulations; all more fully set forth by his petition," which was referred to the Commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 177 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 225). Mr. Van Laer, the translator, annotates thus: "Henrick de Forest sailed soon after the date of this entry for New Netherland as mate on the ship 'Rensselaerswyck,' which arrived at Manhattan on March 5, 1637 [v. v.]. The supposition has been heretofore that he immediately after his arrival secured a grant from Wouter van Twiller for 100 morgens of land on Manhattan Island. The present entry shows that this grant was secured at an earlier date, consequently that De Forest had been in New Netherland before 1636, probably in connection with the voyage which he undertook in 1632 with Captain David Pietersen de Vries." De Forest left De Vries at St. Martyn, but may have come to New Netherland in the service of the West India Co.—See April 16, 1633 (Addenda), and Nov. 22, 1635. See A. 18
- "A letter from the states general, dated August 30th, was read [at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam], in which it is recommended that satisfaction be given Lubbert van Dinclagen, fiscal of New Netherland," whereupon it is "resolved, that a reply be made by the Commissioners for New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXIX, fol. 181. 27
- A letter written from the Texel, on the 26th, by Pieter Claessen Croon, is read at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, in which he reports "the arrival also of the 'Witte Leeuw' [White Lion]; also the ship 'Seventer' [Seven Stars] from New Netherland, which has passed by unnoticed; and Messrs. Blommert and de Vries were delegated immediately to find said ship, visit her, and further to put things in order."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXX, fol. 184. 28
- Following out their duties, delegated to them by the directors at Amsterdam the previous day, "Messrs. Blommert and de Vries report, that they have removed the gold from the ship 'Haringh' and have deposited it with Mr. Barterhing, and further, that they have brought the ship 'Seventer' here [Amsterdam] to the pier."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXI, fol. 184. "
- A minute of the directors at Amsterdam states: "A letter was read from the Director [Wouter van Twiller] of New Netherland, dated March 22, 1636. Also another from the Director, dated

- 1636 August 14, 1636." The text of the latter was discovered by A. J. F. van Laer (see Aug. 14), and in it is mentioned the enclosure of a copy of the letter of March 23d, but the text of that letter is lost. —Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXII, fol. 184.
- " The general letter from the director and council in New Netherland, dated Aug. 14, 1636 (g.v.), is read at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam. This letter was recently discovered by A. J. F. van Laer. The ship which brought this correspondence fetched a cargo consisting "of 7094 otter and beaver skins and some other goods brought over as freight, from a captured prize by Jonathan de Necker."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXIII, fol. 194. See also Sept. 29.
- " A minute of the directors at Amsterdam states: "Mr. Blommert presents a document signed by W. van Twiller, dated August 12, 1636, by which he allows Jacobus van Corler, commis, to send over for his own account to Mr. Henrich van Donselaer [Dompse-laer, uncle of Jacobus van Curler] ten beaver-skins, which are further to be delivered according to his order to Gossen van Corler as a gift, which skins are in charge of the skipper."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXIV, fol. 184.
- 29 The following minute is recorded by the directors at Amsterdam: "Samuel Axe, captain, arrived with the 'Sevensterre' from New Netherland, requests that the tobacco and hides, which he has captured from the Spaniards on a copy of Jonathan de Mecker's commission, may be put in a warehouse, and that the account having been made, of what shall come to the Company and what to him, that he may receive his share. Resolved, that the goods shall be put in our warehouse by the commissioners, and then further action be taken."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXVI, fol. 185.
- Oct. 1 A minute of the following transaction was made by the directors at Amsterdam: "Mr. Blommert and the advocate delegated to give information relative to the ship of David Pietersen [de Vries], which has arrived from New Netherland, have reported, that the ship named the 'David' lies in the Vlie [channel between the islands of Vlieland and Verschelbrig], and that he personally had gone to Hoorn [his home]. That they then addressed themselves to the Directors of the Chamber of Hoorn, making known their authority; who have agreed to guard the rights of the Company, and, if necessary, to apprise the Chamber at Amsterdam. For this purpose, they have invited the person of David Pietersen to appear at their meeting and proposed to him, that he should discharge his entire cargo and store it in the warehouses of the Company and pay duties to the same, which he promised to do, as far as the Company's claim was just."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXVII, fol. 186.
- See A. Oct. 2 3 It is interesting to note, in connection with trade at this time at Albany, the following letter from Van Rensselaer to Planck: "Since I have paid cash for these (goods) without including any expenses for packing, boat and lighter-freight, ocean freight, interest, risk, and insurance, damage etc. (an increase which) with your commission (of 5%) amounts to nearly 50%; therefore (you) must sell all such goods as can bear it, somewhat higher than 50%. But I do not wish my own people to be charged more than 60% since they must gain it by their hard labor. But from other people, for whom I need not care, you may take as much as is the market rate and you can get."—Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 74.
- 8 "A letter was read [at the meeting of the directors at Amsterdam] from their High Mightinesses, dated October 6, 1636, concerning the case of Lubbert van Dinclagen [former fiscal in New Netherland], requiring an answer within 14 days to their High Mightinesses," to which the commissioners for New Netherland are directed to reply.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXVIII, fol. 191.
- 24 "Captain Samuel Axe requests [from the directors at Amsterdam] his goods arrived from New Netherland in the Company's ship, provided he pay the Company's duties, and the payment of the draft made out by Wouter van Twiller on the Company." The commissioners for New Netherland were requested to "satisfy the same."—Records of old West India Company No. 14, CXXX, fol. 184 vo, in National Archives at The Hague. On Oct. 30, Messrs. Gras and Man reported in meeting "about the goods" which Axe had brought from New Netherland, whereupon, "it was resolved provisionally to advise with Messrs. Couraudus and de Vries, whether these goods should not be declared a good prize."—Ibid., CXXXIII, fol. 202 vo.
- "The wife of Jan Hillebrantsen, who more than 2½ years ago went out to New Netherland as a freeman and was accepted there as a carpenter at 20 guilders a month, petitions [the directors at Amsterdam] to receive two months' wages of her husband, just as she received them last year."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXI, fol. 198 vo.
- "Mr. Couraudus submits [to the directors at Amsterdam] that it will be necessary to send a ship to New Netherland, also to take measures regarding the government there and to find a suitable person for the office of commander. The Commissioners [for New Netherland] are instructed to look around for a capable person and to find a suitable ship and to report at the next meeting."—Records of old West India Company, No. 14, CXXXII, fol. 199, in National Archives at The Hague. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 227-228). Out of this suggestion came the appointment of Willem Kieft.
- The directors at Amsterdam resolve, among other things, to send the ship "Haringh" to Curaçao and New Netherland. —Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 204 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 228).
- Willern Rieuwertsen, skipper of the ship "De Sevenster" (Seven Stars), requests the directors at Amsterdam for a settlement of his pay, and further offers his services. His request is "referred to the Commissioners for New Netherland to dispose of the matter."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXIV, fol. 203.
- "Cornelis Volckertsen [Viele], having arrived home more than a year ago in the ship 'Eendracht' from New Netherland and not being found recorded in the ship's register, requests [the directors at Amsterdam] to receive his wages, from that time on at ten guilders per month, as he was sick when the payment was made, as he says." The directors refuse "until further proof shall be forthcoming."—Records of old West India Company, No. 14, CXXXVI, fol. 203 vo.
- A college is projected in Massachusetts on Oct. 28/Nov. 7.—See Addenda.
- "Frederick Lubbertsen, freeman in New Netherland, requests [of the directors at Amsterdam] that his wife, Styntgen Jan's daughter, may join him at the first opportunity, according to the declaration of Wouter van Twiller, and as there is still due her husband by the Company, from over three years ago, six months' wages at 20 guilders per month, which the Directors have always promised to give her when her husband should return, and he now remains there [in New Netherland], therefore she requests that she may receive the same." It is referred to the commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXL, fol. 209 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 228).
- Mr. Reepmaecker submits to the directors at Amsterdam "that David Pietersen [de Vries] requests to communicate to the meeting some points concerning New Netherland," but they "decide that he [De Vries] shall have to address himself to the Commissioners for New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXLII, fol. 215 vo.
- "Mr. Couraudus declares that David Pietersen [de Vries] requests to be sent as Director to New Netherland; and if this can not be done, that he may be given permission to plant a colony in New Netherland. Resolved [by the directors at Amsterdam] that a more capable person is needed for Director."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXLII, fol. 216 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 228). Captain De Vries established a colony on Staten Island, in 1638. For an account of his published journal of voyages, see Bibliography, Vol. V.

On this day (or March 5—see 1636, Sept. 11), the ship "Rensselaerswyck" anchors "at the Manhattans," and remains there because the river is closed. "The cargo was discharged and Hendrik de Forest, the trader and mate, remained in the hired warehouse to carry on trade, while the ship went up the river to the colony on the 26th and dropped anchor on the 7th of April opposite Fort Orange."—Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 75. This reference to De Forest, "the supposed founder of the town of Harlem," shows that he arrived in the spring of 1637, and not, as stated by Kiker, in the fall of 1636.—Ibid., 31. See also Sept. 11, 1636; and July 23, 1638.

1637 The first general court of Connecticut is held at Hartford, and May the Connecticut towns assume powers of government.—Winsor,

 16 under this date.

July Two Indian chiefs of Mareschkawick (Brooklyn), appearing 16 before Director Van Twiller and his council, make acknowledgment of a deed to Van Twiller of "the two islands, situate in the Helle-gars," the larger "called Tenkenas [now Ward's Island] and the smaller Minnahanock" (now Randall's Island).—*N. Y. Col.

 and Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 495.

Aug. Adam Rolands, having requested to be sent to New Netherland 4 as schoolmaster, reader, and preceptor, "was accepted, as recommended, upon his good testimonials and the trial of his gifts," no
 Aug. 4, 1637; and "was sent thither," implying that he was examined and accepted on Aug. 4, 1637, and sent later. This evidence is in a minute of July 18, 1639, in the acts of the "Deputies of the Classis on Foreign Affairs" at Amsterdam.—Eccles. Rec., I: 19, 122. The reference is to Adam Roelants or Roelantsen (also called Adam Roelantsen Groen), of Doekum in Friedland, situate in the extreme north of The Netherlands. This is the earliest known date connected with the history of education in New Netherland, with the exception of Bogardus's request for a schoolmaster in Van Twiller's letter of Aug. 14, 1636.

When Roelantsen received this appointment, he was about 31 years of age, and, as he is found in New Amsterdam as early as June, 1638, he must have sailed with Kieft in "den Harinck" (Herring), which left the Texel late in September, 1637, and arrived at New Amsterdam on March 28, 1638. He soon figured as defendant in a suit for the recovery of an estate.—*Cal. Hist.
 MSS., Dutch*, 62 (June 10, 1638). In the year 1638, he was also involved, as plaintiff or defendant, in slander suits.—Ibid., 62-63.
 On Oct. 13, 1638, he made a deposition, "at the request of Domine Bogardus" (Bogardus), in which he was referred to as "schoolmaster aged about 32 years," and wherein he declared "that in the year 1633, Grietje Reyniers, being with the deponent at the Strand [of the East River], near the late warehouse for cargoes [which had since burned down], he heard the sailors of the ship
 The Seutberg, she lying in the roadstead, cry out to Grietje" certain uncomplimentary remarks.—Ibid., 4; Kilpatrick, The Dutch Schools of New Neth. and Colonial N. Y., 41; and his article, in Educ. Review (1909), XXXVIII: 383. This is the only evidence which reveals Roelantsen's presence in New Amsterdam in 1633, and not a scintilla of evidence is known as to when he came, how long he remained, what his employment was, or when he returned to Holland; yet, upon the mere fact of his presence in New Amsterdam, in 1633, Dunshee and a host of succeeding writers have assigned to this year the founding of the first school in New Amsterdam.—See Dunshee, Hist. of School of Collegiate Ref. Dutch Ch., 17; examination of the subject by Kilpatrick, op. cit. But we know now that it was Domine Bogardus who, in 1636 (see Aug. 14), urged that a schoolmaster be secured "to teach and train the youth of both Dutch and blacks."—Quarterly Jour. of N. Y. State Hist.
 Ass'n, I: 48.

O'Callaghan (Hist. N. Neth., I: 438) has placed Roelantsen among the settlers of Rensselaerswyck, in 1639; but his list, which was compiled from the books of monthly wages kept in the patroon's colony, cannot be depended upon for accuracy of statement, and a later examination of the same records, made by the editor of the Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, has convinced him that O'Callaghan's mention of the name of "Adam Roelantsen van Hameleward," in connection with the colony of Rensselaerswyck, is clearly an error.
 Moreover, the schoolmaster has an almost perfect alibi in New Amsterdam at this period. He was a party there to slander suits, in January, 1639, and August, 1640; and on Sept. 20, 1640, he had a suit before the council against Gillis de Voocht for wages alleged to be due for washing, which was not allowed then, because "the year" of contract had "not yet expired."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 66, 72, 73. He was in New Amsterdam in 1641; and on Feb. 7, 1642 (q.v.), he contracted with Jan Teunissen, carpenter, for building a house, "to be ready by 1st of May next."—Ibid., 16, 18, 76. This house was on the north side of the present Stone St. between Whitehall and Broad Sts., and it adjoined the tavern property of Philip Gerardy.—Valentine's Man. Com. Coun.
 (1863), 560; Innes, New Am. and Its People, 613; Dunshee, op. cit., 17. He obtained a grant of the garden lot next to Gerardy's, on Aug. 7, 1643.—Liber GG: 86 (now in N. Y. State Library, Albany). Improvements to this house were contracted for in November, 1646.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 35; Innes, op. cit., 64. On Dec. 2d, he made out a conveyance of his house and lot to Govert Aertsen, probably because of his fear of punishment for having grossly insulted the wife of a neighbour, for which, on the 13th, he was tried before the council and sentenced to be whipped in public and then banished;

 but on the 17th, the council, in consideration of his four motherless children and on account of the approach of a cold winter, gave him a temporary reprieve, and ordered that sentence should be carried out at a future time.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 36, 106; *N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, II: 153.

In 1643, Roelantsen was engaged as a weighmaster in the service of the West India Co. at Manhattan.—Dunshee, op. cit., 17.
 In 1646, while he was in Holland, his wife, Lyntie Martens, died, and therefore curators were appointed to administer her estate, and to care for the young children "till the arrival of the father or some oews from him." One of these curators was Jan Stevensen, the new schoolmaster.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 99.

Roelantsen, returning in 1646 via Amsterdam, in the ship "St.
 Jacob," of which Haye Jansen was skipper, arrived in New Amsterdam in July. By removing articles from his chest before regular inspection, he got into trouble with the fiscal, who sued him for slandering. He was also sued by Augustine Heerman for the passage money of himself and a son, but proved satisfactorily to the council that he had worked his way over as a seaman, and that his son had been allowed free transportation because he said prayers during the voyage.—Ibid., 103, 105. It has been shown already how Roelantsen, soon after his return, was sentenced to banishment, from which he received a reprieve that actually became permanent.

In March, 1647, he sued the carpenter, Jan Teunissen, for debt.—Ibid., 108. On June 14th, he was appointed a provost or jailer, holding subordinate relations to Fiscal Van Dyck.—Ibid., 49, 109; cf. also Innes, op. cit., 65. On Dec. 4, 1649, in contemplation of a voyage to the West Indies, he gave power of attorney to Jacob Tysen, to take charge of his children and the administration of his affairs during his absence.—Ibid., 51. He is still found in New Amsterdam in 1653, as a private in the burgher corps (O'Callaghan, Hist. N. Neth., II: 569); and in an action before the court of burghmasters and schepens, on Feb. 17, 1653, he was called "the woodcutter." It appears that one Stoffel Elzers was charged with calling Roelantsen "from his work in the Church, outside the Fort" and had then attacked and beaten him on the public street. Elzers denied "having called Adam Roelantsen out of the Fort or beaten him," which shows that Roelantsen was employed on the church in the fort and not in the "packing house, the old church on Pearl Street," as stated by Innes, op. cit., 65.—Rec. N. Am., I:
 54. Roelantsen appears for the last time in the records in another action before the council, in March, 1653.—Ibid., 62, 70.

Willem Kieft is commissioned and sworn as director-general of New Netherland in the place of Wouter van Twiller.—*N. Y. Col.

1638

The West India Company's bakery was built during Van Twiller's administration, namely between 1633 and this year.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XVI: 16. This bakery was also mentioned in a grant of an adjoining lot, made on March 29, 1647, to Rem Jansen.
 By June 6, 1649, the company's bakery lot had been granted to Juriaen Andriessen.—Dutch Grants, Block J, Lot 1, Vol. II: 388.

The earliest printed description of New Netherland, in English, appeared to Capt. John Underhill's News from America, printed and published in London in this year. It is given on p. 19, as follows: "The truth is, I want time to set forth the excellencie of the whole Country; but if you would know the garden of New England, then must you glance your eye upon Hudsons river, a place exceeding all yet named, the River affords fish in abundance, as Sturgeon, Salmon, and many delicate varieties of fish that naturally lyes in the River, the onely place for Beaver that we have in those parts." This estimate of Underhill is particularly interesting, because it was he who proposed to lead the first party of English settlers to New Netherland in the year following this publication.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 25-26.

Jan Celes (Seals, Seales), an Englishman, received a lease, grant, or permission, at about this time, to occupy a plantation lying north of the later Rutgers Swamp. The location on modern maps was 1638 about west of Macdougall St., its south line being 231 feet north of Canal St.; and it extended as far north as the line of Charlton St., its westward boundary being the strand of the North River. This land later became very well known as "Old Jan's Land." After Old Jan's death, Tonis Nyssen received a grant of the tract, April 3, 1647.—Liber GG: 208 (Albany). The parcel later became a part of the Trinity Church property.—See The Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Manatus Maps, II: 190. See Dec. 28, 1639.

— Jonkheer Jacob van Curler, who, as factor of the West India Co., had built Fort Good Hope on the Connecticut River in 1633 (Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 203, 208), took possession of a tract of 200 acres in Harlem, sometime before 1638, which land was named Otterpoort (Otter-spur or Otter-track). It adjoined De Forest's Muscocto farm (afterwards Montagne's flat), and was north of the Mill Creek at the present 108th St., extending from the Harlem River to near Fifth Ave. On May 18, 1638, he executed a lease of the farm to Claes Cornelissen Swits, but some months later (date not given) he deeded the farm to Cornelis van Tienhoven, who in turn executed a lease, on Jan. 24, 1639, to Swits and Jan Claessen Alteras. Apparently, the purchase of Van Tienhoven was made on behalf of Coenraet van Keulen, a merchant residing in Amsterdam, for, on Aug. 22, 1639, he conveyed the farm to Van Keulen, subject only to the afore-mentioned lease. A ground-brief or patent was obtained for this tract by Van Tienhoven from Director-Gen. Kieft, in July, 1645, on behalf of Van Keulen. It appears to have been the first patent obtained for this farm.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1, 5, 7, 365, 369; Riker, Revised Hist. of Harlem, 119, 127, 131, 798. See also, Addenda.

— Thomas Sanders or Sandersen, a smith, from Amsterdam, received in this year a grant from Director Kieft, near Werpoes (an Indian village: see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987). The plantation was in the neighbourhood of the intersection of Grand and Mulberry Sts.—See N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 14; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 45, 51. The property was later granted by Gov. Fletcher to Col. Nicholas Bayard.—Liber Patents, VII: 130 (Albany). See also Manatus Maps, II: 189; C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, Vol. II: Aug. 3, 1639, and Aug. 7, 1640.

— A deposition, made on Jan. 12, 1645, before the provincial secretary, reveals that three arrived in New Amsterdam, on board the ship "Dolphin," in 1638, Jan Jansen Schepmoes, his wife, and two children, the youngest a nursing babe, also Leendert Arentsen and Barent Jacobsen Cool.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 139 (N. Y. State Library).

— In this year, Wouter van Twiller received a ground-brief for 100 morgens, lying near Sapokauickan, bounded north by the road from the Strand along Jan van Rotterdam's land, west by Jan van Rotterdam's plantation and that of Edward Fiscock, and extending so far into the woods as to include the said 100 morgens, provided that "all such roads and foot-paths as already run through this land shall continue there for the use of the inhabitants."—Liber GG: 23 (Albany). This grant subsequently formed a part of the Sir Peter Warren tract, and lay some distance west of the Bowery Road and south-west of Greenwich Lane. It was leased to Thomas Hall in 1641.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 35-36. See Manatus Maps, II: 190-91, and C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, No. 10, Vol. II. This reservation of existing "roads and footpaths" for the people, forever, is the earliest reference of this sort we have met with in a land record pertaining to Manhattan Island.

— Sometime between 1638 and 1642, the first ferry to Long Island was established. It ran from the present Dover St., corner of Pearl St., to Fulton St., Brooklyn. The earliest ferry-man of record was Cornelis Dirksen.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 942; Chronology, 1642; and Jan. 24, 1643.

— Massachusetts colonists settle in Rhode Island.—See Addenda.

— Willem Kieft arrives this day at New Amsterdam, in a ship of the West India Co., named "De Harinck" (Herring), and assumes his duties as director-general, in place of Van Twiller. He had been commissioned to the post on Sept. 2, 1637, and the ship had left the Texel at the end of that month.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 96 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., I: 279; Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 202, 205, 375; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 104; Van Rensselaer Bouwer Manuscripts, 354.

— Conditions in New Amsterdam at this time are revealed in a deposition, made before the provincial secretary at the request of Director-Gen. Kieft, on April 16, 1639, by Jacob Stoffensen, master workman, Gillis Pietersen van der Gouw, master carpenter, and Tymen Jansen, ship carpenter. They declared: "it is true and truthful that on the 28th of March in the year 1638, being the day on which Mr. Willem Kieft safely arrived here by the ship the Herring ["de Harinck"], at which time Mr. Kieft found Fort Amsterdam totally and wholly in a ruinous condition, so that people could go in and out of said fort on all sides except alone at the stone bastion (punt), all the cannon off the gun carriages, five Bouwerijs vacant and fallen into decay; there was not a living animal on hand belonging to the Company on said Bouwerijs, or in any other places, but all from the smallest even to the largest were in the possession of other people. Moreover, every vessel was unserviceable, the yacht Prins Willem alone being fit for use, and one new one on the stocks. The whole of the house in the Fort is yet in need of considerable repair, as well as the 5 stone houses, the wooden church, lodge and smith's. One grist and saw mill in operation; another which is out of repair; the third, burned. The place where the Public store stood can with difficulty be discovered. The late Director Twiller hath also allowed other work to be performed for divers persons. All which we the deponents declare to be true and truthful," etc. The deposition was witnessed by Wybrant Pietersen and Maurits Jansen. This translation was made by O'Callaghan, who has accurately interpreted the original.—Records N. Neth., I: 96 (N. Y. State Library), which cannot be said of the very inaccurate translation in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1841), 279. A comparison of these two translations gives a good idea of the difficulties encountered with respect to correct interpretations of local history, when not derived from original texts.

The colony of New Sweden is founded.—See Addenda.

Cornelis van Tienhoven is appointed secretary of New Netherlands and bookkeeper of the monthly wages, his term beginning on this date, at a compensation of 36 florins per month and 200 florins per annum for board money.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 10 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 8.

Dr. Johannes la Montagne is appointed a member of Director-Gen. Kieft's provincial council, at 35 florins per month.—Records N. Neth., IV: 1 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 5.

Puritans, led by Davenport and Eaton, leave Boston to settle New Haven.—See Addenda.

An ordinance is passed prohibiting private trade in furs, regulating intercourse with ships in port, establishing court days, and prohibiting immorality, etc. This is the earliest recorded ordinance in reference to the city.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth. (1638-74), 10-12. One of the provisions of this ordinance was to prevent sailors from vessels in the port of New Amsterdam from remaining on shore over night without consent from the director-general. On June 13, 1647, two sailors were sentenced for tearing down such an ordinance that had been affixed to the mainmast of the ship to which they were attached, and were required to be chained to a wheel-barrow or hand-barrow and employed at hard labour for three months, subsisting on bread and water.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 108-9.

Jan Jansen Damen receives from Director-Gen. Kieft a lease for six years on land situated to the north of the "Company's Garden" and to the south of Jan Damen's land, and extending from the road to the river.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1 (corrected translation by A. J. F. van Laer, in Bibliography Bulletin, No. 46, N. Y. State Educ. Dept., p. 19). This is probably the earliest mention of the company's garden.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946. For this same tract of land, Cornelis Groesens received a ground-brief dated Jan. 10, 1645 (not of record, but recited in Records N. Neth., III: 33, Albany). This land lay west of Broadway, extending to the Hudson River, beginning at a point about 65 feet north of the present Recor St. and running north as far as the old line of Thames St.—See Castello Plan, II: 341; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 363.

On the same day, Jan Jansen Damen received another six-year lease (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1), for a tract on "the east of the road" (the present Broadway), opposite the land above described, being on the further side of Broadway from what was later Trinity churchyard.—See Castello Plan, II: 338-39, 363; C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, 82, 82e, and 87, Vol. II. Damen seems to have already had land on both sides of the highway under lease, as these two leaseholds were bounded on the north by other land of Damen's. These northerly tracts of his were doubtless the same patented to him by ground-brief dated April 25, 1644 (q.v.).

Kieft leases to Wouter van Twiller "the Bowery No. [1], 22 belonging to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Directors of the Incorporated West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam . . . for the term of three consecutive years, commencing the first of May, A<sup>o</sup>. 1641, and that for

- 1638 the sum of Two Hundred and fifty Carolus guilders, payable yearly, together with the just sixth part of all the produce with which God shall bless the field" (etc.)—Records N. Neth. (trans. by O'Callaghan), I: 2 (N. Y. State Library). This form is often referred to as "the Noble Company's Great Bouwery." For its boundaries, see Manatus Maps, II: 187-88; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946. The plantation consisted of 60 morgens, or 120 acres. It was deeded to Stuyvesant on March 12, 1651, and confirmed to him by Nicolls on Nov. 6, 1667. See March 22, 1639; March 12, 1651; Manatus Maps, II: 187-88; C. Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.
- See A. 28 May — The earliest record of a murder committed in New Amsterdam relates to Gerrit Jansen, gunner of Fort Amsterdam, who, in a brawl, was stabbed to death in front of the gate of the fort.—Records of N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 36-37 (N. Y. State Library).
- 17 An ordinance is passed by the director-general and council against immoderate drinking, interdicting and forbidding any sale of wine, except at the store-house of the West India Co., and penalizing the harbouring of sailors on shore over night.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth. (1638-74), 12-13.
- 18 Ulrich Lupelt is "Fiscal" of New Netherland, as is shown by an instrument of this date.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 15 (N. Y. State Library).
- " In a record of this date, Jacobus van Corlaer is mentioned as "Commissary of cargoes here in New Netherland."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I (N. Y. State Library). He had succeeded Dirck Corssen in this post.—Ibid., I: 28.
- June 7 — An ordinance against clandestine trade in New Netherland is passed.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 13-15.
- 24 An ordinance is passed by Director-Gen. Kieft and his council authorizing the issuing of patents to freemen for lands that they are already cultivating. This is done in response to a petition from divers of the freemen to the council, for conveyances. By article XXI of the grant or Charter of Liberties and Exemptions (see June 7, 1629), private persons who settled as freemen in smaller numbers than required for patroonships were accorded possession of such land as they might be able to cultivate properly.—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 16; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 9-10; Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 149. The number of patents granted now increased materially. At the expiration of ten years after entrance on a plantation, a yearly payment of one-tenth of the crops was to be made to the West India Co. A resolution of Director-Gen. Stuyvesant and his council postponed for a year after July 5, 1647, the collection of the tenths that were due on farms occupied at that time more than ten years.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 110.
- July 9 Conditions, etc., are agreed upon between Andries Hudde and Hans Hansen, from Bergen in Norway, in regard to a tobacco plantation "on the Flatland situate on the Island of the Manhates, behind Corlaer's land." Hansen is "bound to provide dwellings and Tobacco houses, as many as it may permit."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 19, 23 (N. Y. State Library). The exact location has not been determined.
- 19 Willem Bredendient, as of record on this date, is "under schout of New Netherland."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 23 (N. Y. State Library). The translator has adopted the English term "sheriff" for "schout," which is inadmissible here.
- 20 Jan Jansen Damen, an extensive land holder on Manhattan Island, intending to absent himself from the country, gives a power of attorney to Cornelis van Tienhoven over all his property in New Netherland.—Records N. Neth., op. cit., I: 31.
- " Andries Hudde (or Hudden) receives a ground-brief for 100 morgens (200 acres) of land, which had formerly been settled as a tobacco plantation by Hendrick de Forest. Hudde married Geertruy Bornstra, De Forest's widow. This land was at Harlem, later known as Montagne's Flat, between 109th and 124th Sts.—Liber GG: 21 (Albany). This was the first recorded ground-brief given by the director-general and council for land on Manhattan Island. (See Key to Manatus Maps, II: 194); also Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 144-45; Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 75 N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 9. See also May 9, 1647, for re-grant of this land to Johannes de la Montagne; also Aug. 28, 1640. See also Addenda, April 28, 1638.
- 23 Hendrick de Forest, the earliest grantee, and the first person who built on lands in what is now Harlem, New York City, died on July 26, 1637. His brother-in-law, Dr. Johannes de la Montagne having liquidated his estate, now records specifications of his administration. Later, apparently in October, Domine Everardus Bogardus recorded the conditions and terms upon which he had sold, in Fort Amsterdam, to the highest bidder, for the account of De Forest's widow and heirs, among other things, "the house 42 feet long, 18 feet wide with 2 extensions, encircled with round palisades, and a tobacco house, whereof Montagne was the purchaser, for 1,800 fl.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 57, 59 (N. Y. State Library), corrected in De Forest's A Wallon Family in Am., I: 84. See also Dec. 6, 1642; May 9, 1647; and Manatus Maps, II: 193-94. See Addenda.
- Aug. 12 Claes van Elsland and Wybrant Pietersen are appointed tobacco-inspectors.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 63.
- 19 In order to force the tobacco planters in New Netherland to properly cure their tobacco, an ordinance is passed which requires that "all the Tobacco which shall be shipped or sent from New Netherland, shall be first brought to the appointed Warehouse to be there examined, marked and weighed." A duty of five pounds of tobacco is to be paid for every 100 pounds exported.
- All legal instruments, to be valid, must be written by the secretary at New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 16-17; cf. also 24.
- The West India Co., to encourage immigration to New Netherland, proposes to open the trade thither to all, provided that merchandise be transported only in the company's ships, and that on all goods going to New Netherland a duty of ten per cent. be paid, and on all coming from that country a duty of fifteen per cent.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 113-15. This plan fell through.—Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 79-80.
- Philippe du Treux (or Philip de Truy) is mentioned as "court messenger" to the provincial court of New Netherland.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 48 (N. Y. State Library).
- Oct. 4 Nov. 25 All persons in the service of the West India Co. are "commanded not to quit the Island of Manhattan, without the express permission of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Commander." A forfeiture of three months' wages is the penalty for disobedience.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 18.

1639

Prior to this year, two mills were erected on Manhattan Island, respectively west and south-west of the fort, as shown on the Manatus Map of this year.—See C. Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. II, and II: 205-7. From negative evidence, it seems likely that these mills existed even prior to 1633, the date of Van Twiller's arrival, as they are not referred to among the public works erected during his administration. See 1633-8.

In this year was drawn the original of the Manatus Maps, showing the Island of Manhattan and its surroundings as far as Sandy Hook, which original is known to us from two contemporary copies, one in the Villa Castello, near Florence, Italy, and the other in the Library of Congress (the bequest of Mr. Henry Harrisse). On these maps are indicated the fort and mills belonging to the West India Company, the bouwerijs, or farms, of the early settlers, and many of the important topographical features. They are reproduced and described in Vol. II, C. Pls. 41 and 42.

The established roadway or anchorage for ships in port is shown by anchors on the Manatus Maps.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963.

The negro quarter of the slaves of the West India Co. is also laid down on the Manatus surveys. Its location, apparently, was on the East River shore, just north of the Saw Kill, at about the present 75th St. No mention has been found of this negro quarter in any records or printed works of the period.

By this year, 30 "Bouwerijs" were planted in New Netherland in place of seven, and "one hundred more" were expected to be made "in a short time from the plantations which were taken up."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 150, 181.

In this year, the fur trade with the Indians was "thrown free and open to every body" in New Netherland, instead of, as formerly, being reserved to the West India Co.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 150; Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 80; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 15. This stimulated immigration.

Newport, R. I., is settled. See also March, 1638.

At the beginning of this year (date not given), an agreement is made by Jacobus van Curler, commissary of the cargoes, for the sale to Cornelis van Tienhoven, secretary of New Netherland, "of the Bouwery & appurtenances thereof, heretofore occupied by . . . Curler, situate on the Island Manhatte, opposite the Bouwery of Johannes la Montaigne." The sale is for land of 100 morgens,

- 1639 a house, various farming implements, four mares, three cows, a boat and tackle. The purchase price was 2,900 guilders.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 106 (N. Y. State Library). See also Jan. 24 and Aug. 22, 1639.
- 14-24 Connecticut adopts a self-governing written constitution.—See Addenda.
- 24 A contract is made between Cornelis van Tienhoven, party of the first part, and Claes Cornelissen Swits and Jan Claes Alteras, parties of the second part, "for the hire of the Bouwery heretofore occupied by Jacob van Curler situate over against Johannes la Montaigne's Bouwery called Vredendael." The contract involved the delivery to Swits and Alteras of the house, outhouses, and implements, and 100 morgens of land, as well as four mares and three cows. The lease was "for six consecutive years.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 68 (N. Y. State Library). See also Aug. 22, 1639.
- " Varkens (now Blackwells) Island was being farmed before Jan. 24, 1639, by Jan Claessen Alteras, and we learn from a report of referees, of Aug. 30, 1642, that improvements were made on the island by him. The island is laid down and named on the Castello-Manatus Map, of 1639 (see Vol. II, Pl. 4), and data on p. 207). We do not know what name was given to this island by the Indians. It was not Minnahanonck, as has been generally supposed, for that was the name of Randalls Island,—for which, see July 16, 1637.
- Feb. "The 10th February, I have begun to make a plantation, a mile and a half or two miles above the fort, as there was there a fine location, and full thirty-one morgens of maize-land, where there were no trees to remove; and hay-land lying all together, sufficient for two hundred cattle, which is a great article there. I went there to live, all on account of the pleasure of it, as it was all situated along the river. I leased out the plantation of Staten Island, as no people had been sent me from Holland, and was stipulated in the contract which I made with Frederic de Vries, a manager of the West India Company.—Voyages of De Vries (trans. by Henry C. Murphy), 129.
- 17 In a court proceeding of this date, it is shown that goods that were brought over to New Amsterdam by the ship "Love" (Liefde) were sold on board ship by members of the crew, contrary to order. For this, the captain, Martin Cael, is held responsible and condemned to pay a month's freight, 1,200 guilders ($516), one-half to go to the West India Co., one-fourth towards the building of a new church, and the remainder to the fiscal.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 66. From this we see that a "new church" was contemplated as early as this date.
- " Mention is made, in a deposition of this date, of Isaac Allerton's ship, "whereof Mr. Peter Gerly is skipper, lying in the roadstead in front of the Island of Manhaten in New Netherland."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 66 (N. Y. State Library).
- 19 Claes Cornelissen Swits conveys to Maryn Adrienaens a house and plantation heretofore in occupation of Master Fiscock and Hans Hansen, situated on the North River of New Netherland near the plantation heretofore occupied by Tonis Nysse, for the sum of fl. 400, calculated at 20 st. to the guilder.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 73 (N. Y. State Library). A note by the translator adds: "This farm was granted 20 November, 1642 to Thomas Hall, and is described as being bounded North by the plantation of the late Director van Twiller and East by the Cripple bush. It lay on that part of the Island called Greenwich, in the present North Ward of the City of New York."
- Mar. Gov. Winthrop of Massachusetts Bay records in his Journal:—"Mo. 1. A Printing house was begun at Cambridge by one Stephen Daye, at the charge of Mr. Glover, who died on sea hitherward. The first thing which was printed was the freemen's Oath; the next was an almanac made for New England by Mr. William Pierce, Mariner; the next was the Psalms newly turned into metre."—Evans, Am. Bibliog., I: 2, citing Winthrop's Jour., I: 289, in the library of the Mass. Hist. Soc. The N. Y. Pub. Library owns a copy of this rare Psalms Book (1642). The Daye printing-press was the first in the English-speaking colonies of America.
- 22 Jacob Stoffelsen, of Ziericksee (prov. of Zealand, Netherlands), deposes that he was employed by the West India Co. during the administration of Wouter van Twiller, as overseer of the negroes belonging to the company, who were engaged in building Fort Amsterdam, "which was completed in the year 1635, also in cutting building timber and firewood for the Large House as well as the guardhouse, splitting palisades, clearing land," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 18.
- " Gillis Pietersen van der Gouw, a master house-carpenter of New Amsterdam, on this day makes a detailed deposition concerning the numerous building operations during Wouter van Twiller's administration (not in "1638," as stated in Vol. I, p. 477). For details, see 1633.
- " Thomas Hall and George Holmes deposed concerning property belonging to Wouter van Twiller "in their hands or charge," which includes the company's farms Nos. 1 and 3, and the plantation near "Sapohanikan," on the North River, "with palisades around it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 18-19.
- " A house, indicated on the Manatus Maps (see C. Pl. 42-42e, Vol. II, and II: 187-88) as "Een Treffellecky Huys," was erected during Van Twiller's administration, on Bouwery No. 1. It was completed before this date.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 16. Later, Stuyvesant's "Petersfield" was erected on the same site.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 92.
- " Harvard College is founded.—See Addenda.
- 13-23 An ordinance is issued providing that "every Inhabitant of New Netherland, be his state, quality or condition what it may, is forbidden to sell any Guns, Powder or Lead to the Indians, on pain of being punished by Death," and informers against violators are to be rewarded with 50 guilders (50n)—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 19. Notwithstanding this ordinance, violations continued. Ammunition was sent from New Amsterdam secretly up the Hudson River and elsewhere. The French ambassador lodged a complaint with the lords of the states-general, in which he averred that the French in Canada suffered great injury from this clandestine trade in arms, and the lords of the states-general, in consequence, recommended stringent measures to the authorities of New Netherland to prevent its continuance. The result was another ordinance on the subject, on Feb. 23, 1645.—Ibid., 47.
- " Director-Gen. Kieft makes an agreement to lease for six years, on behalf of the West India Co., to Jan Cornelissen van Vorst, "the Bouwery No. 6 heretofore occupied by Wolphert Gerritsen, situate on the Island of Manhaten, belonging to the . . . West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam." The farm contained 574 acres.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 94 (N. Y. State Library).
- " Frederic Lubbertsen is referred to as "at present chief boat-swain on the Island Manhaten."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 94 (N. Y. State Library).
- Apr. 4 In a power of attorney of this date, mention is made of "Claes Jacobsen from Schagen, formerly master workman at Fort Amsterdam in New Netherland." He may have held that post prior to 1633.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 102 (N. Y. State Library).
- " Claes van Elslant, commissary of provisions in New Netherland, gives a power of attorney to his wife, Willemte Harbers, "living in Haerlem" Holland.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 103 (N. Y. State Library).
- " An agreement is made between Anthony Jansen, from Vees, (Vez in Morocco) and Barent Dircksen, baker, for "the purchase of the Bouwery hitherto occupied by Anthony Jansen, situate near Fort Amsterdam, bounded westerly by Hendrick Jansen, tailor, and eastward by Philip de Truy." The sale includes "the land as it is sowed and fenced, the house and barn, together with all that is fastened by earth and nail, except the cherry trees, peach and all other trees standing on said land, which Anthony [Jansen] reserves for himself and will remove at a more seasonable time, one Stallion of two years, one ditto of one year, 1 wagon, plough, and one harrow with wooden teeth." Dircksen agrees to pay Jansen 1,570 guilders in two years' time.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 104 (N. Y. State Library). On June 7, an inspection made by Secretary Cornelis van Tienhoven with Jansen showed that they "found twelve Apple trees, 40 Peach and 73 cherry trees, 26 Sage plants and 15 Vines."—Ibid., 128. On July 27, Jansen gave a satisfaction to Dircksen for the receipt of 680 Carolus guilders as part payment.—Ibid., 145. Regarding Jansen's banishment, see Aug. 3, 1639.
- May 7 Director-Gen. Kieft leases for a term of six years to Leendert Arenden or Arentsen "the Bouwery No 3," belonging to the West India Co. and "heretofore occupied by Pieter Byleveld."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 114 (N. Y. State Library). O'Callaghan, in a note, says: "The Bouwery mentioned in the above Lease contained Seventy eight Acres (39 morgens). It was

- 1639 situated behind Corlaers plantation at Corlaers Hook on the East River and was patented to Leandert Arentsen 19 October, 1645.—Book GG, 120. It seems to have been subsequently a part of De Lancey farm.—Hoffman. Estate & Rights of New York, III: 242." Judge Hoffman, however, is in error in this statement about Bylevelt's Bouwery (No. 3), subsequently Leandert Aerdens's grant, and known as Leandert's Farm. This was all subsequently divided up between the Stuyvesants; and it did not become part of De Lancey's estate. Spielman & Brush show the "Leandert Farm" perfectly. See, further, Oct. 19, 1645; and The Manatus Maps, II: 188-89.
- " Director-Gen. Kieft leases to Hendrick Harmanen the bouwery No. 5 of the West India Co., "heretofore occupied by Mr. Jacob van Curler," including the cattle, for a term of six years, beginning on May 1, 1639.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 115 (N. Y. State Library). In a note, O'Callaghan says: "The above Bouwery contained somewhat over 50 acres. It was situated east of the Bouwery and north of Division Street.—Hoffman's Estate &c. of New York, II: 236." See also N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 22-23; and The Manatus Maps, II: 188-89.
- " Corlaers Hook, called by the Indians "Nechtane," is mentioned in a record of this date.—See Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 14, 379; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 19, 21.
- " Barent Dirksen conveys to Gerrit Jansen from Oldenburgh and Valckert Evertsen a tobacco plantation, bounded southerly by the plantation of Mr. Fiscock and northerly by that of Mr. Lesley. The purchase price was 1,182 guilders, payable in instalments.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 119 (N. Y. State Library). This bouwery was at the present Christopher St. and Hudson River. See Manatus Maps, II: 191, and C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, No. 11, Vol. II. On the same day, Dirksen made a contract for a lease to the same parties "of the Bouwery called Walesteyn," for a term of six years.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 118 (N. Y. State Library).
- July In a deposition, undated, but made during the summer of 1639, mention is made of "the path near the Fresh Water."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 126 (N. Y. State Library).
- 7 Volckert Evertsen and Gerrit Jansen from Oldenburgh contract to lease to Willem Willemsen (William Williamson) and Jan Habsen (John Hobson) "the plantation situate between the plantation of Jan Pietersen and Mr. Lasley on the North river of New Netherland, heretofore cultivated by Jan van Rotterdam and at present occupied by Barent Dirksen Swart." The lease to these two Englishmen is for a term of four years, within which time they covenant to erect on said plantation two houses, to wit: one 18 ft. wide and 30 ft. long, and one 16 ft. wide and 20 ft. long, which are to revert to the lessees (sic) on the expiration of the lease.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 124, op. cit.
- 18 Evidence of business relations in Holland between Jonas Bronck, first settler of the present Borough of the Bronx, and Andries Hudde, early settler of upper Manhattan, is shown in an acknowledgment of this date, in which Hudde acknowledges the "full satisfaction in the City of Amsterdam long before the executing hereof" of a repayment made by Bronck "arising from loaned or disbursed moneys."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 139 (N. Y. State Library).
- 21 Before Secretary Van Tienhoven appear "Mr. Jonas Bronck on the one part and Pieter Andriessen and Lourens Duyts on the other part," who make the following agreement: "Mr. Bronck shall show the abovenamed persons a certain parcel of land belonging to him situate on the mainland opposite the flat of the Manhatens, on which aforesaid land they shall be at liberty to plant Tobacco and Maize, on the express condition that they shall be bound to clear every two years new pieces of land for the planting of Tobacco or Maize, and, on changing the place, the land which they had previously planted shall remain at the disposal of the abovenamed M<sup>r</sup> Bronck." Whenever they abandon an acreage, it is to be in condition "fit to be plowed and to be sowed with grain." The lease is for a three-year term, and Bronck has no other claim than the cleared land. Bronck also agrees within one year to furnish the lessees with two horses and two cows "on the same conditions as the Company hath at present supplied other free people." On their part, the lessees coveanted to repay to Bronck what he had "disbursed for them for board on the ship The Fire of Troy (Brand van Troyen)," namely, Andriessen, fl. 814; and Duyts, fl. 4012.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 141 (N. Y. State Library). For location, see Manatus Maps, July 21
II: 204, and C. Pl. 41 and 42, Vol. II.
- Cornelis vander Hoykens (Huighens) having been sent over by the directors at Amsterdam to supersede Ulrich Lupoldt as fiscal of New Netherland, the provincial council votes to continue Lupoldt as a member of the council and to appoint him commissary (commies) of stores.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 44 (N. Y. State Library).
- Cornelis vander Hoykens is serving as fiscal of New Netherland.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 144 (N. Y. State Library).
- 27 Nine soldiers having committed mutiny by refusing to work at Fort Amsterdam, two of their ringleaders are by the court declared unworthy and unfit to bear arms, dishonourably discharged, with loss of pay, and sentenced to be transported beyond the seas.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 68. In another mutiny case the court, on Aug. 4, sentenced the defendant to be conveyed the next day to the place of execution, to be there shot to death.—Ibid.
- Aug. George Holmes and seven other Englishmen, settlers in New Netherland, take the oath of allegiance (the original being undated), as follows: "You swear to be true and faithful to the High and Mighty Lords the States, his Highness of Orange and the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director and Council of New Netherland; to follow wherever he, the Director, or any member of the Council leads: loyally to give instant notice of any treason and injury to the country that may come to your knowledge; to assist, support and protect by all means in your power, with your life and property the inhabitants thereof against all public enemies so truly help you God."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 24-25. See 1635.
- 3 Anthony Jansen, from Salee (also called Vies, or Fez) in Morocco, appears before Secretary Van Tienhoven with witnesses, acknowledging "that he being banished from the island of Manhatne and the limits of New Netherland, requested the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Commander Willem Kieft to be pleased to grant him a parcel of land in the bay of the North river of New Netherland in order to support himself there with wife and children," and that Kieft had granted him 100 morgens "situate on Long Island about the bay" (Gravesend).—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 148 (N. Y. State Library).
- " Thomas Sandersen, smith, acknowledges having leased to Isaac Abrahamson and Caspar Dirksen, for the term of seven years, beginning "at Easter A<sup>o</sup> 1640, the house and the plantation containing ten morgens, heretofore in the occupation of Evert Poppe."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 146 (N. Y. State Library). This was near the Indian village of Werpoes. See grant to Sandersen under 1638.
- 6 Ulrich Lupoldt is serving as commissary of stores at New Amsterdam.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 159 (N. Y. State Library).
- 11 Mechanics and labourers in the employ of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam are required to begin and end their labours at the ringing of a bell. Gillis de Voocht is appointed their commissary, or superintendent, "to go around, and to note those who are in default and report their names" to the director-general and council.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 20.
- 22 Cornelis van Tienhoven conveys to Conraet van Culeen (Keulen), of Amsterdam, the bouwery on the island of Manhattan heretofore in the possession of Jacob van Corler (Curler), and situate opposite Johannes la Montagne's bouwery, with all the stock, implements, &c. thereto belonging.—Liber GG: 31 (Albany). This is the "Otter-spoor" tract or plantation, at Van Keulen's Hook. See 1638; Jan. 24, 1639; and July, 1645; also Manatus Maps, II: 194; C. Pl. 42, Vol. II.
- Sept. The deacony of New Netherland loans 50 Carolus guilders to Pieter vande Linde, at five per cent interest, and Dominie Everardus Bogardus becomes his surety.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 206 (N. Y. State Library).
- 7 George Holmes and Thomas Hall make a declaration at the office of the provincial secretary that they intend "to make a plantation and build a house near Deutel bay on the island of Manhaten;" that they have agreed "to jointly bear all the expenses of the building, wages of laborers, and all other implements" needed on the plantation, and to share equally all profits.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 160 (N. Y. State Library). See also Nov. 15, 1639; and Sept. 6, 1640.
- 8 The deacony of New Netherland makes a loan of 60 Carolus

- 1639 guilders to "George Rapaeje" at five per cent interest.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 207 (N. Y. State Library). Nov. 15
- Sept. 8 Capt. John Underhill and English families are given permission to reside in New Netherlands, subject to taking the oath of allegiance.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 26. Underhill did not settle at this period—he came later; but it is probable that a few English families availed themselves of this offer.
- 13 An acknowledgement of an agreement is made between Director-Gen. Kieft, for the West India Co., on the one part, and Evert Bischof, Sibout Claesen, and Harman Bastiaenssen, of the other part, "for the hire of the Saw mill standing on Nut [now Governors] Island, belonging to the Directors of the Incorporated West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam." The lease is for a term of three years from date at an annual rental of 500 merchantable or sound planks, one half pine and the other half oak. The lessees are to "properly maintain and keep in repair" the mill at their own expense, and to "deliver it back in as good order" as they now receive it; moreover, the company is to be allowed to "saw not less than 65 to the balk" (log). The implements that are inventoried with this lease, include 20 saws, 40 clamps, 2 jackscrews, 10 log irons, sledges, log ropes, log hooks, files, cranes, and a boat hook.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 161 (N. Y. State Library).
- 15 Director-Gen. Kieft resolves to exact a tribute from the Indians round about Manhattan, in maize, furs, of wampum, and, in case of their unwillingness "to make a friendly contribution," to employ "proper means" to remove their reluctance. The reason given is that "the Company is under heavy charges in setting up fortifications and the upkeep of soldiers and sailors;" moreover, because these Indians were "hitherto aided against their enemies." This act, producing bitter feeling between the Indians and the Dutch, was referred to later as the "seed of the war" which broke out in 1643. Kieft declared that he acted upon orders from Holland, but the directors of the West India Co., replying in 1650 to the Remonstrance of New Netherlands, said they were not aware that contributions had been levied upon the Indians, "much less that other orders to that effect" had been issued "by them or any other person."—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 49 (N. Y. State Library); Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 69, 72; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 150, 297, 322, 338; Broad Advice (Murphy, 1854), 144-45.
- 17 A deposition of this date shows that Pieter vande Linde was at this time a surgeon in New Amsterdam.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 164 (N. Y. State Library).
- " On behalf of the West India Co., Director-Gen. Kieft grants to Burgert Jorissen, farmer, the use of an anvil and bellows, "with half of the smith's house," for a term of four years. The record is important because it gives correctly the prænomens of Jorissen, which usually appears as Burger or Borger.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 164 (N. Y. State Library).
- Nov. 11 Between Nov. 11 and 16, Director-Gen. Kieft and Abraham Pietersen Gorter mutually acknowledged a contract made by Kieft on behalf of the West India Co. with the latter "about the hire of the Bouwry No 6 heretofore cultivated by Wolphert Gerritsen [van Couwenhoven], situate on the Island Manhate, belonging to the Honble Directors of the General Incorporated West India Company." The lease was "for twenty consecutive years," and included delivery of certain animals.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 175 (N. Y. State Library).
- 15 Director-Gen. Kieft and his council grant to George Holmes and Thomas Hall land on Manhattan Island extending "from Deutel [Turtle] bay along the East river to the kil of Schepmoes," and "from the river directly into the woods . . . one hundred rods of thirteen feet each."—Liber GG: 32 (Albany); N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 26. The boundaries as laid down according to modern streets and avenues were generally as follows: On the north a stream of water which emptied into the East River at 47th St., at a point a little east of First Ave., extending westward of Second Ave., between 48th and 49th Sts.; on the east the river; on the west an irregular line, mostly somewhat east of Third Ave., but at its southern end running nearly to Lexington Ave.; on the south a line running from the middle of the block between 42d and 43d Sts., west of Third Ave. to the river at 39th St., east of First Ave. Consult the Landmark Map, Vol. III, Pl. 176; also Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, Vol. I. On Aug. 30, Juriaen Hendricks, of Osnabrugh, and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, contracted to build a house for Hall, and on Sept. 7, Holmes and Hall formed a partnership and contracted "to make a plantation and build a house near Deutel bay." They raised tobacco. In Sept., 1640, Holmes bought Hall's half interest in the plantation for 1,600 pounds of tobacco, from the crop of 1641.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 25, 26, and footnote; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 10. See Sept. 7, 1639; and Sept. 6, 1640.
- 20 Tomas Bescher (autograph signature—Thomas Beeche, for Beecher), on his part, appears before Secretary Van Tienhoven, with Abraham Newman and Peter Brejley, on the other part; they acknowledge a contract for the hire from the former to the latter "of the house and plantation hitherto in the occupancy of said Tomas Bescher" for a term of two years. Delivery is made of "a dwelling house, tobacco house and said plantation fenced," and "at the expiration of the two years" delivery back is required "to said Beets [sic for Beecher], or his agents." In a postscript, "Johannes Wodt [John Wood] obligates himself in place of Peter Brejley in the aforesaid contract of Beets's plantation," dated March 15, 1640.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 177 (N. Y. State Library).
- Dec. 28 "Old Jan Celes" was really an Englishman named John Seals, as is shown by his autograph attached to a power of attorney of this date, given to Isaac Allerton and witnessed by Thomas Willett, both from the colony of New Plymouth. In this instrument, Seals is called "an inhabitant here on the Island of Manhate."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 179 (N. Y. State Library).

- About this time, Tymen Jansen received a ground-brief (see recital in Liber GG: 91, Albany) for land at Pearl St., between Wall and Pine Sts. (on modern maps). See Castello Plan, II: 339; Pl. 174, Vol. II.
- In this year, Jacob van Corlaer (van Corler, Curler, or Collaar) executed a lease of his plantation at the East River, "with the contiguous hook called, in the Indian language, Nechtane," to Willem Hendricksen and Gysbert Cornelissen.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 14. On Feb. 22, 1652, he ceded this property to Willem Beeckman, and it was confirmed to the latter on Aug. 10, 1667.—Liber Patents, II: 90 (Albany). The land, which had been granted to Van Corlaer by Van Twiller and his council before 1638, was about 70 acres in extent, and lay along the East River, mostly between Grand and Stantoo Sts., east of Attorney St., including the point called the Hoek or Hook.—See Manatus Maps, II: 193; C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; and Pl. 175, Vol. III.
- mies van vires) by the provincial council of New Netherlands, in Jan. 5 Davit Provoost is appointed commissary of provisions (com- place of Claes van Elsland, resigned, at a salary of 25 fl. per month and 150 fl. for expenses per annum. On the same day, Skipper David Pietersen de Vries becomes security for Provoost, in the sum of 3,500 guilders, "for his fidelity and correct accounts," and another bondsman, Domine Bogardus, who signs his name "Everhardus Boghardus," becomes security for 1,500 Carolus guilders.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 56; ibid. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 181 (N. Y. State Library). See also Aug. 23, 1640.
- 7 The skipper David Pietersen de Vries leases his plantation and house on Staten Island, for a term of six years, to Thomas Smyth, who binds himself "to clear land sufficient for 2000 paises."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 185 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation was begun only a year before, as De Vries himself states, and here he lived for a while, but he was forced to leave it, "as no people had been sent . . . from Holland, as was promised . . . in the contract" which he "had made with Frederick de Vries, a director of the West India Company."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 202, 205.
- Feb. 3 Acknowledgment is made at the office of the provincial secretary by "Hendric Pietersen from Wesel" of a conveyance to "Adriaen Pietersen from Alckmaer" of "his present plantation situate against the Reel valley beyond Sappokanico on the island of Manhate," including a house. Hendrick Pietersen was a mason.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 184 (N. Y. State Library).
- 16 David Provoost leases to Thomas Broen, cum sociis, "his plantation situate on the Island Manhate, with the dwelling house," for three years. The agreement stipulates that the entire plantation "be fenced at the expense of the Lessor and Lessee," half and half.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 188 (N. Y. State Library).

- 1640 A certificate is given by Tobias Tomassen and Willem Frederick- July
Mar. 5 sen, two men who have worked three years "on the houwey called Vredendael," releasing from all claims the owner of the farm, Provincial Councillor Johannes la Montagne.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 192 (N. Y. State Library).
- 14 Director-Gen. Kieft issues an order to Andries Hudde, from which it is learned that the ship "den Harinck" arrived at New Amsterdam on July 7, 1639, and the ship "de Engel Gabriel" on Sept. 25, 1639, but that both ships are still in port as late as March 14, 1640, laden with goods shipped over to Hudde by "Mr. Henric Hamel, director" of the West India Co.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 194 (N. Y. State Library). See also, regarding these ships, Van Rensselaer Bewier Manuscripts, 452-53; 456-57.
- 15 As daily complaints are made of damage and loss by goats and hogs to the cornfields on Manhattan Island, to the great injury of cultivation and serious damage of the West India Co., the council passes an ordinance for penalizing trespasses.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 21.
- 22 Surgeon Harmen Myndertsen van de Bogaert, through power of attorney given to an Amsterdam merchant, seeks to collect from the directors at Amsterdam "all such wages and board money" as he earned in the West India Company's service "since the 21 March 1630 when he sailed in the ship Eendracht, Jan Brouwer, Skipper, from the Texel, and arrived on the 24th May following here in New Netherland, to the first of February A<sup>o</sup> 1633, as appears by the Book of Monthly Wages thereof."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 195 (N. Y. State Library).
- 27 Ulrich Lupoldt, commissary of merchandize for the West India Co. in New Netherland, acknowledges having received from his predecessor in office, Wybrant Pietersen, for the behoof of the company, 12,949 guilders, 3 stuivers, 6 pennies, "being the balance of merchandize" that was delivered to him by Pietersen.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 196 (N. Y. State Library).
- Apr. 10 Jan Pietersen van Essendael, a ship's surgeon in the employ of the West India Co., being sick abed "at his house in Fort Amsterdam," makes a will, and devises that "all the surgical instruments belonging to him" shall go, at his death, to Master Hans Kiersteede, the New Amsterdam surgeon.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 199 (N. Y. State Library).
- 13-23 May The "Short Parliament" begins; it ended May 5.
10 An ordinance is passed by Kieft and his council establishing the militia and requiring that every male inhabitant "residing at and around Fort Amsterdam" shall "provide himself with a good gun," and keep it ready for use. Since they live apart from one another, each man is assigned to a corporal, to whom to report in time of danger. If mischief from enemies or traitors occurs at night, the warning is to be given by the rapid firing of three cannon; if by day, other means are to be provided for warning each man, who is required "to repair instantly to his corporal at the place appointed."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 23. Dated May 9, but in Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 71, dated May 10. These are the earliest militia regulations for New Netherland on record.
- 22 Philip de Truy receives a ground-brief (Liber GG; 34, Albany) for land near the Smith's Valley. Its location on the modern map would be, approximately, between Pearl, Gold, Fulton, and Ferry Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III. This is perhaps the earliest recorded mention of the locality by name in the land records. For first mention, see May 16, 1636.
- July 1 Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt is appointed commissary of cargoes in New Netherland in place of Jacobus van Curler.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 100 (N. Y. State Library). See Sept. 27, 1641.
- 16 Kieft sends Secretary Van Tienhoven with a force of soldiers and sailors to punish the Raritan Indians for their depredations upon the property of David Pietersz. de Vries and the West India Co. on Staten Island.—De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 208, 227; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 150, 198; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 72. This was one of the acts of Kieft's administration that precipitated the bloody Indian war.
- 19 The West India Co. exhibits to the states-general a proposed new "Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions" for New Netherland, by which anyone may be acknowledged a patroon of New Netherland who plants there a colony of fifty souls, above fifteen years of age, within the space of three years after declaring and giving notice of his intention to do so, and anyone is to be acknowledged a master or colonist who shall remove to New Netherland with five souls over fifteen years of age. To all of the last named the director-general is to "grant in property one hundred morgens, Rhineland measure, of land" (200 acres). No such grants, however, are to be made on the "Island Manhattes;" for the company reserves this to itself.—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 118, 119.
- Pieter vande Linde receives a ground-brief for a certain piece of land next to that of Tonis Cray, beginning at the little brook called the Old Weck (coude wrack), extending to the land of Claes Sybrantzen de Verings, stretching along the East River in its breadth north-east and south-west and from the river into the woods to the foot-path, north-west and south-east, containing in breadth along the beach 300 paces of three feet to a pace.—Liber GG: 36 (Albany). This grant was conveyed by Vande Linde to Cornelis Commegis, June 12, 1658; the latter mortgaged the property, Sept. 3, 1658, to Willem Beekman; and on March 7, 1695, Beekman petitioned for the grant of this land, describing it as "about Stuyvesant's bowry."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244.
- Jan Tomassen, "cadet," makes acknowledgment before the provincial secretary that he has leased from Thomas Sandersen, smith, the bowery and house "situate on the Island Manhatta, near Werpoes, formerly occupied by Evert Foppe," for a term of five years, beginning on Jan. 1, 1641, at an annual rental of 150 guilders.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 212 (N. Y. State Library). Werpoes was the name of an Indian village on the shore of and to the north and west of the Fresh Water (Collect Pond)—i. e., on the present map of the city, lying about between Franklin St. on the south and Lispenard St. on the north, and between Church and Lafayette Sts.—Liber Patents, III: 17 (Albany). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987; and Pls. 174 and 175, Vol. III. Werpoes became part of the Bayard farm, for which see map of the farm lands, Vol. V.
- Farm and house servants are commanded by ordinance to serve out their time according to their contracts. Harboring those that run away is penalized by a fine of 50 guilders, to be divided equally between the informer, the fund for the new church, and the fiscal.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 24.
- David Provoost, commissary of provisions, on account of irregularities, is dismissed from his office, and Maurits Jansen, formerly assistant, is named in his stead.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 75 (N. Y. State Library). See also, regarding Provoost's appointment, Jan. 5, 1640.
- Before Secretary Van Tienhoven appear "Monsieur Johannes la Montagne and Sieur Andries Hudde as husband and guardian of Gertrude Bornstra, widow of the late Henric de Forest deceased, who conjointly acknowledge to have amicably agreed and arranged on the 12th July A<sup>o</sup> 1640 respecting the purchased bowery and goods and chattels lying on the Island of Manhatta, named Vredendael, left by the late Henric de Forest, with all the interest, right or title which Hudde, in quality as aforesaid, may in anywise claim." They request a legal instrument releasing one another from any future claims.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 216 (N. Y. State Library). Vredendael was at Harlem. See also July 20, 1638.
- George Baxter and Walter Harfoots receive a ground-brief for a piece of land "on the Island of Manhattans, extending in breadth between the two creeks where the water ripples over the stoues and the tree lies over the creek, and this with the same breadth betwixt both the creeks into the woods."—Liber GG: 41 (Albany).
- Thomas Hall makes acknowledgment of having sold to George Holmes "the half of the house and plantation situate by the Deutel [Turtle] bay," including "the furniture therein, except a boat, gun and dog which Thomas Hall reserves." The price is 1,600 pounds of tobacco "payable from the crop which George shall make A<sup>o</sup> 1641, and the Tobacc at present on the field remains to pay their joint debts." Until the payment is made, Hall is "at liberty to eat, drink, sleep, go and come to" the house of Holmes. A postscript adds: "George Homs has paid to D<sup>r</sup> Kieft this 1,600 pounds of Tobacco."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 224 (N. Y. State Library). See also Sept. 7, and Nov. 15, 1639.
- Jacobus van Curler, commissary, leases to "Willem Hendriczen and Gysbert Cornelisz, taylor, and Thomas" his plantation, "situate on the Island Manhatta on the East river with the hook called, in the Indian language, Nechtanc, lying contiguous to said plantation" for a term of three years from Jan. 1, 1641. The lessees are to pay annually "to the Company, eighteen guilders quit rent for the hook aforesaid," and also to "keep in proper repair at their own expense, the house and all dependencies" of the plantation. If

1640 they make improvements or build a tobacco house, these will, Jan. 6
 Sept. 28 upon expiration of the lease, become the lessor's property. Van 28 Curler reserves "the southside of the plantation" for himself, in case he returns from Holland while the lease is in operation.—
Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 219 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation, containing about 76 acres, lay along the East River from Houston St. around Corlaer's Hook.—See The Manatus Maps, II: 193.

Oct. The inventory of the estate of Hendrick de Forest, made for 11 his widow, Gertrude Bornstra, amounts, net, to 984 guilders
 "over and above all reciprocal debts." Johannes la Montagne now acknowledges a satisfaction of his share, received from "Sieur Andries Hudde, husband and guardian" of the widow, to whom she has been married.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan), I: 217.

Nov 3-13 The "Long Parliament" begins; it ended March, 1660.
 29 The inhabitants are notified by proclamation that the prices of goods in the West India Company's public store at New Amsterdam have been fixed at 50% advance (over cost), net; that a pricelist is affixed to a board in the store, and, if overcharged, report thereof is to be made to the council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 74.

Dec. Director-Gen. Kieft makes a lease for three years to Thomas 14 Broen (Brown), David Davidson (Davidson), Ralph Cardel, and Pieter Breyley, of "a certain parcel of land situate on the Island Manhattan near Bestevaer's Cripplebush which belongs to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Elias de Raet and Mr. Coenraet van Ceulen, both residing at Amsterdam." The conditions are: to plant tobacco, and pay to Kieft for the owners' account 200 pounds of cured tobacco annually as a rental. Kieft agrees for the owners that a tobacco house 100 feet long shall be built and that delivery in the year 1641 shall be made of "as much Dutch grain as can be sown in the ground."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 229 (N. Y.
 State Library). For location of Bestevaer's Cripplebush, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965.

1641

— About this time, Hendrick Jansen received a ground-brief (see recitals in Government Grants, 1642-1649, p. 1, in the Municipal Library) for land along Pearl St., between Pine and Liberty Sts.
 (on modern maps). See Pl. 174, Vol. III. See also Sept. 20, 1642.

— Cornelis Melyn arrived in this year in New Netherland, in the ship "Den Eyckenboom" (The Oaktree), and settled on Staten Island with 41 colonists. They began to build houses immediately, to plough, and to do everything toward the establishment of a good colony, sparing neither money nor work.—Melyn's "Reconstrance
 . . . in Melyn Papers, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1913), XLVI: 109-16. Speaking of the Indian troubles of 1643, Melyn said his houses, farms, and everything else, were consumed by fire, and his cattle, as well as some of his people, slain, and he, his wife and children forced to flee for their lives and reside at Manhattan until 1647. He added that, as a result of the troubles of the Eight Men with Stuyvesant, he (Melyn) and Jochem Pietersen Kuyter were banished by Stuyvesant, and both "departed for Fatheland from New Netherland with the ship The Princess Amelia (de prinses Amalia) in company with Director Willem Kieft."—Ibid. This ship was named for the Princess Amelia (Amalia von Solms), wife of Frederick Hendrick, stadtholder of The Netherlands. See also Sept. 27, 1647.

— Massachusetts establishes its "Body of Liberties."—Winsor, III: 314.

— In this year, Maisonneuve and other French Jesuits consecrated the city of Montreal; the first colonists settled there in May, 1642.

Jan. 6 A negro slave of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam is murdered. Several of the negro slaves of the company were implicated in the murder at a court session of the provincial council on Jan. 17. They admitted killing him in common, and the court, being unable to determine which one actually gave the death blow, therefore, required that they draw lots, to determine which one of their number should be hanged in expiation of the crime. The lot fell, "by God's direction," on Manuel de Gerrit (de Reus)—cf.
Van Rensselaer Bouvier MSS., 802), called the Giant. He was led to the gibbet, on the 24th of this month. The hangman, also a negro, used two strong halters, turned off the ladder, and the rope parted. The commonalty who witnessed these operations called out for mercy with great earnestness; whereupon Manuel was granted his life and pardoned, together with all of the other implicated negroes, subject to future good behaviour and a willing service.

Manuel, and those who were implicated with him, were the same slaves who received emancipation by the ordinance of Feb. 25, 1644.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 83-85;
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 74; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 36.

Parliament passes the Triennial Act on Feb. 15/25.
 Rhode Island adopts a democratic constitution. See Addenda.
 Selling liquors during divine service or after ten o'clock at night is forbidden under pain of forfeiture of stock and a fine, as well as exclusion for three months from tanning. The liquid measure in common use at Amsterdam, in Holland, is prescribed, and the price of beer is fixed at eight stuivers for the "Vaeu," or four pint measure.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 25.

The property of the late Director Wouter van Twiller in New Netherland is mentioned as follows in the "Register of the Resolutions of the Directors of the West India Company at the Chamber in Amsterdam:" "Wouter van Twiller having understood by a letter of Director Kieft, that the Company had ordered him, the Director, not to allow the property which the abovenamed Van Twiller had left in New Netherland to be alienated without authority being granted to that effect by this Company, requests that such authority be granted, so that he may dispose thereof at his pleasure; also, approval of the purchased lands which he bought from the Indians with the knowledge and consent of the Council, for the maintenance of his cattle and the advancement of population, and hath since his departure from New Netherland, caused houses to be erected thereon, after he had previously offered them to some free persons, as appears by the affidavit, who dare not venture their cattle on the premises, through fear that they might be killed by the Indians." The matter was "referred to the commissioners of New Netherland."—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 61 (N. Y. State Library).

An ordinance is passed forbidding the circulation of "any unpolished Wampum during the next month of May except at Five for one stiver and that strung, and then after that Six beads for one stiver." The cause is the importation of this "very bad Wampum . . . from other places, where it is 50 per cent cheaper than it is paid out here, and the good, polished Wampum, commonly called Manhattan Wampum is wholly put out of sight or exported, which tends to the express ruin and destruction of this Country."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 26. The price of the polished wampum was four for a stiver, strung. This is the first recorded law in New Netherland for regulating wampum. See also 1628 (seawan); June, 1634; and Nov. 30, 1647.

Anthony van Angola, widow of Catalina van Angola, is married to Lucie D'Angola, widow of Laurens D'Angola.—Marriages in Ref. Dutch Ch., 10. This is the first marriage between negroes recorded in the Dutch Church. Many such marriages followed.

Before the provincial secretary appear "John Smith and James Shaksburg, Henry Ly" (Harry Lea or Lee), making acknowledgment that they have "hired from Olloff Stevens (van Cortlandt) his plantation, situate on the Island of Manhattan heretofore occupied by Thomas Bescher" (also called Beescher or Beecher, and deceased). The lease is for three years, beginning May 1, 1644, at a rental of 300 pounds of well cured tobacco.—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 246 (N. Y. State Library).

As "a considerable number of respectable Englishmen with their Clergyman" have applied for permission to settle and reside in New Netherland, the director-general and council draw up articles for granting to them certain freedoms and privileges.—
Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 27-28. For the form of oath of allegiance required of them, see N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 24.

In court proceedings of this date, it is shown that Philip Geraerdy has engaged Juriaen Hendricksen, of Osnabrugh, to build a house, which contract he now demands shall be carried out.—Cal. Hist.
MSS., Dutch, 15, 76. Evidently, this was the house near the corner of Marktveldt and Brouwer Straet (Whitehall and Stone Sts.)—the present site of the Produce Exchange, in which he was conducting a tavern as early as Jan. 16, 1642, when he was charged by the fiscal with selling beer at a higher rate than was allowed by ordinance.—Ibid., 78. It is a curious fact that, on May 27, 1642, Geraerdy, being then a soldier, presumably in the militia of New Amsterdam, was sentenced, for being absent from guard duty without leave, "to ride the Wooden Horse during parade with a pitcher in one hand and a drawn sword in the other."—Ibid., 79.
 Whether the origin of the name of his tavern, known thereafter as "the sign of the Wooden Horse" (not "White Horse" as stated by Innes), is related to this ludicrous experience of Geraerdy

- 1641 with the military punishment, or owes its origin to the proximity of June its tavern to the parade-ground and the instrument upon which 13 military offenders were made to do penance, cannot be positively determined. The irregular plot on which his tavern stood was granted to him by Director-Gen. Kieft, on July 13, 1643 (q. v.)— Liber Patents, II: 169 (in office of sec. of state, Albany). This grant is recited in a confirmation to his widow, Maria Paulet or Pollet, and his son, Jan or Jean, on Feb. 14, 1668, by Gov. Nicolls.
Ibid. No mention of the tavern is made in this recital of the original patent to Gerardy, or in the ground-brief of Aug. 7, 1643, from Kieft to Adam Rodantseon, who was Gerardy's next-door neighbour.—Liber GG: 86 (in N. Y. State Library, Albany). The earliest mention of the tavern as "the Wooden Horse" is given in a deposition, of Oct. 20, 1644, relative to wine purchased by Gerardy.—Cal. Hist. MSS. Dutch, 30; another mention of the name, Aug. 17, 1649, is in ibid., 49. On Oct. 15, 1653, a portion of Rodantseon's grant was sold under a foreclosure to Philip Gerardy, by Pieter Wolphtersen van Couwenhoven, as creditor of Claes Jansen Rust. In this conveyance the language is: "a lot at the place where the Wooden Horse hangs out."—Liber HH, pt. i: 62 (in N. Y. State Library, Albany). Philip Gerardy died in 1655. On Nov. 16, 1657, his son sold to Joost Teunissen, from Naerden, a halter, the tavern building, "where the woodenhorse hangs out, i. e. at the sign of the woodenhorse, being a cakehouse" (Kekhuys)—Conveyances, Liber A: 110 (in register's office, N. Y.
 City). The sign was removed to a house next door on the east, at No. 8 Stone St. Here Maria Pollet, the widow of Gerardy, kept the tavern.—Rec. N. Am., II: 263; q. ibid., III: 327; and discontinued the business in 1668.—Ibid., VI: 142, 150. Maria de Vos (as she then was, having married in 1656 the notary, Mattheus de Vos) died in 1668; her son, by Gerardy, sold the house on Jan. 28, 1672, to Capt. Thomas Delavall.—Liber Deeds, B: 187 (New York), cf. Book of Records of Deeds & Transfers (etc.), 1665-1672 (translated), 205-6. The building of the N. Y.
 Produce Exchange now covers both sites of the Wooden Horse.
 See Castello Plan, II: 249-50; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III:
 981; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- 17 Isaac de Forest registers at the office of the provincial secre-
 July tary a contract made between him and two English carpenters, 18 John Hubbesen (Hubbardson or Hubbertson) and John Meris (Morris or Maurice), for building for him "a dwelling house thirty feet long and 18 feet wide with 2 transom windows and 2 round See A. windows 4 girders with brackets and 2 free girders, one partition, one passage way tight inside and outside, and the entire house tight all round, to construct in the said house a pantry and three doors. Together with a tobacco house 60 feet long with the inside work; 1 small kitchen 20 feet long and 16 feet wide covered with clapboards, also an English chimney. Likewise to cover the dwelling house in such a manner as to be secure against water and snow." The carpenters are to be paid 500 Carolus guilders for the job, finished to De Forest's satisfaction.—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 250 (N. Y. State Library). The location is not known, but it may have been on a plantation somewhere up Manhattan Island.
- Aug. Heedrick Jaosen, tailor, acknowledges an agreement for the 26 purchase of his house, barn, barrick, hereditaments, and arable land, by Maryn Adriaensen, delivery to be made in May, 1642, and Jansen reserving to himself "the brewhouse and two brewkettles," which he agrees to remove at his convenience. The purchase price is 2,500 Carolus guilders, payable in three instalments, the first on taking possession.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 265 (N. Y. State Library). The following day, Maryn Adriaensen acknowledged sale, to Jan Jansen Damen, of the same land "situate near the Smith's valley." The purchase price was then 3,000 Carolus guilders, payable in three instalments. The seller agreed to "deliver the land sowed to the satisfaction of the purchaser."—Ibid., I: 266. The location of this parcel was south of Maiden Lane, running down as far as Pine St., bounded by the East River (Pearl St.) and running back, but not to any considerable depth.—See The Castello Plan, II: 341; also Pl. 174, blocks 41 and 42, Vol. III.
- 29 Director-Gen. Kieft having summoned the commonalty on Aug.
 23, 1641, to send heads of families to Fort Amsterdam on the following Thursday (the 29th), to adopt means for punishing a Weckuesgeek Indian who had murdered Claes Cornelissen Swits, a wheelwright, at Deutel (Turtle) Bay, the heads of families now met and select a board of twelve men as representatives.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 76, 77; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 183, 415; Aug.
 29 D. Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 213, 214. This board was dissolved peremptorily on Feb. 8, 1642.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., I: 203. "The Twelve Men, and afterwards [1643] the Eight had in court matters neither vote nor advice; but were chosen in view of the war [the Indian wars of 1642 and 1643] and some other occurrences to serve as cloaks, and cats-paws. Otherwise they received no consideration and were little respected if they opposed at all the views of the Director."—Representation N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 333. This is often called the beginning of representative government in New York.
- Sept. On this day, for the first time, shipping is recorded as anchored 6 "in the roadstead before Fort Amsterdam."—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 269, 272 (N. Y. State Library). See Manatus Maps, Vol. II, for its location.
- 7 Lourens Cornelissen receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 43, Albany) for land at Pearl and Liberty Sts. (on modern maps).
 See April 14, 1643; Pl. 174, Vol. I.
- 12 Because lately some people were murdered on Staten Island by Indians, the provincial council now votes to protect the remaining residents against further trouble, by the erection on that island of a little redoubt, at the least possible cost.—Records
N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 101 (N. Y. State Library).
- 27 Jacobus van Curler, "late commissary of Cargoes in New Netherland," acknowledges at the provincial secretary's office that he is "well and truly indebted to the Hon'ble Directors" of the West India Co. for 2,017 guilders, eight st., twopence, "originating from the Book of Monthly wages No 9 C," promising to pay the same and mortgaging his "house and plantation situate on the Island of Manhate," no doubt meaning his Colraer's Hook property.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's translation),
 I: 276 (N. Y. State Library).
- 30 Kieft and his council ordain that "there shall be held annually at Fort Amsterdam a Cattle Fair on the 15th of October, and a fair for Hogs on the 1st of November," so that whoever "hath any thing to sell or to buy can regulate himself accordingly."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 29. It is unlikely that the cattle and hogs were exhibited and sold within the fort during the fairs that were held under this ordinance. It is probable that the transactions took place in the open space outside of the fort and between it and the company's stores. Regular markets were yet established, and "t Markvelt," or the Marketfield, was not unknown in the topographical nomenclature of New Amsterdam. cf. De Vos, Market Book, 17, 28-29, 35-36. Also See Castello Plan (Redraft), II: 344-45.
- Oct. Director-Gen. Kieft makes a contract for a lease to Hendrick 21 Pieterseon from Hasselt of "a certain piece of (maize) land situate on the Island of Manhattan, on the Highway where Jan Damen is next adjoining on the South, and Everardus Bogardus on the North." Kieft agrees to have erected here, at the expense of the West India Co., "a barn fifty feet long and 20 feet wide with See A. an entrance, and a barrick of four rods." The lease is for eight years, commencing on May 1, 1642, at a rental of one third the yield of the soil.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 280 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation was identical with the "old Company's Bowery," or the later "King's Farm," and lay between the Bogardus or Anecke Jans farm and the farm of Jan Jansen Damen. On modern lines, the leased farm was bounded north by a line from the Hudson River (then at Greenwich St.) to Broadway, running from a point a little north of Warren St. at the river to a point at the south corner of Broadway and Chambers St.; the eastern boundary was Broadway;
 the southern boundary was Fulton St., and the western boundary was the river.—See Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- Nov. Director-Gen. Kieft certifies to a contract for a lease to Thomas 30 Hall of "the plantation occupied to date by said Hall situate about Sapokanikan on the Island of Manhattan belonging to the late Director Wouter van Twiller." Kieft leases in the name of Van Twiller, for a term of five years, beginning Jan. 1, 1642, at an annual rental of 750 pounds of "well inspected Tobacco." Two negroes are included in this bargain, and Hall agrees to build "a barn as good as the Domine's [Bogardus] fifty feet long," which, at the expiration of the lease, shall revert to the owner of the plantation, and toward the cost of which 100 guilders and the nails are to be contributed by the owner.—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 282 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation lay some distance west of the Bowery Road, south-west of Greenwich Lane.—See Manatus Maps, C. 10, pp. 190-91, Vol. II.

1641 "The Grand Remonstrance" is presented by the English parliament to King Charles I.

1642

— Probably from this year date the wash drawing in sepia of "Novum Amsterdamum," perhaps by Laurens Block, reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 4-b.

— About the beginning of this year, the West India Co. completed the city tavern (Stadts Herbergh), and opened it to the public.—De Vries Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 212; Innes, New Am. and Its People, 178. It stood on what is now the north-west corner of Pearl St. (Nos. 71-73) and Coenties Alley, originally facing the East River; and became, in 1653 (q.v.), the city hall (Stadthuis). The first lessee was Philip Gerritsen, who rented it from Director-Gen. Kieft, on Feb. 17, 1643, for a term of six years, beginning with Jan. 1, 1642, at 300 guilders per annum, with the right to retail the company's wine and brandy, on which he was allowed a profit of six stuivers per can. A well and a brewhouse were also to be built behind the tavern.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 21; Rec. N. Am., I: 49; Innes, op. cit., 178. This building was for a long time used by the city, and remained its property until Aug. 17, 1699 (q.v.), when the authorities sold it, and the land belonging to it, to John Rodman.—Liber A: 254 (in comptroller's office, N. Y. City). The building was in course of demolition early in the spring of 1700, as is shown by a complaint lodged by a neighbour against Rodman "for intending to pull down a party wall between her house and the city hall."—Cal. Coun. Min., 145. By Oct. 19, 1700, the building was down and had been replaced by another.—Liber A: 387. See also Feb. 6, 1653; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 973.

— Ill feeling between the Indians and the Dutch was increased by the murder of Gerrit Jansz., a servant of the lord of Nederhorst at Hackensack, by a drunken native. The Indians refused to give up the murderer, as he was the son of a sachem, offering, however, 100 or 200 fathom of wampum to the widow of the dead man. Several Indians were said to have been killed in revenge of this murder.—De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 215-16; Broad Advice (Murphy, 1854), 147.

— About this year, Cornelis Dircksen was established as ferryman on Long Island, the landing on the Long Island side being at the foot of the present Fulton Street, Brooklyn. For his ferry on the Manhattan Island side, see 1658. See also Jan. 24, 1643.

— The four church-wardens of New Amsterdam were Director-Gen. Kieft, Capt. David Pietersen de Vries, Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, and Jan Jansen Damen.—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 212.

— About this year, Jan Stevenson became schoolmaster.—See Addenda.

Feb. 7 Jan Teunissen, house carpenter, acknowledges having entered into a contract with Adam Roelantzen, from Dockum, first schoolmaster of New Amsterdam, "for making and building" a house "thirty feet long, eighteen feet wide, eight feet story under the beams, the end cross-beams strengthened with brackets all square, the house enclosed all around with clapboards, and covered with a good reed roof, such as shall be proper, a close ceiling of clapboards, 3 transom windows, two outer [joor]s, one portal, one pantry, one bedstead, an enclosed [stair]case to ascend to the garret, to make the chimney [out]side above of wood with a mantle-piece, a passage way three feet wide with the partition." This Teunissen agrees to complete by Aug. 1, 1642, at a cost of 350 Carolus guilders, Holland value.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 7 (N. Y. State Library).

8 The twelve men whom the commonality have chosen to give their advice concerning the murder of Claes Cornelisen Swits, the wheelwright (see Aug. 29, 1641), are commanded by Director-Gen. Kieft to "hold no further meeting, as the same tends to a dangerous consequence, and to the great injury both of the country and of our [Kieft's] authority." They are not to assemble except by "express order" from Kieft, "on pain of being punished as disobedient subjects."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 203. This first prorogation of the first popular representative body in New Netherlands proved to be its virtual dissolution.

17 Thomas Chambers, the English carpenter, acknowledges a contract made with Nicholas Willem Bout (or Boott) for building a house 32 feet long, and 18 feet wide, "provided that the land which the Governor of New Netherlands hath granted" to Bout, "whereon the aforesaid house is to be built," is to "be divided by parties on the first of October A<sup>o</sup> 1642." The land was a tobacco plantation.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 8, op. cit. Fy 17 Abraham Pietersen acknowledges before Secretary Van Tien- Mar.

 hoven, "in the public tavern," the sale to Jacob Bouwensen 1 of "all the grain that he hath at present sowed in the ground on the bouweries N<sup>o</sup> 5 and 6 belonging to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Directors of the West India Company."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 10 (N. Y. State Library).

Govert Lookcermans and Cornelis Leendertsen receive from 26
 the director and council a bill of sale or grant of a house and land near the outlet of the fresh water kill at the East River, ad adjoining the land of Cornelis van Tienhoven, whose palisades extend from the Heereweg (Broadway) to the East River.—Liber GG: 47 (Albany); Liber Patents, II: 11 (Albany). According to modern streets, the land was bounded north-westerly on Park Row from about the corner of Pearl St. to the corner of Frankfort St.; and from that point southerly along Nassau St. to a point a little south of Ann St.; thence along the south side of Ann St. to a point east of Gold St.; then on a circular course, so as to exclude the "Swamp" and De Truy's grant, to the corner of Ferry and Cliff Sts.; thence along Ferry St. to the East River, and along the river shore, now almost on the line of Pearl and Cherry Sts., to the mouth of the outlet of the Fresh Water at Catharine St.; and thence along the course of the stream, between Catharine and Roosevelt Sts., to the place of beginning. See Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III.

An import duty of ten per cent is imposed on all goods entered Apr.
 in New Netherlands, if no tariff has been paid before in Holland, 3 Brazil, Guinea, or the West Indies, and an export duty as authorized by "the List set forth in the Freedoms," to be paid to "the Receiver of the Company's revenues, or whomever shall be appointed thereto."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 31.

Jan Francen, a soldier of the garrison of Fort Amsterdam, 12 deposes that while he stood on guard as a sentinel at the fort on April 7, he "saw Abraham Plank tear down the Placard which was posted on the gate of the fort, as he Plank was going out of the Fort."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 16 (N. Y. State Library). On May 22, Plank was fined 300 guilders.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 80. Perhaps the ordinance was the one that had been promulgated and posted on April 3, imposing certain duties on exports and imports.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 31.

On account of the number of fugitive servants that come to 13
 New Netherlands daily from New England and Virginia, carrying "their passports under foot," an ordinance is passed forbidding the harbouring of strangers for more than one night, "without first notifying the Director and having their names recorded," so that it may be known "what sort of people are here, and whence they come."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 32. This ordinance was renewed, June 13, 1643.—Ibid., 35.

During the administration of Director-Gen. Kieft a new stone 14 church was erected in the south-east corner of the fort facing towards the south.—De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 212-13; Representation of N. Neth., in Ibid., 325-26. The church occupied almost one fourth of the space in the fort.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 333. See A.

The contract for building it read as follows:
 "Appeared before me, Cornelius Van Tienhoven, Secretary in behalf of the general privileged West India Company in New Netherlands, the Honorable William Kieft, church-warden, at the request of his brethren, the church-wardens of the church in New Netherlands, to transact and in their name to conclude the following business. So did he, as church-warden, agree with John Ogden about a church in the following manner, viz:—

"John Ogden of Stamford, and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden, engage to build in behalf of said church-wardens a church of rock-stone, seventy-two feet long, fifty-two feet broad, and sixteen feet high above the soil, all in good order, and in a workmanlike manner. They shall be obliged to procure the stone, and bring it on shore near the fort at their own expense, from whence the church wardens shall further convey the stone to the place where it is intended to build the church, at their own expense. The church wardens aforesaid will procure as much lime as shall be required for the building of the aforesaid church. John and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden shall at their own charge pay for the masonry &c., provided that when the work shall be finished the church wardens shall pay to them the sum of 2500 gl., which payment shall be made in beaver, cash, or merchandize, to wit:—if the church-wardens are satisfied with the work, so that in their judgment the 2500 gl. shall have been earned, then the said church-wardens

1642 shall reward them with 100 gl. more; and further promise to May John Ogden and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden to assist them whenever 24 it is in their power. They further agree to facilitate the carrying the stone thither, and that John and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden may use during a month or six weeks the Company's boat; engaging themselves and the aforesaid John and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden to finish the undertaken work in the manner as they contracted. Done in Fort Amsterdam, in New Netherlands. [Signed] Willem Kieft, John Ogden, Richard Ogden, Gysbert on Dyck, Thomas Willett."—Contract, undated, but entered in the records in May, 1642, printed in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., I: 382, and Eccles. Rec., I: 165. O'Callaghan's translation, in Records N. Neth., II: 18 (N. Y. State Library), is quite different.
There the width of the church is stated as 54 feet. See Addenda.

The church was roofed in 1643 (Breeden Raedt, Murphy's trans., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., III: 261) with shingles of hewn oak, which, from exposure to wind and rain, turned blue and looked like slate (De Vries, Notes in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 213). The Montanus (Pl. No. 6, Vol. I) and earlier views of New Amsterdam show this roof with two peaks and a steeple between them, but that this arrangement seems to have been altered in 1672 (q. v.), the "Restitutio View" (Pls. Nos. 8-b and 16, Vol. I) shows only one peak, with the steeple. See also Pl. 5, Vol. I.
The church, in Nov., 1647, was still unfinished (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 114; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 69); but Stuyvesant took up its completion and general repair in 1647-8 (Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson, op. cit., 330).

The money for this church was given by Kieft, on behalf of the West India Co., and by the people in voluntary contributions.
See A. —Ibid., 326; De Vries, Notes, in ibid., 212. In 1650 it was said that it "cost much more than eight thousand guilders whereof it cannot be proved that the people paid eight hundred; the collection taken up by subscription, hath realized the least;" because "a subscription list was signed which amounted to fl. 1800. The accounts of most of the subscribers were debited accordingly, but they have not yet [1650] paid the money."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 339; 423.

A Dutch inscription was placed upon the church, of which the English translation is as follows: "1642, Willem Kieft, being Director-General, the congregation caused this church to be built."
—Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson, op. cit., 326. The stone which bore this inscription was found, in 1790, by workmen who were leveling Fort George (Daily Adv., June 23, 1790), and was preserved in the Garden Street Dutch Church until 1835 (q. v.), when it perished in the fire which destroyed that edifice (Corwin, Manual Ref. Ch. in Amer., 4th ed., 24).

The church was originally covered with shingles. Some time prior to 1672, the shingles had been replaced with tiles. In 1672, the city allowed 500 guilders for removing the tile roof and replacing the shingles, because the tiles had become broken by the concussion of the firing of the cannon at the fort. In 1679-80, when the Labadists visited the city, the church had a shingled roof.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 367-68; Jour. of Jasper Danckaerts (ed. by James and Jameson), 46; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 311.

In 1693, Gov. Fletcher had the King's Chapel in the fort pulled down, because it was so dilapidated as to be a menace to life and limb.—Jour. Leg. Coun. of N. Y., I: 42; see also 1693.
Plans for building a new chapel were being considered in Oct., 1694 (ibid., 65-66); and the masonry seems to have been completed by the beginning of 1695. On March 5, of that year, Derick Van-denburgh, mason and bricklayer, petitioned for £943:14:10 $\frac{1}{2}$ , in payment for erecting a chapel and other buildings in and about Fort William Henry.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244. As late as April, 1696, Fletcher urged the completion of the chapel.—Jour. Leg.
Coun., I (1861): 89. This edifice was destroyed by fire on March 18, 1741 (q. v.)—Ibid., I: 769; N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 184, 185.

6 Thomas Chambers, an English carpenter, contracts to build in eight weeks' time, for Jan Jansen Schepmoes, "a house 30 feet long and 20 feet wide," at a compensation of 116 guilders and board.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 17, op. cit.

24 The following record under this date is made in the "Register of the Resolutions of the Directors of the West India Company at the Chamber in Amsterdam:" "The Directors of the Incorporated West India Company at the Chamber in Amsterdam have granted and allowed, and do hereby grant and allow, to Wouter van Twiller, late Director in New Netherland, that the said van Twiller shall not have to pay to the Company the sixth sheaf of May the stipulated rent of the Company's bowery situate on the 24 Island of the Manhatans in New Netherland," under lease from May 1, 1638, for eight years, "the planted lands, the first of September 1645, and the meadow lands, the middle of November 1645, when the said bowery shall return and be delivered up to the Company, and the Lessee shall during the lease keep the house, barrick and barn in good and proper repair. . . . Furthermore, he may dispose at his pleasure of his cattle, movable, and negroes and all whatsoever belongs to the abovementioned Van Twiller."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 61 (N. Y.

State Library). This was the company's great bowery No. 1, which in 1651 became the property of Stuyvesant—the well-known Stuyvesant's bowery. See the Manatus Maps, C. 1, Vol. II, and II: 187-88; and March 12, 1651.

Before Secretary Van Tienhoven, appears on this day "Annitje Jans, widow of the late Rouloff Jansen from Masterland, and present wife of Everardus Bogardus Minister here, with the [Hon<sup>ble</sup>] Willem Kieft, director general of New Netherland and Mr. Johannes La Montagne [sic] her chosen guardians herein, who declared that she, in the month of March A<sup>o</sup> 1638, previous to, and before that she Annitje Jans had entered into the marriage state with her present abovementioned husband, had agreed with the guardians of the surviving legitimate children which the aforesaid Rouloff Jansen had in his lifetime procreated by her, respecting their share of their deceased father's estate, which aforesaid contract was drawn up and written by the late secretary Hudde, and is at present not to be found in the old Books, Papers or Registers. Wherefore for the security of the aforesaid children and Annitje Jans abovementioned, she hath caused this instrument to be drawn up as a supplement to the foregoing contract, and in case the latter happen to be discovered elsewhere, she . . . holds it as valid and of no less force than the present." The five children are named, with their ages, between five and sixteen years. In this renewed contract is included clothing, feeding, etc. of the minor children, and for their education it states, "to keep them at school, to let them learn reading, writing and a good trade."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 20 (N. Y. State Library).

Andries Hudden (or Hudde) is appointed surveyor of New Netherland by Kieft and his council, at an annual salary of 200 florins. On Oct. 16, Hudden asked the council for an "acte," so that he might have his salary from persons who employed him as surveyor; whereupon the council noted that he could charge three guilders per day and also two stuyvers per morgen for expenses, and free conveyance.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 129, 142 (N. Y. State Library).

Delegates from the governor and council of Connecticut attend a conference with Director-Gen. Kieft and his council at Fort Amsterdam, to negotiate terms for the surrender of Fort Hope (Hartford, Conn.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 40-41.

Through "quarrels, drawing of knives and fighting, and the multitude of Taverns and low Grogeries, badly conducted," many accidents happen daily, to prevent which an ordinance is passed forbidding anyone to "presume to draw a knife much less to wound any person, under the penalty of fl. 50, to be paid immediately, or, in default, to work three months with the Negroes in chains;
this, without any respect of persons."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 33.
Uldrick Klein makes a declaration before the provincial secretary "that he deliberately purchased from Adam Roelantsen
the small house in which the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company's Negroes are now lodging, with the garden adjoining thereto."—Records N. Neth.
(O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 26.

Barent Dircksen, baker, leases to Bout Franssen "the bowery called Walesteyn," together with the cattle, for a term of six years.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 28 (N. Y.
State Library). This farm was probably in the vicinity of the present Christopher St. and the Hudson River.—See Manatus Maps, II: 191.

This is the date in common acceptance for the beginning of the Civil War in England between the royal and parliamentary forces. "It was about six o'clock in the evening" when the royal standard of Charles I. was raised at Nottingham, "summoning all the lieges to assist his Majesty."—Masson, Life of John Milton, II, 423-24.

- 1642 One of the points which the West India Co. considers, as shown Sept. in the Resolutieboek, is "in what manner a solid and sufficient 15 foundation shall be determined on regarding the places in New Netherland, concerning the freedoms and population of the same, and generally in what manner the aforesaid conquest shall be visited in ships and traded to."—Records of old West India Co., No. 25, XVII, fol. 38, in National Archives at The Hague.
- 20 Maryn Adriaensen conveys to Jan Jansen Damen land in the Smith's Valley which he derived from Hendrick Jansen, tailor, by a deed of Jan. 4, 1642, following upon a bill of sale of Aug. 27, 1641.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 33 (N. Y.
State Library). Adriaensen gave Damen a release and discharge on March 29, 1643.—Ibid., 46. This land was situated at the present Pearl St., between Cedar and Liberty Sts.—See Pl. 174, Vol. III. For the disposition of the remainder of Adriaensen's land, see Castello Plan, II: 340.
- Oct. As the court has suffered from much loss of time, occasioned 16 by the default of defendants, an ordinance is passed, prescribing a fine of six stuivers for the first, a fine of 12 stuivers for the second, and condemnation for the third default.—Laws & Ord.
N. Neth., 34.
- 30 A resolution is passed by the director-general and council providing for assisting newly arrived settlers; otherwise, it is believed "the country will come to nought, and the people remain in a miserable condition."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 83; N. Y.
Col. Docs., XIII: 10.
- Nov. Thomas Hael (Hall) receives a grant of land lying on the North 20 River, formerly occupied by Edward Fiscoek, Hans Hansen, and Maryn Adriaensen (having been owners), bounded on the north by the plantation of former Director Wouter van Twiller and Laurens Dircksen, baker, and eastward by the swamp.—Liber
GG: 55 (Albany).
- " Jan Pietersen and Abraham Rycken receive a ground-brief for one lot, at the north-west corner of Bridge and Broad Sts.—
See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. I, and I: 383.
- 24 Hendrick Jansen, tailor, sells to Willem Adriaensen, cooper,
"his garden, dwelling and brewhouse . . . and the dependencies of said brewhouse," for 2,500 Carolus guilders, payable in three instalments.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II:
37 (N. Y. State Library).
- Dec. 6 Jeuriaen Hendricksen, from Osnabrugge, makes acknowledgment before the provincial secretary that he has undertaken "to build for the Hon<sup>ble</sup> William Kieft, director general of New Netherland . . . a house at the Otterspoor [Otter's track]
. . . the house to be one hundred feet long . . . fifty feet wide, tapering off to a breadth of twenty feet within the posts, with passages running throughout, one nine and the other ten feet wide, one front room fifty feet long, twenty feet wide, with one partition and a double chimney, all which shall be of brick, wherein he, Jeuriaen Hendricksen, shall make and lay the cellar and garret benches of plank necessary thereto, together with the window and door frames, and whatever else shall be necessary for the aforesaid building." The contract price is 600 Carolus guilders and board.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 39
(N. Y. State Library). The location mentioned was in Harlem.—
See Manatus Maps, 194-95, Vol II; Landmark Map Ref Key, III: 967. See Addenda.
- 11 George Baxter is appointed, provisionally, by Kieft, as English secretary for New Netherland, on account of "the great number of English who come daily to reside here under us," and the "numerous law suits and their consequences" which require such service. His salary is to be 250 fl. per annum.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., XIV: 41. He was reappointed by Stuyvesant, on June 28, 1647.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 110.
- 1643
Father Isaac Jogues, the Jesuit missionary who visited New Amsterdam in this year, wrote, in 1646, a description of this visit:
"New Holland, which the Dutch call in Latin Novum Belgium
—in their own language, Nieuw Nederland, that is to say, New Low Countries—is situated between Virginia and New England.
The mouth of the river, which some people call Nassau, or the Great North River, to distinguish it from another which they call the South River, and which I think is called Maurice River on some maps that I have recently seen, is at 40 deg. 30 min. The channel is deep, fit for the largest ships, which ascend to Manhattes

Island, which is seven leagues in circuit, and on which there is a fort to serve as the commencement of a town to be built here, and to be called New Amsterdam.

"This fort, which is at the point of the island, about five or six leagues from the [river's] mouth, is called Fort Amsterdam;
it has four regular bastions, mounted with several pieces of artillery. All these bastions and the curtains were, in 1643, but mounds, most of which had crumbled away, so that one entered the fort on all sides. There were no ditches. For the garrison of the said fort, and another which they had built still further up against the incursions of the savages, their enemies, there were sixty soldiers. They were beginning to face the gates and bastions with stone. Within the fort there was a pretty large stone church, the house of the Governor, whom they call Director General, quite neatly built of brick, the storehouses and barracks.

"On the island of Manhate, and in its environs, there may well be four or five hundred men of different sects and nations:
the Director General told me that there were men of eighteen different languages; they are scattered here and there on the river, above and below, as the beauty and convenience of the spot has invited each to settle: some mechanics however, who ply their trade, are ranged under the fort; all the others are exposed to the incursions of the natives, who in the year 1643, while I was there, actually killed some two score Hollanders, and burnt many houses and barns full of wheat.

"The river, which is very straight, and runs due north and south, is at least a league broad before the fort. Ships lie at anchor in a bay which forms the other side of the island, and can be defended by the fort.

"Shortly before I arrived there, three large ships of 300 tons each had come to load wheat; two found cargoes, the third could not be loaded, because the savages had burnt a part of the grain.
These ships had come from the West Indies, where the West India Company usually keeps up seventeen ships of war.

"No religion is publicly exercised but the Calvinist, and orders are to admit none but Calvinists, but this is not observed; for besides the Calvinists there are in the colony Catholics, English, Puritans, Lutherans, Anabaptists, here called Ministes [Mennonites], etc. [In two previous letters (Jameson, 242 et seq.), Jogues refers to Roman Catholics and to the confessional on Manhattan Island.]
"When any one comes to settle in the country, they lend him horses, cows, etc.; they give him provisions, all which he returns as soon as he is at ease; and as to the land, after ten years he pays to the West India Company the tenth of the produce which he reaps."
—Novum Belgium, 1646, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 259-60.

Probably from this year dates the view of "Nieu Amsterdam" reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 5. This view is the only one known showing the church in the fort before the addition of the steeple or belfry; with the exception of the Hargters View (Pl.
1, Vol. I.) it is the earliest known engraved view of New York.

The church in the fort, begun in 1642 (see May, 1642), was roofed in this year (Breeden-Raadt, etc., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Col- lections, 1857, p. 261), at which time a belfry was evidently added.

At different times between the years 1643 and 1647 patents for land were given to emancipated negroes who had been slaves of the West India Co. in New Netherland. These grants centered about the Fresh Water (Kolck) and the public wagon-road, i. e., west of the Bowery and between Canal St. and Astor Pl. This seems to have been the first quarter for free negroes established on Manhattan Island. For their earlier quarter as slaves, see 1639. Cf. Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 368, 369, 370, 372, 374; Hoffman, Estates and Rights of the Corporation of the City of N. Y., II: 191, diagram no. 6.

In this year, the Republic of New Haven was formed by the union of the towns of New Haven, Milford, Guilford, and Stamford.

"Thomas Hall, tobacco planter," makes acknowledgment of Jan. a debt to Maryn Adriaensen of 1,000 Carolus guilders, "being 23 for the purchase of the plantation situate on the Island of Manhattan on the North River, heretofore cultivated by Hans Hansen," payment to be consummated on May 1, 1644. Hall's security is given by "Francis Lastley and John Seals," Englishmen.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 43 (Albany).

Cornelis Dircksen, also called Cornelis Dircksen Hoogblant, 24 sells to Willem Tomassen, pilot of the yacht "Pauwe" (Peacock), his house and garden on Long Island, "together with the [Brooklyn] Ferry for his, Cornelis's remaining time, subject

- 1643 to the approbation of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director" (Kieft).—Records of
 Jan. N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 44 (N. Y. State Library); 24 N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 42. See 1638 for Dircksen's ferry on Manhattan Island. It is not known how long Dircksen had been ferry-man at the Brooklyn end, but he must have begun in 1642 (q. v.) if not earlier. See Stiles, Hist. of Brooklyn, I: 35.
- Feb. On account of an Indian war, begun by certain armed Mahicans from the neighbourhood of Fort Orange (Albany), who sought tribute from "the savages of Wick-quas-geck and Tapaen and of the adjacent villages," many of the latter fled to the Dutch on or near Manhattan Island.—De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N.
Neth., 225-26; Jour. of N. Neth., in ibid., 277. These were among the Indians attacked at Pavonia and Corlaer's Hook, on Feb.
 25-26 (q. v.).
- 17 Philip Gerritsen, from Harlem, Holland, makes a contract with Director-Gen. Kieft, in the presence of the provincial secretary, "for the hire of the Company's house," or city tavern (present Pearl St. and Coenties Alley), for a term of six years from Jan. 1, 1642, at a rental to the West India Co. of 300 guilders per annum, and delivery of "the Company's wines" to the lessees "in so far as he will be able to retail them," for which he is to have "a profit of six stivers" per quart, except for French wine, which is to yield
 "no more than four stivers;" also, no wines are to be sold by retail by the company out of its cellar "which might be drank in clubs [company] and would tend to the Lessee's injury." Director-Gen. Kieft "also promises to have a well dug near the house, at the earliest opportunity, and to cause a brewhouse to be put up in the rear, or to give the use of the Company's brewhouse." The lessee signs his name "Philippus Gerritsen." An appendix to the instrument states: "On the first of January Anno 1647, this contract has been extended for six years with Adriaen Gerritsen who married the widow of the late Philip Gerritsen, so that the lease terminates on the first of January, 1654."—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 45 (N. Y. State Library).
- 21 From the Resolutieboek of the West India Co., this record is taken: "It was still found that New Netherland costs much to the Company and up to now has produced very little profit, and that the throwing open of the trade to the said place has not the desired effect, as was expected, because many go there to trade without establishing a residence, on account of which the population does not increase there, but the trade is greatly damaged;
 therefore, the question is submitted to the members if it be not proper to put the domestic trade there in the hands of the local inhabitants; and for the purpose of increasing the numbers and to encourage the people and the culture of land, fruits, and fisheries there, whether it is not necessary to [encourage] the inhabitants, who engage themselves to keep open the trade from there to Brazil, with proper orders and recognizances in behalf of the Company, and vice versa from Brazil again to New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 25, XX, fol. 71, in National Archives at The Hague.
- 25 Maryn Adriaensen having been commissioned by Director-
 Gen. Kieft to attack a party of Indians behind Corlaer's Hook, on Manhattan Island, and Sergeant Juriaen Rodolf to attack another party at Pavonia, N. J. (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 84; N. Y.
Col. Docs., I: 194; XIII: 10-11), these attacks are made simultaneously, about midnight (Feb. 25-26). About forty Indians are massacred in their sleep at Corlaer's Hook, and about eighty at Pavonia.—Breeden Raedt, in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), IV: 66, or Murphy's ed. (1854), 148-49; De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 227-28; Jour. N. Neth., in ibid., 279. When the affiliated Indians (see Feb., 1643) awoke to a realization of this treachery to their people, they revenged themselves by killing many men on the farm lands, and devastated the outlying districts by burnings "houses, farms, barns, stacks of grain," in fact everything they could lay waste; and so "they began an open and destructive war."—Broad Advice, Murphy's ed. (1854), 150. This war lasted until the general peace concluded at Fort Amsterdam on Aug. 30, 1645.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 97; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 18.
- 27 On account of the precipitated Indian war, Kieft and his council pass a resolution for enlisting a number of planters, "in order to put a bit in the mouth of the heathen."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 85; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 11-12.
- Mar. By a resolution of the director-general and council, a day of 4 general fasting and prayer was appointed for this day, in - consequence of the war precipitated with the Indians.—Cal. Mar.
Hist. MSS., Dutch, 85; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 44.
- Maryn Adriaensen enters the room of Director-Gen. Kieft "with predetermined purpose to murder him," but is prevented and put in irons.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 69; Jour. N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 278; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 85. About an hour after the arrest of Adriaensen, his servant, Jacob Slangh, and another, "came to the Fort, where the Director was walking up and down," and Slangh fired two shots at Kieft, who was retreating into the door of his house there; whereupon a sentry shot Slangh dead. Hence, "within an hour and a half," Kieft's life was twice in danger.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 12-13.
- Proclamation is made at Fort Amsterdam that peace has been concluded with the Long Island Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 44-45. The circumstances that led to this peace are given by De Vries.—Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 229-32.
- The tavern-keeper Philip Geraerd, from Paris, "who is lying abed [wounded] deposes" that Jan Jansen Damen stabbed him unintentionally under his shoulder blade with a knife.—Records
N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 49 (N. Y. State Library).
- Michiel Picet, or Picquet, purchases from Jan Pietersen, of Amsterdam, and Abraham Rijkse, ancestor of the Riker family, their "house, situate on the Island of Manhatans next adjoining the house of Mr. Heijl (Hill)," for 150 guilders. It stood on the north-west corner of Bridge and Broad Sts.—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 48 (N. Y. State Library). See Dutch Grants, lot 15, Vol. II: 383.
- Lourens Cornelissen conveys to Frederick Lubbertsen land in the Smith's Valley.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 51 (N. Y. State Library).
- A treaty of peace is concluded by Kieft and his council with Oratamin, sachem of the Hackensacks, representing the Indians of the lower Hudson. Presents are exchanged.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 14.
- Hendrick Hendricksen Kip receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 57, Albany) for the lot where he lives. This included the present
 No. 27 Bridge St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 260-61; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, p. 382, Vol. II.
- Burger Joriszen receives a ground-brief for a lot on the north side of the present Pearl St., somewhat east of the corner of Broad St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 403.
 See Dec. 15, 1644.
- Cornelis van Tienhoven leases to Cornelis Jacobsen Stille "his bouvery situate at the Smith's valley, on the Island of Manhattan," for six years, subject to an earlier surrender at the end of three years. Van Tienhoven also agrees "to have a barrick of five posts erected," the lessee to fetch the timber. The rental is 250 Carolus guilders per annum and ten schepels of good barley.—
Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 56 (Albany).
- Louis XIV ascends the throne of France.
- Martin Cregier receives a ground-brief for a lot at No. 5
 Broadway, now covered by the Battery Place building.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82b, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 217; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 359; also Jan. 26, 1664.
- Jan Jansen Schepmoes receives a ground-brief for the lot now known as No. 18 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 126-27; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 389.
- Albert Cuyt conveys to Isaac Allerton and Gvoert Loockermans, for 350 Carolus guilders, a "house and two lots, situate and being on the Great Highway on the Island of Manhattan."—
Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 57 (N. Y. State Library). The present location is the northerly part of the site of the Standard Oil Co.'s building, at 26 Broadway. The ground-brief for this grant to Allerton and Loockermans bears date of June 2.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 369.
- The colonies of New England unite for defence.—See Addenda.
 La Montagne's bouvery in Harlem, known as "Vredendael" June (Valley of Peace), is leased to Bout Francen.—Records N. Neth.

 in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 45-47.
- Because large quantities of intoxicants are sold daily to the Indians, "whence serious difficulties" have arisen, "and further calamities" are apprehended, Kieft and the council order "all Tapsters and other Inhabitants, from oow henceforth," not "to sell, directly or indirectly, by themselves or others, any liquors to Indians." Violation of this interdiction is to be penalized by fines and otherwise.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 34.

None the less, an illicit traffic was carried on with the Indians. The fine of 25 florins for a first offence was raised to 500 guilders by a renewal of the ordinance, on Nov. 21, 1645, double for a second offence, and banishment from the country, etc.—Ibid., 52. Still the traffic continued, and in another order against it, of July 1, 1647, it was sought to overcome the evasion that had been practised by persons conveying liquors surreptitiously from hand to hand to the Indians.—Ibid., 64. In the regulations for taverns issued by Stuyvesant and his council on March 10, 1648 (q. v.),—the selling, bartering, or giving away of intoxicants to Indians was made punishable by forfeiture of the taverns and arbitrary correction.—Ibid., 95.

Notwithstanding this, it was plainly evident from the number of Indians who were seen every day "running drunk along the Manhattans" that the previous ordinances were unheeded. On May 13, 1648 (q. v.), there was added to the fines "an arbitrary corporal punishment" upon those who offended, because it was deemed better "that such evil disposed persons be punished than that a whole country and people should suffer in consequence of their acts."—Ibid., 100. There was great difficulty in discovering the violators, though the evidences of their violations were, as Stuyvesant and the council declared, observable "by the deplorable experience" of seeing "many Indians" daily who were "drunk and fuddled," and committed in this state "many grave acts of violence," which resulted in many complaints being presented to the council. The gravity of the situation inspired a new ordinance, of Aug. 28, 1654 (q. v.), which added to former provisions a prohibition against supplying strong drink to natives "on the Rivers, Streams and Kills, out of Sloops or in any manner or by any means." By this edict, drunken Indians were to be arrested and imprisoned until they made known from whom they had obtained intoxicants.—Ibid., 182-83.

The "very dangerous, injurious and damnable sale" went on apace, so that on Oct. 26, 1656 (q. v.), a more detailed ordinance was promulgated by the council, which provided "that no person, of what quality or profession he may be, shall sell, trade to, bestow, give, furnish or carry or allow to be carried, to or for any Indians, in or out of the house, by land or water, from Yachts, Barks, Boats, or Canoes, Carts or Wagons, by what name soever such vehicles may be called, either directly or indirectly, any Beer, Wine, distilled Spirits or Liquors, under a penalty of Five hundred guilders, and in addition to be arbitrarily punished on the body, and banished from the country." Also, "all superior and inferior officers, free or hired servants of the company, and Inhabitants" of the province were to be, "by their office and fealty," informers of violations or, failing this, to be adjudged particeps criminis, subject to the payment of half of the set fine.—Ibid., 259-60. The order was renewed, on June 13, 1657 (q. v.), with provisions for having proper entry made of all liquors taken on board of the vessels.—Ibid., 311. It was again renewed among the general consolidated ordinances of April 9, 1658 (q. v.)—Ibid., 343.

It appears, from an ordinance of July 19, 1663 (q. v.), that the sale of intoxicants to Indians was "for some time now more prevalent than ever before." The edicts were disregarded and Stuyvesant and his council found themselves unable to cope with the situation. Therefore, they empowered the inferior courts to issue, in each village and jurisdiction, such orders as were deemed to be "best and most proper for the suppression of that scandalous traffic."—Ibid., 446-47. A few months later, on Dec. 31, the last ordinance of Stuyvesant and the council on this subject was issued. It provided for the arrest and fine of Indians who were found drunk on Sundays.—Ibid., 451.

22 Evert Duyckinck receives a ground-brief for a lot comprising the present Nos. 16 to 26 South William St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 299-300; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 398.

24 Prior to this date, which is that of a ground-brief to Evert Duyckinck, containing a reference to "the lot of the Negroes" (Liber GG: 67, Albany), a house for the company's negroes had been erected upon a plot of ground covered by the present Nos. 32 and 34 South William St.; it was demolished about 1662.—Liber Deeds, B: 3; Deeds & Conveyances, 1659-1664, trans. by O'Callaghan, 292-93. On this land, a horse-mill was erected sometime before 1667.—Book of Records of Deeds & Transfers,

1665-1672 (translated), 114-16; Liber Deeds, B: 178, 200 (New York); cf. Book of Records of Deeds & Transfers, 1665-1672 (translated), 227-28. The mill was here in 1677, as appears by an entry in M. C. C., I: 58. It is referred to as late as 1682 in an original deed in possession of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co.—See Castello Plan, II: 297-98; C. Pl. 82, Vol. II; Key to Dutch Grants, II: 397; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987; Pl. 174, Vol. III. See also Oct. 15, 1667.

Andries Roulofs, chief boatswain, has charge of the weigh-scales in the warehouse of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 63 (N. Y. State Library).

Tymen Jansen receives a ground-brief for a piece of land between William and Wall Sts., Exchange Pl., and Pearl St.; a large tract, intersected by the present Beaver St. On this land now stand the National City Bank, the Farmers' Loan and Trust Co. building, and many similar structures of the financial district.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 409.

Jan Stevensen, the schoolmaster, is granted a ground-brief for a lot, for his house and garden, on the west side of Broadway, now covered by the Bowling Green building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 360. For reproduction, see Pl. 7, Vol. IV.

6 Touchyn (Toussaint) Brief receives a ground-brief for a piece of land, containi<sup>g</sup> 11 morgens, 330 rods, by the Great Cripplebush (swamp), between the land of the negroes and that of Thomas (Sandersen), the smith, lying, according to modern streets, generally north of Grand St., south of Houston St., west of Broadway, and east of Wooster St.—Liber GG: 77 (Albany); Liber Patents, III: 79 (Albany). This ground-brief was re-issued, Oct. 19, 1645.—Liber GG: 124 (Albany).

Roelof Jansen Haes receives a ground-brief for the lot now covered by the building at No. 25 Beaver St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 371.

Andries Hudde receives a ground-brief for a lot for his house and garden, upon which now stands the office-building, No. 42 Broadway.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 235-37; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 369.

13 Catalina Antony, widow of Jochim Antony, negro, receives a ground-brief for a piece of land "lying north of the wagon-road, extending along said wagon-road south-west, 66 rods, to the land of Domingo Antony; reserving both a common wagon-road next to (or along) the said Domingo's land, to the land of Thomas Sanderson, the smith, north-west-by-west, 60 rods, and further to the aforesaid wagon-road, being the place of beginning, along the land of the said Anderson [sic], amounting to four morgens and 90 rods."—Liber GG: 81 (Albany). According to modern streets, this land lay west of The Bowery, near Canal St.

Domingo Antony, negro, receives a ground-brief for a piece of land containing five morgens and situated 505 rods beyond the Bowery No. 5, "extending from about the wagon-road west by north to the Fresh Water on the Cripplebush, the land of Thomas Sanderson, north 36 rods, and next to the land of Thomas Sanderson to the aforesaid Cripplebush, 20 rods."—Liber GG: 80 (Albany). This land was west of The Bowery, north of Pell St.

Philip Geraerdy receives a ground-brief for a lot on Stone St., near the corner of Whitehall St., the site of which is now covered by the building of the New York Produce Exchange.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 249-50; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 379. See also June 13, 1641.

Thomas Sandersen receives a ground-brief for a lot situated on the east side of Broadway between Exchange Pl. and Beaver St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 369.

Cornelis Volckersen receives a ground-brief for a double lot on Broadway, which site is now covered by the northern part of the Exchange Court building, the bed of Exchange Pl., and the southerly part of the Knickerbocker Trust Company's building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 365.

Rutger Arentsen Van Seyl receives a ground-brief for a lot on the east side of Broadway, south of Exchange Pl., which is now covered by the southerly portion of the Exchange Court building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 370.

 See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 379.
- 1643 Ag.7 Sept. 2 Pieter Colet (signed Kolet) acknowledges the purchase from Adriaen Pietersen of "his house and plantation on the Island of Manhattan, on the North River of New Netherland," for 350 guilders.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 72 (N. Y. State Library).
- 13 An ineffectual peace having been concluded with the Indians, in May of this year, which was broken by Indian depredations along the Hudson River begun by the Wappingers during the summer (Jour. N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 278-79; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 190-91), and Director-Gen. Kieft having summoned the commonalty to choose representatives to advise with him in the crisis, the commonalty now choose the following eight men: Jochem Pietersen Kyuter, Jan Jansen Damen, Barent Dircksen, Abraham Pietersen, Isaac Allerton, Thomas Hall, Gerrit Wolphertsen (van Couwenhoven), and Cornelis Melyn. As Jan Jansen Damen is considered objectionable by the seven others, they protest unanimously against his selection, and choose Jan Evertsen Bout in his stead—but not without a counter protest from Damen. This body composed the board of "Eight Men."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 185, 191-93, 212; XIII: 167. Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 86; Jour. N. Neth., in Jameson, 279. On Nov. 3, they signed a memorial to the states-general, in which they depicted the wretchedness of the people, who, as they wrote, "must skulk, with wives and little ones that still survive, in poverty together, in and around the fort at the Manahatas, where we are not safe even for an hour."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 139. "Fort Amsterdam, utterly defenceless," stands "open to the enemy night and day."—Ibid., 139. The "Eight Men" drew up "some good and suitable regulations; forbidding taverns and all other improprieties; appointed a week's preaching instead . . . but it was not executed by the officer. These Eight men, aforesaid, were never called together again on public business, from the 4th November, 1643, to the 18th June, 1644; though in that period many things occurred. It was, indeed, sufficiently manifest how little were these Eight men respected, for no sooner did they open their mouths to propose anything tending in their judgment to the public good, than the Director met them with sundry biting and scoffing taunts; and sometimes had them summoned, without asking them a question, thus obliging them to return amidst jeers and sneers, as wise as they went."—Ibid., 212; Repres. N. Neth., in Jameson, op. cit., 333.
- 15 The "Eight Men" resolve to renew hostilities against the Indians, except those of Long Island (who are to be encouraged as allies), and to enlist as many men as possible.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 86; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 16. Fifty Englishmen were enrolled under the command of Capt. John Underhill, who took the oath of fidelity on Sept. 29.—Ibid., 86; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 366.
- 17 Two soldiers declared, on Oct. 30, before the provincial secretary, "that they, the affiants, being commanded by the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director, Willem Kieft, to defend the Colonie of Achter't Col [vide infra], their strength being five soldiers, a very heavy attack was made on the house by the Indians in the night between the seventeenth and eighteenth of September." They continued: "We, the affiants, being strong five soldiers, five boys and one man who resided in the Colonie, defended ourselves until the Indians set the house, in which we were obliged to defend ourselves, on fire over our heads, wherefore, we were forced to abandon the house in consequence of the heat, and succeeded with great difficulty in saving ourselves in a canoe, bringing with us of all the property that was there only our firearms."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 85. "Achter't Col" referred to Newark Bay and the country beyond. The later District of Achter Col consisted of the towns of Elizabethton, Woodbridge, Shrewsbury, Newark, Piscataway, and Middletown, N. J.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 124; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 507. See C. Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. II.
- Oct. 24 The "Eight Men" send a letter to the "Assembly of the XIX" of the West India Co., praying for help, in which they write: "On the Island of the Manachatas [sic], from the north even unto the Fresh Water, there are no more than five or six spots inhabited at this date. These are threatened by the Indians every night with fire, and by day with the slaughter of both people and cattle. . . . The Fort is defenceless and entirely out of order, and resembles (with submission) rather a molehill than a fort against an enemy. . . . they [the Indians] have removed all their women, children and old men into the interior, the rest of the most expert warriors hang daily on our necks, with fire and sword, and threaten to attack the Fort with all their force, which now consists of about 1500 men; this we hourly expect, for all the outside places are mostly in their power. It is owing entirely to their pleasure if any cattle are found alive throughout the entire country. . . . The population is composed mainly of women and children; the freemen (exclusive of the English) are about 200 strong, who must protect by force their families now skulking in straw huts outside the Fort; the cattle are partly burnt and killed, what remains has been conveyed to the Fort on the Manahatas, where for want of food they must starve this coming winter, if not immediately slaughtered. The most of the houses have been fired and destroyed, those still standing are in danger of being also burnt. . . . Cattle destroyed, houses burnt; the mouths of women and children must remain shut. We speak not now of other necessities such as clothing, shirts, shoes and stockings."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 190-91; see also the memorial of the "Eight Men" to the states-general of Nov. 3, 1643, in which the complaints were reiterated.—Ibid., I: 139-40.
- Nov. Before Secretary Cornelis van Tienhoven appear "Claes van Elandsd (aged 44 years), Cosyn Gerritsen (aged 36 years), and Gerret Jacobsen (aged 19 years), who on the requisition of the Fiscal van der Hoykens attest, testify and declare . . . that it is true . . . that they . . . were sent by the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director to look up the cattle belonging to the Company and others, and when they . . . had come to the plantation of Old Jan [John Seals] by the swamp, they saw that the woman residing on said Old Jans' plantation had driven with a good the cattle into the said marsh, so that the cattle sunk into it over their backs, and inasmuch as the cattle were strong and well in flesh, they finally got through the swamp."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 90 (N. Y. State Library). "Old Jan's Land" lay, generally speaking, with reference to the modern plan, between Hudson and Macdougall, Spring and King Sts.—See Pl. 175, Vol. III.
- Harck Sybesen acknowledges before the provincial secretary the sale to Barent Dircksen of "his house and lot . . . as the same is situated and computed . . . lying on the Island of Manhatas, near Fort Amsterdam," for 175 guilders "and a half barrel of beer as a treat for the company."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 89 (N. Y. State Library).
- 2 Cornelis Jansen Coelen impowers Kieft and his council "to remove all the property which may yet remain in the Colonie Achter't Col [see Sept. 17-18], and to take the same under their care until further orders from the Proprietors of said Colonie." On the 26th, "Philippe du Tryeux" (or de Truy), the court messenger, attached, "in the name of Joannes Winckelman," the power of attorney granted by Coelen to Kieft and the council, in behalf of Meyndert Meyndertsen van Keren and himself, and also his creditors, leaving however "the Colonie and property which is still there subject to the Company & the power of attorney aforesaid."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 86, 91 (N. Y. State Library).
- 3 Pieter Coek and Rouloff Jansen depose before the provincial secretary: "At the request of Cornelis Jansen Coelen . . . that after the Colonie Achter't Col had been burnt by the Indians" (see Sept. 17), there was "no opportunity to go or sail thither to examine the condition of the place, in consequence of the multitude of Indians who burn and kill all what they can find in the woods, on water or elsewhere."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 87 (N. Y. State Library).
- 12 After the Indian depredation in the Colonie Achter't Col in September (q. v.), Meyndert Meyndertsen van Keren's agent, Joannes Winckelman, lodged the refugees at the city tavern of New Amsterdam, conducted by Philip Gerritsen. Winckelman now acknowledges an indebtedness to Gerritsen of 132 guilders, four stuyvers, to "be paid by Mess<sup>rs</sup> the proprietors of the Colonie of Achter't Col, or from the effects thereof." On Nov. 27, Gerritsen gave power of attorney to Willem Turck to collect this sum "from Meyndert Meyndertsen van Keren or the Patrons of the Colonie."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 89, 92 (N. Y. State Library).
- 14 Abraham Jacobsen van Steenwyck receives a ground-brief for a lot, now the site of Nos. 31 and 33 Bridge St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 382.

- 1643 Regulations for the burgher guard are made by ordinance,
 Nov. providing fines for offences of profanity, drunkenness, discharging 16 gun or musket without orders from the corporals, etc.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 35.
- Dec. Manuel Trompeter, a free negro, receives a ground-brief 12 (Liber Patents, II: 127, Albany) for a piece of land on the east of that of Antony Portuges.
- " Marycke, a free "negrine" (negress), widow of Lawrence, a negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 128, Albany) for a piece of land to the west of Swager's land, stretching next to that of Antony Portuges.

- William Castell, in his book printed in this year, gives the following account of New Netherland: "Between these Nations [the Sequini and Novasii] and the Matawakes, who live by fishing there lieth an Archipelagus, wherein are many Islands: On the north-side of the Dutch Plantation springeth the river Machicham, called the great North river, which running thorow one of the widest parts of that part of the continent, as yet discovered, affordeth convenient habitation for the Aquamachites, and the Manahots on the east-side. For the Sanachans and Tappans on the west-side. Neare of this great River, the Dutch have built a castle of great use to them, not only for the keeping under of the natives adjoining, but likewise for their more free trading with many of Florida, who usually come down the River Canada, and so by land to them. A plaine prooffe, Canada is not far remote."—
A Short Discoverie of the Coasts and Continent of America (London, 1644), 23 (sic for 22).
- Jan. A fight takes place on the bank of the East River in front of 18 Melyn's house (present Pearl and Broad Sts.), between "Hans Hendrick from Traeck in Holstein" and Jacob Hendricks, from Dort. Hans (a servant of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter) is stabbed by Jacob during the brawl, in which both use knives, driving one another into the river "up to the knees." Hans was so badly wounded that he was put to bed "at the house of Adam Roelantseo, from Dockum," where his will was drawn in the presence of the provincial secretary.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 93 (N. Y. State Library).
- 20 Hendrick Jansen, a tailor, receives a ground-brief for a large tract of land running from the present Stone St. to Beaver St., and covering part of William St. and Hanover Sq., the site of which is now covered by the New York Cotton Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 399.
- 27 Pieter vande Linde makes the following deposition before the provincial secretary, at the request of Barent Dircksen, baker:
 "That he, yesterday [26th] was out shooting deer on the Island of Manhat; having done nothing he returned to his plantation where he heard a shot in the woods, whereupon he resolved to go thither and there found snow tracks of 2 persons, which he followed and found a hog shot dead, the ball entering in at one ear and going out of the other." It is also brought out at the hearing that a posse which had followed the footsteps was "led to the threshold of the house" of Thomas Atkins.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 96 (N. Y. State Library).
- 28 Kieft and the council complain to Andries Rouloffsen, chief boatswain, that the West India Company's property is being greatly neglected by him; they command him to do his duty, "that all equipments be properly made," and "that all vessels be in good order." Apparently on the same day, Kieft and the council address Tymen Jansen, the ship carpenter, as follows: "Whereas complaints are daily made to us that you do not properly repair the vessels, and that the Skippers must navigate for a year and a day among the rest, the yachts Amsterdam and Prince Willem, [so] that they cannot keep anything dry in the cabin, in consequence of which the yachts suffer great damage which can be prevented by a little labor, therefore we do charge you herein to perform your bounden duty, so that the Company may not suffer loss and you be free from blame." Jansen replies that he is doing the best he can, but can not "know when a vessel is leaky, unless those in charge of her inform him of the fact;" also "that nothing can be effected without means."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 97 (N. Y. State Library).
- Feb. Tryntje Jonas receives a ground-brief for a lot, the site of — which, with the surrounding lots, is now covered by the Battery Park building, Nos. 21-24 State St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls.

- 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 269-70; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Feb.
 Vol. II, and II: 386.
- Tymen Jansen, the ship carpenter of the company at New Amsterdam (see Jan. 28), furnishes testimony from the skippers of the vessels "Prince Willem," "Amsterdam," "St. Martin," and the "Vreede," in defence of his services. They declare "that during our skipperish he hath worked on our boats and Yachts and afforded all necessary assistance, but he was sometimes in want of materials."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 98 (N. Y. State Library).
- Certain negroes, named, who have been slaves in the service of the West India Co. for 18 or 19 years, are granted conditional freedom, with their wives, "on the same footing as other Free people here in New Netherland, where they shall be able to earn their livelihood by Agriculture, on the land shewn and granted to them." But their children, born or yet to be born, are to be slaves of the company.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 36-37; see also the manumission of another negro, on Sept. 27, 1646, ibid., 60.
- Depositions were made on Nov. 19, 1644, before Secretary Van Tienhoven, by Sergeant Martin Ael and Abraham Nieuman, a soldier, at the request of Director-Gen. Kieft, regarding the complete destruction by fire of incendiary origin, on March 5, of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter's Harlem farm called "Zegenael" (Vale of Blessing). They said "that they lay in garrison" there "when his house was burned, at which time his servants stood sentry." They had in number four soldiers and five farm servants, two of whom were thrashers, and the owner had gone to the Manhattans, having taken with him two soldiers.—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 135 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col.
Docs., XIV: 53-55.
- Jan Evertsen Bout, Claes Jansen, and others, who understand the Indian language, depose that on this day they "heard an Indian named Ponkes say in the Indian language . . . that the Indians, our enemies, did not burn Jochem Pietersen's house, and that he never heard any Indian say so, who, when they had done any mischief, he said, boasted of it, but that nothing was better known among the Indians than that the Dutch themselves had burnt the aforesaid house, and removed through dread of being killed there." Ponkes was "an Indian of Marechkwick," who was with the hostile Indians during the Indian war.—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 142 (N. Y. State Library).
- Nicholas Coorn, Hans Kierstede, and others depose that while they, the minister, and their wives, were, on the evening of the 15th, at the "Stad Herberg," conducted by Philip Gerritsen, who had invited them to sup with him, Capt. John Underhill, Lieut. George Baxter, and other Englishmen made an outrageous attack on the party.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 27. For the details of this fracas, see Innes, New Am. and Its People, 180-81.
- Roger Williams obtains a patent for Rhode Island. 14-24
- Thomas Badgehott is referred to as a "planter on the Island of Manhattan, son of John Badgehott, knight, in his lifetime resident of London, in Old England;" he pledges in payment of a debt his "tavern called The Kings Head standing in Bishopsgate street, London."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 105.
- A contract is recorded at the office of the provincial secretary by the appearance of "Thomas Hall and Thomas Goodman, who acknowledged to have contracted to set up for Jan Damen 250 rods of posts and rails," to be set "so close and tight that hogs, goats or other cattle shall not pass thorough; all good and strong work which must be completed before May. Jan Damen must transport the posts and rails from the Strand out of Juffrouw's valley [Maiden Lane] or thereabouts, to the place where they are to be set up. In addition to the transportation Jan Damen shall pay for every rod aforesaid 35 stivers in the pay at present current in Netherland."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 106 (N. Y. State Library). See also April 25, for Damen's farm.
- Because the Indians daily commit much damage, both to men and cattle, and there is danger that the lives of many Christians, who go to look for straying cattle, may be lost, Director-Gen. Kieft and the council decree that there shall be constructed "a Fence, Palisade [railing], or Clearing [enclosure], beginning from the Great Bouwery to Emanuel's plantation;" and every one who owns cattle and desires to pasture them within this enclosure is warned to repair thither with tools on Monday morning, April 4, at seven o'clock, to aid in constructing this fence.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 37; Records N. Neth., IV: 186 (N. Y. State Library). "Emanuel's

- 1644 plantation" was that owned by Emanuel Pietersen, a negro, June
Mar. the precise location of which has not yet been traced; see, however, 7 31 map and description of farms, Vol. V.
- Apr. "The letter which the Eight Men had sent over in the autumn of 1643, was no sooner received by the States General than it was referred to the College of the XIX, with directions to adopt prompt measures for the relief of New Netherland. But the West India Company was now almost bankrupt, and the directors, totally unable to defend their American colonies, were chiefly anxious to save themselves from utter ruin by forming a union with the flourishing and powerful East India Company. In reply to the mandate of the States General, they avowed [April 23] their sympathy with the "desolate and miserable" colonists of New Netherland; but "the long-looked-for-profits thence" had not come, and they had no means at hand of sending relief "to the poor inhabitants who have left their Fatherland." And the bankrupt company urged the States General for a subsidy of a million of guilders, to place it in good, prosperous, and profitable order.—Broadhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 403, and authorities there cited.
- 25 Jan Jansen Damen receives a ground-brief for land lying on both sides of Broadway.—Liber GG: 91 (Albany). This farm extended from the present Thames St. to Fulton St., running to the North River, at that time about on the line of the present Greenwich St. On the east side of Broadway, the line ran from the middle of Maiden Lane east, down Broadway, about on the line of Wall St. at the south, and along the beach (now Pearl St.) in places, but not all the way, several other grants coming between Damen's land and the Strand.—See Castello Plan, II: 338; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 363; Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III. On June 10, 1685 (q. v.), part of this land, 908 x 80 feet, was conveyed to Gov. Dongan by Capt. John Knight (Liber Deeds, XVII: 64, in N. Y. register's office), who bought it on Feb. 10, 1685 (q. v.), for Dongan from the heirs of Damen.
- At some time after receiving his ground-brief, and probably in this year (1644), Jan Jansen Damen erected his house in what is now the roadhead of Cedar St., just east of Broadway.—Liber GG: 91 (Albany). This was the farm-house on the Damen farm shown on the Castello Plan, and described later as the "great house" occupied by Cornelis Aertsen.—Liber Deeds, B: 103 (New York): cf. Mortgages, 1664-1675, trans. by O'Callaghan, 55. Dr. Henry Taylor bought this house in 1672.—Liber Deeds, B: 190 (New York). In Oct., 1673 (q. v.), Colve ordered that it be demolished, because it stood too near the fortifications.—N. Y. Col. Docs. II: 631. See Castello Plan, II: 338-39; and C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 949.
- 28 Cornelis Melyn receives a ground-brief of a lot through which, it is stated, "runs the common ditch"—now Broad Street—the said lot forming the present north-east corner of Pearl and Broad Sts., running through the block and becoming the southeast corner of Stone and Broad Sts.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 128; Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 312; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 403. See also "Heere Graet," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1002.
- May Michael Marschan receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden. Marschan's name as a grantee here is plainly an error, for, on June 1, 1644, Adriaen Vinchart (Vincent) received a ground-brief for the same plot, which included the present Nos. 71 to 81 Broad St., from the corner of the Consolidated Exchange to South William St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 293-94; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II.
- Claes Jansen, from Naarden, receives a ground-brief for a double lot, now Nos. 12-14 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 126; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 389.
- 17 At some time prior to this date, Jan Pietersen, from Housem, occupied a plantation situated, broadly speaking, south and west of Greenwich Ave. and north and east of Clarkson and Carmine Sts.—See Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 88; Manatus Maps, II: 190, C. Pls. 41, 42, and 42a, Vol. II. For location of Greenwich Ave., see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1001.
- 24 Philip Geraerdy receives a ground-brief for a lot for two houses and gardens lying on the Public Highway—the modern Broadway, on the east side. On this parcel now stand the southerly part of the building of the Manhattan Life Insurance Co. and the northerly part of the building of the Knickerbocker Trust Co.—See Key to the Dutch Grants, II: 365, and C. Pl. 87, Vol. II.
- The continued depositing of ashes and commission of other nuisances within Fort Amsterdam by the soldiers is penalized by ordinance.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 38.
- Hendrick Jansen Smith receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden. This land was in the interior of the block now bounded by Exchange Pl. on the north, Beaver St. on the south, Broadway on the west, and New St. on the east; it lay in the southerly portion of this block, just north of the north line of Beaver St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 368, Vol. II.
- 13 Cornelis van Tienhoven receives a ground-brief (recited in Liber Patents, II: 113, Albany), which, by modern terms, would be bounded between Broadway and the East River (now Pearl St.); on the north, by a line running partly south of Ann St. at Broadway and, farther eastward, along the south line of Ann St.; and by Maiden Lane on the south. Part of this tract later became the "Shoemakers' Land," for which see Pl. 24-a, Vol. I, and I: 236-28. See also July 1, 1671, and March 20, 1675; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- 21 An excise on liquors and heaver is prescribed by ordinance, to raise means for continuing the soldiers in service, made necessary by the Indian war, and to provide protection in harvesting. "For neither grain, nor hay can be cut without Soldiers."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 38-39; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 188-89. The continuance of war against the Indians induced the director-general and council to ordain a further excise on August 4.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 40-41. On the latter date, William de Key was appointed receiver of the excise.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 90. In August, the brewers of New Amsterdam were charged in court with dereliction. In justifying themselves (Aug. 25), the brewers declared that if they paid the excise voluntarily they would have the "Eight Men" and the commonalty "about their ears."—Ibid., 90.
- July In a deposition, Trynke Jonas is called "midwife of New Netherland."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 118 (N. Y. State Library). She was so called on Nov. 26, 1635 (q. v.).
- 25 Janitje, wife of Tomas Broen, mortgages "to Mr. Isaac Allerton her house standing on the Island of Manhattan by Fort Amsterdam, and occupied by Pieter Pia," until such time as Tomas Broen has repaid to Allerton 200 guilders and 15 stivers, "as appears by the Note."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 121 (N. Y. State Library). This was the property subsequently known as No. 1 Broadway. See also August 25.
- "Geertje Nanninck," widow of "the late Abel Reddinhans," acknowledges sale and makes conveyance to Cornelis Melyn of "her house and lot situate on the East River near the Fort, where he Melyn adjoins westwardly and Burger Jorissen easterly," for the sum of 250 Carolus guilders.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 121 (N. Y. State Library). In Marriage Records of Ref. Dutch Ch. (Purple), II, the name of the husband is given as Oben Reddenhans. See also Van Rensselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 838; and Min. of the Consistory at Amsterdam, 1633-44, VII: 127 et seq.
- 25 Thomas Broen receives a ground-brief for a lot, now No. 1 Broadway. This property, the site of one of the best known colonial residences on Manhattan Island—the Kennedy house—passed by a deed, the date of which has not been ascertained, to Gerrit Douman, and from him, on May 15, 1648, to Pieter Cock. After Cock's death, Gov. Nicolls confirmed the land to his widow Annatie, Feb. 13, 1668 (Liber Patents, II: 166, Albany). Broen erected the first house on this site.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 29.
- On May 31, 1734, Charles Sleigh and Annatie, his wife, sold the property to Abraham de Peyster (Liber Deeds, XXXIV: 242-46, New York). While there is no evidence in the records as to how the Sleighs gained possession of the lot, it is surmised that Annatie Sleigh was a descendant of Annatie Cock. De Peyster sold the corner, Aug. 26, 1756 (q. v.), to Archibald Kennedy, the receiver-general, for £600. At that time, the land had "several small messages or dwelling-houses" upon it, facing Battery Pl., Kennedy also became possessed of the land in rear of this plot, extending to the North River. Some time after 1756, and before 1760, Kennedy built, on the corner, the handsome residence long known as No. 1 Broadway.
- During the early days of the Revolution, the house was occupied by Washington, and during the British occupation by Sir Henry Clinton, Sir Guy Carleton, and Sir William Howe.—Kemble, Journal in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1833), 82, 143. Later, the house was occupied as a young ladies' boarding-school, as a select boarding-house, and as a private residence.

1644 It remained in the Kennedy family until 1810, when it was sold
 Aug. by Robert Kennedy to Nathaniel Prime, the merchant and banker.
 25 Prime's heirs later leased the property to Jonas Bartlett, a hotel-keeper, and it became known as "The Washington" and the Washington Hotel. In 1881, it became the property of Cyrus W. Field, who demolished it in 1882 and erected upon its site the Washington building.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 216; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 359; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 950; and description of Pl.
 98, Vol. III.

Sept. Pieter Cornelissen (Timmerman, i. e., Carpenter) receives a 8 ground-brief for a lot on parts of the present Nos. 25 and 27 Pearl St., near Whitehall St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol.
 II, and II: 184.

" Peter Jansen, from Gorcum, receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, on the east side of Broadway, about 125 feet north from the corner of Beaver St. The building of the Standard Oil Co. now occupies this lot.—See Map of Dutch Grants,
 C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367.

9 Jacob Jacobsen Roy, gunner, receives a ground-brief for a lot between what would now be Pearl and Bridge Sts., east of State St., now covered in part by the Battery Park building and in part by the Maritime building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 386. On April 14, 1645, he conveyed the westerly half of the lot to Cornelis Arisen, of Utrecht.—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 146 (N. Y. State Library).

16 Hendrick Jansen, tailor, conveys to Burgert Jorissen "the house situated on the Island of Manhattan, and the garden (the garden fruits excepted) and the brewhouse with the appurtenances which are at present in use at the brewery," for 1,900 Carolus guilders in three instalments.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II:
 124 (N. Y. State Library). This was the property on Smece Street
 (now William) and the Burger's Path.

20 The Jesuit missionary, Father Francis Joseph Bressani, is given safe conduct by Director-Gen. Kieft, by ship sailing from New Amsterdam for Europe.—O'Callaghan, Hist. N. Neth., I:
 337. For fuller particulars relating to Bressani's sufferings at the hands of the Iroquois, his reason, and aid given to him by the Dutch, see Jesuit Relations (Cleveland, 1901), LXXII: 109; Zwieterlin, Religion in N. Neth., 283-85.

Oct. Antony de Hooges acknowledges "to be well and truly indebted 17 to the West India Company" for 786 guilders, 13 stuivers, "on account of Marijn Adriaensen, for which also his account on the Colonie Book No. E. is closed as paid."—Records N. Neth. (O'Cal-laghau's trans.), II: 130 (N. Y. State Library).

28 The "Eight Men" write to the directors at Amsterdam: "Our fields lie fallow and waste; our dwellings and other buildings are burnt; not a handful can be planted or sown this fall on all the abandoned places. The crop, which God the Lord permitted to come forth during the past summer, remains on the field, as well as the hay, standing and rotting in divers places; whilst we poor people have not been able to obtain a single man for our defence.
 We are burdened with heavy families; have no means to provide necessities any longer for our wives or children. We are seated here in the midst of thousands of Indians and barbarians, from whom it is to be experienced neither peace nor pity." Concerning the Indians they write: "They continually rove around in parties, night and day, on the Island of Manhattans, killing our people not a thousand paces from the Fort; and things have now arrived at such a pass, that no one dare move a foot to fetch a stick of fire wood without an escort." They continue: "The two bouweries in the Bay, and the three on this Island [Manhattan], one of which belongs to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company, are in great danger of being burnt this winter, for never have these Savages shown themselves so bold and insolent."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 210, 211.

They also state that "the Director [Kieft] sent to the Lords, by the Blue Cock, a Book ornamented with various pictures in water colors, in which he dilates at length on the origin of the [Indian] war. On that subject it contains as many lies as lines; as we are informed by the Minister [Bogardus] and others who have read it; and from our time to his, as few facts as leaves.
 It is to be embellished with an oil painting. We shall not question what sort of birds are in the woods, nor what species of fish resort the rivers here; nor the length and breadth of the land. All this is mere copy, and has been long ago described by others. It may, indeed, be asked, how it comes that the Director can so aptly describe all localities and the nature of the animals, since his

 Oct. Honor in the six or seven years he has been residing at the Man-28 hattans, has never been, in this country, farther from his kitchen and bedchamber than half way up the aforesaid Island."—Ibid., I: 212-13; cf. ibid., I: 204, 206, for the "Little Book" of Kieft.

In response to the complaints of the "Eight Men" (see Oct. 24, Dec. 15, 1643; Oct. 28, 1644), the "Assembly of the XIX" orders that all the papers relating to New Netherland be placed in the hands of the West India Company's "Rekenkamer," or bureau of accounts, with instructions to examine the same, make a detailed report of the condition of the province, and suggest measures for its improvement. On Dec. 28, the "Rekenkamer" submitted its report, which was communicated to the states-general.—Broadhead, Hist.
State of N. Y., I: 403-4. See Addenda.

Burgert Jorissen acknowledges a contract of sale to Cornelis Melyn of "his house and lot situate on the East River between said Melyn and the Great Tavern" (present north side of Pearl, east of the corner of Broad St.), for 950 guilders, payable in instalments, the final part "six months after delivery," and the delivery to be made after the expiration of a lease held by Augustin Heerman.—
Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 137 (N. Y. State Library). See April 23, 1643, for the grant to Jorissen.

A budget "estimate of the expenses which the Company would have to bear in New Netherland" amounts to 20,940 florins, yearly, for 69 persons. The salary of the director-general is 3,000 florins, and he is "to board himself;" that of the factor and receiver 1,440 florins; of the fiscal, the secretary, and the commissary of merchandise and store goods, each 720 florins; that of one clergyman, 1,440 florins; of one schoolmaster, acting also as preceptor and sexton, 360 florins; of the military establishment, over 10,000 florins; besides other persons.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 155-56. Cf. 1650.

Symon Congoe, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 129, Albany) for a piece of land to the west of land belonging to Jan Celes ("Old Jan"), later part of Trinity Church land near Richmond Hill.—See Liber Deeds, XXXIV: 523, New York.

Pieter Santomee, a free negro, receives a ground-brief for a piece of land (Liber Patents, II: 130, Albany), later part of the Bayard west farm.—See recitals in Liber Deeds, XXXIV: 523 (New York).

Gratia Dangola (d'Angola), a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 131, Albany) for a piece of land later included in Trinity Church's upper farm, near Richmond Hill.

Groot Manuel, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 126, Albany) for a plot of ground between the land of Manuel Trompeter and that of Swager. See also Oct. 19, 1645.

Paulo Dangola, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 128, Albany) for a cert. in piece of land which probably later was included in the Bayard farm.

Cleyn Antonio, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 130, Albany) for a piece of land, probably part of that which later became Trinity Church's upper farm.

1645

In or about this year, Cornelis Aertsen received a ground-brief, not found of record, but recited in Liber Deeds, B: 164 (New York).
 In relation to the modern streets, the land was bounded on the west by Montgomery St., between the East River and Division St.; on the north, by a line running from the intersection of Division and Montgomery Sts. obliquely to the middle of Henry St., midway between Scammel and Jackson Sts.; on the east, by a line running from the above-mentioned point, between Scammel and Jackson Sts., to the river; and on the south, by the river. The river shore, in 1645, lay, generally speaking, along the line of the present Water St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946; Pl. 175, Vol. III.

Thomas Willett "tells to Cornelis Teunesen from Gorcum, joining a . . . lot and house situate on the Island of Manhattan, adjoining the Public Tavern" (present Pearl Street and Coenties Alley), for 775 guilders.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II:
 138 (N. Y. State Library).

Cornelis Groensen receives a ground-brief (recited in Records
 10 N. Neth., III: 133, Albany) for land situated (on the modern city plan) between Kector and Thames Sts., west of Broadway, including Trinity churchyard, and extending from Broadway as far as the Strand (now Greenwich St.).—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl.
 87, Vol. II, and II: 363; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947;
 Pl. 174, Vol. III.

Cornelis Groensen receives a ground-brief (recited in Liber "

- 1645 Deeds, A. 11, New York) for a lot, the location of which on the present city plan is at the north-east corner of Broadway and Wall St. See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- Feb. 21 Adam Brouwer, from Cologne, a soldier who sailed to Brazil in the ship "Swol," in 1641, in the service of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., now buys from Hendrick Jansen, from Ieveren, a house and garden lot on Manhattan Island, "formerly occupied by Jeurisen Rodolfii." This transaction was no doubt preparatory to Brouwer's marriage a month later to Magdalena Verdon.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 149, 141 (N. Y. State Library); Marriage Records of Ref. Dutch Ch. (Purple), 13.
- Apr. 22 Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden on the north-west corner of Broad and Stone Sts.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 377.
- " During the firing of a salute at the fort, in honour of the peace concluded with the Indians, Jacob Jacobsen Roy, the gunner, is wounded badly in his right arm by the bursting of a brass six-pounder.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 94.
- May 11 Pieter Cornelissen is appointed house carpenter of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 94.
- June 10 Rev. Francis Doughty having brought action against Willem Gerritsen for singing a defamatory song against him and his daughter, Gerritsen pleads guilty, and the court sentences him to stand, until the conclusion of the English [Evening?] sermon, bound to the May-pole in the fort, with two rods around his neck and the libel over his head.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 95.
- 20 A member of the guard standing sentry outside the fence on the Great Highway (Broadway), in front of the house of Jan Jansen Damen, challenges several of the commonalty, which provokes bantering remarks and ends with the wounding of Pierre Malefant, a Frenchman from Rheims.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 95.
- 23 Jan Cornelissen (from Hoorn) receives a ground-brief for a house and lot on the south side of Marketfield St. This plot is, at the present day, in large part covered by the building of the New York Produce Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 375.
- 14-24 Cromwell's "Ironsides" defeat decisively the army of King Charles I at Naseby.
- July Jan Sneediger receives a ground-brief for a double lot, for two houses and two gardens, lying between Bridge and Pearl Sts., east of State St. This land, at the present time, is covered by the Maritime building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 386-87.
- Cornelis van Tienhoven receives a ground-brief for 100 morgens of land for a farm called the "Otter-spoor" (otter-track), lying on the Island of Manhatts, on the East River, "where S<sup>r</sup> la Montagnie's and S<sup>r</sup> Jochim Pietersen's land lie next to it," which aforesaid 100 morgens were granted by the late Director Wouter van Twiller and council to Jacob van Curler, and subsequently sold by Van Curler to Cornelis van Tienhoven, "who has ceded the ownership thereof to the behoef of Coeraet van Ceulen, merchant of Amsterdam, according to the transport of the same."—Liber GG: 100 (Albany). For grant to Coeraet van Ceulen (Liber GG: 31, Albany), see Aug. 22, 1639. This plantation was situated according to modern maps, north of the Mill Creek, at 108th St. and extended from Harlem River to near Fifth Ave.—See Landmark Map (Pl. 178), Vol. III.
- The "Otter-spoor" farm was leased by Van Curler to Claes Cornelissen Swits, May 18, 1638, for a term of three years; after Van Tienhoven took title to it, as agent for Van Ceulen (or Keulen), he renewed the lease to Swits, Jan. 25, 1639, Swits taking with him as partner Jan Claessen Alteras. The entire section soon became known as Van Keulen's Hook.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 146-48. See C. Pl. 42, Vol. II, and II: 194.
- 4 Gillis Pietersen (from ter Gouw) receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden on the north side of Pearl St., now parts of Nos. 21 and 23. The house was purchased in 1647 by Egbert van Borsum.—See Frontispiece, Pl. 17, Vol. I, and I: 127, 226; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 282, 387, 390.
- " Richard Smith receives a ground-brief for a lot lying on the East River, situated, on the modern plan, at Nos. 91 to 101 Pearl St. (including only the westerly part of the latter), just west of Hanover Sq.—See Castello Plan, C. II: 321; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 405.
- " Teunis Jansen, "Zeylmaker" (sailmaker), receives a ground-brief. Later, through error, the same lot was granted to Jeuryaen Blanck (April 15, 1647), but the mistake was rectified. The lot was at the present No. 20 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 127; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 389-90.
- " Thomas Willett receives a ground-brief for a lot lying towards the East River, on the north side of Pearl St., running eastward from Coenties Alley, Nos. 75 to 89 Pearl St. now covering the land granted. The widow of Willett was married to Charles Bridges, who was confirmed in this property June 11, 1667.—See Pl. 17, Vol. I, and II: 228; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 404.
- " Teunis Tomassen from Naerden receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, lying on the east side of the present Whitehall St., about 100 ft. south from the line of Marketfield St. The land is now entirely built over by the Produce Exchange.—See Castello Plan, II: 248; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 374.
- 16 Augustine Heermans receives a ground-brief for a lot now known as No. 33 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 129; Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 266; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 384.
- 21 Seven soldiers of Claude de St. Etienne de la Tour, of Acadia, the "remainder of all his forces," being sent by him to New Amsterdam, are taken into the Dutch service, with the expectation that they will be used in exploring mines in the lands of the Karitans (New Jersey).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 25; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 96.
- Aug. 30 Articles of peace are concluded by Director-Gen. Kieft and council with the warring Indians. There come this day "to the Fort Amsterdam before the director and council, in presence of the whole community, sachems or chiefs of the savages, in their own behalf and as attorneys for the neighboring chiefs,—to wit, Oratamy, chief of Achkinkehacky" (Hackensack), and chiefs of the Tappans, Rehagawack (Haverstraw), Pacham, and other Hudson River tribes. The treaty is concluded "in the Fort under the blue canopy of heaven in presence of the Council of New Netherland and the whole community called together, also in presence of the Maquas [Mohawks] ambassadors," who have been asked to attend the negotiations as mediators, and with these as co-mediator has come also their interpreter, Cornelis Antonissen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 18. The court messenger previously notified all of the inhabitants to assemble in the fort, at the hoisting of colours and ringing of bell, to hear the proposals for peace read, and, if any one had good advice to offer to the director-general and council, it was to be given freely at the meeting.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 97.
- Sept. 5 Oloff Stevenson van Cortlandt receives a ground-brief of a lot for a house and garden, now Nos. 11-15 Stone St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 251-52; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 378. On this grant he later erected an extensive brewery and other buildings.
- " Isaac de Forest receives a ground-brief for a certain lot of land for a house and garden in the block between Beaver and Stone Sts., Whitehall and Broad Sts., the ground being now principally covered by the building and court of the Produce Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 379.
- " Jan Sneediger receives a ground-brief for one lot for a house and garden on the north side of Beaver St., west of Broadway. Part of the Welles building now covers this lot, and part of the lot lies in the bed of New St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 369.
- 6 By a proclamation of Aug. 31, this day was set apart as a day of general thanksgiving throughout New Netherland, in consequence of the consummation of "the long desired peace" with the Indians on Aug. 30.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 19.
- 14 Thomas Sandersen receives a ground-brief for a lot for house and garden at the north-east corner of Beaver St. and Broadway; part of the Welles building now stands upon this site.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367.
- " The "graft" or ditch, present Broad Street, is mentioned in a grant of this date.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 369. For earlier mention, see April 28, 1644; and "Heere Grift," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1002.
- 22 Leodert Aerden receives a ground-brief for a house and garden lying on the east side of Broadway, where now stands

1645 the building of the Union Trust Company (80 Broadway).—See St. 22 Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 365.

30 Jochim Calder receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, now No. 33 Stone St. and included in the site of the Curtis building.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 307;
 Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 401.

" Harry Peers receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden in the block between the present Whitehall, Beaver, Stone and Broad Sts., it is now covered by the building of the Produce Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 375, Vol. II.

Oct. In the Resolutieboek (resolution book) of the West India Co.
 5 this record is found: "Petrus Stuyvesant, appointed Director of New Netherland, appeared personally offering his services because he intends to go to Amsterdam under recommendation that this Chamber [meaning the Zealand chamber] be pleased to expedite the equipment to the aforesaid New Netherland, in connection with the resolution at the last meeting of the Assembly of the Nineteen.
 He was answered, that the gentlemen delegated to the Nineteen have been instructed concerning New Netherland, wishing him a prosperous voyage."—Records of old West India Co., No. 26, XXXV, fol. 144, in National Archives at The Hague. Cf. July 28, 1646.

19 Pieter Andriessen receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, at present Nos. 37 to 41 Stone St.—See Castello Plan,
 C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 307; Map of Dutch Grants,
 C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 402.

" Leendert Aerden receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 120, Albany) for a piece of land consisting of the bowery called Byleveldt's bowery, lying behind Corlaer's plantation. It extends from the valley (marsh) next the said plantation and a valley (marsh) 170 rods further on west, 60 rods, to the wagon road; further along the wagon road north-by-east a little easterly, 115 rods; thence south, 35 rods, next the land of the bowery of the schout to the valley about west, next to a "Cripple Bush" (swamp), 180 rods, along the marsh, with several turnings, 100 rods; amounting in all to about 39 morgens. Leendert Aerden conveyed this bowery to Pieter Stuyvesant, July 18, 1663, and Stuyvesant was confirmed in its possession by Nicolls, Nov. 6, 1667.—Liber Patents, II: 140 (Albany). This tract is bounded, on the modern plan, approximately as follows: Beginning at a point north of Delancey and west of Eldridge St., running thence north-easterly to a point west of the intersection of Ave. B and East 6th St.; thence southeasterly to a point in the block bounded by Aves. C and D and East 3d and East 4th Sts.; thence south-westerly to the place of beginning.—See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III; and May 18, 1639.

" Big Manuel, a negro, receives a ground-brief for a piece of land, lying on the Island of Manhattans, on the east end of Toschyn Briel's land; it extends along next to the land of Anna Negra (the negroes), east a little south, 67 rods; south-east-by-east, a little south, 14 rods; south a little west, 24 rods; west, 51 rods; west-north west 40 rods along the end of the aforesaid Briel's land and further to the place of beginning, north-north-east, 25 rods; amounting in all to 4 morgens, 386 rods.—Liber GG: 125 (Albany).

Nov. Hans Lodewyck receives a ground-brief for land at Turtle 3 Bay.—Liber GG: 127 (Albany).

" Edward Marrel receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden now covered by the building at No. 50 Broad St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 373.

21 The ordinance prohibiting sale of intoxicants to the Indians (see June 18, 1643) is renewed with an increase in the fines and penalties for violations.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 52.

Dec. Jacob Wolphertsen (van Couwenhoven) receives a ground-brief 12 for a certain lot for a dwelling-house, brewery, and garden lying behind the "Public Inn," being now Nos. 43-47 Stone St.—See
 Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 402.

13 Cornelis Claessen Swits receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 129, Albany) for a piece of land known as Bowery No. 5, lying on the north end of Cornelis Jacobsen's land or Bowery No. 6.
 It extends along the said land east a little south 242 rods, and further north-by-east 68 rods to the bowery named Pannebacker's (tile maker's) Bowery; next along said bowery west and west-by-north 260 rods; further on south-south-west to the wagon-road 60 rods; amounting in all to 25 morgens, 296 rods. This tract later was included in the De Lancey farm, north of Division St.
 See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III. It was bounded, according to the modern plan, by a line running north-easterly from the south-east corner of The Bowery and Canal St. to a point on the east side of Clinton St. just north of Broome St.; the eastern boundary runs from said point to the intersection of Division and Attorney Sts.; thence along Division St. to The Bowery; and northerly along The Bowery to the place of beginning.

1646

Some time prior to this date, the brewhouse of the West India
 Co. was erected, it being mentioned in Liber GG: 159 (Albany).
 It stood on the south side of Stone St. (the Brewers' Street of that day), between Whitehall and Broad Sts. It was demolished prior to 1651.—Colonial MSS., III: 75 (Albany); Landmark Map Ref
 Key, III: 987.

Dr. adriaen van der Donck, with Kieft's consent, receives from the sachem Tackamack and other Indians a deed for land north of Pappanamin Creek, containing some 30 or 40 morgens.—Riker,
Hist. of Harlem, 163. Cf. Scharf, Hist. of Westchester Co., I: 23.

During 1646 and 1647, a portion of the open space of the esplanade before the fort, situated in front of the five stone workshops of the West India Co., was divided into five grant-lots.
 These lots faced the later Marktvelt (Whitehall St.), and covered the block from Brouwer (Stone) Straet to Brugh (Bridge) Straet, creating a narrow lane on the east, called Winkel Straet, between them and the workshops of the company. The northernmost lot, on the corner of Brouwer Straet, was granted to Sibout Claessen, on May 12, 1646, and by him was conveyed to Joost Teunissen, from Naerden, on Aug. 14, 1649, who in turn conveyed it to Hendrick Willemsen, on May 12, 1657. Gov. Nicolls gave Willemsen a confirmation of the lot, on Aug. 3, 1667.—Patents, II: 86, sec. of state's office, Albany. The second lot to the south was granted to Isaac de Forest, on Aug. 22, 1646.—Liber GG: 155, in Albany.
 He conveyed it, on Sept. 9, 1653, in two parcels, to Maximilian van Geele or Gheel and Hendrick Gerritsen, respectively.—Liber
HH: 44-45, in Albany. The third lot was granted to Rev.
 Everardus Bogardus, but the exact date is not on record. The ground-brief was recited, however, in a deed by Govert Lookermans on behalf of Anneke Jans Bogardus, to Warner Wessels, of Nov. 4, 1657.—Conveyances, Liber A: 107-8, in register's office, N. Y. City. It is known that the grant to Bogardus was earlier than that to De Forest, because the latter mentions the former. The fourth lot was granted to Robert Bottelaar, on March 12, 1647 (Liber GG: 176); yet he seems not to have built upon it. Later this plot was in the possession of Caspar Steeytmets or Steemets, who conveyed it, on Aug. 22, 1657, to Pieter Jacobsen Buys.—Conveyances, Liber A: 100. The fifth and most southerly lot, on the corner of Brugh Straet, was granted to George Holmes, on April 23, 1646.—Liber GG: 143.

In this year, Robert Dudley began the publication of his Arcano del Mare, at Florence.—Winsor, II: 303; IV: 376. See also C.
 Pls. 35, 36, and 37, Vol. II.

Roelof Jansen (de Haes) receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden lying on the south-east corner of Beaver and Whitehall Sts., now covered by the building of the Produce Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 410.

Abraham Rycken receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the south-east corner of Broad and Beaver Sts., now occupied by the building of the Consolidated Stock Exchange.
 —See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 397.

Gerrit Jansen receives from Oldenborch a ground-brief (Liber GG: 134, Albany) for a certain piece of land formerly known as "Pannebackers" (tile-bakers), or, as the original has it, "Bowery
 No. 5." Bowery No. 5 was that granted to Cornelis Claessen Swits, and the Pannebackers Bowery is really No. 4. It is described in the ground-brief as extending next to the land of Cornelis Claessen Swits; along the wagon-road to Hans Kiersteeden's (Kierstedt's) plantation; and farther on straight through the woods to the division line of Leendert Aerden, "to the three roads," or, as the translator explains, the place where three roads meet. It contained in all, 45½ morgens, 125 rods, or more than 90 acres. On the modern atlas, this farm was bounded approximately as follows:
 Beginning at a point on the east side of The Bowery a little south of Delancey St., running north-east to a point in the centre of Suffolk St., north of Stanton St.; thence south to a point on the east side of Clinton St. near its intersection with Broome St.; thence south-westerly to The Bowery at the south-east corner of Canal St.; thence north along The Bowery to the place of beginning. See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III; also Oct. 27, 1649.

- 1646 Jan Jansen Damen receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 137, June Mar. Albany) for 20 morgens, 386 rods, of land called Calck Hook, 5 on Manhattan Island, which for the past ten years he has occupied.
See Pl. 174, Vol. III. The original ground-brief is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. For reproduction, see Pl. 7, Vol. IV.
- 17 Pieter Wolphertzen van Couwenhoven receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the present Nos. 31 and 33 Stone St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 378.
- 23 Peter van Linden receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 139, Albany) for a certain lot for a house lying on "the Island of Manhatans" close to the "Fiscal's Kitchen;" westward to the "privy of the Precidant" (Domine Bogardus); its breadth on the east end is two rods, three ft.; its length on the north end against the kitchen aforesaid, one rod, six ft., five in.; on the west side its length is two rods, three ft.; on the south side its breadth is one rod, eight ft.; amounting in all to four rods, one ft., five in. This lot is known on the modern plan as No. 23 Bridge St.—See Castello Plan, II: 263; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, II: 381.
- 27 Cornelis van Tienhoven receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 142, Albany) for a certain piece of land which, by modern streets, is bounded on the west by Broadway, on the south by the south side of Ann St. (and partly a little south of Ann St.), on the east by the east side of Nassau St., and on the north by a line which would run through the southern end of the present Post Office building, straight eastward to the intersection of Nassau and Beekman Sts.
Part of this tract, between Beekman St., a line south of Ann St., Nassau St., and Park Row, subsequently became known as "the Vineyard."—See Pl. 30, Vol. I, where it is designated "Win-yard." The Vineyard was granted to John Knight by George Dongan in 1685 (Liber Patents, V: 297, Albany), and was conveyed by Knight to Dongan in the same year.—Liber Deeds, IX:
387 (Albany). It was called the "Governour's Vineyard" after that (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 137), and sometimes known as "the Governour's Garden." Thomas Dongan, a kinsman of the governour, conveyed the plot to Thomas White in 1762.—Liber Deeds, XXI: 290 (New York). On June 30, 1784, the commissioners of forfeiture for the southern district of New York, under the act of May 12, 1784, sold to Anna White, widow of Thomas White, "all those several lots in the garden or vineyard forfeited by Thomas White, in the north ward of the city of New York."—
Liber Deeds, XLIII: 324 (New York). See Landmark Map Ref.
Key, III: 946; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- Apr. George Horns (Holmes) receives a ground-brief for a certain 23 lot for a house and garden at the north-east corner of Whitehall and Bridge Sts., the site now occupied by the Kemble building.— See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II and II: 259; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 381.
- May — A ship with a cargo of negroes from Tamandaré, a port on the coast of Brazil, south of Pernambuco, arrives at New Amsterdam.
—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 101, 102, 107. "The negroes . . . who came from Tamandaré were sold for pork and peas."—Represen- tation of N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 329-30; cf. also 364. So far as known, this was the first cargo of negro slaves sold in New Netherland. About midsummer of 1647 (the original is undated), the directors at Amsterdam wrote to Stuyvesant:
"We have seen that more negroes could be advantageously employed and sold there than the ship 'Tamandaré' has brought.
We shall take care, that in future a greater number of negroes be taken there" (New Netherland).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 77.

- 11 Roelof Jansen (de Haes) receives a ground-brief for a certain lot lying on the north side of Pearl St., now No. 25, a little east of the corner of Whitehall St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl.
87, Vol. II, and II: 384.
- 12 Sybout Claessen receives a ground-brief for a lot on the southeast corner of Stone and Whitehall Sts., now covered by the Kemble building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 380.
- " Paulus van der Beeke receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden at what is now No. 19 and part of No. 21
Beaver St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II:
241-42; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 371.
- June Sybout Claessen receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for 5 a house and garden on the east side of Broadway, covering about the present Nos. 84 and 86, near the corner of Wall St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and description on p. 366, Vol. II.
- Sibout Claessen receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 149, June Albany) for 15 morgens, beginning at Hellgate Point where Hog 5 (Blackwells) Island terminates. "The Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch erroneously states that this grant was for 50 morgens, and Riker (Hist. of Harlem, 163) follows in this error. The ground-brief was apparently, for 15 morgens. Hoorn's Hook, later known as Rhinelander's Point, was at what is now 80th St. and the East River.
Carl Schurz Park covers a considerable part of this parcel, running from 84th to 90th St. along the shore and extending westward to East End Ave.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966, 969;
Pl. 177, Vol. III.
- Legal instruments, written by private individuals, and not 12 confirmed by oath before the court or other magistrates, are declared invalid; and all affidavits not written by the provincial secretary, or other duly authorized person, "likewise Contracts, Testaments, Agreements and other important documents," are annulled.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 59.
- Wessel Evertsen receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for July a house and garden at what are now Nos. 55, 55e, and 57 Stone St.—
2 See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 310; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 403.
- " Sander Leendertsen receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 152, Albany) for a land, the location of which on the modern plan was at the corner of Platt and Pearl Sts.—See Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- 28 Petrus Stuyvesant is commissioned Director-General of New Netherland, and takes the oath. He arrived in New Amsterdam on May 11, 1647 (q. v.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 177-78; XIV: 83.

- Aug. Thomas Hall "accepts from Michiel Jansen the bouwery be-16 longing to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> West India Company, situate on the Island of Manhattan, for the term and on the conditions agreed to by Michiel Jansen with the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director Willem Kieft, as per contract dated 16th August A<sup>o</sup>. 1646; which contract the above-named Thomas Hall promises to fulfill in such a manner as to satisfy the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 154 (N. Y. State Library). Jansen, if in possession, could not have been there long, as he had a leased farm in the colony of Rensselaerswyck, called "de Hoogeburch," from 1640 to 1646, and on July 27, 1646, he was granted permission to remove to New Amsterdam.—Van Rensselaer Bouwver Manuscripts, 499, 769, 818; Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 375-76. This contract of Aug.
16, 1646, therefore, must have been made almost immediately after Jansen's arrival at Manhattan.
- The identification of this farm owned by the company is speculative; it was not one of the well-known six numbered bouweries belonging to the Dutch West India Co., for none of which either Jansen or Hall ever had a leasehold. In 1639, George Holmes and Thomas Hall lived in "a dwelling house" on bouwery No. 3 (N. Y.
Col. Docs., XIV: 18), and on Nov. 29, 1650, Secretary Van Tienhoven, then in Holland, said that "Thomas Hall dwells at present upon a small bouwery belonging to the Honorable Company." At the beginning of 1649, Jansen was living in a house (now covered by the Produce Exchange) in which the famous remonstrance, called the Vertoogh, was written (see Castello Plan, II: 255).
The "small bouwery," which Hall occupied in 1650, was perhaps a triangular plot at the present intersection of The Bowery and Pell St., where he was living on May 3, 1660, when he petitioned with others that a village might be permitted to be formed there.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210. His patent here was not obtained until Nov. 29, 1652.—Recitals in Liber Patents, IV: 17 (Albany).
See Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- 18 Matthys Jansen receives a ground-brief (recited in Liber Patents, II: 35, Albany) for Papparinimin. It was in extent 50 morgens or 100 acres. Papparinimin was the north-westernmost extremity of Manhattan Island, bounded by Spuyten Duyvil Creek.—See Landmark Map, Pl. 180, Vol. III.
- 22 Isaac de Forest receives a ground-brief for a certain lot on the east side of the present Whitehall St., south of Stone St., now covered by the Kemble building.—See Map of Dutch Grants,
C. Pl. 87, Vol. II and II: 380.
- Sept. Oloff Stevensen van Cortlant is mentioned in the records as 7 "commissary of cargoes."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.),
II: 148 (N. Y. State Library).
- " Rouloff Jansen Haes is mentioned in the records as "receiver of the Hon. West India Company's duties here" in New Nether-

1646 Govert Lookermans receives a ground-brief for a certain lot, now the north-east corner of Broad and Stone Sts., extending through the block and becoming the south-east corner of Broad and South William Sts.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 304-6; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 400.

15 Govert Lookermans and Dirck Cornelissen from Wensveen appear before the provincial secretary, as "guarantees for their copartners residing in Holland," and make a declaration that they have "sold to William Goulder a parcel of land situate on the Island of Manhattan, on the East river, on the west whereof Mr. Allerton and Philip de Truy are adjoining," which they convey "by virtue of the groundbrief granted" to the copartners by Kieft and his council. This land is described thus: "it runs from the hill (hooghte) next the strand along said Allerton's and De Truy's land in the length twenty eight rods to the cripplebush, in the breadth along the cripplebush eighteen rods, one foot, thence towards the hill (hooghte) by the strand in the length thirty rods, next the land of Lookemans and [blank], and broad along the strand to the hill (hooghte) eighteen rods, one foot, which parcel of land amounts altogether to five hundred and twenty four rods, five feet," for which Goulder is to pay 200 guilders in instalments.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 148 (N. Y. State Library). Generally speaking, this conveyance covered from Ferry to Frankfort Sts., from the Swamp at Cliff St. to the East River (at present somewhat east of Pearl St.).

17 Govert Lookermans and Dirck Cornelissen from Wensveen appear before the provincial secretary, being "responsible for their copartners residing in Holland," and acknowledge the sale to George Cleer of "a piece of land situate on the Island Manhattan on the East River at the point coming at the valley called Wolpherts valley, situate east of a certain low land (laagte) where the piece of land from the hill (hooghte) into the low land up to said valley is fourteen rods in breadth and extends thence in length up to the end of said point thirty and one twelfth rods." Cleer is to pay 200 gl. in three instalments. This land they convey "by virtue of the ground brief granted" by Kieft and his council "to him Govert Lookemans and his copartners."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 148 (N. Y. State Library). The land was bounded south by the East River, at the present Cherry St., north by Batavia St., and west by Roosevelt St. Wolphert's Valley was named from Wolphert Gerritsen van Couwenhoven.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 375 (patent May 15, 1647).

18 Lookermans and Cornelissen acknowledge a contract of a lease to Hendrick Pietersen from Hasselt of "their land situate on the Manhatns by Besteavaers Cripplebush," for ten years, from March 1, 1647, for the "fifth part of all the grain that will be raised on the aforesaid soil and eight fowls."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 148 (N. Y. State Library). This lease covered their grant (see March 26, 1642), excepting what had been conveyed out in the meantime.

Oct. 6 Peter Cornelissen receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden at present Nos. 8-22 Stone St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 382. The earliest reference to the brewery of the West India Co. is in this ground-brief, which describes the lot as on the road "to the Brew-House of the Company."

24 Volkert Evertsen acknowledges the sale to Cornelis Maesen of "the house and plantation on the Island of Manhattan . . . at the North river, on which plantation adjoins [those of] Mr. Wouter van Twiller and Thomas Hall."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 151 (N. Y. State Library). This farm occupied land now in the vicinity of Christopher St. and the Hudson River. See Manatus Maps, II: 191 (C. 11).

Nov. 22 The ferry to Brooklyn is mentioned in a contract of this date.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 35.

21 Jan Teunissen, the "schout of Breuckelen," agrees to furnish certain timber and other building materials for houses projected in New Amsterdam for Sergeant Gerrit Douman and Adam Roelantsen.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 152 (N. Y. State Library).

24 Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven acknowledges conveyance to Mr. Arnoldus van Hardenbergh of "his house and lot situate and being at the Graft on the Island of Manhattan," for 1,600 guilders in wampum and goods. This was the plot granted to Couwenhoven on April 22, 1645, on present Broad and Stone Sts.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 152 (N. Y. State Library).

Nov. 25 Nicholas Stillwell acknowledges the sale to Jan Jansen Schepmoes of "his house and lot heretofore occupied by ensign Gysbert de Leuw, situate on the North Side of the Graft on the Island of Manhattan" (present No. 25 and part of No. 27 Beaver Street), in exchange for Schepmoes' "plantation heretofore occupied by Nicolaes Sloper, situate on the Island of Manhattan, near George Homs' [Holmes] plantation," at Turtle Bay.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 152 (N. Y. State Library). See Dutch Grants, II: 371; Castello Plan, II: 242.

"Breuckelen" obtains a municipal government.—Brodhead, Hist. of the State of N. Y., I: 421-22.

29 Gerrit Douman receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden on the south-west corner of Marketfield and Broad Sts.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 377, Vol. II.

Dec. 1 Before Secretary Van Tienhoven, appears Leendert Arenden, and acknowledges the sale to Tonis Nysen of "his house and lot situate and being on the Great Highway [Broadway], opposite the Company's garden, large and small as the same is bounded, according to the groundbrief dated 22<sup>d</sup> September A<sup>o</sup> 1645, which lot and house Tonis Nysen also acknowledges to have bought," for 160 guilders.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 152 (N. Y. State Library). While apparently a sale, the transaction may have been a mortgage, because an actual sale of this property was made by Arenden (or Aerden) to Lubbertus van Dincklagen, on March 10, 1651.—Liber Deeds, A: 12-14, New York.

6 Gerrit Hendricksen receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 161, Albany) for the Schout's Bowery, containing "25 morgens of land as can be better seen by the marks," with the valley, which is to be occupied by him during the company's pleasure. On May 13, 1654, the above valley was granted, by Director Stuyvesant, to Gerrit Hendricksen and his heirs forever.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 372. On the modern plan, this tract was bounded approximately as follows: by a line beginning at the north-east corner of the Bowery and E. 4th St., running north-easterly and easterly to a point on the north side of St. Mark's Pl., west of Avenue B; thence south, paralleling Avenue B, to a point on the north side of E. 6th St.; thence in a south-westerly direction to a point in the east line of Allen St., a little south of Houston St.; thence in a north-westerly direction to the intersection of the Bowery and E. 1st St.; thence north along the Bowery to the place of beginning. See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III. The confirmation of this grant by Nicolls to Gerrit Hendricksen was dated May 3, 1667.—Liber Patents, II: 22 (Albany).

17 The attorney of Wouter van Twiller acknowledges a lease made of Van Twiller's bowery, "situate on the Island of Manhattan near the land of Cosyn and Volkert Evertsen, to Geurt Coerten and Wouter Aertsen" for a term of six years from Sept. 1, 1646, at an annual rental of 250 guilders. The lessor also "promises to have the new plantation, or the land on which the Negroes dwell, cleared at his expense and made fit for the plow," and he "remains also bound to have a Well dug near the house."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 154 (N. Y. State Library). Van Twiller's plantation lay some distance west of the Bowery Road and south-west of Greenwich Lane.—See Manatus Maps, II: 190-91 (C. 10). The "new plantation, or the land on which the Negroes dwell" is not definitely located, but was near the lands of John Seales and Domine Bogardus.—Ibid., II: 190.

Some time prior to this date, Domine Everardus Bogardus erected a house on (the present) Whitehall St., between Stone and Bridge Sts.—Liber Deeds, A: 107 (New York). The house was sold by Annetje Jans, Domine Bogardus's widow, in 1657, to Warner Wessels.—Ibid. Its site is now covered by the Kemble building.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 948.

William II becomes stadtholder, an office which he held until his death in 1650.

A description of Manhattan written in this year states that "the place of the residence of the Dutch Gouver . . . is vpon an Isl<sup>d</sup> by the Indians called Manahatns which lieth in the mid-way betwixt Boston in New Eng<sup>l</sup> and Virginia vpon the south-west point of the 4th Isl<sup>d</sup> they have a considerable fort of some 30 peeces of ordinance brasse, Canon, demi Culverin, & others, since the year 1647 they have much emproued their buildings aboute it, that it is now Called the fort & Cittie of New Amsterdam, although in the years 1641, & 1642 there was not six houses of

Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 1 and 3.
- About this year, Isaac Allerton erected his warehouse on what is now Nos. 10-12 Peck Slip. It is shown on Pls. 10, 10A-A, Vol. I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 962.
- Jan Pietersen received, some time this year, a ground-brief for a lot on the present Whitehall St. He sold it through his attorneys, on March 18, 1653, to Thomas Baxter, an Englishman, who having turned pirate forfeited his property. Director-Gen. Stuyvesant took possession, and, on Feb. 14, 1658 (q.v.), petitioned the provincial council for a ground-brief to his behoof. —See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 123; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 391. This was part of the site of Stuyvesant's great house, and the later Whitehall mansion.
- From the period 1647-51 dates the very interesting series of maps of New Netherland, with inset views of New Amsterdam, known as the Visscher series, the original of which maps was probably based upon surveys made just before 1647, and lost in the shipwreck of the "Princess," on Sept. 27, of this year. The more important maps belonging to this series are reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pls. 7-a, 7-b, and 7-A; and in Vol. III, A, Pls. 1-a, 1-b.
- Jan. 10. Paulus Heymanssen, who hitherto has been a petty officer (Adelborst), is appointed by the director-general and council as "Guardian over the Company's negroes," at a salary of 25 florins per month and 100 florins per annum as board money.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 280 (N. Y. State Library).
- 21 Hans Kierstede receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present Nos. 23-25 Pearl St., corner of Whitehall St. In 1656, a market was established adjoining Kierstede's house.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 131; Castello Plan, Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 263-64; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 383; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 959.
- " Michael Paulussen receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at (present) No. 51 Stone St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and I: 310; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 401.

- 29 The provincial government issues a proclamation offering a reward of 100 guilders for the discovery of the person or persons who tore down notices for renting the ferry from New Amsterdam to Long Island, and for the sale of the house and effects of Cornelis Melyn (at Broad and Pearl Sts.), which notices were posted at the usual places, namely, Fort Amsterdam, the lodge (loods), a light frame building, possibly the ferry-house, or more likely the custom-office—see July 4), and the public tavern (Pearl St. and Coenties Alley).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 107. The tavern referred to was undoubtedly the city tavern (Stads Herbergh). See also, regarding this ferry, 1638; 1642; Jan. 24, 1643.
- Feb. 3 Paulus Heymanssen receives a ground-brief for a certain lot now included in Battery Park. The house on the plot was demolished by order of Colvè, in 1673, because it stood too near the fort.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 125; Castello Plan, Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 276-77; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 388.
- 4 Hendrick Jansen Smitt (Smith) secures a small house on the present site of No. 32 Bridge St. Here be conducted a tavern.—See Castello Plan, II: 1673; Dutch Grants, II: 385, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. In 1663-4, his tavern figured in charges by the schout of Sunday violations, tapping after legal hours, "noisy singing and chanting" at night, etc.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 309; V: 48, 64. He committed suicide in July, 1664. See July 16, 1664.

Apr. 2 Harmen Smeeman, who had married Barent Dirksen's widow, receives a ground-brief for a certain piece of land situated on the East River, extending along the river as far north as the present 15th St., and as far south as 9th St., its western boundary being about First Ave.—See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III.

3 Tonis (Teunis) Nyssen receives a ground-brief for a certain plantation situated on the Island of Manhattan, formerly occupied by the deceased Jan Celes (see 1638), extending on the south side of the land and valley (marsh or meadow) appertaining to Everhardus Bogardus, "Predicant" (preacher), and on the north side to Cornelis Maersens's land, and along the negroes' plantation to the Cripplebush of the said Bogardus, extending in breadth along the Strand, 50 rods; from the Strand along the Cripplebush, south-east-by-east, 150 rods, along the Cripplebush to the Negroes' land, east-by-south, 45 rods, along the negroes' plantation, upwards, north-north-west, 60 rods, to the Strand; downwards, north-west-by-west, 37 rods; along the Cripplebush of Cornelis Maersens, north-west-by-north, 27 rods, and still along the said Cripplebush to the Strand, westerly, 41 rods.—Liber GG: 208 (Albany). This tract, known as "Old Jan's Land" (See Manatus Maps, II: 190 n), was conveyed by Teunis Nyssen to Augustin Heermans, June 11, 1651; who in turn conveyed it to Rut Jacobsen, of Fort Orange, May 11, 1655.—Liber Deeds, A: 19-20 (N. Y. Co.). Judge Hoffman, in noting that this land later became a part of the property of Trinity Church, declares that it "cannot be traced as to the history of the title."—Estate and Rights of the Corporation, II: 180. See Manatus Maps, II: 196 (infra); C. Pl. 42, No. 21, Vol. II.

" Peter van Campen, a negro, receives a ground-brief for a piece of land in the rear of the land of Fossyn (Toussaint) Briel. It extends north-east-by-east and north-north-east, 53 rods, to the negroes' land; north-north-west and north-west-by-north, 30 rods; further along by the said negroes' land, west-south-west, 45 rods; and to the place of beginning, south-east-by-south, 55 rods, amounting in all to 3 morgens, 225 rods.—Liber GG: 209 (Albany). Van Campen's land was, very probably, part of the later Bayard or the Church farm.

10 Philip de Truy conveys to Isaac Allerton (Liber Patents, IV: 92, Albany) a parcel of land lying on both sides of Peck Slip, along the waterfront of the East River. Allerton, a merchant, residing at the time in New Haven, Conn., proceeded to erect here a warehouse, which is shown on Pls. 10 ("Duke's Plan") and 10-a, Vol. I. It was upon the site now covered by Nos. 10 and 12 Peck Slip. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962. For an account of Isaac Allerton and his dealings in New Amsterdam, see Innes, New Am. and Its People, 331 et seq. Isaac Allerton was one of the passengers on the "Mayflower," in 1620 (q.v.)—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (1912), II: 399. He settled on Manhattan Island about 1638 (q.v.). For his praise of New Netherland as a place of settlement, see 1639. See also Sept. 14, 1658.

" Jochim Pietersen (Kuyter) receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house at the north-west corner of Pearl and Whitehall Sts.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 127; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 388.

12 Jochim Kierstedt receives a ground-brief for a lot on the Strand. No record exists of the transfer, but later the lot passed into Stuyvesant's possession and formed part of the site of his "Great House," the later "White-hall."—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 391.

13 Arian Pietersen, from Alckmaer, receives a ground-brief for a piece of land on Manhattan Island "near to Sapoacanik, bounded on the south by the plantation of Jan Virginijens; on the north by that of Jan van Rotterdam, its breadth along the Strand is 65 rods; its length into the woods, extending south-east-by-east, on each side, 200 rods; in the rear in the woods its breadth extending south-south-west is 65 rods."—Liber GG: 212 (Albany). This constitutes the southern 60 acres of the property known in later years as the "Class House Farm." Approximately, the grant stretched from the present 34th to 38th St., between the Eighth Ave. and the North River. Pietersen had previously received a deed for this land from Hendrick Pietersen van Wesel, dated Feb. 3, 1640.—Manatus Maps, C. Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. II, and II: 192; also Pl. 176, Vol. III.

15 Harry Piers receives a ground-brief for a tract of land called Gregory's or Gregorius's plantation, and the kill "where the water ripples over the stones," and abutting on Schepmees's plantation; its breadth on the East River is 75 rods; and it stretches along the said river north-east and south-west. It extends into the woods north-west and south-east to the division line of Schepmees's plantation; its length to the brook is 187 rods, 5 feet. The length between Peter Linde's and Gregorius's plantation is 190 rods; behind, in the woods, the breadth is 75 rods.—Liber GG: 214 (Albany). Generally speaking, Gregory's plantation forms part of the later Kip farm.

- 1647 Tonis Kray receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the south-west corner of Stone and Broad Sts.—See Apr. 16
 16 Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 383.
- 16 In a letter written in French by Director-Gen. Kieft to Gov. John Winthrop, of Connecticut, he tells him of foreign news and of the defeat of the Portuguese in Brazil, adding: "At the beginning of next month we shall attend here the arrival of the new Director [Stuyvesant] who has passed the winter at Curaçao; we have been apprised of it by a ship which he sent here."—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 91 (MSS. in Mass. Hist. Soc.). See also May 11, 1647.
- May Johannes La Montagne receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 216, Albany) for a piece of land situate on "the island of Manhattans," known by the Indian name "Musconta," which in the Nether Dutch language signifies the Flat Land, and containing four morgens in the flat lying between the hills and kill; and a point named Rechawaes, stretching between two kills to the East River (which land was occupied by Hendrick de Forest, deceased, and has been purchased by LaMontagne for 1,700 guilders). On the modern city plan, the land known as Montanye's Flat stretched from about 99th to 110th St., and was included between Fifth Ave., Hellgate, and the Harlem River. In 1662, says Riker, it reverted to the provincial government, to be laid out and granted in lots to inhabitants of New Harlem.—Hist. of Harlem (1881), 205, 592; map, appendix, in ibid. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966; Pl. 178, Vol. III; Manatus Maps, II: 193-94; C. Pl. 42, Vol. II; and Chronology, July 23, 1638.
- 10 Cornelis Teunissen, shoemaker, receives a ground-brief for a certain lot at the present No. 16 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 126; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 389.
- 11 Director-Gen. Petrus Stuyvesant arrives at New Amsterdam to take up his government in New Netherland.—See July 28, 1646; also N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 83.
- 15 Sybout Claessen receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 220, Albany) for a lot which, on the modern city plan would be on the east side of Broadway, somewhat north of the corner of Wall St., the site being now covered by the United Bank building.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- " At some time prior to this date, Pieter Cullet received a grant (see Liber GG: 220, Albany) of land situated, on the modern map, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Pine St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- " Isaac de Forest (de Forest) receives a ground-brief for 50 morgens on the kill running around the island of Manhattan south of Juchim Pietersen's (Kuyter's) and east of Conraet van Keulen's lands,—from Keulen's to the Kil that rims around the Island."—Liber GG: 219 (Albany). This "kill" was the Harlem River. The grant lay opposite the mouth of "Bronck's Kill," the passage parting Randal's Island from the Westchester shore. "Upon this fifty-morgen tract the village of New Harlem was subsequently laid out and ran its humble career."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 167.
- " Thomas Hall receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present No. 35 Pearl St.; it later passed into the possession of Cornelis van Tienhoven.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 129; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 384-85.
- " Augustyn Heermans receives a ground-brief for a parcel of land on the present William St. from Beaver St. to Exchange Pl. Lord's Court, the Van Nostrand building, and the building of the Corn Exchange Bank are among the structures now upon this tract.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 288; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 395.
- 16 Sergeant Huybertsen (James Hubbard) receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden now included in Battery Park. The house on the plot was demolished by order of Colve in 1673, because it stood too near the fort.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 126; Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 276; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 388.
- See A. Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift is appointed superintendent of naval equipments (Equipage mester) by commission signed by Stuyvesant, Kieft, Dincklaghen, and La Montagne. On June 6, he was ordered to fit out as quickly as possible three ships, "de Groote Gerrit" (Great Gerrit), "de Kach" (the Cat), and "de Liefde" (the Love), for speedy service in a cruise against the Spaniards and their adherents in the West Indies and adjacent islands.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 287-88 (N. Y. State Library).
- Willem Tomassen is appointed naval commander. His commission, which gives his prænomen as "Jelmer," is issued at Fort Amsterdam and signed "P. Stuyvesant, Willem Kieft, La van Dincklaghen, La Montagne."—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 287 (N. Y. State Library).
- The sale or giving away of liquors is prohibited during divine service on Sunday, "before two of the clock, when there is no sermon, or otherwise, before four of the clock in the afternoon, . . . under any pretext, he it what it may, Travelers and daily Boarders alone excepted, who may be provided therewith for their necessity in their lodgings." All taverns are to be closed every day by nine o'clock at night "after the ringing of the Bell."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 60-61. The translation in Rec. N. Am., I: 1-2, is ambiguous and misleading. This is the earliest recorded ordinance of Stuyvesant's council.
- A will of this date, made at New Amsterdam, mentions "Jan Jansen Gorter weighhouse-parter of the [Amsterdam] White Hat guild," (waechdrager van [het] wit hoede veen [veem]), and refers also to "Commander Jelmer Tomassen, and Paulus Leendertsen [vander Grift] naval storekeeper (equipage mester)."—Quoted (and corrected from Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 157 (N. Y. State Library), in a wrong translation.
- A vacancy existing in the office of "Provoost" (jailer), the provincial government appoints Adam Roelantzen, formerly schoolmaster, to the vacancy, at 26 guilders per month and 100 guilders board money per annum.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 295 (N. Y. State Library).
- The repeated violations of the ordinance against the sale of intoxicants to Indians (see June 18, 1643) compel further attempts by law to suppress the traffic.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 64.
- All inhabitants of New Netherland are charged and commanded to fence their lands properly, in order to prevent the cattle from doing damage. Horses, cows, and especially goats and hogs, are required to be herded or otherwise placed where they can do no harm, for which purpose Fiscal Van Dyck is to erect a pound, in which he may detain the animals until the damage they have done is made good and the fine is paid.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 64-65; Rec. N. Am., I: 3.
- Among the public works that Stuyvesant and his council recommend on this day, less than two months after Stuyvesant's arrival at New Amsterdam, is the erection of "a Pier for the convenience of the Merchants and Citizens." It is the first proposal for a pier in New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 69. See 1648.
- An ordinance for regulating shipping at New Amsterdam is promulgated, in which anchorages are provided for as follows: "That all private Yachts, Barks, Ketches, Slomps and Boats under Fifty lasts, whether Dutch, English, French, Swedish or other, desiring to anchor under the Manhattans, shall not seek for, nor have any other roadstead than in front of the City New Amsterdam, between Capse Point and the Guide-board near the City Tavern, under a fine of Fifty Carolus guilders for the first time after they have been notified, and the large Ships may anchor between the said Point and the Second Guide Board, which stands on the way down towards the Smith's valley." Vessels are to be visited, and their goods inspected and entered before discharged. Loading or unloading after sunset or before sunrise is prohibited. Boats may convey officers on board or ashore, but it must be done "in the evening before the ringing of the rogues' bell [de boeve clock] and in the morning after Reveille, and from no other place than in front of, and about the office [logie]." See Jan. 29. Notice of departure must be given twelve hours in advance, and ships must first be visited and receive proper clearance. No passengers may be taken without a pass signed by the director-general or his deputy.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 71-72. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963.
- An excise on imported wines and spirituous liquors is imposed for the purpose of raising money for public works at New Amsterdam, as follows: "Whereas the fortress New Amsterdam is now for some time past, during the War, greatly decayed, and the walls daily leaped over and more and more trodden under foot by Men and Cattle, which tends not only to the disrepute of our Sovereign and High authority, the contempt, yea disgrace of this State by others our Neighbors, whether English, French, Swedes, yea even by the Indians and Heathens, but also to the reproach of Us and our good Inhabitants, and is most perilous and dangerous in time of attack, or of defence against all foreign enemies; Therefore, We . . . intending, pursuant to the Order of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Lords

1647 Majors, to put the Fort into proper repair; to complete the Church, July July at which we are already engaged; to erect a Pier for the convenience 4 of the Merchants and Citizens; to construct a Sheet-piling to prevent the abrasion by the river in front of this city of [New] Amsterdam, all which being useful and highly necessary, public and general works, requiring a considerable sum of money, both to procure the materials, and to pay the workmen, therefore for facilitating and rendering more easy the same, We have resolved to ordain and establish a reasonable Excise and impost on the Wine, Brandy and Liquors which are imported from abroad." Likewise, the purchaser is "ordered and commanded not to receive, ship, export nor store any Wines without having first obtained a proper permit from the Receiver or Collector, and exhibited it to the Officer, on pain of forfeiting such Wines and Five Hundred guilders additional, to be applied one third for the Company, one third for the Church, one third for the Fiscal or the Complainant and Informer."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 69-71.

" Director-Gen. Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance against smuggling, making it mandatory for merchants to exhibit their books and accounts when required, as well as to have all furs marked and stamped by a public officer at New Amsterdam before exportation. This ordinance was afterwards disapproved in Holland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 65-69. A few days before (June 28), Sergeant Daniel Litscho was ordered not to allow any goods to be landed without permission from Stuyvesant or Secretary Van Tienhoven.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 109.

5 On behalf of himself and his partners, Thomas Broughton makes an acknowledgment of having "received and got full and prompt possession from the Hon<sup>ble</sup> General Petrus Stuyvesant, of the ship Amandare arrived here [New Amsterdam] from Brasil, according to the bill of Sale and inventory dated the last of May
 A<sup>o</sup>. 1647."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 158 (N. Y. State Library). The ship was chartered to go to Boston, and her surieties were Isaac Allerton of New Amsterdam and Thomas Willett of New Plymouth.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 37.
 In other records her name is given as "Tamadare" ("Amandare").
 She brought negro slaves to New Netherland, and her sale was mentioned in correspondence from the directors at Amsterdam.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 77, 84, 301.

20 "Jan Stevensen from Haerlem, schoolmaster here" (New Amsterdam), appears at the provincial secretary's office to execute a power of attorney to Luycas (Lucas) Smith, to "collect in his the principal's name, from the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Directors" of the Amsterdam chamber, 747 guilders, 2 stuivers, 12 pence, due to him "by balance and settlement of his account according to the Book of Monthly Wages No. F. folio 34, earned from their Honors in New Netherland."
 —Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 159 (N. Y.
 State Library).

22 Rev. Johannes Cornelisz. Backer (or Backerus) is appointed in New Amsterdam as a supply minister there, because Domine Bogardus has retired and is about leaving for Holland. His salary is to be 100 guilders per month and 200 guilders per annum for support, as well as free firewood. Backer had been a clergyman in the service of the West India Co. at Curaçao, and had accompanied Stuyvesant from there to New Netherland, intending to return that way to Holland. His stay at Manhattan was "against his intention and inclination," and was prolonged by the loss of Bogardus on the ill-fated "Princess," and the subsequent delays in designating another regular minister for the post. His impatience to return to Holland was quickened by the godlessness of the place and the political rows that were rife at Manhattan at this period. On May 8, 1649, Stuyvesant called upon Backer and forbade him to read, or allow anybody else to read, any political writings in the church of Fort Amsterdam. Backer, having obtained authority from Holland to return there, also sought his dismissal from Stuyvesant and his council, from whom he was granted a release, on July 6, 1649. He sailed away in August (see Aug. 2, 1649), after "only 27 months" of residence in New Netherland, and, on Nov. 1st, presented his credentials to the classis of Amsterdam.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 317 (N. Y. State Library); Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch,

" The Hon. Lubbertus van Dincklagen is appointed president of the ordinary court, to be assisted by some of the principal officers of the West India Co., but with reservation by Director-Gen.

Stuyvesant to preside himself in important cases.—Cal. Hist. MSS., July
Dutch, 111.

In order to prevent a continuance of irregularities in the building and erecting of houses, such as extending lots far beyond their boundaries, setting up nuisances on highways and streets, and neglecting to build on granted lots, Stuyvesant and his council resolve to appoint three surveyors, literally road-masters (roijmeesters),— namely, Lubbertus van Dincklagen, a member of the council; Paulus Leendertsen vander Gifft, naval officer and member of the council, and Cornelis van Tienhoven, provincial secretary.
 They are authorized and empowered "to condemn and in future to stop all unsightly and irregular Buildings, Fences, Palisades, Posts, Rails, etc." All who henceforth intended to build or incline their gardens or lots in or near the city of New Amsterdam are forbidden to undertake it without the previous knowledge and consent of, and survey by, these surveyors, under a penalty of 25 Carolus guilders and the destruction of what may have been built or set up. Likewise, all who have formerly received lots are warned and notified to erect on their lots good and decent houses within nine months, according to law, or, in default thereof, such unimproved lots will be forfeited to the patron or landlord, or conveyed by him to whomsoever he pleases.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 74-75; Rec. N. Am., I: 4. The three surveyors were actually appointed on July 22, in advance of the ordinance.—Cal. Hist.
MSS., Dutch, 111; Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 316 (N. Y. State Library).

" It being deemed necessary that the newly built church in Fort Amsterdam shall be made tight against the inclemency of the forthcoming winter, and, in order that the work on the church may progress and the materials be provided, Director-Gen. Petrus Stuyvesant, Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, and Jan Jansen Damen are appointed church-wardens (kerckmeesters) to forward all necessary work and supervise the same.—Records N. Neth.
 (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 316 (N. Y. State Library). For an outline history of the "Church in the Fort," see May, 1642; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 934; and descriptions of the Frontispiece

John Dolling deposes in regard to a visit he paid, in company with Fiscal Van Dyck and others, to the tavern of Gerrit, the miller (de Molenaar), namely Gerrit Fullveuer.—Cal. Hist. MSS.,

 Oil building now stands. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978.

An export duty on furs is established, in which a fixed duty is stipulated, "so that each may know what impost he has to pay."
 Beaver, otter, and elkhide are taxed 15 stuivers a skin, and less valuable skins in proportion.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 73; Rec. N.

In an undated letter, written some time in midsummer, 1647, the directors in Holland say to Director-Gen. Stuyvesant: "We were not less rejoiced to hear, that there are signs of progress, that some villages are springing up and that fine buildings are being erected around Fort New-Amsterdam."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 76, where the editor places the letter (p. 1v) under date of May 2, which cannot be right, in view of its allusions, and of the fact that Stuyvesant only arrived at New Amsterdam on May 11.

" Johannes Backerus, minister here on the Island of Manhattan," gives power of attorney to collect from the Amsterdam chamber 4,154 guilders, 1 stuiver, "earned by him at the Island of Curaçao

Egbert van Borsum is mentioned as master of the "yacht Prinsse Willem."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 161

" Evert Duyckinck, late assistant, now a freeman," gives power of attorney to Hendrick Jansen, tailor, to collect from the Amsterdam chamber 675 guilders, 10 stuivers, earned by him in New Netherland, "as per balance of the annexed account in the Book
 No. F." His signature is "Evert Duyckinck."—Records N. Neth.

- 1647 order."—Record N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 162 (N. Y. Sept. 28 Ag. 3 State Library).
- 9 "Jesse La Montagne, assisted by his father and guardian Mr. Johannes La Montagne, councillor in New Netherland," at the provincial secretary's office, issues a power of attorney to Coenraet van Ceulen, a merchant at Amsterdam, to collect wages due to Jesse for his services in the employ of the West India Co., as shown in the "Book of Monthly Wages, N<sup>o</sup> F," p. 51.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 161. Jesse de La Montagne was named after his grandfather, Jesse de Forest, the merchant-dyer of Leyden.
- 16 The ill-fated ship "Princess" sails from New Amsterdam on her last voyage. See Sept. 27.
- " "The Book of Monthly Wages N<sup>o</sup> F," containing the accounts of persons employed in New Netherland in the pay of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., is "now transmitted by the ship The Princess."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 166 (N. Y. State Library). See Sept. 27, and Addenda.
- 26 Stuyvesant proposes to his council the providing of ways and means for repairing Fort Amsterdam and allaying the discontent of the Indians, who have not yet received the presents that have been promised to them at the conclusion of the general peace.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 112.
- Sept. In the ordinance for establishing the board of "Nine Men," 25 Stuyvesant and his council declare the following public improvements necessary, in order that New Amsterdam may "grow and advance in good order, justice, police, population, prosperity and mutual peace and improvement," namely: to be "furnished with a proper and strong Fort, a Church, School, Sheet-piling, Pier and similar highly necessary public and common works and buildings."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 75.
- " The commonality having chosen from their number eighteen men, Stuyvesant and his council designate nine of them to act as selectmen or spokesmen for the people whilst in conferences with the director-general and council concerning coöperative measures to be adopted for promoting the welfare of the colony. Augustine Herrman, Arnoldus van Hardenberg, and Gvoert Loockermans, merchants; Jan Janzen Damen, Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, and Hendrick Kip, burghers; Michiel Jansen, Jan Evertsen Bout, and Thomas Hall, farmers, compose the first board of "Nine Men."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 75-78. This board was closely controlled by Stuyvesant, who appointed its president, authorized its meetings, and allowed consideration only of questions that he proposed. None the less, the board "constituted a permanent element in the governmental system" for prospective acquisition of popular rights—hence was a step toward representative government. Six of the nine men retired annually, and their places were filled by men chosen by the director-general and council from twelve men nominated by the full board on the last day of each December.—Ibid.; Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 287. In the Representation of New Netherland, July 28, 1649, whose signers included eight of the original members of the board of "Nine Men," we have the following characterization of that body: "Nine men were chosen to represent the whole commonality, and commissions and instructions were given that whatever these men should do, should be the act of the whole commonality. And so in fact it was, as long as it corresponded with the wishes and views of the Director. In such cases they represented the whole commonality; but when it did not so correspond, they were then clowns, usurers, rebels and the like."—Jameson, op. cit., 341.
- 27 The ship "Princess," also known to have been called "Princess Amelia," which sailed from New Amsterdam on Aug. 16 (g. v.), having among those on board former Director-Gen. Kieft, Domine Bogardus, the late Fiscal Vander Huygens, Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, and Cornelis Melyn, is "wrecked in the (English) Channel on the 27th of Sept<sup>r</sup> and 81 souls, men, women and children," are lost, among them all the above named except Kuyter and Melyn. Nothing was saved of her cargo "except a lot of peltries, part of which" was soon stolen; and "what floated on the strand" was sold. Among the regrettable losses were "very exact Maps; fully a hundred different samples of Minerals and numerous Remonstrances and accounts of New Netherland."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 262; XIV: 82-83; cf. "Lost Maps," II: 164. See also 1641; and description of Pl. 7-a, II: 145.
- " The desire of the inhabitants to build a pier is reiterated in an ordinance of this date.—See Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 75. For further mention, see 1648.
- Director-Gen. Stuyvesant informs the council that Andrew Forrester, of Dundee, Scotland, agent and attorney of Mary, widow of Lord Stirling, has come to New Amsterdam, as pretended governor of Long Island and places adjacent, demanding to see his (Stuyvesant's) commission and authority, which he has assumed by having Forrester arrested and confined in the prisoners' quarters in the city tavern at the expense of the West India Co. The councillors order the appearance of Forrester before them, that he may be examined as to his commission and authority. The inquiry results in the council resolving that Forrester be sent a prisoner to Holland, on board the ship "Valdenker" (Falconer), there to vindicate his commission before the states-general.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 80-81; Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 307-8. The ship was forced by bad weather into Spithead, England, where Forrester was relieved from his imprisonment by the captain of an English man-of-war.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 286; VII: 431; XIV: 85.
- " Hans Wever is appointed captain-at-arms to the garrison of Fort Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 113.
- " Several questions are placed before the council by Stuyvesant, among them, whether the ensign and the sergeant are to form part of courts-martial, which is agreed to affirmatively; what shall be done in case of fire, as the houses in New Amsterdam are mostly built of wood and covered with thatch; and what provision is to be made for a school, "as there is none in New Amsterdam, and the youth are running wild." The last two questions the court refers to the board of "Nine Men."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 114. Stuyvesant, by a written communication (Nov. 14), requested the council to choose one of their number to attend a meeting of the "Nine Men," and at the same time wrote to the "Nine Men"—representatives of Manhattan, Breucklen, Amersfoort, and Pavonia—asking them to advise him regarding the best way to procure means to repair Fort Amsterdam, complete the church, provide a schoolhouse and dwelling for the schoolmaster, and make provision against fire.—Ibid.; Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 351 (N. Y. State Library).
- " Gov. Stuyvesant's statement to the commonality regarding a school reads: "Whereas, for want of a school house, no school has been kept here during three months, by which the youth are spoiled, it is proposed to consider where a convenient place may be fixed upon, so as to keep the youth from the streets, and under strict subordination."—Quoted in Western MSS., in N. Y. Pub. Library. See Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools of N. Neth., 59-60.
- 15 The military punishment of "riding the wooden horse," on the parade, near the tavern of Philip Graerdy (now the site of the Produce Exchange), was carried on under the Dutch as late as Colve's administration, in 1673. How early it came into practice in New Amsterdam is not known. Graerdy was himself subjected to it in rather ludicrous fashion, in 1642 (g. v.). On Nov. 15, 1647, Jonas Jonassen, a soldier, for robbing hen roosts and killing a pig, is court-martialed and sentenced to ride the wooden horse three days, from two o'clock in the afternoon until the conclusion of the parade, having a 50-pound weight tied to each foot. The severity of this punishment did not act as a deterrent to this individual's indulgence in larcenies. Some months later (March 3, 1648), he was sentenced to be stripped of his military equipment; then to be chained to a wheelbarrow and put at hard labour during the pleasure of the director-general and council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 79, 114, 115; cf. on this punishment, N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 624; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 22; Döpler, Theatri poenarum (Leipzig, 1697), pt. 2: 616. See also Castello Plan, II: 249 (N. 5).
- 22 Fort New Amsterdam is "entirely out of repair," and it is considered "highly necessary that it be placed at the earliest opportunity in a thorough and complete state of defense," so as to afford "a safe asylum" to the inhabitants in time of danger; therefore, Stuyvesant and the council request the commonality "to lend a helping hand to this laudable work;" and, in order that the commonality may not "be aggravated by heavy and intolerable burthens," every male person from 16 to 60 years of age is required to work 12 days in the year at the fort; or, finding it inconvenient to perform such labour, to be exempt therefrom on payment of two guilders for each day.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 79.
- 30 Loose wampum is continued current and in circulation, but "all imperfect, broken and unpierced beads can be picked out, which are declared Bullion, and shall, meantime, be received at 1647 the Company's counting house [in New Amsterdam] as heretofore. Provided that the Company, or anyone on its part, shall, in return, be at liberty to trade therewith among the Merchants or other Inhabitants, or in larger parcels as may be agreed upon and stipulated by any individual, or on behalf of the Company."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 80. For earliest regulatory measure, see April 18, 1641.

Dec. 5 Stuyvesant issues a proclamation offering protection and refuge to all persons whatsoever who have run away from the colony of New Haven, whether they are "noble or ignoble, freeman or slave, debtor or creditor, yea, to the lowest prisoner included." This retaliatory act is the outcome of disputes between him and Gov. Theophilus Eaton.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 114; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 342; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 480-81. The act was later recalled. For the relations and correspondence between Stuyvesant and Eaton at this period, see Records of New Haven Colony, 1638-1649, 507, ff.

— Some time prior to this year, Abraham Pietersen began to keep a tavern at what is now 14-16 Broadway.—See Hist. MSS., Dutch, 119, 120, 121. See Castello Plan, II: 231-32; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. See July 23, 1648.

— "In the year 1648, the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General and Council of New Netherland offered at public sale, to the highest bidder, in Fort Amsterdam in New Netherland, a lot heretofore the property of Harman Meyndersen vande Bogaert, situate on the Island Manhattan, bounded on the west by the lot of Adam Roelantzen and on the east by that of Oloff Stevensen [van Cortlandt]." This was "on account of a claim presented in the Colonie Renselaerswyck for damages by fire which the Indians of that quarter sustained at the hands of said Harman Meyndersen." This lot, on the north side of Stone St., now covered by the Produce Exchange, having been purchased at the sale by Arian Keyser, was formally conveyed to him on July 8, 1648, but he, on the same day, conveyed it to Evert Pels, who, it is thought, acted as agent for the widow of Bogaert.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 39 (N. Y. State Library). See Castello Plan, II: 251 (Nos. 8 and 9); 378 (lot 8).

— In this year, Pieter Andriessen was a tavern-keeper at 39 Stone St.—See Castello Plan, II: 307-8.

— Claes van Eslant was official surveyor in New Netherland at this time.—O'Callaghan's Reg. N. Neth., 37. See also under 1655. Some time during this year, or before the summer of 1649, a pier was constructed on the East River. Among the public works that Stuyvesant's council recommended, on July 4, 1647 (q. v.), less than two months after his arrival in New Amsterdam, was the erection of "a Pier for the convenience of the Merchants and Citizens."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 69. This was the first proposal for a pier in New Amsterdam. At the same time, the council defined the roadstead for anchorage to be "between Capske Point and the Guide-board [or sign post, with a hand] near the City Tavern" for private vessels, and "between the said Point and the Second Guide Board," at the Smith's Vly, for larger ships.—Ibid., 71-72. It is evident that the pier, wharf, or dock, was not in existence at this time (1647), notwithstanding that Inges (New Am. and Its People), on his compiled map (opp. p. 1), represents the "Public Dock" as extant in 1644, and says (p. 109) that when Stuyvesant arrived, on May 11, 1647 (q. v.), "most of the inhabitants of the town assembled on Schreyers Hoek and at the little dock when the new Director-General landed." The desire for building a pier was reiterated in an ordinance of Sept. 27, 1647.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 75. Provisions were made for completing the fort, by an ordinance of Nov. 22, 1647 (q. v.).—Ibid., 79. No pier, however, was built in that year.

— The anchorage for vessels was renewed and confirmed by ordinance on March 10, 1648 (q. v.).—Ibid., 91. One of the acts of Stuyvesant, in 1648, was to "put in order the church [in the fort] which came into his hands very much out of repair, and shortly afterwards [he] made a wooden wharf." These public works were completed before July 28, 1649 (q. v.), as is mentioned in the Ver- toogh, or Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 330. In the ordinance of Aug. 11, 1656 (q. v.), the roadstead fur anchorage was defined as "in front of this city of [New] Amsterdam, on the East river between the Pier and the City gate, and on the North river in front of and near the Beaver's path, and at no other place."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 237. Again, on June 12, 1657 (q. v.), the roadstead was described as not "beyond the gates and walls of this City, and the Hand [erected for that purpose," but "on the East River between the Hand signpost or guide-board] and the Capske; on the North river, in front of and about the Beavers-path." The ships were required to "remain lying there during their unloading and loading," which was done by means of scows, small boats, rowboats, canoes, etc.—Ibid., 310, 312. These methods prevailed until the new pier or custom house "Bridge" was built, in 1659, when wharfe regulations were established. For the custom-house bridge, see Nov. 9, 1658; April 18, July 11 and 23, Dec. 12, 1659; and Nov. 3, 1660. The earliest roadsteads are shown by anchors on the Manatus Maps (1699), C. Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. II. See also May 26, 1649.

— The "Cambridge Platform," embodying the ecclesiastical polity of the Massachusetts churches, is drawn up. It was printed in 1649, and established by the general court in 1651.—Winsor, III: 314.

— The council resolves to call in all the effects of the West India Co. that have been loaned to individuals during Kieff's administration, and also orders that the company's sawmill on Nut (Governors) Island, being "wholly decayed and in ruin," be dismantled, if possible, or otherwise burned down, in order to salvage the iron.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 81-82. This was, perhaps, the first sawmill erected in the environs of Manhattan Island, possibly even before Minuit's colony had founded New Amsterdam in 1626.

— All brewers "in and around the city of New Amsterdam" are prohibited from selling at retail, and all tapsters or retailers are enjoined from brewing or allowing others to brew for them. The object of this ordinance is to insure proper entry and collection of the excise.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 80-81; Rec. N. Am., 1: 4.

23 — The houses in New Amsterdam were "for the most part built of Wood and thatched with Reed, besides which the Chimneys of some of the houses" were of wood, which was considered "most dangerous." Careless people neglected to keep their chimneys cleanly swept and paid no attention to their fires, "whereby recently two Houses were burned" and greater damage was feared for the future. Therefore, Stuyvesant and his council now ordain that henceforth no chimneys shall be built "of wood or plaster in any houses between the Fort and the Fresh Water," but that those already in use may remain "until further order and pleasure of the Firewardens." For the proper execution of this ordinance, the following men are appointed fire-wardens: Commissary Adriaen Keyser, representing the council; and Thomas Hall, Martin Cregier, and George Wolsey, representing the commonalty. They are empowered, "at their pleasure," to inspect the chimneys of all of the houses situate between the fort and the Fresh Water (Kolck), and they have the right to levy "a fine of three Guilders for every fire found on examination to be dirty, to be expended for Fire ladders, Hooks and Buckets." If a house is burned, either through negligence or the fire on the hearth, the occupant is subject to a fine of 25 florins, to be applied as above. Notwithstanding this ordinance, and its reaffirmation from time to time, it was "obstinately neglected by many Inhabitants."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 82-83, 102, 208, 322; Rec. N. Am., I: 5.

— Because great damage daily is done by hogs and goats to orchards, gardens, and other improvements, a nuisance which prevents "the planting of beautiful Orchards and Gardens," an ordinance is passed by Stuyvesant and his council enjoining in future the pasturing or keeping of any goats or hogs "between the fortification of New Amsterdam (or its vicinity) and the Fresh Water" (Kolck), unless they are kept within enclosures that are fenced high enough to prevent the goats from leaping over them. Goats beyond the Fresh Water are not to be pastured without a herdsman or keeper, on pain of forfeiture.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 85; Rec. N. Am., I: 8.

— Stuyvesant and his council pass an elaborate ordinance for the regulation of trade and navigation, providing for the establishment of a weekly market and an annual fair, and declaring the East River, from the Sound to the Bay, open and free "to all persons of what quality or nation severer they may be." This ordinance regulates the retail and wholesale trade of New Amsterdam, prescribes Dutch weights and measures, limits trade on the Delaware and Hudson only to "the Burgers and Inhabitants" of New Amsterdam who possess real estate therein to the amount of two to three thousand guilders, and allows only those who own real estate below the Fresh Water (Kolck) "to have built or to buy Yachts, Sloops, or Vessels." Former ordinances relative to anchorage and discharge of cargoes are renewed. Concessions are

- 1648 granted "to the Stranger and Inhabitant" of New Amsterdam, Apr.
Mar. of "a Weekly Market-day, to wit Monday, and annually a Free 29 10 Market for ten consecutive days," to begin on the first Monday after St. Bartholomew's day,—i. e., Sept. 2, New Style,—and corresponding to the regular Amsterdam Fair. On these weekly and annual days "the Neighbor and Stranger, as well as the Inhabitant" are to be "allowed and permitted to supply the purchaser from a Booth, by the ell, weight and measure, wholesale and retail." The directors in Amsterdam disapproved of some of the trade provisions.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 86-92.
- " Flagrant disobedience of the ordinance of May 31, 1647, against disposing of liquors during service on Sundays or on weekdays after nine p. m., induces Stuyvesant and the council to renew that ordinance, henceforth to be observed strictly to the letter. The cause of this infraction is declared to be "that this sort of business and the profit easily accruing therefrom divert and lead many from their original and primitive calling, occupation and business to resort to Tavern-keeping, so that nearly the just fourth of the city New Amsterdam consists of Brandy shops, Tobacco or Beer houses, by the multitude, whereof not only are more honorable Trades and occupations neglected and disregarded, but even the Common people and the Company's servants seriously debauched; and what is still worse, the Youth, seeing and following, as from their very childhood, this improper example of their Parents, are drawn from the path of Virtue and into all sorts of irregularity. Hence, also, proceed Cheatings, Smuggling, and frauds and the clandestine sale of Beer and Brandy to the Indians and Natives, as daily experience, God help us! shows, from which nothing but new difficulties between us and them are to be apprehended." Therefore, it is enacted that no "new Alehouses, Taverns or Tippling places" are to be opened without consent of the director-general and council, and that those already in existence may continue "at least four consecutive years more, but, in the meantime, remain bound and obliged to supply themselves, like other decent trades in this place, with proper and respectable citizen houses for the embellishment and improvement of this city New Amsterdam." They are allowed to engage in another business; but may not sell their taverns or lease or sell house and dwelling to anyone else for such purpose without authorization from the director-general and council. Penal provisions are likewise enacted against brawls, etc.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 93-96; Rec. N. Am., I: 5-8. On March 16, the tavern-keepers of New Amsterdam appeared before the council and promised to obey this ordinance.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 116, Rec. N. Am., 8.
- 16 At this time Daniel Litschop operated a tavern in New Amsterdam, on the site of the present No. 71 Wall Street, corner of Pearl St.—Rec. N. Neth., I: 8. Later, and at least until 1677, it was conducted by his widow, Anna.—M. C. C., I: 50. See Castello Plan, II: 326; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 979.
- 30 The council ratifies "the decision of commissioners appointed to measure and divide the lands between Van Twiller, Dincklage, Cosyn Gerritsen, and the shore road."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 116.
- Apr. The directors at Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant, refer to 7 the church erected in Fort Amsterdam as follows: "The erection of a church building has really been necessary, but we notice also that it has been very expensive; the Colony cannot yet bear such expenses."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 84.
- 16 A proclamation is issued by Stuyvesant and his council for the observance of a general day of fasting and prayer in New Netherland, on account of the almost universal inundations, floods, shipwrecks, sickness, and pestilence, whereby thousands in Europe and America have met untimely death. New Netherland has suffered especially from heavy rains and high water.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 377 (N. Y. State Library).
- 20 Notice is given to Cornelis Jacobsen Stille, Gerrit Jansen van Oldenborch, Cornelis Claesen Swits, and Leendert Aerden, to fence in and cultivate the farms which the late Director-Gen. Kieft granted to them beyond the Fresh Water on Manhattan Island, and for which they are obligated to pay yearly the tenths; which however they avoid, whilst neglecting to enclose and properly cultivate the soil. They are now threatened with the confiscation of their grants.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 381 (N. Y. State Library). These were the old Bylevelt and Pannebacker farms and land of the farms Nos. 5 and 6 of the West India Co., for which the patents had been given between 1645 and 1647.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 370, 373.
- In order to avert the persistent desecration of the Sabbath in New Amsterdam, Stuyvesant and the council, "with the pre- Apr.
29 advice of the Minister of the Gospel" (Backer), order that divine service with sermon shall be held "in the afternoon as well as in the forenoon;" and, "during Divine Service, all Tapping, Fishing, Hunting, and other customary avocations, trading and business either in Houses, Cellars, Shops, Ships, Yachts, or in the streets and markets," are forbidden under a heavy penalty. Drunkards are to be arrested and punished.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 98-99; Rec. N. Am., I: 8-9. The estimate of conditions by Domine Backer or Backerus is in Eccles. Rec., I: 276.
- The prohibitions that have been enacted against the sale of May 13 intoxicants to Indians, directly or indirectly, having been violated by a clandestine trade, which is evidenced daily by the sight of Indians "running drunk along the Manhattans," from which inhabitants distasteful from the town suffer "serious annoyance from drunken Indians," likely to engender "new troubles and wars," a new ordinance is now passed, which prescribes "an arbitrary corporal punishment" upon offenders, as well as payment of fines.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 100; Rec. N. Am., I: 9-10.
- Maretic Jansen, widow of Dirck Cornelissen, receives a ground- 17 brief (Liber Deeds, A: 218, New York) for a lot for a house, now covered by Nos. 20 and 22 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 127; Key to the Dutch Grants, I: 390.
- The council resolves to furnish guns and build a guard-house 25 for the burgher corps (militia) of New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 117.
- The council orders the officer of the burgher guard to fine such June 28 citizens as neglect to attend the guard in turn, or who behave in a disorderly manner, and to levy an execution in case the fine is not paid.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 118.
- The council considers a petition from the farmers on Manhattan July 8 Island, in which they request a remission of the "tenths" for this year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 118.
- The council orders the tavern kept by Abraham Pietersen in New Amsterdam to be closed, on account of a murder committed there.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 119. See Castello Plan, II: 231-32; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980.
- The council of New Netherland finds that the company's mill at New Amsterdam is nothing but a burden to the company, con- Aug.
15 tinually requiring repairs and providing an insufficient return from the leasing (pacht) to carry it on. It is considered, therefore, for the best interest and profit of the company that the mill be no longer farmed out, but that instead a miller be engaged at honest monthly wages, and that the miller's fees for grinding be paid to the receiver, out of which receipts the mill shall be kept in repair and the wages of the miller be paid.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 409 (N. Y. State Library). On Aug. 23, the council formally resolved to engage a miller at 40 florins per month, and chose Abraham Pietersen, of Haerlem, as the most available person.—Ibid., 413. Pietersen had kept a tavern, which just a month before had been ordered closed for violations.
- The ordinance against the sale of firearms, etc., to Indians, 19 is renewed.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 101.
- Rev. Johannes Cornelisz. Backer (or Backerus), writing" Sept.
2 "this date from Manhattan to the classis of Amsterdam, remarks: "The congregation here numbers about one hundred and seventy members. Most of them are very ignorant in regard to true religion, and very much given to drink. To this they are led by the seventeen tap-houses here. What bad fruits 'result therefrom, your Reverences will easily understand. You will also learn more in detail from the bearer hereof, Master Jan Stevensen. If you could obtain from the Hon. Directors an order for closing these places, except three or four, I have no doubt, the source of much evil and great offense would be removed.
- "The Rev. Brethren are requested to take care, that a pastor be sent to this congregation. He must be allowed full liberty in denouncing sin, for which he will find the way already prepared, and he must do his duties with the good example of a decent life himself.
- "It will also be very necessary for the Rev. Brethren, to send over with such a preacher a good schoolmaster. He should not only know how to read, write and cipher, but should also be a man of pious life, and decent habits. He should have a good knowledge of the principal points of our Faith, and set a holy

1648 example to the children. In order to best help the church of God
 Sept. 2 to a bad world, I think, we must begin with the child-2 ren; for many of the older people are so far depraved, that they are now ashamed to learn anything good.—Eccles. Rec., I, 236.

8 Brant Aertsen van Slichtenhorst, director of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, issues a protest against Director-Gen. Stuyvesant, in which he says that Stuyvesant has suffered "whole streets full of houses close under Fort New Amsterdam."—*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, XIV, 94. Stuyvesant had, in an arbitrary manner, ordered Van Slichtenhorst to remove a house at Fort Orange (Albany), on account of its alleged nearness to the fort there, and even sought to force demolition by sending up soldiers and sailors. Therefore, Van Slichtenhorst retorted in a second protest, on Oct. 20: "Tis wonderful that the General should take such needless trouble about the Patroon's Colony and worry himself about his buildings, whilst his Honor tolerates a number of streets full of buildings within thirty paces of Fort Manhattan where his government is, and does not apply a remedy there; more especially as the General himself writes under date of 29th of May, 1648, that he is already expecting a war with the English, which God avert."—Ibid., XIV, 95-96.

18 Traders have come over to New Netherland, undersold resident traders, and departed in the same year in which they arrived,
 "without bestowing or conferring any benefit on the Country;"
 while inhabitants who own property have had to bear the burdens of taxation. "Therefore, to prevent such destroyers of trade," it is judged by Stuyvesant and the council to be "proper and profitable for New Netherland and the Inhabitants thereof" that "henceforth those Merchants, Scots and Petty traders" who shall come over in ships from Holland, intending to trade "with Christians or Heathens by the large and small Measure, Ell and Weight," shall not be allowed to do business unless they take up their abode in the province for three consecutive years, and, in addition, build in New Amsterdam "a decent citizen dwelling, each according to his circumstances and means."—Law & Ord. N. Neth., 101-2; Rec. N. Am., I, 10. Objections by the directors of the company at Amsterdam to provisions of this nature were voiced in the correspondence of March 12, 1654 (N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 251-52), and the modification suggested by them was promulgated by the ordinance which established the great and small burgher right in New Amsterdam, on Jan. 30, 1657.—Law & Ord. N. Neth., 298-
 300. See also N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1885), I, et seq.

28 Some of the inhabitants of New Netherland having employed Indians and then dismissed them without pay, thereby inspiring a threat of summary vengeance from these Indians, Stuyvesant and the council warn the inhabitants "to pay them without contradiction," and to pay them for any future employment.—*Law &
 Ord. N. Neth.*, 103; Rec. N. Am., I, 11.

" The fire-wardens are ordered "to visit every house in this city of New Amsterdam and see that everyone is keeping his Chimney properly clean by sweeping, and to oblige those in default immediately to pay the fine of three Guilders."—Law & Ord. N. Neth., 102; Rec. N. Am., I, 10-11. See also Jan. 23.

Oct. 2 "Jeuriaen Hendricksen] agrees [to build] for Jan Damen a house two 6 feet long, with on both sides a passage way throughout;
 width, twenty-four feet beam; in front 11 feet high and in the rear 12 feet high, the floor being raised one foot in the rear and two feet in front. The front room 24 feet square, with a cellar underneath it. To lay and groove the attic floor; to wainscot the front room on all sides; 2 bedsteads, one in the front room and one in the chamber;
 a winding staircase, so that one can go from the cellar to the attic;
 the front gable to be perpendicular, the rear gable sloping; a window with mullion and transom [Cruys Cosijn] in the front room; also a mantelpiece. Jeuriaen Hendricksz must provide the roof frame of the house with split rafters and nail the laths. On each beam a loft bent." See also Addenda. Damen contracts to provide Hendricksen and his men with provisions and drink until the work is completed, and to pay, when done, 425 guilders down. The building operations are to "commence in eight weeks."—*Records
 N. Neth.* (trans. by A. J. F. Van Laer), III, 22 (N. Y. State Library).
 This contract was for building Damen's so-called "great house," whose modern site would be in the bed of Cedar St., immediately east of Broadway. This is one of the most detailed building contracts for a private individual which has been handed down from that period in New Amsterdam. See also Castello Plan, II: 339.

12 Jan Teunissen, sheriff of Brooklyn, is sentenced by the council for slander and absconding with the company's ferry-boat; he is to work 100 days for the company and 50 days for the church, and to give bail for the faithful performance of the work.—*Cal. Hist.
 MSS., Dutch*, 120. 12

14-24 "The Peace of Westphalia" brings to an end the "Thirty Years War" between the Catholic and Protestant factions of Europe. The independence of the United Provinces of The Netherlands is recognized by Spain, and the "balance of power" is secured. 14-24

26 Pieter vander Linden is appointed by Stuyvesant and the council as "vooresler" (lay reader) and "voorsanger" (precentor)
 of the church at New Amsterdam, in the place vacated by Jan Stevensen, at a salary of 150 florins per annum. He filled the place ad interim until a more capable person could be brought over from Holland.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Coun. Min.), IV, 420. 26

Nov. Apparently, Jan Claesz. was charged on the books of the company with £420 fn. the "Malle Smits Berg," which he now promises to have transferred to the name of Elcke Janz., having been paid £420 less £260. Did the West India Co. retain title to this land while Thomas Sandersen was in possession, or did it revert to the company after his death?—Records N. Neth., III, 24. Cf. Oct. 27.
 This land was originally in the possession of Thomas Sandersen, a smith, who lost his reason, from which fact the name of "Crazy smith's hill" was given to the elevation on his grant. See Manatus Maps, II: 189. Nov. 3

Dec. Egbert van Borsum made a deposition, on March 30, 1649, that, in December, 1648, when he was at the house of Willem Westerhuyzen, at New Haven, he "heard Cornelis Melyn say," in the presence of several Dutchmen and Englishmen, "that the High and Mighty Lords the States of the United Netherlands were greatly surprized that the English had not forcibly dragged Director Stuyvesant out of the Fort and hung him on the highest tree, and that twenty-five thousand guilders damages each were awarded to him, Melyn and Jochem Pietersen [Kuyter]. . . .
 Furthermore, Melyn said, . . . that he had seen letters with the States from which it appears that Mr. Stuyvesant had demanded from their High Mightinesses six to seven hundred soldiers to resist the English. To which letters their High Mightinesses and his Highness had answered, that it was not advisable to go to war with his neighbors for a foot of land. Melyn also said, I have brought Mr. Kieft to his grave; I shall surely bring Stuyvesant also there. The affiant declares that Melyn further indulged in other talk, so that he, the affiant, went away in order that he might no longer listen to the prattle."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III, 31 (N. Y. State Library). Dec. —

15 The communalty of New Amsterdam was admonished by the ordinance of July 25, 1647, to build at once decent houses upon their granted lots; but many persons were negligent. Moreover, it is now adjudged that their lots have been laid out too large and bigger than can be built upon by some of the inhabitants. Other persons are now desirous of building; yet scarcely a spot can be found on which a house can be built conveniently. Stuyvesant and the council order, therefore, that those who have been delict shall be notified "ooce more for the last time to erect proper buildings on their lots," or in default the lots will be disposed of to those who are inclined to build houses in New Amsterdam, in which case the original owners will be indemnified, "at the discretion of the Street Surveyors."—Law & Ord. N. Neth., 74, 105; Rec. N. Am., I, 12. 15

6-16 "Pride's Purge" is accomplished. "By military force the Long Parliament was cut down to a fraction of its number; the career begins of the mighty 'Rump,' so called in the coarse wit of the time because the rump was the 'sitting part'."—Hosmer, Life of Young Sir Henry Vance, 310. 6-16

1649

About this time, George Gardyne made the following observations respecting New Amsterdam: "To the southwest of New England, lyeth the Dutch Plantation. It hath good ground, and good ayr, but few of that nation inhabiting there, which maketh that there is few Plantations in the land, and but one Village, whose inhabitants are part English, and part Dutch. Here is resident the [sic] Governour appointed by the West India Company. This Village lyeth on Hudsons River in 40 and a half, three miles within the mouth of the River, and almost joyning to

- 1649 a Fort that hath Guns, but they are unmounted. There is the — Fort of Orange, 30 miles up the said River, and there is a mill to saw boards for the Colony; they have here indifferent plenty of English and Indian Corn, but the best profit is the trade with the natives for Bever, and other skins. Those that trade here pay 16 in the hundred Custom to the West India Company of Holland.
 These Dutch are mischievous neighbours, for with their Indian trade they supply the natives with Guns and Ammunition, which in time may prove their own confusion, and doth already prejudice their neighbours.—Gardiner, New World (1651), 93-94. For an account of this work, see Bibliography, Vol. V.
- The "packhuys" of the West India Co. (the pack-house or warehouse) was erected this year.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 105; Liber Patents, II: 73 (Albany); ibid., III: 102. The site is now covered by No. 33 Pearl St. It was confiscated in 1666, and became the first English custom-house.—Ibid., I: 99. Being in a ruinous condition, it was granted, July 14, 1752 (q. v.), to Archibald Kennedy. See C. C. and S. Plan, II: 265-66; Key to the Dutch

 III: 987; Pl. 174, Vol. III. For directions from the officers of the company in Holland regarding it, see Jan. 27.
- The "Old Church Yard" is a phrase used in the records of this year. It referred to the burial-ground of New Amsterdam, which was on the site of what is now Nos. 27 to 37 Broadway, extending westward to the west line of Church St., or high-water mark.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927; Castello Plan, II: 221-22.
- In this year, Jacob Hendricks Vaervanger (Varvanger) received a ground-brief for a lot extending from the present locality of William St. nearly to Hanover St., exactly bisected by Exchange Pl. On this parcel, part of the National City Bank building and a part of the Post building now stand.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls.
 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 333; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87,
 Vol. II, and II: 407.
- In this year, the "Breedren-Raedt," the earliest separate publication concerning New Netherland, was printed at Antwerp. For the history and contents of this work, see Bibliography, Vol. V.
- In this year, a body of Puritans found a settlement in Maryland, on the site of Annapolis.—Winsor, III: 535.
- Jan. The English house of commons resolves that, as representative 4th 14 of the people, it is the sole law-making power. See Jan. 30.
- 27 In a letter to Stuyvesant, the directors in Holland estimate that he must have received, since his arrival in New Netherland in 1647, "in values, money and goods about 170 to 180 thousand florins" ($68,000 to $72,000). They demand of him "a complete statement of the revenues and expenditures," and add: "Undoubtedly the erection of the church [in the fort] and what was needed to complete it and the repairs of the fortifications have cost something, but that cannot be so great a part of the aforesaid sum."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 105; cf. ibid., XIV: 119.
- The letter continues: "We cannot understand, why your Honor has begun to erect a storehouse 100 feet long by 19 feet in width, for we do not know, what it could be used for. It is true, you proposed, that the Company should open a salesroom there provided with all kinds of goods and you pointed out several measures for that purpose, for instance, to compel all private people to deliver the merchandises, which they import there, into the salesroom against a fair profit of 60 to 70 per cent."—Ibid., XIV: 105. For account of the pack-house, see 1649, supra.
- The directors further say: "You think, that if 10,000 fl. in small coins could be sent there [New Netherland], it might be advisable to drive the wampum gradually out of the country, but your own judgment must tell you, that in our present financial situation it cannot be done, the more so as we are much troubled by our inability to supply the provisions, which you so urgently called for. If we do not receive the proceeds from the sale of hides, we shall be obliged, to leave your requisition unfulfilled."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 108.
- Feb. The provincial council of New Netherland, on Jan. 16, appointed 1 Feb. 1 to be observed as a day of general fasting, prayer, and thanksgiving, on account of the conclusion of the treaty of peace of Westphalia, between Spain and the Netherlands (vide supra).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 121.
- 9 Charles I is beheaded on Jan. 30/ Feb. 9. See Feb. 5, and March 17.
- 5th 15 Charles II, son of Charles I, is proclaimed king at Edinburgh.
 On Jan. 1, 1651, he was crowned at Scone.
- Mar. A resolution is passed in the provincial council, as follows:
 4 "The farmers on the Island Manhatans seek by petition a free pasturage on the Island Manhatans between the plantation of Schepmoes and the fence of the Great Bouwery No. 1; the petitioners' request is provisionally granted, and [it is ordered] that no new plantation shall be made or allowed between said fencing."—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 426 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 110.
- Adriaen van der Donck is removed from the board of "Nine Men" for "committing Crimes lesae Majestatis."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 316; Brodhead, op. cit., I: 502.
- The "Rump Parliament" abolishes the office of king as "unnecessary, burdensome, and dangerous to the liberty, safety, and public interest of the [English] people."—Gardiner, Const. Docs. of the Puritan Revolution (3d ed.), 384-87. The house of lords was abolished two days later.—Ibid., 387-88.
- Francis Doughty, a dissenting preacher, receives a ground-brief for a lot, the situation of which, on modern maps, would be in Battery Park, south of Battery Pl. and west of State St. He conveyed it, on April 30, 1652, to Charles Morgan. On this lot stood one of the houses ordered demolished by Colve, in 1673, because it was too near the fort.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 125; Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 275; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 388.
- Hendrick Jansen (de Ruyter), from Utrecht, receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house, the site to-day of No. 15 Broadway.—See
Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 360.
- Stuyvesant having complained to the directors in Holland about the heavy duties imposed on tobacco raised in New Netherland, and, on Jan. 27, 1649, having obtained a concession that New Netherland tobacco should "henceforth not pay any more, than the tobacco coming from the Caribbean Islands, to wit 45 stivers for the hundred," the reduction was conceded, because they wished to offset a tobacco monopoly that was carried on by the Swedes on the Delaware. This resolution of the directors is now proclaimed by an ordinance, issued by Stuyvesant and the council, to be "affixed not only here at the Manhatans, but also in all other Colonies and Villages within this Jurisdiction," in the hope of encouraging farming.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 47; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 106-7.
- Barent Jansen receives a ground-brief for a house on a lot which is now part of 29-31 Stone St., including the westerly part of the Curtis building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol.
 II, and II: 401.
- Hendrick van Dyck receives a ground-brief for a lot and garden on the west side of Broadway, now at Nos. 45, 47, and 49
 Broadway.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II:
 223-24; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 362.
- Because the ordinance of June 12, 1646, relative to an estoppel on legal instruments that are not drawn and attested properly, has been disregarded by some private persons, another ordinance is proclaimed by Stuyvesant and the council, making null and void
 "all Affidavits, Interrogatories, or other Instruments serving as evidence," which have been written "by private Individuals and not confirmed by oath before the Court." Henceforth, all affidavits, contracts, testaments, agreements, and other important documents are to be written by the secretary or some other duly authorized person.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 108.
- Stuyvesant goes in person to the house of Domine Johaanes Cornelissen Backer (or Backerus) and officially orders him "not to read himself, or have read by any of the Church officers, from the pulpit or elsewhere in the church, at the request of any of the inhabitants, any writing, petition, or proposal having relation to the municipal or general government, whether generally or in particular," unless such writing has been signed by the director or the secretary, by order of the director and the council. Ecclesiastical affairs are excepted in the order.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV:
 114. The motive of this act of Stuyvesant is to prevent publication by the representatives of the commonality of their remonstrance against him.—Representation (1649), in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 351.
- Paulus Leendersen vander Grift receives a ground-brief for a lot on the west side of Broadway, now No. 39.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls.
 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 222-23; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 362. See also 1648. He is said "to have built a better dwelling-house here than anybody else."—Representation (1649), in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 339. This house was bought, demolished, and a new house erected on its site by Francois Rombouts, in 1671.—Liber Deeds, B: 184 (New York). See Landmark Map
Ref. Key, III: 953; and Pl. 174, Vol. III. See also May 14, 1649.

1649 Stuyvesant writes to Gov. Eaton of New Haven that the hand-board which marked the anchorage-ground off the shore of New May 26 Amsterdam has been blown down, and will not be re-erected.

 wealth and Free State."—Gardiner, *Const. Docs. of the Puritan

June 6 Juriaen Andriessen receives a ground-brief for a lot on Pearl St., now in the bed of State St. and forming the south-east corner of Pearl and State Sts., where the Chesebrough building now stands.

26 The "Nine Men" write to the states-general:
 "Great, Powerful, High and Mighty Sovereigns.

"After our distressed circumstances had forced and obliged us to represent the poor condition of this country and to pray for redress therein, we considered it proper to delegate also some persons whom we know and acknowledge to be honorable, honest and trustworthy; likewise well experienced in, and acquainted with, the circumstances of this country, in order that they may furnish your High Mightinesses, if such be your will, and pleasure, with further information and explanation on every subject & circumstance, and also to importune your High Mightinesses to grant seasonable relief and aid. We, therefore, hereby humbly entreat and request your High Mightinesses to be pleased to give credence in all things that they may do or say in the premises, to these persons, to wit, Adriaen van der Donck, Jacob van Couwenhoven, and Jan Evertse Bout, our Delegates and Agents; inasmuch as we know them for persons of honor and of good name and fame, also right well disposed towards the interest of this Country. With humble reverence we pray your High Mightinesses to be pleased to grant them a favorable audience, and we are and remain your High Mightinesses' faithful subjects."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 258.

This letter has only eight signatures, which is explained by the fact that Stuyvesant had expelled Van der Donck, the ninth man, from the board (see Mar. 15). Accompanying the letter was a Petition of the Delegates (the three men named in the letter), a Petition of the Commonalty of New Netherland, and The Remonstrance [or Representation] of New Netherland. All these, together with the Answer to the Remonstrance from New Netherland, made by Sec. Van Tienhoven in behalf of Stuyvesant, under date of Nov. 29, 1650, are preserved in the National Archives at The Hague, and translated in N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 258-318, 422-32.
 The delegates caused their Remonstrance, with wording slightly changed, to be printed under the title, Vertoogh van Nieu-Neder-Land, Wegens de Ghelegentheyd, Vruchoetbaerheit, en Soberen Staat deszelfs (The Hague, 1650). It is a translation of this pamphlet which appears in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 293-354.

The Petition of the Delegates embodies a request that the states-general, who "cannot well have leisure as a body, being occupied by other public business," will examine their documents, appoint a committee "to examine the said Petition and Remonstrance," and "hear the Petitioners verbally."

The Petition of the Commonalty of New Netherland begins with a recitation of the causes that have led to "a very poor and most low condition" of the province. These causes are stated to be:
 1. "Unsuitable government;" 2. "Scanty privileges and exemptions;" 3. "Onerous imposts of duties, exactions and such like;" 4. "Long Continued War;" 5. "The Loss of the Princess;"
 6. "A superabundance of Petty Traders and pedlars (Schotten en Chinezen) and a waot of Farmers and Farm servants;"
 7. "Great dearth in general;" 8. "the insufferable arrogance of the Natives or Indians, arising from our smaller numbers, etc." After waiting, they say, "loog in vain, for aid, redress and assistance from the Directors," they have "determined to fly for refuge" to the states-general. Among the things they desire is a "suitable municipal government, such as your High Mightinesses shall consider adapted to this Province, and somewhat resembling the laudable Government of our Fatherland." They also beseech the states-general "to supply New Netherland with sufficient population to enable it to support, sustain and defend itself against Indians and others who may disturb and invade it. . . . send some vessels hither in order that people, principally Farmers and Farm Servants may . . . be removed and conveyed gratuitously hither . . . order that all vessels proceeding and trading to those Northern parts of America, should touch first at the Manhattans in New Netherland, and bring with them as many persons as seasonably present themselves, and they can conveniently carry at suitable fixed rates." Again, they seek "Exemption from imposts, tents and burthens, which, at the first beginning, are disadvantageous and oppressive, until the country becomes populous and somewhat permanently established;" also, "permission to export, sell, and barter grain, timber and all other wares and merchandise the produce of the Country, every way and every where your High Mightinesses have allies and have granted to the Nether-landers the privilege of trade and resort." Another request they make is that the home government "establish the Boundaries of this Country, both north and south, that all causes of difference, discord and trouble may be cut off and prevented: that your subjects may live and dwell in peace and quietness and enjoy their liberty in trade and commerce within the established boundaries;" also, "preserve us in peace with the neighboring Republics, Colonies, and other your High Mightinesses' allies, so that we may pursue our country's trade, without let or hindrance, under proper regulations from your High Mightinesses, as well along the coast from Terra Nova to Cape Florida, as to the West Indies and to Europe, wherever the Lord our God shall be pleased to permit."
 They say, finally, that if the states-general should "quarter a company or two of Soldiers here for the defence of those dwelling outside and in newly added plantations and colonies," it would "make manifest your High Mightinesses' earnest support of this Province to those who may be incredulous on that point."—*N. Y.
 Col. Docs.*, I: 259-61.

As a further evidence that the petitioners intended to leave nothing undone to win over the home government to their cause, there is at The Hague another document entitled Observations on the preceding Petition (Pl. 8, Vol. IV). This takes the form of a running commentary on almost every clause in the petition. The first comment—an interesting one—is on the use of the word
 "Province" in the first line of the petition, viz. "It is called a Province because it was invested by their High Mightinesses with the Arms of an Earl." Then, for proof that the province has "attained to a very poor and low condition," the government is referred to the Remonstrance. Again, regarding "Scanty Privileges and Exemptions," this comment is made: "The Company hath never adhered strictly to any privileges in New Netherland, but always altered those granted to suit its own convenience (ad proprium commodum). This hath decreased the population." In explanation of "Onerous imposts of duties," they say: "Before we can get our goods home we must pay 16, 4<sup>2</sup>, and 8, making 28<sup>2</sup> per cent, besides the loss in the shifting in and out of the stores. For, besides the trouble and expense, the Company's servants, who inspect quasi correctly the goods, pay not the least regard, but rather throw them down than lift them up." The 1649 following comment is made on the "Long continued war": "Most July of the people have lost thereby all they had and expected to get.

26 This war [see Feb. 25-26, 1643] was, also, unjust and begun contra jus gentium. Why? The Americans [Indians] gave us no pretext for it. Secondly, it was for no reason nor in any real respect necessary. Thirdly, Those against whom we waged war were ten times, yea, more than that, stronger than we who commenced hostilities." What is meant by "The loss of the Princess" is thus explained: "For in her were lost very exact Maps; fully a hundred different samples of Minerals and numerous Remonstrances and accounts of New Netherland" (see Sept. 27, 1647). The "petty traders," they say, "reap immense profit and exhaust the country without adding anything to its population or security. But if they skim a little fat from the pot, they can take again to their heels." Remarkable upon the "arrogance of the Natives or Indians," they say, in part: "It has been so long proclaimed, in New Netherland, that mere people were coming, that the Indians laugh at it, and say: 'The Dutch do nothing but lie.'" The following comment goes with their appeal for some measures on the part of the home government that will increase the population: "Were there a thousand or fifteen hundred inhabitants in New Netherland, or even more, the Indians or the Swedes would never think or dream of daring to offer us any insult." Arguing for the gratuitous transportation of "Farmers and Farm servants," they say: "For traders and others who have means, can go and come at their own expense, without any one's help." They strengthen their appeal to be allowed to trade "every way and every where" by calling attention to the fact that "Our neighbors in New England . . .
trade where they list without knowing either duty or inspection." Regarding the settlement of boundaries, they say: "The English in that quarter readily admit that the country is justly ours; but their pretence [is] the richness of the land and that it lies waste;
also, the Company will do nothing but protest, which they disregard, when admonished. Therefore, this matter is very urgent, if we are not to be scoffed at by that nation and lose the country.
To attack them by force is too dangerous and inexpedient for New Netherland. But their own offer is not unworthy consideration; for they frankly say—We have taken the land which was entirely, or for the most part, waste, and now occupy it; ye say
'tis your's. Let us remain friends like our sovereigns, and refer this question to both your, and our superiors; what they do or order in the premises, we must admit, and neither of us will gain anything by talk." They define "your High Mightinesses' allies" as "the English who are beyond our limits. . . . New France, Virginia and the Carribean West India Islands, &c., known to your High Mightinesses better than to us." And why, they ask, do they want a "suitable municipal government? Forsooth, that those interested in the country may also attend to its government and keep a watchful eye over it, without its being intrusted to a set of hairbrained people, such as the Company flings thither, but to such as obtain in New England." They also think it advisable to acquaint the states-general with the kind of government found in New England, thus: "Each town, no matter how small, hath its own court and jurisdiction, also a voice in the Capital, and elects its own officers. Few taxes are imposed, and these only by general consent. In their capital they have a Governor, a Deputy (that is, Vice) Governor, a Constable, that is Judge, a Secretary and two Provincial Councillors. In the individual towns they have a Constable, a Clerk and Selectmen. They call all these Magistrates, and,—though they depend on the people, treat them with very great respect. Each town chooses, or may choose, its Magistrates annually, yet they very rarely change them. The Governor and Deputy are chosen annually by the entire province, although some have been continued from the beginning to their departure, or during their lives. . . . Nevertheless the People have a new election every year, and have power to make a change; and they would make a change in case of improper behavior, and that they therefore say is the bridle of their great men. This is the mode of their election or choosing: Each town consults first by itself and sends then its deputies, and all these delegates choose the Governor, and he is so for that year without any longer assurance. In the year following there is a new election, in form as stated, and every time the most votes carry it; these are collected in writing; but if a Governor retires, he remains Deputy Governor."—*N. Y. Col.

The Representation [or Remonstrance] of New Netherland (Vertoogh van Nieuw Nederland) is a bold arraignment of the incompetent administrations of Kieft and Stuyvesant. From internal evidence, as well as collateral documentary statements, it is evident that it was largely the work of Adriaen vander Donck, whose name heads the list of signers.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 316, 421; XIV: 110-14.
Broodhead states that he transcribed this document "from the authenticated copy of the Remonstrance, containing 83 pages, remaining in the Royal Archives at the Hague, in the Lekelias of the States General; Rubric Wet Indische Compagnie, No. 30; 4th division of the Bundle." For the bibliographical status of this work, first printed in 1650, see Bibliography, Vol. V.

A translation of the 83-page manuscript appears in *N. Y. Col.
Docs.*, I: 268-318; another translation, very different in its wording, is in Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 292, 293-354. The latter translation, to which the more accurate title Representation is given, is cited in the following items.

Among the allegations contained in the Representation, we find it stated that the grist-mill of the West India Co. stands so near Fort Amsterdam that the church in the fort shuts off the southeast wind and prevents the mill from grinding, which has precipitated a bread famine. The mill is said to be so rotten from a leaky roof that it cannot go with more than two arms.—Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 326. Secretary Van Tienhoven, answering this complaint, said that the walls of the fort had shut off the wind even "before the church was built."— Jameson, op. cit., 362. This mill still appears on the Castello Plan, of 1660 (Pl. 82-a, Vol. II) and on the so-called "Duke's Plan," of 1661 (Pl. 10, Vol. I); but not on the Nicolls Plan and survey, of circa 1665 (Pl. 10A, Vol. I). The evidence of scarcity of bread at this time is shown by an ordinance passed on Nov 8 (*Laws & Ord.
N. Neth.*, 111-13).

In the Representation, the remonstrants say, concerning educational affairs in New Amsterdam: "The bowl has been going round a long time for the purpose of erecting a common school and it has been built with words, but as yet the first stone is not laid.
Some materials only are provided. The money, nevertheless, given for the purpose, has already found its way out and is mostly spent; or may even fall short, and for this purpose also no fund invested in real estate has ever been built up."—Jameson, *Nar.
N. Neth.*, 327. They recommend the following reform: "There should be a public school, provided with at least two good masters, so that first of all in so wild a country, where there are many loose people, the youth be well taught and brought up, not only in reading and writing, but also in the knowledge and fear of the Lord. As it is now, the school is kept very irregularly, one and another keeping it according to his pleasure and as long as he thinks proper."—Ibid., 353.

Another thing protested to the states-general in the Representation is that Fort Amsterdam "lies like a molehill or a tottering wall, on which there is not one gun-carriage or one piece of cannon in a suitable frame or on a good platform;" that from the first it has been declared that it "ought to be repaired, laid in five angles, and put in a royal condition;" that the "commonalty's men have been addressed for money for that purpose, but they have excused themselves on the ground that the people are poor;" that everyone, too, is "discontented" and fears that if the director once has his fort to rely on, he will be "more cruel and severe," and, between the two, nothing has been done.—Ibid., 331.

In the Representation, the "Eleven Men" refer thus to wamppump: "The payment in zeebant, which is the currency here, has never been placed upon a good footing, although the commonalty requested it, and showed how it should be regulated, assigning numerous reasons therefor. But there is always misunderstanding and discontent, and if anything is said before the Director of these matters more than pleases him, very wicked and spiteful words are returned."—Ibid., 331. See April 18, 1641; and Nov. 30, 1647.

Another thing complained of in the Remonstrance is that, although "Paulus Lenaertsen" has "small wages," he has, nevertheless, "built a better dwelling-house here than anybody else," and favouritism and governmental corruption are intimated.— Ibid., 339. This reference has been associated by Innes (New Amsterdam and Its People, 51) with the warehouse of Paulus Leen-dertsen vander Grift "upon 't Water" (Pearl St.); but this theory is untenable, because that structure had not yet been built. The complaint clearly relates to his private dwelling-house, on the 1649 west side of Broadway (now Nos. 39-43), as is shown by the July records. A ground-brief for the site of this residential lot 28 was obtained by Vander Grift on May 14, 1649, as appears by a recital in a confirmation from Gov. Nicolls, of June 1, 1667.—Liber Patents, II, 73, in office of sec. of state, Albany. On the other hand, he obtained a ground-brief on July 19, 1649, for a lot on the Strand of the East River (now No. 31 Pearl St.), adjoining the "pack-huys" of the West India Co., and on July 25, 1650, Stuyvesant issued a further grant permitting him to use the abutting stone wall of the "pack huys" as a party wall, which shows that Vander Grift's warehouse was not built before that date.—Confirmation of Nicolls, July 13, 1667, in Liber Patents, II, 73, and confirmation of Lovelace, Aug. 12, 1671, in ibid., III, 102. In Oct., 1671, the warehouse property was conveyed by Johannes van Brugh, acting as the agent of Vander Grift, then out of the country, to Dr. Jacob Hendricksen Varrevanger. This deed conveyed also a passage of four feet in common between this lot and the property of Cornelis Steenwyck to the west, which abutting lot included a house, occupied by Rev.

 Samuel Drius at the time.—Liber B: 186 (register's office, N. Y.
 Co.). Steenwyck, in 1674, complained, in a petition, because the schepens had awarded the passage or alley to Varrevanger, claiming that his patent and the declaration of the official survey proved that half of the alley belonged to him. In this document, Steenwyck said: "It appears clearly from the three patents shown to your Honors that long after the same were obtained and the three houses built, Paulus Leendertz obtained his patent for the lot lying between those houses and the Company's Warehouse, upon which [lot] he erected a building extending to the extreme edge of the Strand in front."—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIII: 398 (Albany; translated from a charred page in Dutch).

The Representation was received by the states-general on Oct. 13, and referred to the "Deputies for the affairs of the West India Company" (N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 319-20). Many documents are preserved which testify to the discussion aroused (ibid., I: 331-47, 385-86, 387-99, 420-32). After the departure of his colleagues, Vander Donck continued to plead for the reforms, and did not fail to arouse the ill will of the West India Co., which went indeed so far as to detain him after he wished to leave (ibid., I: 476). Of the controversy and its results, Jameson says: "So effective an exposition of the colony's value and of its misgovernment could not fail to awaken consideration and sympathy. . . . a few concessions were made—the export duty on tobacco was taken off, and a municipal government allowed to New Amsterdam (see Feb. 2, 1653). . . . But no serious alteration in the provincial government resulted. "Our Grand Duke of Muscovy," wrote one of Stuyvesant's subordinates to Van der Donck, "keeps on as of old."
 Disaffection among the Dutch settlers never ceased till the English conquest."—Nar. N. Neth., 291. For Secretary Van Tienhoven's reply to the Representation, see Nov. 29, 1650.

Mrs. Van Rensselaer, in Hist. City of N. Y., Vol. I, Chap. IX, makes observations respecting both local and intercolonial conditions disclosed in the Remonstrance and other documents relating to New Netherland in 1649. These documents show "that the Dutch and semi-Dutch inhabitants of Manhattan and its neighborhood were making their struggle for autonomy unsupported.
 . . . It is not even indirectly true, as has often been said since Bancroft so affirmed that the 'large emigration from New England' inspired New Netherland's desire for self-government."

Aug. 2 As Domine Johannes Cornelissen Backer (or Backerus) is on the point of returning to Holland (see July 22, 1647), the council resolves to request Domine Johannes Megapolensis, late of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, to "supply" the church of New Amsterdam, "that at least one clergyman remain in this province among the Dutch people, both for this capital and Rensselaer's Colony, were it only for administering Baptism to the children who are commonly presented here every Sunday at the Manhattans for baptism alone, sometimes one, sometimes 2, yea even 3 and 4 together."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 116. Megapolensis had come to New Netherland in 1642, under a contract to serve in Rensselaerswyck for six years. His time had expired, and, like Backer, he was awaiting a ship at New Amsterdam in which to return to Holland.
 At this juncture, Stuyvesant and the council urge him to enter the service of the West India Co., as minister of the church at Manhattan, and to this he consents. He served here until his death, in January, 1670.—Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 606-8, 623, 828; Eccles. Rec., I: 153-57, 226, 227, 243, 248-52, 261-66, 607.

Aug. 20 Adriaen Jansen van Ipenadam, "at present schoolmaster here on the Island of Manhattan," gives power of attorney to "the worthy Sybolt Claesen, at present about to depart on a voyage to Fotherland," to collect "such sum of money, means, effects and goods as may be coming to him, the principal, by inheritance from his friends [relatives], at Leyden, or elsewhere."—Records N. Neth.
 (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 60 (N. Y. State Library). This is believed to be the earliest certain reference to a private schoolmaster in New Netherland. It is also the only known record relating to Ipenadam as a schoolmaster in New Amsterdam. See Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools in N. Neth., III; for biography, see Early Records of Albany, III: 15-18.

Stuyvesant, as elder of the church of New Amsterdam, and on behalf of its consistory, writes to the classis of Amsterdam, among other things, as follows: "We need a pious and diligent schoolmaster and preacher. A year has now passed since we have been deprived of such help. By this our young people have gone backward, even to grow wild—quae nihil agendo male agere discit.
 In view of the fact that a good schoolmaster is not less needed here than a good preacher, as we have above explained in detail to your Reverences and to the Hon. Directors, we rely upon your usual excellent facilities and pious zeal for securing the one, and a favorable decision in the other. We hope, that in a short time we shall have occasion to thank you for both."—Eccles. Rec., I:
 263. In compliance with this appeal, Willem Vestius, Vestenzor, or Vestiens, was appointed, and he sailed in the "Valckenier" (Falconer), in April, 1650. He officiated as schoolmaster, preacher, sexton, and comforter of the sick, but his services were considered unsatisfactory by the authorities in New Amsterdam. When he applied, in 1654, for an increase of salary, he was told: "If the service did not suit him, he might ask for his discharge." In Nov., 1654, he asked the classis of Amsterdam for his release, and his petition was presented to the council at Manhattan on Jan. 26, 1655. His resignation was recorded on March 23d, when Harmen van Hobooken was appointed his successor. He was back in Holland in June, when he applied for a place in the East Indies.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 119, 123-24; Eccles. Rec., I: 331, 336, 338; letter of Megapolensis, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 391-92; Cal.
Hist. MSS., Dutch, 145, 147.

Gerrit Jansen van Oldenburgh conveys to Thomas Hall, by deed recorded June 18, 1653 (Liber HH: 35-a, Albany), a piece of land containing 25½ morgens and 125 rods, together with a valley hitherto occupied by the farm called the Pannebackers', or Bouwry
 No. 5. (This should be No. 4.) Hall subsequently—that is, on Oct. 30, 1662—conveyed this land by deed, with additional property, to Cornelis Steenwyck and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, who were confirmed by Nicolls in its possession in March, 1666.—
Liber Patents, IV: 17 (Albany). See Feb. 17, 1646; and The Manatus Maps, II: 188-89.

A deed is executed whereby Gerrit Jansen exchanges the land called the "Mallesmitsbergh" for a house and farm belonging to Thomas Hall. Thomas Hall takes the land, dwelling-house, &c., near the bouwery of Cornelis Claessen Swits and Stille. The "Mallesmitsbergh" was the "Crazy Smith's Hill," formerly occupied by Thomas Sanders, and then the property of Thomas Hall.—
Dutch MSS., III: 68 (Albany). For Smith's Hill, see Pl. 175, Vol. III (Block 198).

Nov. 8 Scarcity of crops and a consequent scarcity of bread among the inhabitants during the past year induce Stuyvesant and the council to ordain that, "until further Order and a larger supply of grain," no brewer will be permitted "to malt or brew any Wheat," on pain of forfeiture and "an arbitrary penalty." Exportation from New Netherland of wheat, rye, or baked bread is for the time interdicted. By another ordinance, of this date, the baking of white bread and cakes for sale to inhabitants or Indians is stopped for a time, but allowed for private consumption. An assize on bread, the first recorded for New Netherland, is established.—
Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 111-13; Rec. N. Am., I: 13-15.

Frauds and smuggling having been carried on to defraud the excise, an ordinance is passed by Stuyvesant and the council forbidding all brewers to "tap, sell or give away by the small measure any Beer, Wine or Liqueur, not even to Boarders," except to the latter during meal times. Moreover, brewers are not to deliver their product unless they have first obtained a permit from the chief clerk of the provincial secretary.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 110-11; Rec. N. Am., I: 13.

1650

- The appearance of New Amsterdam at this time is shown by a wash drawing dated 1650 and signed by Laurens Block. This drawing, which is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., is reproduced and described as Pl. 4-a, Vol. I. See also Pl. 6, Vol. I.
- The prototype (drawing) of the Vischer series of views of New Amsterdam was made at a slightly later period, probably in 1651-3. It is reproduced and described as the Frontispiece of Vol. I. See also Pls. 7-b, 7A, 8, Vol. I. Perhaps the earliest engraved view of this type is one probably engraved before 1664, having a wide foreground full of canoes and boats, one of three known copies which is owned by Mr. Wm. G. Kelsa, Jr.

An official list of the employees of the West India Company in New Netherland, in the handwriting of Haas Bontemantel, one of the directors at Amsterdam (see reproduction on Pl. 8, Vol. IV), may be summarized as follows: Director Petrus Stuyvesant, salary 250 guilders monthly, and subsistence 900 guilders per annum; Lubbert van Dincklagen, vice director, salary 120 guilders per month, and no allowance for subsistence; Fiscal Hendrick van Dyck, salary 60 guilders per month, and no allowance for subsistence; Joannes la Montagne, councillor, salary 50 guilders per month, and subsistence 200 guilders per annum; Secretary Cornelis van Tienhoven, salary 36 guilders per month, and subsistence 200 guilders per annum; Commissary Adriaen de Kyser, salary 36 guilders per month, and subsistence 200 guilders per annum; the supercargo, 18 guilders, and 120 guilders board money; Captain-Lieutenant Brian Nutton, 50 guilders, and 200 guilders subsistence per annum; the commies at Fort Hope, Gysbert van Dyck [sic for op Dyck], 30 guilders, and 150 guilders board money; Barbier [surgeon] Jacob Hendricksz., 20 guilders, and 100 guilders board money per annum; an ensign, 42 guilders, and 200 guilders subsistence per annum; Sergeant Daniel Litschoe, 18 guilders, and 100 guilders subsistence per annum; a corporal, 18 guilders, and 100 guilders subsistence per annum; a cadet [Adelborst], 10 guilders, and 100 guilders subsistence per annum; foreman of the labourers at Fort Nassau, 10 guilders, and 80 guilders board money per annum; clerk, 20 guilders, and 100 guilders board money per annum; soldiers, 8 to 9 guilders, and 75 guilders subsistence per annum; court messenger, 230 guilders per annum; keeper of the negroes, 25 guilders, and 100 guilders board money per annum; a midwife, 100 guilders per annum; the commies at Fort Orange, Carel van Brugge [Charles Bridge], 50 guilders, and 200 guilders board money per annum; a precursor, no amounts given; a schoolmaster, 35 guilders, and 100 guilders board money per annum; 20 preachers, each 100 guilders per month, and 40 guilders per month board money.—N. Neth Papers, No. 1223, in N. Y. Pub. Library. In the same Collection, No. 1221, there is a similar, though shorter, list, undated, but about 1654, or 1655, which includes, among particular items the city court, three clergymen, and 250 soldiers. See also, Dec. 15, 1644, and Feb. 2, 1653.

— Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift builds a warehouse upon the Strand (Liber Patents, III: 102, Albany), on the site of the present No. 31 Pearl St. It is shown on the Frontispiece, and on Pls. 8-a and 9, Vol. I. See also Castello Plan, II: 265; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963.

Jan. 27 In a "Short Digest," exhibited at a meeting of deputies of the states-general, reference is made to wampum as money, thus: "Neither has any order been made relative . . . to the currency in wampum or coin, notwithstanding the people have petitioned and shown how it ought and could be effected."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 336. See also April 18, 1641; Nov. 30, 1647; Jan. 27 and July 28, 1649.

31 The following reference to wampum as money is made in the answer of the West India Co. to the Remonstrance from New Netherland: "Heretofore there has been no currency but Wampum among the common people, in New Netherland; the Wampum which formerly passed at the rate of four for a stiver, was reduced to six."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 344. See Jan. 27, 1650.

Feb. 7 It having been found that "divers clandestine abuses and Frauds" have been going on in the sale and transfer of real estate, "such as Houses, Gardens, House lots and other lands, to the serious injury of Creditors," an ordinance is passed by Stuyvesant and the council for preventing these abuses. This edict charges the provincial secretary, or in his absence the chief clerk, "not to pass nor sign any Deed of Real Estate" until it has been "examined and approved by the Director and Council" on a regular court day, and declares null and void "all Contracts and Conveyances" passed "without their approbation, ratification and signature."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 114; Rec. N. Am., I: 15.

The directors at Amsterdam complain in a letter to Stuyvesant against the land claims of Wouter van Twiller and others in New Netherland. Among other things, they say that Van Twiller "took the whole of Nut [Governors] Island and Hellgate without either planting or building on the former during the whole time, that he was bound to do so," and they intend, therefore, "to assert, that their rights have lapsed and that the said colonies" have reverted to the company.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 121; March 21, 1651, in ibid., XIII: 27. See also July 1, 1652.

Replying to a letter of Stuyvesant, the directors at Amsterdam write: "You say that the late Director [Kieft] has granted patents for four or five boweries across the Fresh Water, and that you cannot find, that any advantage accrued therefrom for the Company; that further the settlers are heavily indebted to and great enemies of the Company; this matter must be examined into, but we do not intend to disturb any one in his rights because of our own troubles; we repeat only, that in a new country, with only a small population, minor matters must be overlooked."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 121.

In Secretary Van Tienhoven's document of information delivered to the states-general, he says that "the [Indians] mine of New Netherland" wampum is at the "point,"—that is Montauk Point on Long Island.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 365.

Wolphert Webber receives a ground-brief for a lot, which is described under date of Nov. 25, 1686 (q. v.), when the same was patented to William Merritt. On modern maps, this tract would lie generally between Park Row and Madison St., and Pearl and Oliver Sts.—See Pl. 174, Vol. III.

In a report made by a committee of the states-general, entitled a "Provisional Order respecting the Government, Preservation and Peopling of New Netherland," it is recommended, among other things, that there be granted "within the city of New Amsterdam a municipal government, consisting of one Sheriff, two Burgomasters and five Schepens," and that the "Nine Men" should in the meantime "continue three years longer, and have jurisdiction over small causes arising between Man and Man, to adjudicate definitely on suits not exceeding the sum of fifty guilders and on higher amounts under privilege of appeal."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 391. This was the foundation on which the municipal concessions of 1653 were built. It was the direct result of the Remonstrance of 1649 (see July 28).

An ordinance is passed amending the ordinance of Nov. 8, 1649, for regulating the baking and sale of bread.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 115; Rec. N. Am., I: 15.

Johannes Megapolensis receives a ground-brief for a lot west of what is now the junction of South William and Beaver Sts., running through the block from one street to the other.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 301; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 399.

Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance against the obstruction of streets, paths, and highways, by felling trees or placing stones in them, and requiring that the same be kept passable. The full text of the ordinance is lost, but the substance is given in Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 114, 345; and in Rec. N. Am., II: 162.

An unknown grant, probably William Fredericksen (Bout?), receives a ground-brief for land at the present south-west corner of Morris St. and Broadway.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 361.

Owing to the circulation of fraudulent wampum, and because of the daily depreciation of the loose wampum, which has become so poor in quality that it is often rejected by traders, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance which provides that no wampum except that strung on a cord shall be considered good pay. The rates are fixed at six white or three black beads to the stiver, or, if the wampum is of poor quality, then eight white or four black beads to a stiver.—Rec. N. Am., I: 15-16; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 115-16. See also Man. Com. Conn. (1855), 547. See, further, Sept. 14, 1650; April 4, 1652.

Fort New Amsterdam, "formerly in tolerable condition," having been considerably "trodden down by Hogs, Goats and Sheep," men are now engaged "in repairing and restoring the same." In order to prevent a repetition of this damage, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance, in which every inhabitant is warned that

1690 no "Hogs, Sheep, Goats, Horses or Cows" are to be large June 27 a herder or driver, except within their own fenced lots or farms, anywhere between the fort, the company's farm at the end of the Heeren Wegh (Broadway), and the house of Isaac Allerton (Peck Slip). There are two translations of this edict, with material variations.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 118-19; Rec. N. Am., I: 16.
For evidence that the ordinance was unheeded and that the rainy conditions continued, see Nov. 15, 1651; Feb. 12, 1652, etc.
July 24 Stuyvesant is informed in a letter from the directors at Amsterdam that "many free people" have taken passage on two ships, the "Fortuyyn" and the "Jaeger," destined for New Netherland, and he is advised to "allot to each according to his capacities and family sufficient quantities of land, where they choose, but not on land reserved by the Exemptions for the Company, as for instance at Pavonia, which the Company bought in for certain reasons."
The directors add that it looks as though many people would go over by every ship, and they desire Stuyvesant to "accommodate all newcomers as well as possible and above all govern the people with the utmost caution and leniency."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV:
126.

26 Jan Martyn receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present north-east corner of Greenwich St. and Battery Pl., on which part of the Washington building stands.—See Castello Plan,

C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 359.

Sept. 10 Augustine Heerman, citing the arbitrariness of Stuyvesant toward the commonalty, writes: "I had, indeed, brought a flag with me for the Burghers [of New Amsterdam], but Stuyvesant will not allow it to be carried."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 445.

12 In the minutes of the chief participants of the West India Co. at Amsterdam is a record, under date of Nov. 3, 1650, concerning communications from New Netherland, as follows: "Chairman reads letters from New Netherland arrived by the ship Valckenier, signed by Director Peter Stuyvesante, dated Sept. 12, 1650, Manhattes in N. N. Wrote by two earlier vessels, Blommaert and Graeve van Holland. Maquas [Mohawks] have taken some Frenchmen prisoners and threaten to burn them at the stake unless they are ransomed, in which Stuyvesant foresees trouble, as he does not wish to encourage them in doing so. Asks for 30 soldiers, 20 sailors, 3 ship carpenters and some supplies. Ship Swool repaired; yacht
Prins Willem gone to Boston for salt; De Liefde not repaired owing to lack of supplies. Carpenters ask fl. 4 a day and do as they please. Hopes to put Fort Amsterdam soon in good condition (volle fatsoen). Confiscated a small ship. Asks for money. Aug.
Heermans, coming from Virginia, passed Manhattan with his cargo, going to New England, and returned with his empty ship, to the great damage of the Company. Van Twiller and Corlaer have from 1600 to 2000 morgens of land on Long Island; Wolfert Gerritsz and Hudde also 1600 or 1800 morgens. They can not cultivate them; land lies idle, to the damage of the Company.
On Staten Island, where Cor: Melyn is patroon, there are but two families and but 8 morgens cultivated. Patroon should have 50 persons. Melyn has not 1/6 thereof. Many private traders who came over in the Valckenier spoil the trade by giving fl. 11 for the beaver. Dated: 1650, 15 August, from the Manhattes.
Signed: P. Stuyvesant Jacob Kap.

The dates here involved, namely Aug. 15 and Sept. 12, 1650, represent those of two different letters from Stuyvesant, condensed in the minutes quoted; but the minutes do not differentiate the contents of the letters. The reply of the directors at Amsterdam, dated March 21, 1651 (q. v.), helps us to understand the subjects alluded to (see N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 131, ff).—Records of old West India Co., at the Hague, No. 17 (lettered "N<sup>o</sup> 5 Hooftparticipantsboek"), fol. 26-26 verso, trans. by A. J. F.
van Laer.

14 The ordinance of May 30 of this year, so far as it relates to poorly strung wampum, is not observed, as the traders refuse to accept it as currency. Stuyvesant and the council, therefore, issue another ordinance, in which they command the acceptance by everyone of "the poor strung Wampum . . . for small and daily necessary commodities required for housekeeping, as a currency to the amount of Twelve guilders and under only,"
and in proportionately increased amounts for mixed qualities.
—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 117-18. See May 30, 1650.

19-29 Articles of agreement are concluded at Hartford, Conn., "between the Arbitrators of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Commissioners of the United Colonies and Petrus Stuyvesant, Director of New Netherland." An extract from these articles, with respect to the boundary line "between the United English Colonies, and the Dutch Province of New Netherland," shows the following bounds:

"1. That on Long Island, a line drawn from the western-most part of Oyster bay, and thence in a direct and straight course to the sea shore, shall be the boundary between the Dutch and English on Long Island; the Eastern part for the English, and the western part for the Dutch.

"2. The boundary on the Mainland shall begin on the west side of Greenwich bay, being about four miles from Stamford, and thence run inland in a northerly course Twenty miles, provided it shall not come within ten miles of the North river; after that as it shall be agreed upon by the two Governors—i. e., of the Dutch and New Haven; and 'tis agreed that the Dutch shall not at any time hereafter build any houses within six miles of the said line; the inhabitants of Greenwich to remain until further order and consideration under the government of the Dutch.

"3. The Dutch shall hold and occupy the land at Hartford which they now actually possess, known by divers marks and tokens, and all the remaining lands on both sides of the Fresh river to belong and remain to the English there. And it is in like manner agreed that the aforesaid Boundary both on the island and mainland shall be observed and kept inviolate both by the United English Colonies and the Dutch Nation, without any further extension or trouble on either side, until there be a final conclusion determined upon in Europe, by the mutual consent of both the States of England and Holland."

The articles also provide: "Concerning the proposition of a closer union and friendship between the English and the Dutch Nation in these parts, especially against a common enemy: We judge it to be worthy of good consideration by the United Colonies, and in like manner, desire it may be communicated and recommended to them, that a resolution therein may be taken at the next annual meeting of the Commissioners." These articles of agreement, since known as the Treaty of Hartford, are signed by Symon Broadstreete and Thomas Prence for the English, and Thomas Willet and George Baxter for the Dutch.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 611-12; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 215; Bowen,
The Boundry Disputes of Conn. (1882), 17, 69 et seq.; Bradhead,
Hist. State of N. Y., I: 518-21.

On Nov. 26 (q. v.), Stuyvesant sent to Amsterdam a report of this meeting. The treaty was ratified by the states-general on Feb. 22, 1656 (q. v.).

William II, stadtholder of The Netherlands, dies, "a victim to his own intemperance."

Stuyvesant sends to the Amsterdam chamber of the West India
Co. a report of the transactions of the commissioners of the English colonies, whom he joined at their appointed meeting "at Herford [Hartford] on the Fresh river" (Connecticut River) to consider a provisional boundary (see Sept. 19). At this meeting, there was a discussion "respecting the formation of a neighborly union in form of a league or guarantee against the offensive insolence and arrogance of the Barbarians and Natives." Stuyvesant states that the English commissioners "appeared to us disposed" in favour of the project; "But as the English nation is so much stronger than ours in these parts, I proposed that the Commissioners in such extremity, whether defensive or offensive, ought to bring a double number at least to our single quota.
To which they replied, that they then ought to have a double vote in declaring the lawfulness of the defence, or offence; this their High Mightinesses and the Company might consider disreputable."

This document is endorsed: "Provisional Boundary between the English and our Natioon agreed upon at the Meeting of the Colonies at Herfort A<sup>o</sup> 1650 [see Sept. 19], respecting the lands situate in the North part of America; whereof our portion under the Director and Charter of the West India Company, is now named New Netherland, and that portion belonging to the English, namely, the Country at the South, is by them called Virginia; the other Countries taken up by them are named New England."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 548-49; see also 566; II: 384.

In a written statement, prepared at The Hague and bearing this date, Cornelis van Tienhoven, the secretary of the director and council of New Netherland, makes official answer to the Representation or Remonstrance of Van der Donck and his associates (see 1650 July 28, 1649). Among the noteworthy observations of this

Nov. "Answer" are the following:

29 " . . . These persons complain because they considered the Company's fort not worthy of a church. Before the church was built, the grist-mill could not grind with a south-east wind, because the wind was shut off by the walls of the fort."

The new school is not yet built; but "a place has been selected for a school, where the school is kept by Jan Cornelissen," while other schoolmasters keep school in hired houses. There is no Latin school or academy. (See also Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools of New Neth., 95.)

The deacons are responsible for the management of the poor fund. The taxes imposed in New Netherland are compared with those in New England.

"It will not appear, either now or in the future, that 30,000 guilders were collected from the commonality in Stuyvesant's time; for nothing is received besides the beer and wine excise, which amounts to about 4,000 guilders a year on the Manhatans. From the other villages situated around it there is little or nothing collected, because there are no taxpayers, except one at the Ferry [the hamlet opposite Manhattan on the East River], and one at Flushing." (See also N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 425.)

Answering still another point in the Representation, Van Tienhoven writes: "Who are they who have complained about the haughtiness of Stuyvesant? I think they are such as seek to live without law or rule." In this connection he adds later: "Nobody can prove that Director Stuyvesant has used foul language to, or rallied at as clowns, any persons of respectability who have treated him decently. It may be that some profligate has given the Director, if he has used any bad words to him, cause to do so."

In regard to the use of wampum as money, he says: "Their complaint that no regulation was made in relation to sewan is untrue. During the time of Director Kieft [see April 18, 1641] good sewan passed at four for a stiver, and the loose bits were fixed at six pieces for the stiver. The reason why the loose sewan was not prohibited, was because there is no coin in circulation, and the laborers, farmers, and other common people having no other money, would be great losers; and had it been done, the remonstrants would, without doubt, have included it among their grievances." (See also Nov. 30, 1647.)

He refers to the repairs of the fort as the domain of the company, and not the concern of the inhabitants.

"When a house is erected, an annual ground-rent in beavers must be paid; and all the farmers must do the same which they call obtaining the right to trade."

He speaks of the ingratitude of settlers whom the company has helped, and who now refuse to pay "the tenth." He quotes them as saying "that provision should be made for ecclesiastical and municipal property, church services, an orphan asylum and an almshouse," and comments: ". . . let them lead the way in generous contributions."

In closing, he gives a brief account of each person who signed the "Remonstrance." Of Adriaan van der Donck, for example, he says: He "has been about eight years in New Netherland. He went there in the service of the proprietors of the colony of Rensselaerswyck as an officer, but did not continue such, though he lived in that colony till 1646." Regarding all the remonstrants, he sums up: "In brief, these people, to give their doings a gloss, say that they are bound by oath and compelled by conscience; but if that were the case they would not assail their benefactors, the Company and others, and endeavor to deprive them of this noble country, by advising their removal, now that it begins to be like something, and now that there is a prospect of the Company getting its own again. And now that many of the inhabitants are themselves in a better condition than ever, this is evidently the cause of the ambition of many, etc."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 357-77.

1651

At some time prior to this year, Augustine Heermans built a warehouse upon the Strand, and in this year, 1651, conveyed the same to the Estate of Pieter Gabry, deceased, of Amsterdam.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 89 (N. Y. State Library). It covered ground now the site of Nos. 33 and 35 Pearl St. This warehouse, because the property of an enemy subject in Holland, was confiscated by the British under the act of Oct.

10, 1665, quoted in Liber Patents, I: 99 (Albany). The building is shown on the Frontispiece, and Pls. 8-a and 9, Vol. I. See also Castello Plan, II: 266; Landmark May Ref. Key, III: 963.

In this year, Joost Hartgers, an Amsterdam publisher, brought out a composite tract (see Bibliography, Vol. V, for particulars) entitled: Beschrijvinghe van Virginia, Nieuw Nederlandt, etc., which contained, among other pictures, a copperplate view entitled "t Fort nieuw Amsterdam op de Manhatans," the earliest known representation of the little settlement, which it is supposed to depict about 1628-30. It is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 1-a.

At some time during the years 1651 to 1655, inclusive, the N. J. Visscher Map (Pl. 7-b, Vol. I) was issued, containing an inset view (Pl. 8-a, Vol. I) which depicts New Amsterdam at that period. This view appeared also on other maps of this series, for mention of which see 1647 and description of the Visscher Map, p. 152, Vol. I.

Toussaint Briet receives a ground-brief for a lot on the north side of the present Beaver St., the Morris building to-day covering the site.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 371, Vol. II.

Manuel de Spangie, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 132, Albany) for a piece of land to the east of the land of Hans Kierstedt, probably later a part of the Bayard east farm, being bounded "east-and-by-south" by The Bowery.

At the provincial secretary's office appear Paulo de Angola, a negro, and Clara Crioole, a negress, both belonging to Capt. Johan de Vries, deceased, of the one part, and Symon Joosten, of the other part, who declare that they have amicably agreed regarding a "claim which Symon Joosten makes against said Capt. J: de Vries, deceased, for Six hundred guilders, loaned money, to the effect that he, Paulo d'Angola, for himself and his two children and Clara Crioole, also, for the child of said Vries, a minor, for the said abovementioned claim, transport and convey a certain parcel of land situated on the east side of the Kolk of the Fresh-water, to them belonging according to the ground brief thereof . . . on this condition, however, that, if the aforesaid Six hundred guilders be paid for Capt: de Vries in Patria [Holland] to Abraham Jansen, as attorney, he Symon Joosten shall be obliged to restore to the abovementioned Paulo, Clara, or the child of Jan de Vries as large and a like quantity of land as is now received for the aforesaid claim. In the meanwhile he, S: Joosten may transfer the aforesaid land back to Mr. Augustyn Heermans, with power to enter upon, and cultivate the same as he shall think proper."

On March 31, Joosten conveyed the property to Heermans "according to the ground brief dated 14th July A<sup>o</sup> 1645, granted by . . . Kieft for the behoof of Paulo d'Angola, late the negro of Capt. Jan de Vries."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 75 (N. Y. State Library). Capt. Jan de Vries (or Fries), father of the mulatto child, was commander of the ship "Blue Cock," and had arrived with her at New Amsterdam with soldiers from Holland, during Kieft's Indian war, in which he also took part.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 205-7, 211.

Frederic Jansen receives a ground-brief for a house and garden at (present) Nos. 21-23 Broadway. The original grant is to the library of J. Pierpont Morgan, Esq.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 361.

Stuyvesant purchases the company's great bowery No. 1. The record of the transaction is as follows: "This day . . . have the underwritten Directors, thereunto requested and authorized by Resolution of the Assembly, dated the second instant [March], sold to Jan Jansen Dameo, attorney and agent of Petrus Stuyvesant, director general of New Netherland and Curaçao, who here also acknowledges to have purchased, the Company's bowery in New Netherland, aforesaid, with the appendages thereof, consisting of a dwelling house, barn, barrick, lands, six cows, two horses and two young Negroes, all in such condition as the said bowery is at present cultivated and occupied by the aforesaid Stuyvesant, in order to be possessed in full ownership by him, his heirs and descendants, or their assigns, according to the deed and conveyance which the Council there is hereby ordered and authorized to grant and execute in due form; for which aforesaid bowery the said Jan Jansen Damen in quality and on the behalf aforesaid, hath promised, and doth hereby promise, to pay, or otherwise to make good to the Company, at the time of the conveyance aforesaid, a sum of six thousand, four hundred guilders once. In testimony, two instruments of like tenor are made hereof and signed by both sides in Amsterdam."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 205 (N. Y. State Library).

Frederic Jansen receives a ground-brief for a house and garden at (present) Nos. 21-23 Broadway. The original grant is to the library of J. Pierpont Morgan, Esq.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 361.

Stuyvesant purchases the company's great bowery No. 1. The record of the transaction is as follows: "This day . . . have the underwritten Directors, thereunto requested and authorized by Resolution of the Assembly, dated the second instant [March], sold to Jan Jansen Dameo, attorney and agent of Petrus Stuyvesant, director general of New Netherland and Curaçao, who here also acknowledges to have purchased, the Company's bowery in New Netherland, aforesaid, with the appendages thereof, consisting of a dwelling house, barn, barrick, lands, six cows, two horses and two young Negroes, all in such condition as the said bowery is at present cultivated and occupied by the aforesaid Stuyvesant, in order to be possessed in full ownership by him, his heirs and descendants, or their assigns, according to the deed and conveyance which the Council there is hereby ordered and authorized to grant and execute in due form; for which aforesaid bowery the said Jan Jansen Damen in quality and on the behalf aforesaid, hath promised, and doth hereby promise, to pay, or otherwise to make good to the Company, at the time of the conveyance aforesaid, a sum of six thousand, four hundred guilders once. In testimony, two instruments of like tenor are made hereof and signed by both sides in Amsterdam."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 205 (N. Y. State Library).

1651 This was the well-known Stuyvesant's bowery, which is shown on Mar. Pl. 175, Vol. III. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946, 952;
 12 and May 24, 1642.

21 The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant that they observe that many people do not scruple to take possession of the best land in New Netherland, "without formality and without determination by survey, as if the Company and its officers had nothing to say about it and had been robbed or deprived of their prerogatives." They direct Stuyvesant not to grant land to anybody unless the grantee makes proper acknowledgment of the authority of the West India Co.; also to take care that henceforth no more land is granted to people than "after a thorough examination of their means," he thinks the grantees will be able "sufficiently to populate, cultivate and bring into a good state of tillage." They refer to former grants or claims which, although held for years, are virtually unimproved, citing "Cornelis Melyn's, Wouter van Twiller's and others' cases."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 132. See April 4, and July 1, 1652.

" The charges of the skippers for passage rates from Holland to New Netherland are eight stuivers (16 cents) per day. This is considered too high and the directors at Amsterdam announce that they are endeavouring to have the rate lowered to seven stuivers per day for board.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 134.

" The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: "For certain reasons, it is true, we have as yet not deemed it expedient to give you a definite answer in regard to the bowery, which you are using. This has not been done, because we grudge you the place preferring others, but because we thought you understood our intentions, also because we were ignorant of the value and location of it, in regard to which we have now received some information. We have now fully agreed on this subject with Jan Jansen Damen, acting in your behalf, as you will see by the contract of sale sent over with Jan Claessen Damen."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 137. This correspondence related to the company's farm No. 1, or "Great Bowery," for which Stuyvesant received a deed from the directors at Amsterdam, dated March 12, 1651 (q. v.), in consideration of the purchase price of 6,400 guilders ($2,560).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 54. It extended from about the present 5th to 17th Sts., and from the East River to an irregular line running through the present Fourth Ave., Broadway, etc.—See Maasius Maps, II: 187-88.

28 Augustine Heerman receives a ground-brief for land called "Verpoes," lying beyond Fresh Water, abutting on the land of Tosyn Briel, stretching upon a westerly line, 150 rods; before, to the wagon-way, "50" (should read 150) rods; on the south side, it abuts on land of "John de Spanien" (the Spaniard), where it is also 150 rods; and on the north to land formerly belonging to Hans Kierstedt, 150 rods; in all, with the swamp annexed, amounting to about 50 acres or 25 morgens.—Liber Patentes, III: 77 (Albany). This later became part of the Bayard farm.—See Map of Farm Lands, Vol. V.

" Harry Piens conveys to Pieter Stoutenbergh Gregory's plantation, and on the same day Stuyvesant confirms the sale.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 76 (N. Y. State Library).

Apr. 8 The minutes of the chief participants in the W. I. Co., at Amsterdam, show that, on this day, Secretary Van Tienhoven "was handed his letters to Director Stuyvesant," and is to depart for New Netherland; also that J. Dyckman has been engaged at 30 guilders a month.—From No. 5 Hoofparticipantsboek, fol. 33 vo. (The Hague).

22 Johannes de la Montagne, Sr. receives a ground-brief for a lot at what is now Nos. 47, 49, and 51 Beaver St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 288; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, II: 395.

26 The directors at Amsterdam send a letter to Stuyvesant by Cornelis van Tienhoven, "who returns in his former quality of Secretary." The letter states, among other things, that Van Tienhoven has requested permission of the directors "to purchase a bowery in New Netherland belonging to the Company and containing about 14 to 16 morgens, together with meadowland, a farmhouse 50 feet long and 22 feet deep, a haystack, two mares, a stallion and a negro, now used by Thomas Hall, whose lease is said to expire the coming summer." The directors defer to Stuyvesant to determine whether such sale will be "to the prejudice or advantage of the Company," and ask his full report on this point before they consent.

Apr. 26 They also state that they have engaged in Amsterdam "as bookkeeper in New Netherland Johannes Dyckman," their "former first clerk," at "30 fl. per month exclusive of subsistence money," and they commend him to Stuyvesant for promotion when occasion offers. Continuing they report:

"In order to increase the population of New Netherland and to promote the trade to it we have resolved that henceforth you shall demand upon all goods which are properly merchandise, coming to New Netherland from English Virginia or New England, a duty of 16 per cent, and that all goods sent there from New Netherland shall pass free duty, so that the practice of some people, who ship their goods to New England and then enter them in New Netherland under the lower tariff, may be stopped and no prejudice be done to the merchants who ship their goods directly from here to New Netherland." It must have been immediately upon receipt of this order in New Amsterdam (oot in 1652 as averred by O'Callaghan in Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 126) that an ordinance was passed imposing a duty of 16 per cent on merchandise imported into New Netherland from New England (the text of the edict being now lost).—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 138-39.

Brian Newton receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present Nos. 41-45 Beaver St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 394.

May 4 Under this date, in the minutes of the chief participants of the West India Co. at Amsterdam, is the following record: "Decided that C. van Tienhoven, as secretary and receiver [of the company in New Netherland], shall be provided with quarters within [the fort] by Director Pi van Stuyvesande."—Records of the old West India Co. at The Hague, No. 17 (lettered "N<sup>o</sup> 5 Hoofparticipantsboek"), fol. 33 verso, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer.

June 5 Complaints having been made against extortionate prices charged by retailers of wine, brandy, and other strong drink, and by bakers of bread, "to the great damage and loss of the Commonalty and many private Inhabitants," the situation is brought to the attention of Stuyvesant and the council by the board of "Nine Men," or selection of the commonalty. This leads to the promulgation of an ordinance for regulating the assize on various kinds of bread, and the prices on wines, brandies, and other strong drink. The former ordinances against brewers retailing their brewed beer are renewed.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 119-22. This ordinance inaugurates a policy of fixing a maximum price. On Aug. 18, 1653, the retailing price on wines and brandy was fixed anew.—Ibid., 148. The general policy of fixing a maximum was disapproved by the directors at Amsterdam (in their letter to Stuyvesant and the council, of March 12, 1654), who said that their own experience should have taught them "the impossibility of carrying it out," as such an order could give only great dissatisfaction and breed trouble. Therefore, "to prevent this in future," the directors resolved to command them to "act strictly in accordance with the laudable customs and ordinances" of Amsterdam, as far as it was possible to do so.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 251.

21 Jan Jansen Damen having died on the 18th instant, his widow, "Adriaentje Cuytje," and Thomas Hall, Egbert Wouterzen, and Cornelis Aertzen, as curators of the large estate of the deceased, appoint Jan Vinge, the widow's son by a former marriage, "to command all the servants of Jan Damen, deceased, and to direct all agricultural affairs until the crop of this year 1651, is brought into the barrick and barn."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 86 (N. Y. State Library). On the same day, the widow designated David Provoost, Jacobus van Corlaer, and Borger Jorisen, "as guardians and tutors to regulate, divide and for her to arrange the entire estate to the best advantage of her and her children and heirs." An inventory was filed in July.—Ibid., III: 86, 87.

July — Stuyvesant, in order to settle the claims of the Dutch to lands on the South (Delaware) River, as against the Swedes and English, demolishes Fort Nassau on the Jersey shore, which had been built 27 or 28 years before, and begins the erection of a new fort, called Casimir, on the west side of the river, at "Sand Hook," near the present site of New Castle, and about four miles below the Swedish Fort Christina.—Broadhead, op. cit., I: 529 and authorities there cited. Aug. 28 To prevent smuggling, ships departing from New Netherland to Holland, Virginia, the Delaware (South) River, or elsewhere, are "obliged to take in their full loading in front of" the city of New Amsterdam. The full text of this ordinance is not extant, but the substance is given in Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 345.

Cornelis de Potter purchases land in Brooklyn from Henry Bresier, which adjoins the property of Cornelis Dircksen Hooglant.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 143. On Jan. 4, of the next year, he received a deed from Dircksen, then ferry-man on Long Island, for a lot, house, and barn near the ferry, and other properties.—Ibid., XIV: 146. Cornelis de Potter in time became ferry-master. After his death, the ferry was managed by Joannes Nevius, formerly secretary of New Amsterdam, who had married Potter's step-daughter, and after Nevius died his widow continued the ferry from Brooklyn and obtained an extension and lease from Gov. Lovelace.—See Honeyman, Joannes Nevius and his Descendants; Exec. Coun. Min., ed. by V. H. Paltsits, I: 131, 143.

The following interesting and detailed agreement of copartnership is made for the operation of the Zegendael farm in Harlem, originally granted to Jochem Pietersen Kuyter in 1639, and soon thereafter subjected to Indian attack:
"This day, the XXIII of September, of this current year 1651, Mr. Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, free merchant, of the one part, and the Honble Petrus Stuyvesant, Director General of New Netherland, Curaçao and the dependencies thereof, Luycas Roodenbergh, Governor of Curaçao, and Cornelis de Potter, also free merchant, of the other part, have in all amity and friendship agreed and contracted respecting a certain piece of land on the Island of Manhattan, called Zegendael, in the Indian language Schorrakyn, the property of the aforesaid Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, adjoining on the south Willem Beekman, lieutenant of the Burgesses corps here, at the end of Mr. Johannes La Montagne's low land (leechte), as far as the first rock, stretching northward up into the Great Kil [Harlem River], having on the west side at the North River a hay valley about three @ four morgens in extent; the aforesaid land being about two hundred morgens large, the correct measure whereof is yet to be determined; and that in the form and manner here under written, to wit:
"He, Jochem Pietersen Kuyter shall cede transfer and convey, as well and truly sold, to the abovenamed Messrs Stuyvesant, Roodenbergh and Cornelis de Potter the precise three fourth parts of his said land, being one fourth part to and for each, in such manner that he, Jochem Pietersen aforesaid, retains the remaining fourth part as his own property; provided that he, Jochem Pietersen, shall receive from the abovenamed gentlemen for the surrender and conveyance of said land" the sum of 1,000 Carolus guilders at 20 stuivers, and no more, each of the grantees to pay a third part, with this reservation, "that the said thousand guilders shall be first and foremost expended and employed in the cultivation of the aforesaid land, all which shall remain together without making therein, either directly or indirectly, any partition, division or severance, before and until such be resolved by a majority of votes. During said time of non-partition, the abovenamed Jochem Pietersen shall be esteemed to be, and shall continue as manager and superintendent of the farm, to cultivate, to the best of his ability, the undivided land for the profit and best advantage of the contracting parties respectively, and to distribute in equal shares and parts among said parties, whatsoever profits may result from the land, whether in grain, cattle or otherwise. Provided always, that the wife of said Jochem Pietersen shall be at liberty to keep hens and ducks on her own account, and he Jochem Pietersen shall receive for his services as superintendent of the farm, One hundred and fifty Carolus guilders annually, to wit, Fifty Sept. 23 like guilders from each of the aforesaid partners. In order to make, in God's name, a beginning . . . of said undertaking, a suitable dwelling house for Jochem Pietersen the superintendent of the farm, and a barn with whatever shall further appertain thereto, shall be built on the aforesaid land, at the common expense of the contracting parties in company, but the house and all on the land shall remain in common. He, Jochem Pietersen, shall be bound to keep a pertinent memorandum and register of that and such other expense as will be incurred, in order to render to the contracting parties, when required, an account, proof and balance as is proper.
"It is also hereby stipulated, that as soon as any division of profits is made, and this land shall come to be divided by the contracting parties, he, Jochem Pietersen, shall first receive the aforesaid Thousand guilders for surrendering and giving up the aforesaid land. Again, whenever, also, the partition and allotment of each person's share shall come to be made, that shall then be done by lot, without giving anyone a preference therein. It is likewise conditioned, that in the absence of one or the other of the contracting parties, some one else shall be put in his place.
2ndly In case of the superintendent's death, another shall [not be] appointed in his place, without the knowledge of the other partner. 3rdly The widow of a deceased partner shall herself be at liberty to continue, or, otherwise, to transfer her interest to one of the contracting parties."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 96 (N. Y. State Library). See the Manus Maps, II: 203, and C. Pls. 41, 42, and 42a (landmark No. 42), Vol. II.

The English parliament passes the Navigation Act. "By this it was especially provided that all goods from countries beyond Europe should be imported into England in English ships only; and all European goods either in English ships or in ships belonging to the countries from which these articles originally came. Of all the acts ever passed in Parliament it is perhaps the one which brought about the most important results for England and the world."—Ranke, Hist. of England, III: 68. The Navigation Act was "undoubtedly directed first of all against Dutch commerce," and was one of the reasons that led to war the next year between England and Holland (see July 8, 1652).—Blok, Hist. of the People of the Netherlands, I: 191; Brodhead, op. cit., I: 543.

Stuyvesant writes to the board of "Nine Men" that he has made "several fruitless representations to the late Board" for their assistance in "the repairing of the Fort New Amsterdam." He says he has himself "begun the highly necessary and urgent work of the two negroes and servants of the Company," and, during "the last two summers of 1650 and 51," has made "tolerable progress, considering the small numbers of laborers and would have enclosed the Fort all round and put it in good shape" if, for the Company's and the country's service, "his and the Company's servants had not been obliged to go to the South river [Delaware] and remain there the greater part of last summer [1651] in order to build there a new Fort" (Casimir). He says that in the meantime the newly erected work on Fort New Amsterdam has, through the neglect of his orders and proclamation, been "destroyed and trampled down by horses, cows and hogs." He has spoken to some of the "Nine Men" several times of "the vexation and disgust" which he felt on finding the "new works, erected without the community's help, rooted up, trampled down and destroyed by the community's hogs, cows and horses, thus losing the advantage" of his "hard and diligent labor." Stuyvesant agrees that "the negligence and connivance of the Fiscal" (Hendrick van Dyck) are to blame, because he has not enforced the government's "twice or thrice renewed proclamations." He adds: "We are . . . compelled to leave the Fort, to our shame and the detriment of this place, as we found it, and to suspend all work on it or to execute and enforce our orders and proclamations, now already three or four times published and affixed, namely to impound" the cattle, etc. found on the fort and confiscate them to the benefit of the company. He declares that, in order to avoid being charged with extremeness, he has concluded "first to inform the Board of Nine Men" of his intentions and the 1651 commonly through them, for which he awaits a written answer.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 145-46. Fiscal Van Dyck, in his defense, of Sept. 16, 1652, referred to the work done on the fort in the year 1651. He said that Stuyvesant "had the outside of the fort faced with flat sods by the Company's Negroes;" but, as the soil was sandy and the foundation weak, "the sods mostly sagged and fell to pieces, so that the inhabitants' swine damaged the fort," and Stuyvesant ordered the soldiers to shoot such hogs as came there.—Ibid., I: 499.

— Sometime during this year, the provincial council abolished the export duty of eight per cent on New Netherland tobacco, in conformity with the directions of the directors of the company at Amsterdam, of April 4, 1652.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 125; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 175. The original ordinance is not extant.

— In this year, the burgoasters of Amsterdam ordered that all private freighters should carry indigent passengers to New Netherland at 30 guilders passage money or eight stuivers per day for board. This resulted in many people coming over.—Directors to Stuyvesant, April 4, 1652, in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 166.

— In this year, a mint was established in Massachusetts.—Winsor, III: 316.

Jan. 10 — An English record refers to Hellgate as "the whirlpool of the duchmen call the Hellgate."—Proceedings of Mass. Hist. Soc., 2d ser., VI: 11-13.

24 — Abram de la Noy, upon his petition to the director-general and council, is granted "permission to sell all sorts of wines by the small measure," and is given the lease of "the city tavern [Stads Herberg] for the benefit of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 149.

30 — The commonalty having made nominations from which three new representatives in the board of "Nine Men" are to be selected by the director-general and council, the following are accordingly confirmed. They took the oath of allegiance on Feb. 2, viz: Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, Paulus Leendertsen van der Griff, and Pieter Cornelissen, miller.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 155.

Feb. — The inhabitants having complained of great inconvenience because of the difficulty of getting their grain ground, or, if ground, in a satisfactory manner, "for which reason" the people were received "with abuse, curses and threats;" Stuyvesant and the council ordain that a miller be appointed "at a yearly salary to superintend the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company's Windmill," and provide regulations for grinding at the mill and for fixing the duties and emoluments of the miller. Persons are forbidden to carry any grain to the mill "without first having obtained a permit at the Office of the Store" of the company. The order of service at the mill was set down as "first come, first served," except that the company reserved precedence over others, because it had to provide bread for seventy or eighty persons in its jurisdiction. Weights and scales are ordered placed in the mill, "to prevent frauds, evil reflections and especially afterclaps."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 123-25.

12 — The board of "Nine Men" appear before Stuyvesant and the council in the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam, and request an order forbidding "the shooting of hogs on the walls of the Fort and that for this reason the Fort be enclosed with stakes or in some other convenient way." Stuyvesant consents, and promises "to have the necessary posts cut and hewed by his own servants or negroes, the community to bear the expenses of putting up the palisades and enclosing the Fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 155.

" — The surgeons of New Amsterdam petition Stuyvesant and the council for exclusive privilege to shave, to which they are given answer "that shaving is properly not in the province of the surgeons, but is only an appendix to their calling, that nobody can be prevented to please himself in this matter or to serve anybody else for friendship's sake, out of courtesy and without receiving payment for it;" but "keeping a shop to do it in" is "expressly forbidden." Moreover, in the interest of the public health, ships' barbers are forbidden to "dress any wounds, bleed or prescribe for any one on land" without consent of the surgeons, or "at least Doctor La Montague."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 155-56.

" — A school is mentioned as being kept at this date by David Provost at the place "where the Nine Men usually meet."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 156. It was situated at what is now 32 Broadway.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941.

" — Adriaen van Tienhoven, Samuel Megapolensis, and Jan de la

Montague ask permission of Stuyvesant and the council to erect a pew in the church in the fort.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 156.

Stuyvesant having urgently requested the directors at Amsterdam to send over a second minister to New Amsterdam to be associated with Domine Megapolensis, preferably one who could preach also in English, the directors, therefore, now apply to the church authorities at old Amsterdam for such a person. At this time, as they learn, the Rev. Samuel Driusius (Latinized form of the Dutch name, Dries, Driesch, or van Driessen) is "at Leyden." He was born about 1600; matriculated the first time at the University of Leyden, on Sept. 23, 1620; had been for some years a preacher to an English congregation in England, and had only lately returned to Holland and matriculated a second time at the University of Leyden, this time as a student in medicine. The Amsterdam church authorities interrogated him as to his willingness "to accept said appointment" for New Amsterdam.—Eccles. Rec., I: 302; Corwin, Manual, 433. On Feb. 26, he appeared before the classis of Amsterdam and "declared his readiness to be employed as minister in New Netherland." He was soon examined as to his Dutch linguistic abilities, and "these were found not only sufficient, but also very agreeable and edifying, and to the great satisfaction of the brethren."—Eccles. Rec., I: 303-4. On March 18, he presented himself before the "Deputati ad causas Indicas," "informed the Assembly of his inclination for the said journey, and presented a commendatory testimonial of the entire consistory of the English [Presbyterian] church" of Amsterdam, which related "both to his life and church services in England, speaking highly of them." Recommended now by the Amsterdam classis to the directors of the company, he was accepted "as second pastor of New Amsterdam."—Ibid., I: 305, 306.

The directors, on April 4, informed Stuyvesant of their success in securing Driusius, "as if sent by the Lord." They said he was "a bachelor of about 40 years [an error for over 50 years], . . . who on account of the perturbations in England, where he had been preaching . . . retreated from there; that he had "the reputation of being a very pious man and possessed of great gifts;" was "able to preach in both languages, English and Dutch and if necessary even in French;" and had "a very peaceful disposition and agreeable conversation." The company allowed him a salary of fl. 100 (84c.) per month and fl. 250 ($100.) a year for subsistence, and, as he was unmarried, they suggested that he might board with Jan de la Montague.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 173. Driusius sailed from Holland soon after April 4. By Aug. 12, he was reported by the synod of North Holland as having been sent to New Netherland (Eccles. Rec., I: 311), and on Oct. 15 (q. v.) he was referred to in New Amsterdam as one "recently arrived." In the last named case, Hendrick van Dyck, the deposed fiscal, was ordered to vacate the company's house in which he dwelt, by Nov. 1st, in order to make room for Driusius.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 129. See, further, May 20, 1658.

Jacobus van Corlaer conveys to Willem Beckman the "land situate at the East River and called Corlaers Hook, with his plantation and Hook called in the Indian language Nechtkan, lying contiguous to said plantation situate on the Island of Manhattan, with the quit rent thereon," for 4,500 guilders. The vendor signs "Jacobus van Curler." The conveyance was approved by Stuyvesant and the council on March 4.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 102 (N. Y. State Library). This appears to be the earliest recorded reference to Corlaers Hook by this name. For later mentions, see Rec. N. Am., VII: 26, 29 (1673); and M. C. C., I: 364 (1694).

Jochem Pietersen Kuyter sells to Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven his lot on Manhattan Island, situate at the present Pearl and Whitehall Sts., "together with the building stone (Clipsteen) thereon," for 475 guilders. At the provincial secretary's office, "this conveyance is sealed and signed in the presence of Mr La Montague and Brian Newton a committee of Council, and the seal of the Province in red wax affixed thereto."—*Records N. 10 Deputies of the chamber of Amsterdam write to Hendrick vander Capellen, a deputy from Zutphen, requesting the latter to cooperate in transporting some people to New Netherland, but making the condition that first a list of the proposed emigrants be sent to the Amsterdam body, in order that proper arrangements can be made with the skippers who are daily taking people aboard; also fixing the transportation charges.—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1218, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

21 Stuyvesant sends a deputation from the council to the board of "Nine Men" to examine in their presence persons "touching the calumnious language, the defamation and slander uttered . . . at the house of Captaio Fyo in our absence against our person and dignity."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 163. On the 27th, Stuyvesant wrote to the council and recommended the suspension of Hendrick van Dyck from the office of fiscal for his "connivance, negligence and general failing to do his duty," and for calling Stuyvesant at the house of Fyo a "Scoundrel, Murderer, Tyrant, Hound, Baby and other like names." On the 28th, the council acquiesced in the suspension, and Van Dyck was brought before this body and charged. He made a general denial; requested a copy of the proceedings, and protested against suspension. But he was suspended by Stuyvesant and charged "not to meddle any more in the Company's affairs." He received from the secretary a copy of Stuyvesant's letter, which he dubbed a "pasquill" (lampoon or farce).—Ibid., XIV: 164. On Oct. 15, the council ordered him, by Nov. 1, to vacate the company's house, in which he resided, as it was needed for Rev. Samuel Drisius, who had arrived recently in New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 129. It is evident from the correspondence of the directors in Holland, dated Jan. 27, 1649, that they had a poor opinion of Van Dyck, and were prepared for his dismissal sooner or later.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 106-7; cf. 173 (April 4, 1652).

Apr. 4 The deputies of the West India Co., in 1650, submitted to the states-general a provisional plan for the trade, colonization, and advantage of New Netherland, in which they recommended, among other things, that liberty be given to the inhabitants of New Netherland "to purchase Negroes wheresoever" they deemed it necessary, "except the coast of Guinea," and to "bring them into New Netherland to work on their boweries," on payment of a head tax.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 364. The commonalty at Manhattan having made a request for the privilege to import slaves from Africa, the directors at Amsterdam, on April 4, 1652, wrote letters to Stuyvesant and the commonalty, in which they grant to the inhabitants the right to fetch in their own ships from "the coast of Africa" as many negroes as they require for agricultural purposes, subject only to conditions and regulations that accompany the letter to Stuyvesant. These conditions and regulations are no longer among the records, but their purport can be divined from a form issued for trading ships to Africa. From it we see that the directors prohibited the traders from Manhattan "to trade on the Gold Coast," or to "come any further West than Arde or at most Popo [in Dahomey] under penalty of forfeiting" ship and cargo.—Ibid., XIV: 162, 166, 176. The terms were not considered encouraging enough, and no result followed these concessions. Slaves therewith imported into New Netherland were brought in Dutch ships, duly licensed by the Amsterdam chamber, and belonging to merchants in Holland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 127. In his defence, on Sept. 18, 1652, Hendrick van Dyck, the suspended fiscal, said that no request for negroes had been presented by patrouns or colonists in New Netherland, so far as he had knowledge.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 500.

A municipal form of government, under a schout, two burgo-masters, and five schepens, is granted to New Amsterdam. The separate office of schout, however, does not at once pertain to the city.—See letter of the directors of W. I. Co. to director-general and council of N. Neth., April 4, 1652, in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), I: 387; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 169. See Feb. 2, 1653.

The directors at Amsterdam complain to Stuyvesant because they have not been properly informed about prizes captured, ships sold, proceeds from merchandise sent to New Netherland, etc., although they have called for such reports several times. They sent over, therefore, "a book-keeper, that such excuses as want of assistance or unfamiliarity with the books should be made impossible," and, moreover, "for this reason," they established at Amsterdam "a special bureau for New-Netherland matters." Apr. They now ask Stuyvesant to send over at the earliest opportunity "accurate registers of all lands, boweries, and houses, let out on lease by the Company, with the rents and conditions" under which they were rented. They refer to the charter of freedoms and exemptions, by which Manhattan Island was wholly reserved for the company, and, because they suspect that some lands and lots on the island have been given to private parties without their knowledge, they require of him a detailed report on that matter. They say good order must be preserved, so that everyone may find "a suitable place," and the land be divided "with more equality than formerly, when everybody took what pleased him best without knowledge and consent of the Directors or their officers," as they found occurred "in the cases of Wouter van Twiller, Olfert Gerritsen [Wolpert Gerritsen van Couwenhoven], Lubbert van Dinkelage, Jacob Wolphertsen [van Couwenhoven], and others." This being a "very intolerable" condition, they order Stuyvesant to "warn everybody by public advertisement, not to buy or take possession of any land without knowledge and approval by the Company and its officers, also [to] dissolve all such contracts of purchase made heretofore," but to see that the buyers are "reimbursed for their out-lays and the title vested in the Company." Then grants of land can be made anew to anyone who will undertake to cultivate and populate them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 167-68. See March 21, 1651; and July 1, 1652.

The directors at Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant, refer to complaints by the commonalty in New Netherland "of the improper trade in powder, lead and guns carried on there by private parties." To prevent this illicit trade, the directors send over "a printed placat," and demand strict execution thereof by the fiscal.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 166. This edict was not strictly enforced in some parts of New Netherland, as appears from another letter of the directors, of June 6, 1653.—Ibid., XIV: 206. Stuyvesant and the council were censured by the inhabitants as well as by neighbouring governments "on account of the non-execution of their previously enacted and frequently renewed Edicts against the importation of articles of Contraband and the sale thereof as well to Christians as Indians," who revived and renewed, therefore, on Aug. 11, 1656, the former ordinances "against the importation and sale, either to Christians or Natives, of any kind of Munitions of War," adding amplifications thereto. This ordinance was again renewed on April 9, 1658.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 236-39, 346.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: "We do not see by what means we can prevent the trade in lump wampum, as long as the fiscal will not discharge his duties faithfully, and we are afraid, that you too have not discovered the proper way, when you increased the value of money 25 per cent in order to bring some specie into the country, of which we believe a quantity will go over in these ships: you will thus soon learn the result of your resolution. General experience however has demonstrated, that the increase of the value of money has usually been the ruin of the country and its population; we consider therefore this is a matter of dangerous import and find it very unadvisable to have passed this resolution without our knowledge."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 169. See May 30, 1650.

Prof. Kilpatrick argues convincingly that the first Latin school in New Amsterdam was provided for at this time by the directors in the same letter: "We also agree with your proposition to establish there a trivial school and believe a beginning might be made with one usher (hypodidasculum) who could be engaged at a yearly salary of 200 to 250 guilders [$80 to $100]. We recommend for this position Jan de la Montagne, whom we have provisionally appointed to it; and you may use the building of the city tavern [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley] if you find it suitable."—Dutch Schools of New Neth., 95. O'Callaghan (see ibid., footnote), translating the same passage (citing N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 169), interpreted triviale as "public"; this word appears meaningless because there was already such a school, in charge of Willem Vestenz (or Vestenz?) (see Oct. 1649), who continued as schoolmaster until succeeded by Harmanus van Hobooken (see Mar. 23, 1655). "Clearly," says Kilpatrick, "the elementary school of which Vestenz had charge was not a triviale school, else some such word as 'other' or 'second' would have been used in connection with the proposed school." He shows, furthermore, that triviale was applied at that time in Holland to a school in which 1652 Latin was taught.—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 62-66, 95-99. It is to be remembered, also, that the remonstrants of 1649 wanted a Latin school (see July 28, 1649; Nov. 29, 1650). The directors' appointee (Montagne) was already in New Amsterdam (see Feb. 12, 1652), and an order was issued, on Dec. 9, 1652 (p. 7), to pay him "three or four months wages," a proof that the school was established soon after the arrival of the letter from the directors. It could not have continued longer than two years, because we know that Montagne departed for Holland in the summer of 1654.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 786.

27 The states-general order Stuyvesant to come immediately to Holland, and render an account of his administration, as well as of his negotiations with the United Colonies of New England. This recall was revoked, however, on May 16.—Brodhead, op. cit., 541-42, and authorities there cited.

29 The directors at Amsterdam resolve as follows: "Marcus Hendrick Vogelsang, ship carpenter, intending to emigrate to New Netherland, requests that as much space may be granted to him in the most convenient locality on Manhattans Island as he may require for erecting a shipyard and dock and a house. The vote having been taken, it was decided to direct the Director [Stuyvesant] to accommodate him in a convenient locality."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 181.

May The Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. by resolution authorizes Stuyvesant to graot Hog Island (later named Manning's Island) to Francis Fyn, if vacant, and if no special objection intervenes. They wrote to him on May 10, however, enclosing the resolution and stating that, having learned the place was well adapted for fortifications, they referred to him the propriety of making the grant.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 277.

19-29 In a naval war between England and the United Provinces, a bloody but indecisive battle is fought in the Straits of Dover between the British fleet under Blake and the Dutch fleet under Tromp. The first year of these hostilities closed on Dec. 10, when Blake was forced to take refuge in the Thames, and Tromp placed a broom at his mast-head, in token that he had swept the channel free of English ships.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 545-46.

June To prevent accidents in New Amsterdam, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance against fast driving of wagoos, carts, or sleighs in the city, and prohibit drivers from sitting or standing on their conveyances anywhere within the city limits, except on Broadway. In all other places they are to "walk by the Wagons, Carts or Sleighs and so take and lead the horses." Penalties for infractions are prescribed.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 128-29.

" Some of the inhabitants go out in small boats, caoes, and other craft, to board "ships and yachts arriving from Faterland [Holland] and elsewhere" before these vessels have "come to anchor, according to order," in the established roadsteads before the city of New Amsterdam. These infractions of edicts, passed as long before as Kieft's administration, were considered to facilitate frauds and smuggling; therefore Stuyvesant and the council now declare by an ordinance that no ooe shall "repair with any Skiff, Boat, Canoe or other craft on board of any arriving Ships, or come on shore with any boat from such Ships or yachts, before and until such arriving Ships, Yachts or Barks" have made their aorage before the city and have reported their arrival ad commission, as proper entry, to the director-general and council.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 129-30.

July Following upon the instructions of the directors at Amsterdam, of April 4 of this year, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance for regulating the purchase of Indian lands, and vacating and annulling certain extravagant grants and purchases. It was found that "many Inhabitants" of New Netherland, who were "covetuous and greedy of land," had, contrary to all rights and orders, purchased, bartered, or obtained by gift from the Indians, extensive tracts of land, holding the same as their property, and selling and conveying to others, all without the knowledge, order, or consent, of the directors or their deputies in New Netherland, and without record in the office of the provincial secretary at Manhattan, as required by law. This was declared to be injurious to the company and to the improvement of the province. It curtailed the availability of land, save at "an excessively high price, far above the value and rate at which the Director General and Council could heretofore obtain" land from the Indians. Some persons even went so far as to acquaint the Indians of the prices that people were paying one another for small lots. These evils, it was adjudged, would result in "pernicious consequences;" therefore, "after mature deliberation and written communication" with the directors at Amsterdam, Stuyvesant ad the council interdict and forbid all persons, directly or indirectly, to buy or attempt to obtain any lands in the province from Indians, "much less by virtue of purchase or donation undertake to occupy, or sell or convey them to others, without the previous consent or approbation of the Company" or the director-general.

This edict also vacates the extravagant grants of Wouter van Twiller, Brant Aertsen van Slichtehorst, Lubbertus van Dincklagen, Govert Lookermans, and others; but the pretended owners are to be reimbursed for the original purchase price of their claims, and the said lands are then to revert to the public domain of the company, to be afterwards allotted in proper proportions to actual settlers. Persons who have purchased from the original claimants are to be protected in their possession of land under cultivation or actual occupancy, on condition of their taking out proper patents, signed by the director-general and the provincial secretary, and sealed with the public seal, in default of which these lands also are to be forfeited to the company.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 130-34. On June 6, 1653, the directors at Amsterdam referred to the aforesaid ordinance in their letter to Stuyvesant and the council, and said they regretted that the ordinance had "particularized the names" of the persons who were guilty of illegal purchases of land. They enclosed in their letter a "printed copy" of the ordinance, exhibiting the corrections made by them, and recommended "most earnestly" its execution, as revised.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 207. This revised text is not among the records. See March 21, 1651; April 4, 1652; Aug. 2, 1654.

Albert Pietersen, trumpeter, receives a ground-brief for a lot in the "Schaepen Weytie," on the site of the present Nos. 37 and 39 Beaver St.—See Castello Plan, C. Fla. 82, 82a, Vol. II, and II: 239; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 394.

The Sheep Pasture is not referred to in any grant or transport with which we are familiar earlier than July 1, 1652, the date of this ground-brief to Albert Pietersen, the trumpeter, which is recited to lie in the "Schaepen Weytie." The grant to Edward Marrel, which is the earliest in the area designated on the Grant Map, is dated Nov. 3, 1645. It is described as "lying . . . on or at the Cripplebush." The two original grants to Pieter and Jan Moonfoort, of March 15, 1647, do not mention it, but confirmatory grants given to them Aug. 28, 1654, are in "the Sheep Pasture." All the subsequent grants, viz.: to Driusius, the two Kips, Van Brugh, Tienhoven, De Silie, mention the Sheep Pasture. Augustine Heermans's grant of May 15, 1647, does not mention it but his deeds a few years later recite the Sheep Pasture. Varrevanger's grant of 1649 did not mention Sheep Pasture; but when Flodder's purchase from Damen was surveyed by Claes van Elslandt, April 13, 1654, it was bounded west "by the line of the Sheep Pasture (Schapen Weytie)."—Liber A.: cp. 2. After 1660 the name does not appear except in a few instances where old descriptions have been followed. The conclusion seems to be well-founded that this tract was not designated "Sheep Pasture" before 1650, and that it retained the name but a few years, possibly only a decade. It seems not to have been in truth a pasture for the sheep, but merely a local designation for the neighbourhood. The grants of 1643-7 on Broadway universally ran east to "the Company's land." Grants in the same period on the north side of Beaver St., west of Broad St., bounded north by the "Company's Marsh," or "the Cripplebush." See also 1625.

England declares war on the Dutch republic. Cromwell declared himself determined to uphold the Navigation Act (see Oct. 9, 1651), which was the real cause of the war.

At the request of the states-general, the Zealand board of admiralty despatches a frigate with instructions to Stuyvesant to keep a careful watch, in the present condition of affairs with England, and to employ no person in the public service of whose loyalty and devotion to the Faterland he is not assured.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 546; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 482-83.

The first suggestion for postal regulations in New Netherland is now made to Stuyvesant by the directors at Amsterdam. "Private parties" often gave "their letters to this or that sailor or free merchant and the letters were often lost through neglect" or remained "forgotten in the boxes." On this account, the directors "had a box hung up at the New Warehouse" in Amsterdam, so that "every ooe" might "place his letters at any

- 1652 time to be dispatched by the first ship sailing." They deemed it 1652 advisable that a similar plan be followed at New Amsterdam, and Aug. 6 that the letters "put into a bag" be sent over to the directors, at their place of meeting, for distribution.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV:
 186. Nothing was done, and "great complaints" continued to pour in upon the directors "concerning the delivery of private letters" coming from New Netherland, which were "often kept undelivered two or three weeks or lost entirely to the great disadvantage of private traders and others." The directors, therefore, again directed Stuyvesant, on Nov. 23, 1654, "to have a box or chest made," in which letters could be collected and then given,
 "well secured in one package, to the supercargo," whenever a ship sailed, together with instructions to have the same delivered to the directors immediately upon his arrival at Amsterdam.—
Ibid., XIV: 304. None the less, the wishes of the Directors were unheeded and the "great complaints" continued. Again, on Sept.
 25, 1655, they urged compliance upon Stuyvesant and the council.
 They then suggested that a letter-box be "hung up at the Warehouse [on Pearl St.] or whatever place" was deemed fit and advised that the bag be sent over "under seal."—Ibid., 334.
- The first evidence of an attempt to give heed in the slightest manner to postal regulation in New Netherland was in an ordinance of Stuyvesant and the council, of June 13, 1657, which provided that nobody should be allowed to board arriving ships before visitation by a government officer and the delivery of the official mail; all other letters were to be held "until a proper list" of them could be made out, "to insure their delivery to the right man or owner," and the supercargo was allowed to collect a fee of three stuivers, or six cents, for each letter.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 313.
 The foregoing provisions related only to incoming mail.
- On Oct. 30, 1659, the directors declared by resolution that it had "been discovered that private letters" were not being "placed into sealed bags in New Netherland and Curaçao, as ordered by the government and loog practiced in Brazil. . . but that masters of private vessels" returning to Holland usually took along letters which they delivered "badly or with great delay." They determined to prevent this, and ordered that "henceforth a clause" should "be inserted in the ballbond, given by skippers, sailing to New Netherland and Curaçao, forbidding them to bring privately letters to this place [Amsterdam] under penalty of one hundred Carolus guilders for each contravention."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 446; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 379. These regulations were communicated to Stuyvesant (N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 458), who, with his council, promulgated the same by an ordinance, enacted on June 2, 1660 (q.v.). A letter-box was placed "at the Office of the Secretary of the Director General and Council," for the deposit of letters, and a system of registration was provided, in case anyone should "require a receipt for his Letter," for which a fee of three stuivers, or six cents, in wampum, was charged, whilst record of registration was made by "one of the clerks . . . on a list."
 —Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 380. On June 25, 1660, Stuyvesant informed the directors that their directions in regard to receiving and forwarding the mail had been published and posted in New Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 475. It was in 1660, therefore, that the first post-office in New Netherland was established at Manhattan.
- On account of the break in diplomatic relations between the states-general and England, and impending war (see May 29, July 8), the directors at Amsterdam warn Stuyvesant and the council to "arm all freemen, soldiers and sailors and fit them for defense," to provide "proper officers," and to appoint "places of rendezvous;" also to "put the fortifications at New Amsterdam, [Fort] Orange and [Fort] Casimir in a good state of defense," whilst keeping an eye upon their New England neighbours.—*N. Y. Col.
 Docs.*, XIV: 186, 207.
- Sept. 2 Hans Steen solicits permission to teach school, which is granted
 2 him by the provincial government.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), V: 49 (N. Y. State Library). He was a private schoolmaster. See Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools of N. Neth., 112.
- 3 The states-general again warns the West India Co. to put their 3 province in a proper state of defence.—Broedhead, op. cit., I: 547.
- 4 The duty allowed during Kieft's administration on each mer-4 chantable beaver, as well as on other skins, brought to New Amsterdam, was fifteen stuivers. This rate was continued under Stuyvesant, without objection from the local merchants. But
- the directors at Amsterdam contracted with "some Merchants of Amsterdam not to exact more than 8 per cent on Beavers and Otters," a favoritism fatal to the revenues of New Netherland and objectionable to the merchants there. However, the reduced rate was also in time extended to them. This made matters worse for the revenues of the province, and Stuyvesant and the council therefore now provide for an additional local duty on furs. Besides the eight per cent, four more stuivers are ordered to be paid "for each merchantable Otter, and Beaver skin and Bear and Elk hide, the thirds and halves reckoned in proportion."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 189; Laws & Ord. Neth., 40, 73, 135-36.
- 5 Michael Tadeas at this time kept a tavern on the site of the present No. 11 Pearl St., where the Maritime building now stands.
 This tavern was not in existence after 1663, when Jan Gerritsen, a baker, occupied the house.—See Castello Plan, II: 272; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- 6 David Provoost receives a certificate from Stuyvesant and the 16 council admitting him as a notary public.—Records N. Neth.
 (Dutch Council Minutes), V: 63 (N. Y. State Library).
- Oct. — The ordinances of Nov. 8, 1649, against the exportation of grain, and the consumption thereof for brewing, distilling, etc., and regulating the baking and sale of bread, are renewed, on account of the influx of immigrants from Holland.—*Laws & Ord.
 N. Neth.*, 138-39.
- 9 As "many guns" are "daily discharged and fired at Partridges and other game" within the limits of the city of New Amsterdam, endangering life and causing complaints to be made, Stuyvesant and the council issue an ordinance against the practice, subjecting violators to a forfeiture of their firearms "and a fine at the discretion of the Judge, to be applied one-third to the Poor, one-third to the Church and one-third to the Officer" (making the complaint).—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 138.
- 15 Hendrick van Dyck, former fiscal, is ordered by the director-general and council to vacate, by Nov. 1, the company's house which he has been occupying, as it is required for the Rev. Samuel Driusius, who has recently arrived (see Feb. 12, 1652).—*Tok
 Hist. MSS., Dutch*, 129.
- Nov. 29 Thomas Hall receives a ground-brief (recited in Liber Patents, IV: 17, Albany) for a piece of land which he extended, according to the modern streets, from Chatham Sq. to Pell St., along The Bowery. Shown on Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- Dec. — On the petition of Jao de la Montagne, teacher of the Latio school (see Apr. 4), the director-general and council order Vao 9 Tienhoven to pay the petitioner "three or four months wages."
Coun. Min. (MS.), V: 95 (Albany); Kilpatrick, op. cit., 99.
- 13 The directors at Amsterdam promise to send to Stuyvesant and the council by the next ship "the desired placats [edicts] concerning the buildiug lots upon the Mannhattans near the fort or in the city of [New] Amsterdam already granted, as well as uncultivated lands," in order that they may govern themselves accordingly, "and see that the latter" are cultivated. They say it never was their intention, nor is it now, that their consent, given to everyone who desires to emigrate to New Netherland, in proportion to his family, shall mean that anybody can become the owner of one or two hundred morgens (two or four hundred acres) of ground and then leave it uncultivated, thereby preventing others from obtaining convenient land, save at an enhanced price. The land, they say, must be occupied within three years; the number of people stipulated by the conditions must be placed on the land within the time limit, and had put to the plough, or, by default, the land shall be forfeited, and shall revert to the company's domain for the accommodation of others.—*N. Y.
 Col. Docs.*, XIV: 193. This resulted in the draft of two placards or edicts by Stuyvesant and the council "in regard to the neglect in cultivating and redeeming land and in erecting houses on the lots granted within the limits of New Netherland." These instruments were sent to the directors at Amsterdam, who repeated their wishes, as expressed before in their letter of Dec. 13, 1652. The directors, "after examining and slightly correcting them," "caused the said placats to be printed" at Amsterdam, and sent the printed copies "to be published and affixed" in New Amsterdam. The corrections made in one of the drafts stipulated "that the quit-rent or annual payment of 12 stuivers for each morgen" should "become due a year after the lot" had "first been ploughed or otherwise put to use."—Ibid., XIV: 207. Neither the original drafts nor printed revisions of these two edicts are among the 1652 records, but the printed copies were published "in front of the Dec. City Hall after ringing of the Bell," on Aug. 4, 1654 (q. v.).—

13 Rec. N. Am., I: 223.

The directors at Amsterdam, again view Stuyvesant to be on his guard to avoid broils with New England, and to cultivate the friendship of his English neighbours, as well as to promote commerce—chiefly with the Virginians. By these means, they say, "must the Manhattans prosper," her population increase, and her trade and navigation flourish. They add this significant prophecy: "For when these once become permanently established—the ships of New Netherland ride on every part of the ocean—then numbers, now looking to that coast with eager eyes, will be allured to embark for your island."—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 547, and authorities there cited.

1652- In her chapter on "The City and Its People" (Chap. XIV), Mrs.
1664 Van Rensselaer (in Hist. City of N. Y., I: 454 et seq.) presents an excellent summary of observations, from contemporary sources, which reflect the life and appearance of the little town of New Amsterdam during the last years of the Dutch régime (1652-1664), beginning thus:

"Governor Stuyvesant's New Amsterdam is seldom pictured, like Governor Van Twiller's, as a setting for opéra buffe performances. It is often painted, with no greater degree of truth, as the counterpart of some insignificant seaport in the peaceful, prosperous, unexcitable Holland of to-day. It is described as a sleepy, slothful village of apathetic boors and burghers stupefied by beer and tobacco and living in a stagnant isolation from which they were fortunately aroused by the advent of the English as their rulers.

"A seaport planted anywhere in the world by Dutchmen of the seventeenth century could not be a drowsy place, and the one that they planted on Manhattan was not an isolated place. It lived by traffic with the ever-dangerous people of the forest, with Englishmen up and down the coast, and with men of many nations eastward and southward across the sea; and it was a thoroughfare in a sense that was true of no other place on the American mainland, for those who voyaged between New England and Virginia preferred to pass through the safe waters of Long Island Sound, ships from England bound for New England often tarried in the harbor, and so at times did Dutch, French, and English privateers. Life was more varied and more agitated within the 'walls and gates' that enclosed New Amsterdam's heterogeneous population, excited by many controversies and threatened by many perils, than it was in any English-American community. Rarely indeed except in the depths of winter can New Amsterdam have known a quiet day, never a dull, monotonous season. Liveliness was one of the few things it never lacked, torpidity one of the moods of mind it could not encourage, peaceful sloth one of the careers for which it offered no chance.

"Its people were not conscious, like the New Englanders, of a high responsibility as the tenders of precarious beacon fires, religious and political, in a land of promise. Yet they knew that they were living in such a land and they had, therefore, a sense of corporate pride not to be measured by counting their numbers; for a little colony that is opening up the resources of a rich new continent may well feel itself superior in importance to a city of many thousands upon older soil. The men of New Amsterdam understood as clearly as covetous Englishmen that they had possessed themselves of the very best part of that 'large northern empire' claimed by the Kings of England and France; and this fact would by itself have sufficed to differentiate them widely from the inhabitants of any town of fifteen hundred souls in the Holland of their time or of ours.

"Although their city was still a frontier post in a truer sense than Boston, for Boston contained many more people and was much more solidly flanked and protected by lesser settlements, it probably presented the more civilized appearance. Some observers praised Boston highly but Colonel Cartwright, one of the royal commissioners sent from England in 1664, wrote in the following year that its houses were 'generally wooden' and its streets 'crooked and unpaved with little decency and no uniformity.' In New Amsterdam also, Stuyvesant wrote when he arrived in 1647, the houses were chiefly of wood. By 1664 they were mostly of brick with tiled roofs while those on the outlying farmsteads were often of stone. The annual rent of an ordinary house in the city seems to have been about fifteen beaver skins, or from 120 to 180 guilders.

1652- "Near the fort the houses were compactly placed. Elsewhere 1664 within the wall there was room for great trees and shady groves of aboriginal growth, and for open spaces brightened by the rich native flora, by crops of rye, barley, and tobacco, and by the fruit trees and garden flowers that the Hollander always carried with him from his fatherland. Indeed, there was an 'excess of large gardens,' said the West India Company when it got Cortelyou's map; if more closely built upon, the place might be more easily defended.

"As standards of cleanliness and comfort were much higher among the Dutch than among the English at this period, New Amsterdam would undoubtedly have given less pain than Boston to the senses of a modern sanitarian. For a long period after it became New York all strangers noticed how spottish its Dutch traditions kept it within doors; and the outward disdevelopment of its early years was greatly bettered after the city magistrates took it in charge. Then, with the aid of the provincial government, they gradually improved the streets, appointing official 'fence viewers,' refusing to let poor structures occupy good sites, ordering away pigsties, hen-houses, and other nuisances, and, to lessen the risk of fire, prohibiting hay stacks and wooden chimneys. Hogs had been at first the only scavengers, entering the yards from the streets.

"Soon after Broer Straet was paved 'with cobble stones' in 1658 and given the name that it still retains as Stone Street other streets were improved in the same way. Along each side of the Heere Gracht or Great Canal ran a street, and along the East River shore, from the mouth of the Heere Gracht to the Water Poort at the end of the city wall, a fine walk protected by the schoeyng or sea-wall of planks and therefore called De Waal or Lang de Waal. The path at a little distance from the inner side of the city wall, which afterwards developed into Wall Street, was called the Gingel (the Circuit).

"Near the wharf at the mouth of the Heere Gracht a small market house was built in 1656, and on the Plain in front of the fort, now the Bowling Green, a meat market in 1659—a substantial structure with a tiled roof. There were no market places in all New England towns as there were in all Dutch towns, and not until 1740 was a public market house built in Boston. An annual cattle fair held at New Amsterdam for six weeks in the autumn was called a 'free market,' which meant that strangers as well as burghers then had liberty to trade at retail and were exempt from arrest. Proclamations put into English brought farmers with their herds and flocks from points as distant as Stamford in New Haven Colony and the eastern parts of Long Island; and for thirty years or more this Dutch institution survived in New York.

"... The present City Hall Park is a fragment of the common land, called De Vlakte (the Flat) and afterwards the Commons, where, well outside the city wall, the citizens had free pasturage for their cattle."

As we know from the so-called "Duke's Plan" (Pl. 10, Vol. I) and from the Castello Plan (Pl. 82, Vol. II), "Many of the houses in the city had crow-stepped gables turned toward the street and roofs of vari-colored tiles. Some had projecting beams in the gable for the hoisting of goods into the store-rooms beneath the roof, and the characteristic Dutch porch or 'stoop' raised several feet above the ground. Inside, there were no stoves but enormous stone fireplaces bordered with blue and white tiles; there were great beds built into the walls, solid pieces of furniture, stores of household linen and handsome clothes, and treasures of pewter and silver; also, though rarely, large looking-glasses, marble tables, clocks, 'alabaster cabinets,' 'great china pots,' and, in Stuyvesant's house at least, cabinets of ebony which were probably receptacles for porcelain treasures. These were more likely of Japanese than of Chinese origin, for after 1641 Nagasaki was an important trading post for the Dutch. The burghers of New Amsterdam had a great deal more silverware than the New Englanders who in other ways were much richer, but they did not regard it as an extravagance. It played the part now played by the savings-bank. 'Money and plate' is a frequent conjunction of terms in inventories and wills.

"From the same lists it appears that chairs, always straight-backed, were sometimes covered with Russia leather or with velvet and lace. The 'carpets' often mentioned were small rugs or, more 1652- commonly, table-covers; sand was the universal floor covering. The wonderful blooming of art in the Netherlands had so developed the popular love for pictures and the belief in them as good investments that they abounded everywhere, even in the cottages of peasants. In New Amsterdam also they were numerous, relatively much more numerous than books.

"Modest in size and put to modest uses were these comfortable Dutch-American houses, trade and family life going on together beneath the same roof as was the contemporary custom in European towns. The kitchen was the family sitting-room. Like the smaller chambers the room for formal uses, which we should call the parlor, held a bedstead; and here stood the Dutchwoman's most indispensable article of furniture, her big kas or clothes-chest. The plentiful wadded petticoats and suits of clothing that filled the kas were of sorts that many years' wear could not damage. Much household linen was needed where, according to the general European practice, it was allowed to accumulate for the great bleacheries that were undertaken only twice or four times in a year. Mighty smokers though they were, Dutchmen, say their own historians, rarely smoked indoors. But the extreme care that they bestowed upon the cleanliness of the house and its furnishings, say the same authorities, did not extend to their persons or to their clothing when in use. If Sir William Temple made no such remarks when he spoke with wonder of the niceties of Dutch housekeeping it was because, low as was then the standard of personal cleanliness in Holland, it was still lower elsewhere.

"All the shops in New Amsterdam were general stores on a larger or smaller scale. The best one was kept by Cornelis Steenwyck who was one of the few Great Burghers and in later years was thought the richest man in the province. Taverns were of much more importance in the life of the community than they are to-day—the citizens' only substitutes for the modern hotel, restaurant, dance-house, club-house, exchange, and newspaper. Some of them were kept by prominent men like Martin Cregier and Salomon La Chair, a notary public who left his wine business in his wife's charge when, on his little yacht, he was making professional tours of the province. A record book in La Chair's handwriting, preserved in the office of the city clerk in New York, shows that he had a collection of law-books for reference . . .

"Entertainments under the domestic roof were limited to family festivals but these were many and jovial; even funerals were almost festivities, so plentiful was the proffered supply of food, drink, and tobacco. The men constantly met at their 'clubs' in the taverns; and here, indoors or on the garden turf, the young people danced. Public occasions in country places near by, like the founding of a new town or the dedication of a new church, were marked by ceremonies that included a banquet given by the people of the locality to the governor or his representatives.

"At New Amsterdam the celebration of Christmas and other old church festivals was not thought, as in 1659 the general court of Massachusetts pronounced it, a 'great dishonor' to God. Most characteristically Dutch were the St. Nicholas Day and New Year's Day observances, but Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide were also celebrated by the Dutch Calvinist as heartily as by any Catholic. Nor was New Amsterdam's Sunday by any means the Sabbath of New England. All avoidable kinds of labor, all amusements, and all sales of drinks were strictly forbidden 'before, during, and between' the hours of service; but when Stuyvesant tried to extend such prohibitions to cover the whole twenty-four hours the city magistrates refused to publish his ordinance, saying that it was too severe and 'contrary to the freedoms' of the fatherland. The many days of prayer and humiliation and the rarer thanksgiving days appointed by the governor were observed in the same manner as the Sabbath. In 1655 when a merchant applied to the council for permission 'to make a lottery of a certain quantity of Bibles, Testaments, and other books,' asking also that persons be appointed to value the stock and 'to select something for the poor,' the matter was referred to the city court which resolved 'that the same being advantageous shall be proceeded with.'

"Stuyvesant's Sunday ordinances show what sports his people enjoyed on week-days and on the Sabbath after their devotions had been performed: 'going on pleasure parties in boat, car, or wagon,' 'fishing, fowling, and rowing in search of nuts and strawberries,' playing at dice, cards, bowls, shovel-board, and tennis, and at treck, a game with balls and hoops often played on the grass. Golf was also 1652- a Dutch game, described as played with a small ball, a crooked club, and a series of small holes in the turf. Turkey shooting was a common pastime in New Netherland. With small success, apparently, the governor in council issued ordinances against firing guns, beating drums, and selling liquor on New Year's Day and May Day, against the erection of May-poles as likewise conducive to disorderly conduct, and against the rough sport called pulling or riding the goose. . . .

"In New Amsterdam there were no vehicles built for purposes of pleasure or mere comfort—only utilitarian carts. And there were no side-saddles; the women rode on pillion behind the men. In winter, however, Holland itself hardly offered better chances for the true Dutch joys of skating and sleighing than the frozen rivers and ponds, marshes and meadows of Manhattan. English visitors delighted to watch men and women flying over the ice with great market-baskets on their heads. But they were slow to adopt useful inventions novel to their eyes, for two or three generations seem to have passed before the slee of New Netherland made its way into New England. When iron lacked, its runners were shod with split saplings.

"In summer a spot called the Locust Trees, on the bluff overlooking the North River back of Governor Stuyvesant's garden, was a favorite trysting and loitering place. More than one primeval tree appears to have been preserved within the city limits to shelter the pipe-smoking burgher who might not smoke in his own home. Nutten (Governor's) Island was some sort of a pleasure ground; and the Bowery village, said Domine Selyns writing to the classis of Amsterdam, was 'a place of relaxation and pleasure whither people go from the Manhattans for the evening service.'

"The records of the burgomasters' court are complete enough to give, in conjunction with the governor's correspondence and ordinances, a fair idea of the moral condition of his city. Plainly, it was much higher than that of Kieft's scattered community had been. It could well stand comparison with the condition of the English colonies, and it might shame many of the settlements which in modern days have been planted far from the mother-country of their founders. To the sins of the flesh, indeed, New Amsterdam was prone; but the devil as the father of violence found few recruits among its people, and the world in the sense of material gain did not appeal to them more strongly than to their neighbors.

"Writing in 1664 Thomas Mun declared that the Dutch had 'well-near left' the 'swinish vice' of drunkenness while the English, who were said to have learned it of them, had fallen into a 'general leprosie of . . . piping, potting, feasting, fashions, and mispending of our time in idleness and pleasure.' In New Amsterdam drunkenness was still common but was no longer a cause for complaint against high-placed personages. The records of New Haven say that a Dutchman, bearing witness for a comrade who had been arrested there, explained that ' . . . at the Manadoes they were not punished for drunkenness but used after they had been drunk to say, God forgive us, or be merciful to us, and that was enough.' On the other hand, drink was declared by the court to be a 'frivolous excuse' for the transgressions to which it led; and the authorities did all they could to limit the sale of intoxicants to white men and to prevent it altogether in the case of red men.

"There was no regular prison in New Amsterdam—only a jail in the fort and detention rooms for temporary use in the Stadt Huus. The stocks, the pillory, and the wooden horse, working 'at the wheelbarrow' with the Company's slaves, whipping, branding, and the piercing of tongue or ears with hot irons (cruel punishments common in other colonies also), fines and temporary or permanent banishment—these served instead of our modern terms of imprisonment. A negro filled the office of executioner and whipper. Arrested debtors were permitted to live at a tavern if they would pay the bill; otherwise they languished in the Stadt Huus.

"When a litigant ordered by the city court to pay a sum of money did not do so his goods were levied upon and, if not redeemed within a week, were sold in a curious way. The court officer lighted a candle, bidding proceeded as long as it held out to burn, and as its light expired the highest bidder secured the goods.

"For all its democratic temper and its simple ways of life New Amsterdam, as its English invaders found it, was not an illiterate or unamannerly place. . . .

1664

"In short, it is not more justifiable to think of New Amsterdam as a slow-witted, illiterate place than as a drowsy, uneventful place. The more closely we read its chronicles in the words of its own founders and fosterers the more clearly we perceive how civilized, how modern it was in its essential habits of mind. If an American of to-day could be transported back two hundred and fifty years he would find himself more comfortably at home on Manhattan than anywhere else. In some of the English settlements he would have the chance to exercise more direct political power, but in none excepting Rhode Island would he find as much personal freedom, and in none at all a general mental attitude, a prevailing temper, as similar to the temper of the America of to-day."

Mrs. Van Rensselaer observes in Chap. XIII:
"In selecting the new members of the city corporation each existing member put a double number of names in nomination; and according to the pluralities thus determined the double list was drawn up which was submitted to the governor in council for a final choice. At once the corporation incurred Stuyvesant's displeasure by saying that no employee of the Company should be eligible; and at once he had to increase by fiat the scanty list of Great Burgers so that all the magistrates might belong to that class. In spite of his efforts, however, and in spite of the low price at which the Great Burgher-Right could be bought, the distinction between the two classes soon lapsed out of mind. Even in the elder Amsterdam it was abolished after existing for about twelve years."

"As thus reduced almost immediately to a democratic basis and modified, of course, at various later times, the burgher-right granted to the citizens of New Amsterdam in 1657 survived in New York until the year 1815 [q. v.]. Narrowly monopolistic though the arrangement may now appear, its establishment was always looked back upon as the foundation for the prosperity of Manhattan and, indeed, of the province at large. Inspiring and enriching the traders of the capital it directly encouraged the shipping industries from which every one else drew benefit; indirectly it stimulated agriculture; and it made the capital more and more the recognized central mart for the products of all parts of the province as well as for imported commodities. It did not lead to the organization of trade and artisan guilds like those of Europe."

"The two burgomasters of New Amsterdam transacted all the executive and financial business of the city corporation. Each was on duty at the Stadt Huis every other day, and four times a year each made a report to his associate and their predecessors—the 'old burgomasters' who, with the 'old schepens' seem to have formed a little vroedschap or municipal council after a pattern set, of course, in the fatherland. One burgomaster retired from office each year, then becoming the city treasurer. Olof Stevenson Van Cortlandt was the first who held this post, taking office in 1657. Certain fees reverted to the senior burgomaster, and he was called the president of the corporation; but the schout presided over its sessions, moved all questions, and collected the votes. The specified duties of the five schepens were simply judicial as they were in Holland."

"Although the magistrates of the immature little city on Manhattan never acquired powers that corresponded with those of their prototypes in the commercial metropolis of Europe, from year to year their responsibilities and their influence increased. They held in trust all the property the city acquired, beginning with its Stadt Huis; they kept its seal, farmed out the excise, imposed special taxes, and assisted in the enactment of laws and the control of the militia. It has already been shown that they sometimes summoned popular meetings. The governor consulted them about provincial as well as municipal affairs, seating them, for instance, with his own official coadjutors and the chief militia officers in the councils of war he called whenever danger threatened, and toward the end of his administration taking no important step without their concurrence."

"No code of laws was ever drawn up for New Netherland. The governor's court administered the Roman-Dutch law of Holland, directly if it fitted the needs of the moment or through special ordinances which the West India Company afterwards confirmed or vetoed; and in 1659 the Company sent out for the guidance of the city court twelve copies of a little book called Ordnances and Code of Procedure before the Courts of the City of Amsterdam.

"To the city court the governor's court gradually transferred a great part of its business, civil and criminal. The labors of the lower tribunal were largely those of arbitration yet it elaborated a regular system of pleading by declaration, plea, and rejoinder, and a well-organized method of examining witnesses present and absent. If its members felt competent they acted as arbitrators—as when, say their minutes, they crossed the street to test Jacobus Van Couwenhoven's beer and the complaints that had been lodged against it. If the case was more complicated they selected reputable citizens to pass upon it, and once in a while these were 'good women.' An appeal from the decisions of the city court was rarely taken although permitted in cases involving more than fifty guilders. Admiralty jurisdiction was also exercised by this court."

"Wills were made orally or in writing before two members of any local court or before a notary and two witnesses, the notary's notes being sworn to and signed by the testator. Proof was not necessary for probate. Marriages were strictly regulated. They could not be performed until the bans had been three times published, and in 1654 it was ordered that this must be done in the place where the contracting parties actually lived. An ordinance of 1658 says that . . . all marriages must be solemnized within one month of the last proclamation of the bans under penalty of ten guilders for the first week of delay and twenty guilders for each succeeding week unless good reason were shown. Nor, under much heavier penalties, should any man and woman 'keep house as married persons' until they were lawfully married."

"According to Dutch custom all court officials took as much care for the interests of defendants as of plaintiffs. No lawyers practised in any court, but evidently the notaries of New Amsterdam were active, for more than one of them was punished for drawing up papers carelessly or for abusing the magistrates to their faces. . . .

"The business of the West India Company and of the province at large was carried on, under the governor, council, and schout-fiscal, by a receiver-general and collector of customs (who after 1658 formed with the governor and two councillors a board of audit), and by a little regiment of commissaries, bookkeepers, clerks, inspectors, surveyors, and Indian interpreters. From time to time the provincial or the city government appointed other petty officials for temporary service. Plural office-holding was lawful. One or two instances of malversation in office are recorded."

"As regarded internal affairs New Netherland's days of storm and stress were over. External dangers had drawn the governor and his burghers together. He had learned that they could not be governed like a garrison of soldiers, and they had been pacified if not satisfied by their victory in the matter of municipal government. Nevertheless, all was not peace between them. Although the West India Company said in 1660 that its province, which thus far had cost it one million guilders, was now in a position to support itself, Stuyvesant constantly complained of the emptiness of his official chest, and his people of the methods that he employed to fill it. For example, when the Company charged the export charge upon furs from a specific duty to an ad valorem duty of eight per cent he added a charge of four stivers upon each skin; and in 1654 he changed the one per cent staple-right charge upon all imports, which, he said, had proved impossible to collect, to a much higher specific duty upon liquors, salt, and all articles imported for the Indian trade."

"In 1661 the provincial revenue amounted to 40,000 guilders; in 1662 when the expenses of the government exceeded 55,000, to no more than 33,600. Although the city government often declared itself penniless it must at the last have gathered an annual revenue of some 25,600 guilders. For a while nothing fell into its coffers regularly except the proceeds of the small or burghers' excise. As Holland taught England the utility of stamp taxes so, in 1654, the magistrates of New Amsterdam suggested the first of which America heard the name, asking from the Company permission to levy a new impost 'such as on stamped paper etc.' They did not get this permission; . . .

"If the records of the West India Company had been preserved some comprehensive account of the commercial life of New Amsterdam might be written. As it is, only isolated items can be gathered. For example, a paper in the Moore collection says that the West India Company received in 1654 32,603 guilders in 'recognitions' and convoy charges on goods sent to the province by individual 1652—exporters on six ships, duly specified, and in 1655, six ships again being named, 22,973 guilders. From the Van Rensselaer papers it appears that the merchants had a mutual system of insuring ships and cargoes against loss and damage, using the printed forms employed for the same purpose in Holland. The local records tell that some thirty "trading barks" plied on River Mauritius but do not say how many sea-going vessels were owned or partly owned at Manhattan. It is evident that the merchants quickly grasped new chances to extend their ocean and their coastwise trade. In 1658 the governor of Canada permitted them to traffic with the white men on the St. Lawrence although not with the Indians, and in 1659 the West India Company allowed them, on petition, to try "the experiment" of direct trading upon their own account with the Caribbees, France, Spain, Italy, and other foreign places exclusive of the African and Oriental regions reserved to the ships of the East India Company. Peltry, it was decreed, must still be sent to Amsterdam only, and all return cargoes must be discharged either there or on Manhattan; yet the concession opened wide markets for New Netherland's inexhaustible stores of timber and its growing wealth in food-stuffs. . . .

"The Dutchmen's position at the great gateway to the West had begun to tell in their favor. The New Englanders no longer competed with them in the fur trade; the Canadians were their only rivals. Peltry was still their chief article of export. In 1656 Fort Orange and its vicinity sent down about thirty-five thousand heavier skins to Manhattan, and in October, 1660, Stuyvesant wrote that since the beginning of the year twenty-five or thirty thousand had been handled at Manhattan, yielding some 16,000 guilders in export duties. Tobacco stood next to furs as an article of export. Most of it came, in spite of the English Navigation Acts, from Maryland and Virginia; yet so much was grown in the province that in 1653, when food was scarce, the government ordered every farmer to plant as many hills of corn as of tobacco. . . .

"European goods were costly in New Netherland but profits can hardly have been greater than in New England, for heavy customs dues were added to the cost of transportation, and transportation averaged high in times when it took as long for cargoes to cross the Atlantic as it does now to reach the Philippines and when maritime disasters, including piracies, were much more frequent than they are to-day.

"More and more from year to year New Netherland showed a desire to educate its children and a willingness to do so at its own expense despite the pledges given by the Company. 'Nothing is of greater importance than the early instruction of youth,' said Governor Stuyvesant; a lack of schoolmasters, said Domine Megapolensis, would mean 'a ruined youth and a bewilderment of men's minds'; and repeatedly the people said the same. In reply to the complaints upon this subject that they embodied in the Remonstrance of 1649 Cornelis Van Tienhoven declared that the free school was always maintained and that various teachers 'kept school in hired houses' so that the young were provided with 'the means of instruction.' Certainly this was true in somewhat later days, for the richer families employed private tutors while twenty-eight masters of schools public and private had been licensed by the year 1664, not including those who served in the South River country. . . .

"Jews were never persecuted but at first were ill received in New Netherland."

— Not later than this year, the Gevangen Huys (or prison) in the fort was erected.—See description of Prototype View, I: 124. It was demolished before 1695.—See description of Pl. 23-b, I: 236. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 972.

— The deanery of the city, in this year, erected a house for the poor (Liber III: 24, Albany), the site of which is now covered by parts of Nos. 21 and 23 Beaver St. It was superseded, between 1658 and 1686, by a house at what is now No. 34 Broad St.—See Chronology, 1658; The Castello Plan, II: 242, 246; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 953, 955; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

Jan. 27 Jacob Kip is engaged and appointed by the director-general and council "to serve as Secretary or Clerk to the Burgomasters and Schepens of New Amsterdam," his term "to begin on the next first of February."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 196. This appointment preceded that of the first board of burgomasters and schepens by several days.

Hendrick Pietersen from Hasselt receives a ground-lease (recited in Liber Deeds, A: 205, 206, New York) for a parcel of land occupying, on the modern map, the entire bed of Pine St. at Broadway, and extending a little south of the south line and a little north of the north line of Pine St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

The year 1653 may be called the banner year of New Amsterdam during the entire Dutch régime. Until this time its government was coordinate with that of the province, under the administration of the director-general, the provincial council, and a schout-fiscal. On April 11, 1650 (q. v.), a suggestion for municipal government in New Amsterdam was made, in a report of a committee to the states-general, deferring its inception for several years. On April 4, 1652 (q. v.), the directors at Amsterdam informed Stuyvesant and his council that a municipal form of government, under a schout, two burgomasters, and five schepens, had been granted to New Amsterdam; the separate office of schout was, however, not vested in the city at this time (see April 9, 1660 for final grant of a separate schout to the city). See also July 28, 1649.

Now (Feb. 2, 1653), Stuyvesant and his council proclaim the long desired grant of municipal government for New Amsterdam, and announce its exact terms, which are contained in a long instrument, the full text of which has been unknown, hitherto, by historians. On Dec. 24 (q. v.), this document was complained of as "an instruction altogether too contracted, too curtailed, and too limited."—Rec. N. Am., I: 144. This instrument prescribes also the form of oath to be taken by burgomasters and schepens, and presents the instructions for the secretary or clerk of this inferior bench of justice.

The text, in two contemporary copies, was discovered by Victor Hugo Paltsits in the course of researches made in 1911 for this work. He recognized their importance as the fundamental source of the origin of municipal government in this city. A reproduction is given on Pl. 9 (a to e, inclusive) of one of these copies, which was made by Jacobus Kip, first secretary of New Amsterdam, in 1656 (q. v.), when, upon the dismissal of Cornelis van Tienhoven from all offices he had held, including that of schout of the city, the city fathers again sought, at a time they deemed most opportune, to have a separate city schout, free from provincial entanglements. The form of government is accompanied by coordinate correspondence, and marginalia explain the judgments of Stuyvesant and his council with respect to the request of the city officials, dated June 7, 1656.—See Rec. N. Am. II: 109-11, for translations.

A translation of all these papers, made for this work by Arnold J. F. van Laer, accompanies their reproduction in this volume. The second copy is in the handwriting of Hans Bontemantel, one of the directors at Amsterdam, who was actively interested in the business of the West India Company and in its affairs in New Netherland. His copy was perhaps made from Secretary Kip's transcript, as both are found among N. Neth. Papers, in the New York Public Library, and formerly belonged to a larger collection of Bontemantel's papers. It consists only of the "Form of government in New Netherland. A° 1653," a heading which he gave to it. This copy is broken up into groups, with numerous paragraphs, some of which have headings as, for example, "Burgomasters' Jurisdiction," "Schepens," and "Oath of Burgomasters and Schepens." Bontemantel reproduces none of the marginalia found in the Kip copy, but he has added a few marginal notes of his own, mainly explanatory of divergences with respect to the authority given to the burgomasters of New Amsterdam as compared with the practice pertaining to burgomasters in old Amsterdam.

Bontemantel wrote a very instructive treatise on the government of Amsterdam, entitled: "De Regeering van Amsterdam, soo int Civiel als Crimineel en Militaire" (1653-1672), which was published by Dr. G. W. Kernkamp in Historisch Genootschap . . . te Utrecht, Werken, 1897-1898, Vols. LV-LVI (3d ser., VII-VIII). A biographical account of Bontemantel is given in the "Inleiding" (Intro.) to Vol. LV, pp. 1-1xxv, and an account of his notes and memoirs is found in the same vol., pp. lxxvi-clxix. Among his papers there were at one time two volumes of notes, etc., relative to the West India Co. Of these only one empty cover is now with the other Bontemantel papers in the City Archives at Amsterdam. The papers in the N. Y. Pub. Library and the Penn. Hist. Soc. are part of them.

Resolution

On the 2d point:

The position of schout shall henceforth be separated from the fiscal's office, but the appointment to the said position shall be made by the Director General and Council, in accordance with the orders given them.

The second point

Furthermore, they also request [the right] to choose a schout, or at least to nominate a double number. It is true, the fiscal, Tienhoven, occupies the said place, but with as little satisfaction to the burghers (who have presented a petition on the subject) as respect for them.

To the Right Honorable Gentlemen, the Hon. Director General and the Hon. Council of New Netherland

Shew with due reverence and respect, the burgomasters and schepens of the city of Amsterdam in New Netherland,

That they are reliably informed that the Hon. Cornelis van Tienhoven has by the Hon. Patroons of this province been discharged from the positions which he has occupied here in this country, and consequently also from the office of schout of this city, which he has also held until this time.

And whereas the Right Hon. Directors of the West India Company, Chamber at Amsterdam, the lords and patroons of this province (upon the request to that effect made both by the commonalty and by the petitioners' predecessors) have in their Honors' communication, dated the 13th of May 1654, been pleased to order that the position of schout of this city should be separated from the fiscal's office, as appears from the copy thereof hereto annexed;

Therefore, they, the petitioners, hereby respectfully pray your Honors (since the Hon. Cornelis van Tienhoven has been discharged from all his offices) that your Honors, in pursuance of said communication, may be pleased to appoint a reasonable, intelligent and competent person from among the burghers or inhabitants here as Schout of this city, whereby justice will be maintained and the flourishing condition of this just or newly commencing city may be more and more promoted.

Awaiting hereupon your Honors' favorable disposition, we remain,
Your Honors' obedient servants, the burgomasters and schepens of the city of Amsterdam in New Netherland. Below was written: By order of the same. Signed: Jacob Kip, Secretary.

The Director General and Council of New Netherland hereby make known that the Hon. Directors of the Chartered West India Company, Chamber at Amsterdam, lords and patroons of this province, have thought fit, under the high authority of their Director General and Council of New Netherland, to favor this new and growing city of New Amsterdam and the inhabitants thereof with a court of justice, to be constituted as far as possible and as the circumstances of this country permit according to the laudable custom of the city of Amsterdam, name-giver to this newly developing city, however, in such a way that all judgments shall remain subject to reversal by and appeal to the Director General and Council, to be by them finally disposed of.

As to the appointment of the judges requisite thereto, the aforesaid honorable patroons order that qualified, honorable, reasonable, intelligent and the most well-to-do persons be chosen and selected, who are neither corrupt nor opponents of the aforesaid lords patroons or their government here established, but peace loving and well affected subjects, being native born or real estate owning inhabitants, who according to the laudable custom of Amsterdam have been for at least seven years burghers here in this city, or else were born and brought up within the provinces of the United Netherlands, promoters and professors of the Reformed religion, as in conformity to the word of God and the regulations of the synod of Dordrecht it is at present taught in the churches of the United Netherlands and here in this country. Which court of justice, for the present time, until it shall be otherwise ordained or enlarged by the aforesaid Hon. Directors or their agents, shall at first consist of two burgomasters and five schepens, who from now on shall be chosen and sworn by the Director General and Council on the 2d of February (not being a Sunday), and shall be served by a secretary or clerk and an ordinary sworn messenger, of whom yearly a certain number shall be changed and some continue in office in order to inform the newly appointed members as to the preceding business.

New Netherland Government

As to the burgomasters, whose particular duty and function it is to see to the proper administration, order and welfare of this city, extending between the two rivers to the Fresh Water, they are also to take care that proper quiet, peace and harmony prevail among the commonalty;

However, in such a way that by the aforesaid burgomasters no new offices or ordinances shall be made, much less bestowed or published, without the previous knowledge, approval and confirmation of the Director General and Council, as representatives of the sovereignty and supreme government, but the burgomasters shall have the right (what concerns them particularly and is especially recommended to them), to propose and report to the Director General and Council what they consider necessary for the good order, peace, quiet, welfare and government of the burghers, wherein then, in the presence of the burgomasters, by laws and ordinances such provision shall be made as the circumstances shall demand.

And furthermore, from this time forth there is reserved to the burgomasters the care and supervision of the alignment of houses, streets and fences, in order that within this city the same may be built and laid out in orderly fashion. Likewise, they are to see to it that at a convenient time this city be properly accommodated and provided with the necessary public buildings, such as churches, schools, a court house, weigh house, charitable institutions, dock, pier, bridges and other similar works, for which buildings, as in course of time and with the increase of population they become necessary, there will necessarily be required subsidies and funds, which must of necessity be procured from the burghers and inhabitants according to circumstances. Therefore, the burgomasters, but with the advice of the schepens and the approval of the Director General and Council, shall have power and authority to lay a reasonable tax on the burghers and inhabitants to meet the needs of this city and also to impose fines and penalties on the unwilling contraveners and to levy them by execution.

In case any orphan masters, church masters, surveyors, fire wardens, or other similar officers should be found necessary, the burgomasters shall report this to the Director General and Council and the need thereof being understood and acknowledged, the burgomasters shall have the absolute nomination of the persons thereto needed and qualified, but the appointment and confirmation shall depend on the Director General.

As to the court of schepens, although the burgomasters of Amsterdam, the name-giver to this city, properly speaking have no judicial authority in conjunction with the schepens, whether over inhabitants or burghers, or in criminal or civil matters, nevertheless, since the schepens for the present are still weak and the honorable lords patroons have thought fit to compose the court of justice of two burgomasters and five schepens, the burgomasters will until further order in the sessions of the court of schepens have an advisory and a casting vote and when present alternately preside, the vice presidency being annually occupied by the oldest schepen, and all this until it shall be otherwise ordained or decided by the aforesaid patroons or their agents here.

Which burgomasters and schepens, according to circumstances, shall meet at least once or twice a week at a regular time and place to be decided upon and made known by them, to hear, examine and determine, whether by judgment or arbitration, according to the circumstances of the case, all civil questions which are moved or brought before them, also criminal offenses of a minor degree, hereinafter more fully specified.

However, if they find the case fit to be arbitrated and the parties disposed thereto, the arbitration shall be conducted completely out of court by both the burgomasters and those whom they according to the circumstances of the case may wish to adjoin to themselves from among the schepens or other honest burghers, yes, even, if the burgomasters should find the matter of sufficient importance, from among the council, from which arbitration there shall lie no bill of review or appeal.

And before the said court of burgomasters and schepens must needs be brought in the first instance all matters amounting to one hundred guilders or less (the arrest made by the fiscal excepted); also all actions of slander, or differences of words between lord and vassal, master and servant, mistress and maid, neighbour and neighbour, buyer and seller, tenant and landlord, gentleman and workman and other such like questions.

Likewise, all criminal actions consisting of acts, threats, fights, or wounding, whether they be brought or instituted before the aforesaid court by the parties, or by the fiscal (representing until further order the schout of the city).

Likewise, before the said court, until further order and increase of population, shall be subject to be cited, be compelled to appear and be amenable not only the burghers and inhabitants of this city of New Amsterdam, for the present extending to the Fresh Water, together with the arriving passengers, merchants, traders, skippers, masters of sloops and their sailors, so long as they remain on the roadstead or in the harbour of this city, but also all other inhabitants of Manhattan island, as well as the inhabitants of Amersfoort, Breuckelen and Midtwout and all those residing in the adjacent territory across the East and North rivers, who thus far enjoy no court of justice either by patent from the aforesaid lords patroons or their agents, and all this until such time as it may be otherwise ordained or decided by the aforesaid lords patroons or their agents, who refer to them the duty of ordering, installing and appointing such officers and judges in and outside of this city as they according to the population and increase of colonies, cities, villages, hamlets and inhabitants shall deem suitable for the more convenient administration of justice.

All those who desire to have some one summoned before the aforesaid court of justice shall do so through the ordinary court messenger, to be qualified thereto by the Director General and Council, at least twelve hours before the case is called, when the contending parties shall be bound to appear in their own person, without either of them, be he plaintiff or defendant, being allowed to be assisted by advocates, attorneys, or any one else, except women, imbeciles and minors, who may appear with their guardians, and those who are either sick or who have traveled out of the jurisdiction shall in such case be allowed to appoint some one in their stead, who is neither an advocate nor an attorney, nor occupies himself with any legal business, nor receives compensation therefor.

The aforesaid burgomasters and schepens may in the suits between parties appearing before them decree the providing of a deposit, definite condemnation, or discharge, as they according to the circumstances of the case shall deem proper.

In cases of injury, whether by words or deeds, they shall as above stated use diligence as arbitrators to make the parties agree and pacify them if possible. If not, they shall refer the complete account of the proceedings and the documents to the Director General and Council and upon the decision thereof impose a penalty to keep the peace.

In case the defendant, being duly cited, does not appear in person as hereinbefore stated, default shall be decreed against him, and upon the second default the schepens may order a deposit to be made and authorize the plaintiff, especially if he be a stranger, to take out the sum demanded, upon security or guaranty of restitution, if such should afterwards be decreed proper.

And if thereafter the case against the defendant, upon a third citation, be called to purge himself of his second default, or hear judgment pronounced, the burgomasters and schepens shall, if the defendant even then fails to appear, change the aforesaid deposit, by a judgment by default, to a definite condemnation, if the case lends itself thereto.

In cases and questions of slander, the burgomasters and schepens may by the court messenger summon the parties to appear in person, under penalty of forfeiture of one daelder [one and a half guilders] for the first default, of forfeiture of three guilders for the second time and of forfeiture of one pound Flemish [six guilders] for the third time. The parties even then failing to appear, the aforesaid burgomasters and schepens may refer them to the Director General and Council, provided that they shall first levy the aforesaid fines by execution, one half to be for the benefit of the said gentleman and the other half to be employed at their discretion.

The fines for default which the parties shall incur before the aforesaid court shall be, for the defendant, the first time eight stuivers, the second time twelve stuivers, and the third time sixteen stuivers, and for the plaintiff as much again, to be applied as above. Of which defaults a record shall be kept as well by the court messenger on the ordinary roll, as by the secretary or clerk in the minutes.

From all definite judgments rendered by the aforesaid burgomasters and schepens in civil as well as in criminal matters and above one hundred guilders (with the exception of judgments by default), the parties who find themselves aggrieved may appeal to the Director General and Council of New Netherland, provided that the appellant first of all deposit the moneys or goods mentioned in the definite judgment and pay the costs of the suit, if he has been condemned to do so.

Furthermore, the appellant shall be bound to have the appeal entered by the clerk or secretary within the space of ten days after the pronouncement of the judgment and to prosecute the same at the first meeting of the Director General and Council, or by petition, within the space of twenty days, to give notice thereof to the Director General and Council. The appeal being granted, he shall deposit in the hands of the Supreme Council twelve guilders, which shall be returned to him in case the judgment from which he appeals is modified.

It being the proper function of the burgomasters and schepens to render law and justice between the contending parties, they shall practise the same according to the written laws of our fatherland, especially, as far as is possible and the nature of the case will permit, according to the laudable customs and ordinances of the city of Amsterdam and the ordinances issued by the Director General and Council, which shall be duly observed. But if parties litigating before them either in the court room or out of it insult them in their official capacity or in person, by word or gesture, or insult each other, the court may by peremptory execution fine or punish them according to the nature of the offense, the penalty not to exceed the sum of twelve guilders.

Finally, the burgomasters and schepens shall cause this and all other privileges, orders and instructions which from time to time may be issued by the aforesaid Hon. Directors or their agents in this city to be registered and kept in a register, to which the burgomasters and schepens who are in office may either jointly or individually have recourse as often as they please, without it, however, being necessary or permissible for them privately to make extracts therefrom.

Thus, until further amplification, provisionally done at the meeting of the Hon. Director General and Council of New Netherland, this 2d day of February anno 1653, in New Netherland. Was signed: P. Stuyvesant, La Montagne, Brian Newton and Cor: van Tienhoven.

We, the burgomasters and schepens, qualified thereto by the Director General and Council promise and swear in the presence of Almighty God, saving our former oath of allegiance to the High and Mighty Lords the States General of the United Netherlands as sovereigns, the Hon. Directors of the Chartered West India Company as lords and patroons of this New Netherland province, and their Director General and Council already appointed or hereafter to be appointed, that we, in our aforesaid capacity, to the best of our knowledge shall administer true law and justice between parties in cases brought before us, without any passion of favor or disfavor; that we shall promote and help promote the welfare of this city and the inhabitants thereof; that we shall [uphold] the honor of God and his pure religion as in conformity to the word of God and the regulations of the synod of Dordrecht it is taught in the churches of the Netherlands and here, and no other; that we shall maintain and help maintain the high jurisdiction of the aforesaid lords patroons and their supreme government already established or hereafter to be established; and that we shall bar and help bar whatever in any way shall conflict therewith. So help us God Almighty.

And by virtue of the foregoing there have been chosen and appointed:

As burgomasters

Joncker Arent van Hatten, formerly schepen of the city of Culemborch, steward of the county domain and member of the polder board of the said county, and at present captain of the burgher guard here.

1653
Feb.
2

Marten Cregier, old inhabitant of this city, formerly a representative of the commonalty and at present also a captain of the burgher guard.

As schepens

Paulus Leendersen van der Grift, from Amsterdam
Willem Beekman, from Sutphen, both former representatives of the commonalty and lieutenants of the burgher guard
Pieter Wolfersen van Couwenhoven, one of our inhabitants of this province and a former deacon
Maxsimiljan van Gheel
Allardt Antony, both from Amsterdam, sworn burghers and merchants here

Instructions for the secretary or clerk of the Inferior Court of Justice

In the first place, he shall be bound to attend the ordinary as well as the extraordinary sessions and court days of the burgomasters and schepens, in order to serve the court with his pen and make a perfect record according to the true intent and meaning of all that the presiding officer shall order him to write.

2

He shall take care to enter in the minutes the complaint of the plaintiff as well as the answer of the defendant, according to their true intent and meaning, without any favor or ill will, or regard of persons, and, after the members have expressed their opinions, on the order of the presiding officer note the final conclusion underneath.

3

In case there should on any point be any difference of opinion among the burgomasters and schepens, the vote of the majority shall be followed according to the rules of procedure, but he shall not be at liberty to divulge outside the court the opinion of the minority, but if requested to do so by the minority he may enter their opinion underneath the order or decision of the majority.

4

After the adjournment of the court he shall carefully copy into a register the complaint and the answer of the parties and all the orders of the burgomasters and schepens, and once or twice a year deliver an authentic copy thereof to the secretary's office of the Director General and Council.

5

For each order issued by the burgomasters and schepens, or entered on the margin of a petition, he shall be entitled to receive a fee of twelve stuivers for writing, and for entering the same in the minutes six stuivers.

6

In order to accommodate residents as well as strangers, he shall be at liberty to draw up petitions for whoever asks for it, provided that he causes the same to be signed by the petitioner, for which he shall receive a fee of sixteen stuivers if the petition has to do with civil matters, and otherwise twenty stuivers if the petition relates to questions of slander of minor offenses, and for drawing up an affidavit he shall receive twenty-four stuivers.

7

But petitions and remonstrances which by order of the burgomasters and schepens are to be presented or exhibited in their official capacity to the Director General and Council, together with all other writings and instruments drawn up by order of the aforesaid burgomasters and schepens, he shall write gratis on the yearly salary promised him by the Director General and Council.

8

Finally, he shall promise and swear to practice and perform all that is hereinafore mentioned to the best of his ability and knowledge and furthermore, for so far as his capacity is concerned, to promote and help promote the honor of God and his pure religion, the sovereignty of the High and Mighty Lords the States General, together with the high jurisdiction and authority of the Hon. Directors and their supreme government, already established, or hereafter to be established, without planning, much less practising, anything contrary thereto. So truly may God Almighty help me.

And to the aforesaid office was chosen and appointed Jacob Hendricksen Kip, formerly chief clerk in the secretary's office of the Director General and Council of New Netherland.

Done in Council, this 2d of February 1653, in Fort Amsterdam.

6 The first court session of the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam is opened with prayer, the text of which (imperfect at the beginning) is preserved in Rec. N. Am., I: 48-49. It reads: ". . . In addition it has pleased Thee to make us the rulers of the people in this place. Oh, Lord, our God, we miserable men acknowledge, that we are not worthy of this honor, we are also too weak and unfit to discharge this trust, unless Thou, oh God, gives[t] us assistance. We pray Thee, the Fountain of all good Gifts, make us fit through Thy grace, that we may do the duties, imposed upon us, faithfully and honestly. Enlighten for this purpose the darkness of our minds, that we may distinguish right from wrong, truth from lies and give clean and just decision as judges, having our eyes on Thy Word, which is a sure guide to simple wisdom. Let Thy law be the light upon our paths and a lantern for our footsteps, that they may never leave the path of justice. Let us remember, that we hold Court, not of men, but of God, who sees and hears everything. Let respect of person be far from us, so that we may judge the poor and the rich, friends and enemies, inhabitants and strangers, according to the same rules of truth and never deviate from them as a favor to anybody, and whereas gifts blind the eyes of the wise, keep our hearts from greed, grant also, that we condemn nobody lightly or unheard, but listen patiently to the litigants, give them time to defend themselves. Thy mouth and word be our counsel. Grant us also the grace, that we may use the power, which Thou has given us, for the general benefit of the authorities of the church, the protection of the good and the punishment of the bad. Incline also the hearts of the subjects to dutiful obedience, that by their love and prayers our burden may be lightened. Thou knowest also, oh Lord, that bad and ungodly men usually vilify and speak against Thy holy ordinances, therefore arm us with strength, courage, wisdom and confidence, that we may oppose all sins and bad things earnestly and zealously and fight for truth and justice, until we are dead. Please also, oh good Lord, to bless the resolutions, to be taken by us, that they may be carried out and have effect to the honor of Thy holy Name, for the best of this place, entrusted to us, and for our salvation." This prayer was followed by the Lord's prayer, no doubt said in unison. The Dutch original is reproduced on Pl. 10-a, Vol. IV.

" The burgomasters and schepens of the city of New Amsterdam, at this their first court session, give notice that they will hold their regular meetings "in the house hitherto called the City tavern, henceforth the City Hall [Stad Huys], on Monday mornings."—Rec. N. Am., I: 49. For reproduction of the page of the record-book containing the entry of this transaction, see Pl. 10-b. They continued to meet, however, at Fort Amsterdam on the 10th and 17th, but began their proceedings at the city hall on the 24th of this month.—Ibid., I: 51, 52, 54. On Dec. 24 (q. v.), they asked the directors of the West India Co. for the ownership of the city hall, "either as a free gift" to the city, or "else on a reasonable valuation." The company, in May, 1654, granted the building to the city.—Ibid., I: 146, 219, 291. For the erection of the city tavern (modern Nos. 71-73 Pearl St.), see 1642. The building was sold to John Rodman in 1699 and later demolished.—See Aug. 17, 1699.

" With the establishment of municipal government, the settlement, "for the present extending to the Fresh Water" (see the "Form of Government"), formally becomes the city of New Amsterdam.

10 The burgomasters and schepens recommend to Stuyvesant and the council the necessity of having in the city a court of orphan-masters, and they nominate from their board Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Willem Beekman and from the commonalty Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt and Cornelis Steenwyck, out of which number the director-general and council are asked to commission two. This request was renewed on the 24th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 52. To this proposal Stuyvesant and the council replied, on the 26th, that the intention was praiseworthy and that they were "pleased with it;" but that it needed "appendages . . . before such an Orphans Court could be established, for which the weak state of this just beginning City" was not prepared. They suggested that the care of widows and children be left to the deacons of the church and, in particular cases, to "special curators," appointed "for this or that widow and orphans or over their estates."—Ibid., I: 56. See Oct. 18, 1655.

" The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam resolve to propose to Stuyvesant and the council that "at the first opportunity a weighhouse be opened for the convenience of everybody, to weigh all wares, none excepted," which are delivered in the city, "and to appoint somebody to weigh everything above 50 lbs., for which he shall have "a fee of one penny per pound, payable by both purchaser and seller, each one half or as they agree;" also, that "all weights and measures, such as ells, schepens, tuns, half barrels, quarters and cans" shall be stamped, "according to the custom of Old Amsterdam." The proposal "to put up public scales" was before the council on the 18th, but, as nothing was settled at this meeting, the burgomasters and schepens renewed their request on the 24th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 52; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 196. Stuyvesant and the council replied, on the 26th, "that, when proper, a weighhouse and scales" should be built and made, and that an ordinance concerning the same should be passed as soon as the weigh-house was ready, and weights and measures which conformed to the Amsterdam standard were furnished.—Rec. N. Am., I: 56. All weights and measures in the province were to be regulated by the standards of Amsterdam. The burgomasters and schepens were, in the meantime, to direct the schout "to regulate, weigh or measure all weights, yard and other measures accordingly and stamp them with a mark," as they should devise.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 196. The weigh-house and scales were established in the spring, before May 4, 1654 (q. v.).—Rec. N. Am., I: 195, 246.

18 Regulations are made by ordinance for the inspection of tobacco by the tobacco inspectors, Isaac de Forest and George Holmes. New Netherland tobacco is not to be inspected in the months of December, January, and February, and at other seasons only on certain days of the week. The tobacco, if unmerchandise, is to be burned by them at once. They are empowered "to unhook all the Tubs or Hogsheds coming here [New Amsterdam] from Virginia and offered to them for inspection," so that they can "see into the middle of the Tobacco, where usually fraud occurs." Fixed inspection fees are to be paid, and the inhabitants of the city are warned not to hinder or molest the inspectors, "but if need be, to lend them all reasonable assistance."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 139-40. The two newly-created burgomasters of the city took part with Stuyvesant and the council in the enactment of this ordinance. It was renewed, on March 10, 1655.—Ibid., 189.

" The council resolves "that the ordinances concerning farm-servants and the brewing and malting of hard grain be published and posted."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 196; another translation in Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 140. The full texts are not among the records; the ordinances may have been simply renewals of former ones.

The grant in Liber GG bears date March 17, 1646. According to modern maps, this land was in the block bounded by Cherry, Roosevelt, and Oak Sts., and The Bowery.

" The burgomasters and schepens begin to hold their proceedings at the Stad Huys (city hall).—See Feb. 6.

" Domine Samuel Drisius receives a ground-brief for a large tract of land, including what are now both the south corners of Broad and Wall Sts., down Wall St. as far as No. 45, and down Broad St. to within 75 feet of Exchange Pl. It included the sites of the building of J. P. Morgan & Co., the Wilks building, the New York Stock Exchange (in part), and other structures in the financial district.—See Castello Plan, C. Mar. 13 Stuyvesant and his council meet with the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam in general session. Letters from the directors at Amsterdam "and the last received current news from New England," concerning warlike preparations there, having been read, the joint meeting resolves to prepare for the defense of the city by establishing a burgher night watch "to stand guard in full squads over night" at designated places, but beginning at once "at the City Tavern, now the City Hall" (Pearl St. and Coenties Alley); secondly, it is voted "that Fort New Amsterdam be repaired and strengthened," and, thirdly, as the fort can not contain all of the inhabitants nor "defend all the houses and dwellings in the City," it is considered desirable "to surround the greater part of the City with a high stockade and a small breast-work," behind which in time of peril the inhabitants can be sheltered from attack and defend themselves and their possessions. It being deemed impossible at this time to protect the outlying villages, with their scattered inhabitants, by stockades, or defend them by other means, a concentration at New Amsterdam is planned, "for the better protection of one place." The joint meeting considers ways and means for defense, and, among other things, provides that Skipper Jan Jansen Visscher be secretly instructed to make "ready with his ships, loaded with pieces of artillery, in case of emergency."—Rec. N. Am., I: 65-66. On the afternoon of the same day, a provisional list of contributions, amounting to over 5,000 florins, was fixed upon by the burgomasters and schepens for the expenses of defense.—Ibid., I: 66-67. This list of names is the earliest assessment list of the kind for the city. At the same time, the city authorities made record that the burgher guard was ready, but asked the provincial government to furnish them fuel and light. The city agreed that Manhattan should "be fortified with palisades and a breastwork;" that the fort should "be strengthened for defense," and that the city's treasury should have in it from four to five thousand florins, with which "to carry out the needed works," the money to be refunded later "by all interested in New Netherland after taxation of their estates."—Ibid., I: 66-67. See March 15.

The burgomasters and schepens resolve to ask the provincial authorities if it is not wisest to first set off the city of New Amsterdam "in the most convenient way with a stockade," and, when this has been done, to put the fort "in a proper condition of defense as a place of retreat." They offer to furnish from four to six thousand florins for this purpose on the credit of the "community interested." They inquire whether it is not expedient that, besides the letters that have already been sent, "some delegates" be despatched "to the respective Colonies of New England," so as to expedite the relations between New Netherland and New England and continue "former intercourse and commerce," besides learning how far the New Englanders are "affected by the differences and the war" between the mother countries in Europe.—Rec. N. Am., I: 67-68. Stuyvesant and the council answered at once that they were "pleased with these propositions," and agreed that the city's fortifications should be first made properly. Though delegates were to be sent to the different New England colonies with credentials and instructions from the provincial body, that body, on the 17th, voted to delay awhile the sending of agents "till time and circumstances should require" their immediate departure.—Ibid., I: 68; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 201. The delegates chosen by the city, on the 17th, were Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Allard Anthony.—Rec. N. Am., I: 72.

15

By a plurality vote, the burgomasters and schepens choose Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven and Willem Beckman to represent the city on a joint committee to have charge of fortifying the city. On the previous day, the provincial council had chosen its first councillor, Johannes La Montagne, to act for them. This joint committee now advertises its readiness to "receive proposals for a certain piece of work to set off the City with palisades, 12 to 13 feet long, by the rod," and announces that prospective bidders can "hear the conditions and look over the work" on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 18th, at the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., I: 69. The specifications were recorded in the city court's minutes, as follows: "The palisades must be 12 feet long, 18 inches in circumference, sharpened at the upper end and be set in line. At each rod a post 21 inches in circumference is to be set, to which rails, split for this use shall be nailed one foot below the top. The breastwork against it shall be 4 feet high, 4 feet at the bottom and 3 feet at top, covered with sods, with a ditch 3 feet wide and 2 feet deep, 24 feet within the breastwork. The length of the ground to be lined with palisades is 180 rods, the end of the rods being the last of the money. Payments will be made weekly in good wampum."—Ibid., I: 72, where a sketch is shown of a detail of the project. Bids were offered by different bidders, at 50, 45, and 40 florins per rod. The committee in charge, however, offered to let the work only at 25 florins per rod. No bidders were found at so low a figure, hence the committee suspended the bidding provisionally and declared the higher bids to be prohibitive. After conferring on the matter, the committee agreed to an alteration of plans, namely, "to set it off with planks," instead of palisades, which they found "would cost only three to four thousand florins." The new specifications were: "180 rods make 240 feet, 15 feet to the plank make 156 planks in length, 9 planks high, altogether 1404 planks at 13 fl., that is . . . 2166 fl.

340 posts cost . . . 340 fl.
nails . . . 100 fl.
for transport . . . 120 fl.
for setting them up and carpenters wages . . . 500 fl."

Total 3166 fl."

They communicated this scheme to Stuyvesant and asked his advice. On the 19th, they gave notice by public outcry that bids would be received the next day at the city hall, at 10 A. M., "for the delivery of 300 to 350 posts, 12 to 13 feet long." They were to be "oaken posts," "20 inches in circumference in the middle;" and "300 split rails, 11 Dutch feet long, 3 to 4 inches thick," were included in the stipulations. This lumber was to be delivered "on the Strand [Pearl St.] near [Govert] Lockermans house or at the Beavers Path [sic, perhaps meaning Burgers Path] and that within 14 days." Payment was promised "in good wampum, when the lumber has been delivered." Thomas Baxter, an Englishman, agreed "to deliver all said posts and rails for 20 stivers for each post and rail together."—Ibid., I: 73-74. See March 31, April 20, July 28 and Sept. 1.

20

The population of the province of New Netherland has been increased by births, and "by the arrival of many passengers" who have come from Holland "within two or three years." Many more, both freemen and servants of the company, are now expected in returning ships. A scarcity of breadstuffs is imminent, because much of the cultivation is limited to tobacco planting. Stuyvesant and the council, wishing to avert a scarcity of bread, issue an ordinance to the tobacco planters "to plant or sow as many hills with Maize, or as much land with Pease or other hard grain for Bread" as they plant with tobacco, on pain of a fine of fifty guilders for dereliction.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 141-42.

24

The director-general and council resolve that the first Wednesday of each month shall be a day of fasting and prayer.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 131.

26

An additional excise is imposed on all wines and spirituous liquors consumed in or exported from the city of New Amsterdam, to provide funds for the treasury of the provincial government of the company.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 142-43. See also Aug. 2.

31

Stuyvesant writes to the burgomasters and schepens that, notwithstanding the order made in the previous year "at the request of the Select Men, who promised properly to fence in the fort and to keep the hogs meanwhile from the walls," "nothing or at least only little" has been done, and the executed work has been again "destroyed by the pigs." He enters a protest against this dilatoriness. The selectmen have been, meanwhile, superseded by the new city fathers, upon whom the duty now devolves. Stuyvesant urges them to action. They decided "provisionally to engage a herdsman and in the meantime to make the fence as quickly as possible," as Stuyvesant had promised to furnish the posts.—Rec. N. Am., I: 78-79. This correspondence evidently grew out of the report made by Stuyvesant to the council, on the 21st, in which he revealed the negligence of the "Board of Nine Men" with respect to "enclosing the Fort with Palisades or stakes, to which work the community had voluntarily contributed a considerable sum."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 201.

9

A general day of fasting and prayer was proclaimed for this day "everywhere in this Province of New Netherland." The proclamation was read publicly by the secretary of the city of New Amsterdam to the inhabitants "of the subordinate villages of Breucklen, Midwout and Amersfoort."—Rec. N. Am., I: 79. The immediate cause was the war between England and the states-general, together with the fear of an invasion from New England.

At a meeting of the council of New Netherland, it is resolved that "the citizens without exception" shall "begin immediately digging a ditch from the East river to the North river, 4 to 5 feet deep and 11 to 12 feet wide at the top sloping in a little towards the bottom;" that the carpenters shall "be urged to prepare jointly the stakes and rails;" that "the soldiers and other servants of the

The proposal of compulsory service was fixed by law, on May 12, when Stuyvesant and the council met with the burghmasters and schepens and conjointly enacted an ordinance for carrying out the scheme of fortifying the city of New Amsterdam with palisades. The edict provided for apportioning the physical labour on the works among the inhabitants by rotation in four divisions of three-day shifts, until completed, which it was believed would take two or three weeks. Persons in opposition or in default were to be fined for their first offense, to forfeit their burgher-right for the second, and to be subjected to arbitrary punishment and banishment for the third offense. By inhabitants was meant "Burghers, Merchants, Mechanics or the crews of ships, sloops in harbor or to come there." Those who could not work themselves might provide a fit substitute.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 144-45; another translation, with additional prescriptions, is in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 202-3. On July 28 (q. v.), it was officially stated in Stuyvesant's letter to the city authorities that, for "now already three weeks," the city had "been surrounded with palisades on the land side [at present Wall St.] and along the Strand on the East River [present Pearl St.] and thus satisfactorily . . . strengthened."—Rec. N. Am., I: 90.

" Stuyvesant and the council resolve that commissioners be sent on an embassy to Virginia; they appoint Fiscal Van Tienhoven on behalf of the company, and ask the burghmasters and schepens to nominate another from their board to accompany him. On account of the war between the mother countries in Europe, this embassy was designed to promote a continuation of correspondence, peace, and commerce with the Virginians. Arent van Hattem, president of the board, was commissioned with Van Tienhoven by Stuyvesant. Their mission to Virginia had no evident results, because Gov. Richard Bennett and his council felt themselves unauthorized to enter into negotiations without advice from their home government, but promised to submit the proposals of the New Netherlanders to their superiors in England. On Dec. 16, Stuyvesant, judging that an answer had now been received by the Virginia government from England, commissioned Rev. Samuel Drisius as diplomatic agent "to remind the said Honorable Governor and Council of Virginia of our former good intentions, which we still have and our propositions and to learn their reply." Stuyvesant's acts in this matter were highly approved by the directors in Amsterdam and the results were beneficial to New Netherland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 202, 217, 241-42, 250, 260; Rec. N. Am., I: 85. Cromwell dissolves the "Long, or Rump, Parliament," and the council of state.

May 8 "Mr. Allert Anthony and Mr. Augustyo Hermans, assisted by Mr. Cornelis de Potter, in quality as attorney of the creditors who have claims against the estate or person of Mr. Augustyn, have jointly agreed and covenanted that Schepen Pieter Wolphertsen [van Couwenhoven] and Fredrick Flipsen shall estimate the value and worth of the lot, house and outbuildings standing and situate [partly on the present Nos. 33 and 35 Pearl St.] next the Company's Warehouse" (the Pack House), and satisfy themselves with the appraisal on both sides.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 110 (N. Y. State Library). The report of the arbitrators, on May 12, appraised "the store house and lot with the outbuildings thereof" at 8,500 guilders.—Ibid., III: 111.

12 Stuyvesant and the council meet with the burghmasters and schepens and jointly issue the edict for further fortifying the city.—See April 20.

12-22 New England agents come to New Amsterdam in regard to inter-provincial relations, and are lodged at "the Basse's house in Manhatoes."—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 552, and authorities there cited.

14-24 The New England agents negotiate with Stuyvesant concerning their differences; they left abruptly the next day, warning the Dutch and the Indians of New Netherland not to offer offence to the English of the United Colonies.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 553-54.

24= June 3 Noah Webster, writing to Rev. Dr. Samuel Miller from New Haven, April 9, 1810, said: "The following facts are stated from the Records of the Town of Hartford, & from personal view.

During the war between the English & Dutch in 1653, Capt. Underhill received a Commission to sierre [sic] the lands on the Connecticut belonging to the Dutch. The Commission bears date May 24, 1653. The lands were seized & confiscated. They consisted of a few acres only near the confluence of Mill River & the Connecticut. The fort or blockhouse of the Dutch [Fort Good Hope] stood near the bank of the Connecticut, on the South side of the stream called Mill River. I have seen some of the pieces of bricks belonging to that house, lying on the banks of the Connecticut. They were of a light color, like the bricks of some old houses which I have seen in New York or Albany."—Miller Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Society.

Note is sent to Stuyvesant and the council by the directors at Amsterdam that their body has been increased by the appointment of Nicasius de Sille as first councillor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 209.

The directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant that Adriaen vander Doock, upon his petition, has been granted the right to practice as an advocate in New Netherland, he "having received his degree at law from the University of Leyden and been admitted to the bar by the Court of Holland." As vander Doock has also petitioned "to be allowed to examine the documents and papers in the secretary's office there [New Amsterdam] to complete his already begun Description of New Netherland," the directors advise Stuyvesant that he may "let him have such documents and papers, as may be thought of service to him in completing his history," but warn Stuyvesant "to be herein cautious that the Company's own weapons may not be used against us and we be drawn into new troubles and quarrels."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 211-12. This documentary investigation, apparently, was never made by Vander Doock, and certainly was not employed in his little booklet first published in 1655, entitled: Beschrijving van Nieuw-Nederlant.

The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant that they have appointed Cornelis van Ruyven, "coming over with this ship" (Koninck Salomon), as secretary to the council of New Netherland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 211.

The directors at Amsterdam give an open letter to Nicasius de Sille, about to go to New Netherland as a member of the provincial council there.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 278. Sometime after his arrival at New Amsterdam (the document is undated), he addressed the following petition to the directors at Amsterdam: "Nicasius de Sille humbly makes known, that to him, on July 24, 1653, an open letter had been given to take along addressed to Director P: Stuyvesant and the council, to acknowledge the petitioner as first political and military councillor of the Director there [New Netherland], to reside in said capacity in the fort, to deliberate with and in conjunction with his Honor concerning all matters that transpire, etc.; further in all such occurrences and affairs, as here should happen or transpire; which [letter] the petitioner, upon his arrival here, has personally delivered into the hands of the General, in the presence of all the councillors; but found that the same was little respected, because on a certain occasion the petitioner, finding that something improper took place in the council, opposed what had been passed alone by the director and the fiscal [Cornelis van Tienhoven], for reasons that similar resolutions could not be adopted unless the petitioner were present. Then the General derisively answered, 'Well, you sit beside me, where is the written authority for it? I haven't got it. Or, have you a commission?' Thus the petitioner not having anything from your Honors was scornfully laughed at by the fiscal, and they continued; whereas the petitioner has always been expecting some commission or instruction, and still awaits them, because he the petitioner can do nothing against the two aforesaid, and the General has first departed for Curaçao, then to Fort Orange, then to the South River, and elsewhere. The petitioner with his Honor having authority here, it left this place without either one, the petitioner not knowing the reason, meanwhile greatly inconveniencing this province. The petitioner looked after everything as far as he was able, to the extent entrusted to him, fearing nothing, neither war nor the danger of the sea, nor anything else. In between all, so many things happen, that the petitioner has fears, concerning how these things shall be accounted for to your Honors, whereas he sees that it is tending to the great injury of this province, [causes] talk among the inhabitants, damage to the people, brings into contempt (vilpendentie) the petitioner,

1653 therefore the petitioner finds himself obliged to address your July Honors, praying for a commission or instruction, as your Honors 24 shall find proper, in order to prevent all improprieties, so that the petitioner may know how to regulate himself, and that besides, the director and the council shall be obliged to acknowledge the petitioner.—Trans. from unpublished original Dutch petition in New Neth. Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

28 For three weeks the city has now been strengthened and secured by palisades. Stuyvesant now therefore calls upon the burgomasters and schepens to fulfil the rest of their agreement of March 15 (q. v.), i. e., "to put the fort into a proper state of defense as a safe place of retreat." He tells them that, relying upon their promise and official resolution, he and the council have "hastened forward not only the Company's, but also our own necessary work and have assisted with our own as well as the Company's negroes, trapezoidal [trained personnel?] and property." He wants them to aid "both in furnishing money and in completing the nearly ready fort," and particularly to see that measures are adopted to keep the hogs "from the newly made walls and works of the fort."
—Rec. N. Am., I: 90.

The city authorities on the following day replied that the people were unable to do more, since they were already "exhausted and worn out by previous public works;" that "all mercantile business and trades" were "at a standstill, and that the 'promised monies' for public works had been 'already used up.'" They asked to be relieved "from further taxing the citizens;" yet they requested authority to raise, as occasion offered itself, "money among the citizens in the most civil manner."—Ibid., I: 91. Their idea soon revealed itself in a demand for the revenues on wines and beer (see Aug. 2). But Stuyvesant came back at them, on Aug. 12.
 He said that, "in violation of their solemn promises made both in writing and orally," they had failed to "lend a hand to repairing and strengthening" the fort, and he protested against the running at large of hogs in the city, to the damage of the "newly finished works of the fort." Two days later, therefore, the burgomasters and schepens sent their messenger "to notify the Burgers that every one of them" should "take care of his hogs or keep them in the sty until the fort and recently constructed works" were
 "fenced in with palisades."—Ibid., I: 97-98.

" Because "some however uncertain rumors" have come to hand concerning the "gathering of the English in the North, especially in Rhode Island," Stuyvesant warns the burgomasters and schepens "not to allow any citizen or inhabitant" of the city
 "to remove," and the fiscal is charged "not to grant passes to yachts, until the crews and the yachts" have, "as previously ordered, come down or until further orders according to the course of events and new reports."—Rec. N. Am., I: 91.

Aug. 2 The burgomasters and schepens call together an assembly
 "of the principal citizens and inhabitants" at the city hall, and cause to be read to the meeting "a specified account of the expenditures made so far for the entrenchments of the City and similar works," which amount to 7,000 florins. The assembly is asked "what measures should be taken, to pay for the expenditures already made and yet to come," and votes unanimously "that nothing more" shall be contributed unless Stuyvesant and the council surrender "the whole excise on wines and beer" to the city treasury. Moreover, the assembly votes that the board shall inform Stuyvesant of its determination, and agrees to meet again in case the proposal is rejected. On the same day, Stuyvesant gives his oral answer that he can not "think of surrendering the excise on wines and beer, now payable at the Company's office," for else he would "be obliged to discharge immediately all the soldiers, now expected from the Fatherland; also that the citizens only paid the tapsters' excise." Therefore, the assembly resolves to make no further contributions toward the public works until the entire revenues from the excise are granted to the city. With this failure of further contributions, it was adjudged "impossible to keep the work, already begun, going without paying for it." The burgomasters and schepens said they lacked the power to provide the means, and protested that, "if later some unexpected mishap should occur," they "should not be blamed for not having done their duty."—Rec. N. Am., I: 92-93.

On Nov. 11, another assembly of the commonalty met with the board at the city hall, and was notified of Stuyvesant's consent "that from this time forth all the excise of beer and wines" should be paid into the treasury of the city and be "employed for the public good." But, as there were no funds then available from this source, "though very much needed at this perilous time," it was urged that "some general taxes and means must be provided." The board asked the commonalty if they would submit "to such ordinances and measures" as the board would enact and adopt for the support of the city. An affirmative answer was given unanimously and the commonalty promised "to obey the Burgomasters and Schepens in all things as good subjects are bound to do," attesting their resolution with their signatures.—Ibid., I: 126-27.

On Nov. 19, the burgomasters and schepens resolved, because of Stuyvesant's consent that the city be granted the excise "from the first of November," to "apply verbally to the Director General for a proper grant thereof, and in case of refusal, to request their dismissal."—Ibid., I: 127. A delegation was sent to Stuyvesant for this purpose, and to make inquiry whether any letters had been received for the board from the West India Co. in Holland.
 This delegation returned to the city hall and reported that no letters had been received from Holland "or from others," but that Stuyvesant granted them the revenues of the excise on beer and wines consumed in the city, except exports, until the approbation of the directors at Amsterdam had been obtained, with the proviso that the city would also "support the two preachers, the schoolmaster and secretary; which being added together amount to about thirty-two hundred guilders annually." Comparing this sum with the usual excise, the board declared the excise would "scarcely produce so much." They resolved unanimously, therefore, "to go in a body to the Director General, and demand in conformity with his promise the grant of the entire excise as received at the Company's Counting house," and, in case of refusal, to request their dismissal, since it would be impossible for them "to continue thus any longer."—Ibid., I: 128.

On Nov. 20, as Stuyvesant had informed them that he had no power to dismiss them, and would not consent to any alterations in the terms of the excise, the burgomasters and schepens resolved
 "not to abandon their offices as yet, without further reasons."—
Ibid., I: 128. The board again resolved, on Nov. 25, to petition Stuyvesant and the council for a grant of the excise without reservation, "except what is sent to Fort Orange," and said that because they had been promised it and had so declared it to an assembly of the commonalty, who had thereupon agreed to be taxed additionally for the support of the city, and the grant having been curtailed, they, the burgomasters and schepens, were likely to "be regarded by every one with contempt and censure." They protested that they would not be responsible if mischief arose from the negligence, and that they could not go on without money, and should therefore be compelled "to their sorrow to see before their eyes all the constructed works go to ruin and everything run to waste." Stuyvesant and the council, adhering to their former resolution, would not budge, but renewed the limited grant to the city, and provided that the excise should "be publicly farmed out to the highest bidder." Hereupon, the burgomasters and schepens issued an order "to all Tapsters, Inkeepers and Inhabitants" that thereafter "they must apply to Jaacop Kip as Receiver . . .
 for their necessary permit," for which the usual excise was to be paid on obtaining it.—Ibid., I: 129-30. Dissatisfied with the limited grant of excise revenues, the burgomasters and schepens drew up a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, on Dec. 24, in which they declared that this revenue amounted "only one third of the sum required for the salaries and wages of the ecclesiastical and civil officers of the city, and that "the maintenance of the City works and other wants" amounted to as much more. They besought the directors, therefore, to grant them the excise, "without any limitation;" also authority "to levy some new imposts and other small fees such as a small seal, etc.," and the "farming of the Ferry" from the city "to Breuckelen."—Ibid., I: 145.

The directors of the Amsterdam chamber replied, on May 13, 1654, that it appeared strange to them that the burgomasters and schepens should go so far "as not only to assist in organizing an independent Assembly without authority, but moreover to send in remonstrances." They denied them their request to be freed from paying the salaries of the ecclesiastical and civil servants, unless the commonalty allowed the levy of a "new small excise or impost," and obtained the consent of Stuyvesant and the council to the exemption; but they gave the board additional authority for providing a revenue and made other concessions to the city.—
Ibid., I: 217-19. Yet, on May 26, 1655, the directors at Amsterdam

1653 withdrew the excise revenues from the city and ordered them to be
 Aug. paid again "in [to] the general treasury of the Company," claiming 2 that the city had misapplied the proceeds, and for other causes.—
Ibid., I: 341.

7 Notice is given that two sloops will leave New Amsterdam for Fort Orange (Albany) every Monday, and that passes are to be obtained from Arent van Hattem, presiding burgomaster, and Willem Beekman, one of the schepens, every Saturday morning at eight o'clock.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 294.

11 Daniel Litschoe, in a suit against Gillis Pietersen vander Gouw, in the court of burgomasters and schepens, demands payment of the second of three instalments for a house and lot he had sold to the defendant's deceased mother-in-law, Tryntje Scheerenborg (or Scherenburgh), by deed of Jan. 22 of this year. This property lay between the house of Litschoe and the outside of the palisade of the city (now Wall St.), on the shore road of the East River (now Pearl St.), next to the ditch and adjoining the water gate. The lot had been diminished by a guard-house erected on a part of it by the city.—Rec. N. Am., I: 95; II: 179; VII: 162. On Sept.
 1, the court decreed that the guard-house should be removed, so that it might be determined if the lot had been curtailed beyond the original survey and bill of sale.—Ibid., I: 113. On Dec. 8, Litschoe petitioned the court for the removal of this guard-house, in order that he might be enabled to collect his pay. The court replied that the removal had been contracted for and would be executed "as soon as possible."—Ibid., I: 139.

On March 2, 1654, Litschoe again demanded in court the second payment (216 florins). The defendant renewed his request for delivery of ground according to the bill of sale, and also asked delay of payment until May 1, to afford him opportunity to sell the house and lot, "being now a vacant estate," and promised them to pay the second and last payments together. The city court acquiesced in this request.—Ibid., 170. Apparently this transaction with Litschoe was closed on Oct. 29, 1654.—Ibid., I: 179, note.
 Gillis Pietersen vander Gouw was co-heir to the property with his brother-in-law, Isaac Kip. Another guard-house had been erected near the same site before 1660.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl.
 82, Vol. III. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

On Oct. 7, 1656, the owners were ordered by the burgomasters and schepens to set back the fence of their "garden near the City gate, by the East river," because it was "standing too near the City wall, to the obstruction of the public and was formerly cut off by the general survey of the City," made in 1656. This was deemed necessary "so that wagons and horses" might "conveniently pass." For such land as was cut off by condemnation of the city, they were promised "satisfaction on the valuation of arbitrators."—Ibid., II: 179. The city's arbitrators, on June 30, 1657, reported an agreement that the city pay to the owners 550 guilders in merchantable wampum, within a month. The city court, therefore, "passed an Obligation to Gillis Pietersen and Isaac Kip" for this sum, and then "mortgaged the said house and lot;" whereupon the owners "delivered up the deed and conveyance" to the city.—Ibid., VII: 162, 163. See also Innes, New Am.
and Its People, 277-78, for disagreements.

18 The burgomasters and schepens resolve unaniously "to propose orally" to Stuyvesant that he agree with them as to the necessity of sending "a personal embassy to those of New England, where the General Assembly will be convened, according to report, on the 25th of August, in order to see how much can be effected with them respecting the state, on which point they would consider it necessary first of all previously to send a messenger, etc."

23 Nicasius de Sille sails from Holland with his five motherless children and a maid. He arrived at New Amsterdam on Nov. 3 (9.4). He describes his voyage and arrival in New Netherland, thus: "We encountered much wind and storm, and were three times ready to give battle, for we had a ship with seventeen pieces and had over eighty persons on board. . . . The third of November, on Saturday afternoon, we anchored before Fort New Amsterdam, adjacent to which lies the city of New Amsterdam, on the island of Manahans, in New Netherland. We fired five shots with cannon and those of the fort replied with three shots. The citizens were gathered in the streets and the soldiers were under arms, for they knew of my coming, as the ship De Geldersche

 Aug. Bloem, which ran out of the Vlye [the channel between the islands 23 of Vlieland and Terschelling, on the north coast of Holland] with us on the 23d of August and lost us near Hiltlandt [Shetland Islands] in a storm, had arrived twenty-four hours ahead of us.
 The fiscal, Tienhoven, therefore came on board and invited me to go on shore, where I and my son [his eldest son, Laurens] were very cordially welcomed by the council, the burgomasters and the schepens (for General Stuyvesant had gone to Fort Orange) and the entire commonalty, and were conducted to the fort, to the house of the general. When we came to the bridge all the cannon were discharged and the soldiers charged in proper form. In the house we were well entertained by the council and the magistrates, and the next day all my children were likewise welcomed and entertained until my lodgings were ready. The eleventh the Honorable General [Stuyvesant] and his wife came home, who entertained me also. In the afternoon he convened the council, wherein I was made to occupy the first seat, next to his honor.
 This, in brief, is the account of my arrival here.—Quarterly Journal of N. Y. State Hist. Ass'n, I: 100, ff., where De Sille's letter is printed for the first time, by A. J. F. van Laer. In 1656, De Sille succeeded Cornelis van Tienhoven as provincial fiscal, and was also appointed schout of New Amsterdam. See also May 23 and Sept. 23, 1654, for his account of the country.

Michiel Paulussen's wife requests of the burgomasters and schepens "payment of what her husband earned with his sloop in fetching palisades for the City works" a few months since.
 They allow Paulussen ten florins "for each load of palisades," or a total of 140 florins for fourteen loads.—Rec. N. Am., I: 112.

As "some friends" have "applied to the Director General and Council for a commission of marque and reprisal against the English," Stuyvesant requests that the burgomasters and schepens be "please jointly to repair at once to the Hon. Director General." This they do, and he reports that, "pursuant to the resolution," he has "issued the order to Skipper Willem Tomasen."—
Rec. N. Am., I: 117.

A general assembly of the country was called by Stuyvesant and the council, "with the knowledge of the Burgomasters and Schepens," to be held on this day, being Thursday, in Fort Amsterdam. The city is represented by Burgomaster Marten Cregier or Krigier and Schepen Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, who had been chosen, on Sept. 9, by majority vote of the board, and "commissioned and authorized to assist in deciding all occurring subjects relating to public good," and to report back to the board
 "after the conclusion of the Assembly."—Rec. N. Am., I: 117.

At an assembly of deputies and delegates "of the respective Colonies and Courts of New Netherland," there are "enacted, published and posted divers Ordinances and Regulations touching the great and excessive dearth of all sorts of Merchandizes, Provisions, Grain and Laborers' wages." The minutes of the assembly and the texts of the ordinances promulgated are not among the records, but their purport can be divined from a letter of the directors at Amsterdam to Stuyvesant and the council, of March 12, 1654, in which the directors expressed surprise that these resolutions had been published without their knowledge or consent, and in which they ordered alterations or abrogations.—

Auke Jansen uses Augustyn Heermans on a contract for building the latter's house. This, the "great house" of Heermans, was at what is now the north-west corner of Pearl and Pine Sts. The house was built in 1653, although the deed for the property was not recorded until 1656.—Liber Patents, III: 84 (Albany).
 By order of Gov. Colve, the house was demolished in 1673.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 636-37.

The brewery of Govert Loockermans is mentioned in a suit against Claes Pietersen Kos, in which he seeks to compel Kos "to make the roof of the brewhouse" as contracted for by him.—
Rec. N. Am., I: 121. It stood on his granted lot at the corner of the Graft (now Broad Street) and Hoogh Straet (now Stone St.).
 This lot, originally granted to Anthony Jansen, but neglected by him "as an offensive pool," was given to Loockermans by a ground-brief of Sept. 15, 1646, "to build upon."—Book GG, 158, in office of sec. of state, Albany. The brewery and land, a little later, came into the possession of Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, his brother-in-law.

the privilege of sending to Holland for a minister, "and also to organize separately and publicly a congregation and church." This was opposed on Oct. 6 by the Dutch clergy, Megapolensis and Driusius, in a letter to the classis of Amsterdam, on the ground that it "would tend to the injury" of their church, "the diminution of hearers of the Word of God, and the increase of dissensions," of which they said there had been a sufficiency for years. They feared that such a concession "would pave the way for other sects, so that in time" the province "would become a receptacle for all sorts of heretics and fanatics." The Lutherans, they said, had made similar requests twice before to Stuyvesant, besides writing to the states-general and the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam. The Dutch clergy requested the Amsterdam classis to use its "influence" with the directors to have "the project of our Lutheran friends" rejected. Stuyvesant they trusted as one "zealous for the Reformed Religion," who "would rather relinquish his office than grant permission in this matter," since he considered it "contrary to the first article of his commission," by which he had promised, "with an oath, not to permit any other than the Reformed doctrine."—Rec. N. Am., I: 317. See Addenda.

The classis considered a complaint against the Lutherans of New Netherlands, on Jan. 1, 1654, which had been presented by the "Deputati ad res Indicas" to the directors at Amsterdam, and showed an inclination to oppose the plan of the Lutherans because "the Menonites, as well as the other English Independents, who are numerous there, might seek to introduce like public assemblies."—Eccles. Rec., I: 320-21. On Feb. 23, 1654 (q. v.), a formal resolution was passed by the directors at Amsterdam prohibiting the introduction of a Lutheran ministry and public worship in New Netherlands, or any other than that of the Reformed Church.—Ibid., I: 322. This action the directors communicated to Stuyvesant and his council in a letter of March 12, advising that no similar petitions ought to be received, but "rather to turn them off in the most civil and least offensive means in order to induce them to listen and finally join the Reformed church and thus live in greater love and harmony among themselves."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 252. As soon as the formal resolution had been passed, the classis of Amsterdam wrote to tell Megapolensis and Driusius of its success in securing a refusal of "the Lutherans in every particular," and rejoiced that now the established church would "be maintained without being hindered" by either Lutherans "or other erring spirits."—Eccles. Rec., I: 322-23; cf. I: 348-49. This letter Megapolensis and Driusius acknowledged with thanks on July 15.—Ibid., I: 326.

That settled the matter during the Dutch régime in New Netherlands, so far as granting any right of ministry or public worship to the Lutherans was concerned. However, it did not deter the Lutherans from holding meetings surreptitiously in private houses. These and other "conventicles and gatherings" came to the knowledge of Megapolensis and Driusius, who, on Jan. 15, 1656 (q. v.), appealed to the provincial authorities for suppression of them, and, on Feb. 1 (q. v.), an ordinance was issued against all assembly, "whether public or private," differing from the Dutch Reformed Church, under penalty of a fine of 100 pounds Flemish to be paid by unqualified preachers. This law was aimed against the Independents at Middelburg (Newtown), L. I., and the Lutherans of New Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 336; Letts & Ord. N. Neth., 211-12; Rec. N. Am., I: 20-21. When the Directors at Amsterdam received a copy of this "placat against the Lutherans," as well as information from Stuyvesant that recalcitrants had been committed to prison, they ordered him not to "publish such or similar placats" without their authority; but to pass over such matters "and let them have free religious exercises in their houses." "For it has always been our intention," said the directors, "to treat them quietly and leniently."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 351. See June 14, 1656.

This was a concession to the Lutherans, who had again appealed to the directors at Amsterdam for the privilege of public worship, in like manner as was allowed their sect in Holland. But it "grieved" the members of the classis, who met in the succeeding summer and autumn, finally resolving, on Oct. 3, 1656, to despatch deputies to protest against "this general permission of all sorts of persuasions."—Eccles. Rec., I: 354-55, 357. The deputies reported on Nov. 7 concerning their conference with the directors of the company, as well as with a committee appointed on behalf of the city of Amsterdam; but all they could learn was that the affair was "still unsettled, and the settlement a good way off." Oct. 4

The classis then advised the deputies to practice vigilance by keeping their eyes and ears open.—Ibid., I: 360.

Meanwhile, in New Amsterdam, the Lutherans had petitioned Stuyvesant and the council (Oct. 24, 1656, q. v.) for permission to enjoy the privileges granted to them, so that they might "not be hindered" in their services. These services, they said, would consist of "prayer, reading and singing, until . . . a qualified person" should "come next spring [1657] from the Fatherland" to be their "minister and teacher." On the same day, Stuyvesant and the council directed that the ordinance prohibiting conventicles should remain in effect, but should not prevent "each in his family, from reading prayers, thanksgivings and singing according to their faith;" in the meantime further orders from Amsterdam were to be sought.—Ibid., I: 358-60.

When the Lutherans were endeavoring to secure a preacher in 1657, the opposition in the classis and in New Netherlands became very active. The directors, on April 7, 1657 (q. v.), reassured Stuyvesant and the council that they would stand by their letter of the preceding June 14, and would by no means "grant to the Lutherans any more liberty regarding the exercise of their religion" than therein stated. The interpretation of this letter, understood by the Lutherans as granting the right to hold services, was that they might have only private family worship.—Ibid., I: 372, 374, 376, 380-81; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388.

The Lutherans in old Amsterdam, in the meantime, had taken the bull by the horns and induced Johannes Ernestus Gutwasser (or Goedwater), a Lutheran minister, to come over to New Amsterdam (see July, 1657). Knowledge of this in classis raised a storm of opposition. It also stirred up Megapolensis and Driusius, who petitioned the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, on July 6, against permitting the Lutherans to "obtain a foothold" and then "extend themselves" in other parts of the province, which would be injurious "to the policy of the government, as well as of the Reformed Religion," unless nipped in the bud. Here, they thought, lay a source of great contention and discord, for already during the past year "some husbands" had "forced their wives to leave their own church, and attend their conventicles." Moreover, there were so "many" persons "of that persuasion" that the Dutch Church would be depleted, its deacons or general poor fund would be diminished, and the poor orphans, widows, and others of all persuasions, would suffer. So also, if Lutherans were permitted to have public worship, "the Papists, Menonites and others would soon make similar claims," resulting in "a Babel of confusion," and would "prove a plan of Satan to smother this infant, rising congregation, almost in its birth, or at least to obstruct the march of truth in its progress."—Eccles. Rec., I: 377, 380-81, 386-88.

The burgomasters and schepens, for whose consideration these woeful forebodings had been drawn up and presented by the Dutch clergy in person on July 13, informed Stuyvesant and the council a day later that Gutwasser had just arrived in the ship "Goude Meulen" (see July, 1657), had been summoned before them and, when interrogated as to his purposes, had "frankly answered," that he came on behalf of the Lutheran consistory, "to occupy the position of a preacher here, as far as it would be allowed." The city fathers considered this an invasion of their oath, so they ordered Gutwasser not to officiate in public or private, nor to present his credentials to the Lutheran "congregation, as he called it." Stuyvesant and the council answered that they were "pleased with the zeal and desire" of the city court "for supporting the Reformed doctrine and excluding schismatics," and ordered the strict enforcement of the edicts already several times promulgated. On August 13, the city court thanked the two Dutch ministers "for their care in this matter."—Ibid., I: 388-90. These clergy men at the same time informed the classis at Amsterdam (cf. Aug. 14, and Sept. 8, 1657) that the "worst" had "come to pass;" that Gutwasser had arrived in July, "to the great joy of the Lutherans, but to the special displeasure and uneasiness" of the Dutch congregation; "yea, even the whole country including the English were displeased." They demanded that Gutwasser be sent out of the country.—Ibid., I: 393-94.

Stuyvesant and his council ordered his deportation by resolution on Sept. 4 (see Sept. 8, 1657). On Oct. 10 (q. v.), the Lutherans of New Amsterdam petitioned to have the order set aside which required Gutwasser to "depart in the ship, the 'Waag,' now ready to sail;" but the provincial authority denied recognition to "the Unaltered Augsburg Confession, much less any adherents of it." Instead of granting the leniency sought, the order was confirmed.—Ibid., I: 405-9. Subscriptions had been taken up at Fort Orange and New Amsterdam on behalf of Gutwasser by his adherents. The threat of deportation sent him into hiding for the winter.—Ibid., I: 409, 410, 412, 439, 432-33.

In April, 1658, the controversy again raised its head in the classis of Amsterdam as a result of letters sent from New Netherland inveighing against Lutherans and Quakers.—Ibid., I: 420-21. On April 16, another order of banishment was put out by Stuyvesant and the council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195.

The directors at Amsterdam, on May 20, while approving the deportation of Gutwasser as "not contrary to, but rather in accordance with," their "good intentions," thought it might have been carried out with less severity. They had learned from Lutherans in Amsterdam that the separation in New Amsterdam had occurred "because in the Sacrament of Baptism some words" were used which were "offensive . . . and not contained in the new formulary," particularly with respect to admonitions to parents and witnesses, and compulsion of the presence of parents at the baptism of their children. The directors thought this resentment might be allayed, and that "people of other persuasions" might be won over or held if less offensive words and "most tolerant means" were employed.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 418; cf. Eccles. Rec., I: 422-23.

Again, on June 7, reverting to their letter of May 20, the directors instructed Stuyvesant to see that the less offensive formulary was used at baptisms and that compulsory presence was not demanded.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 421. An extract of this correspondence was sent by Stuyvesant to Megapolensis and Drisius in August, accompanied by a request for a written answer on the "points presented," and to "adduce" whatever might "tend to furnish a full and correct view of the case."—Eccles. Rec., I: 427; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 200; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 418. This answer came four days later (see Aug. 23, 1658). They characterized the Lutherans' complaints as an untruth and a misrepresentation to the directors at Amsterdam. They argued that the Lutherans were raising objections as "blind men," among whom there was "hardly one who had a proper acquaintance with the teachings of Dr. Luther."—Eccles. Rec., I: 428-31.

Gutwasser became ill while in hiding, and his friends besought Stuyvesant to permit him to be brought to town for treatment, which was granted, ad interim, under surveillance of the fiscal, he, when well again, to be deported. The Dutch clergymen looked upon the situation as "a stratagem to hold the matter in suspense, and gain more time."—Ibid., I: 432-33; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 202 (Nov. 11, 1658).

The controversy continued to claim the attention of the classis of Amsterdam and of the directors of the company until the spring of 1659, when word was received that Gutwasser had been arrested and sent back to Holland, in the ship "Bryuvish," so that "now again quietness" reigned among the people of New Amsterdam, and "the threatened split" had been averted.—Eccles. Rec., I: 440-42, 449, 454, 470-71; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 430.

The directors informed Stuyvesant and his council that they adjudged Megapolensis and Drisius to be lacking in moderation and infected with scruples that caused divisions more than edification. If further complaints reached Holland, the result might be a concession to the Lutherans "to conduct a separate divine service" in New Amsterdam, and it would be impossible to prevent it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 451. The Dutch clergy took the hint, and by moderation with respect to the poignant difficulties ended the separatist movement during the remainder of the Dutch régime. The Lutherans were granted freedom of worship, without molestation, by the English governor, Richard Nicolls, on Dec. 6, 1664 (g. v.)—General Entries, I: 71 (printed in N. Y. State Library Bulletin, History No. 2, 136). For the origin of the first regular Lutheran house of worship, see May 26, 1657. Zwierlein, in his Religion in New Netherland (Rochester, 1910), has an excellent chapter on Lutherans in the Dutch provinces.

15 Agreeably to the original bill of sale, dated March 26, 1642, Govert Lookermans conveyed to Egbert van Borsum "a house and lot at Wolpherts walley, now called the ferry."—Libor HH: 49 (Albany). This land covered the whole north-east corner of Cherry St. and The Bowery, at Franklin Square, running far into the block between Cherry St. and The Bowery. The ferry mentioned in the deed was the earliest ferry to Long Island, Van Borsum being at that time (1653) the ferry-man; it ran from the present corner of Pearl and Dover Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 942. The confirmation of the above transaction by Gov. Nicolls to Van Borsum, dated March 12, 1666, is recorded in Libor Patents, IV: 19 (Albany).

Nicasius de Sille, appointed by the West India Co. as first councillor of New Netherland, arrives at New Amsterdam. For particulars of his reception, see Aug. 23, 1653; and, for his estimate of the country, see May 23 and Sept. 23, 1654.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council that they are sorry to learn of the "frivolous and false charges that the people of New England" have brought against them. They write: "Upon hearing the rumors from New England they [the English] have magnified these false reports, apparently started at their own instigation and have forged and published in London the most shameful and lying libel, which the devil in hell could not have produced, under the title 'The second Amboyna Tragedy or truthful Account, etc.' [See Bibliography.] We have caused a translation to be made of it and send you a copy of it herewith, so that you may see yourself the strategic measures employed by that nation in order not only to irritate against us their own people, but also to bring down upon us the whole world. You must therefore proceed with great caution, for we cannot expect the least good from that nation at present."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 216.

A petition is presented to the burgomasters and schepens, "signed by certain Burghers and Inhabitants praying that a Burgher Schout may be chosen and qualified and that the Company's Fiscal may no longer trouble himself as Schout about Citizens' cases."—Rec. N. Am., I: 127. See April 9, 1660, regarding the separation of the office of schout of New Amsterdam from that of the company's fiscal.

At a provincial assembly in September, various edicts were promulgated in an endeavor to regulate prices by which merchants in New Netherland should be governed in disposing of their imported goods. A selling price at one hundred per cent. above invoice was established. Now, however, on account of the new arrival of "Passengers, Merchants and Traders" who have not been "prejudiced in the matter of the entry of their Goods and Wares," a change is made by an ordinance in council, which fixes an appraisal price on certain enumerated items and directs that, in the case of all non-enumerated articles, the purchaser may demand to see "the true Invoice of the actual first cost," and the seller may receive from the buyer a fixed price of one hundred and twenty per cent. over the first and actual cost, and no more.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 149-51.

This ordinance was published the next day (20th), when "some of the principal merchants and traders" of New Amsterdam had been called together by the council to have communication thereof made to them. These merchants "deemed it then advisable to deliberate with others and to submit their opinion on this matter in writing" to the council, which they did in a remonstrance on the 22d, in which they declared the ordinance to be virtually confiscatory of all their profits, since no allowance was made for "heavy export and import duties" paid, respectively, in Holland and New Netherland, for "charges for convoy and direction, the heavy freight bills and premiums for assurance, interest on capital invested," and "damages of leakage and decay"—all of which "made the first cost of goods . . . more than 70 or 80 p. ct. higher than abroad." They declared they had no intention of exacting unfair prices from the people, but would treat them "like honest traders and good fellow-citizens;" yet, they requested a suspension of the ordinances as they could not "conform to them without great loss to themselves or their principals," and asked to be allowed "to sell according to the usages of the Fatherland and other countries," where commerce had a free hand and prices were governed by circumstances and "the first cost and expenses." They had resolved, in case of refusal, they said, "to keep their goods until the return of better times;" rather than suffer loss or sell at a small profit.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 221-22.

On the 25th, Stuyvesant and the council replied, and demanded a bill of particulars, showing injury, losses, and leakages.—Ibid., XIV: 223. A committee of the merchants answered this demand on the 28th, by another remonstrance, in which they protested against fixed rates for losses, derived in a few specific cases, as 1653 tending to injustice and great confusion.—Ibid., XIV, 225-26. Nov. For nearly a month this remonstrance was unanswered, but on Dec. 24, Stuyvesant and the council said the ordinances could and ought not to be countermanded or annulled, unless by direction of the deputies of the province, by whom they had been issued in September. However, the fiscal of the company was ordered "to use all possible moderation" until the directors at Amsterdam had been advised and ratification had been given by them to the ordinances, or until altered by the deputies in provincial assembly.—Ibid., XIV: 242.

On March 12, 1654, the directors, in a letter to Stuyvesant and the council, expressed their surprise and disapproval on account of the publication of resolutions without their knowledge. They said the order for fixing prices was "impracticable," "highly injurious to the State," "a sure means to banish all trade and at the same time deprive the Company to a large extent of their revenues" in Holland and New Netherland, and would "prevent an increase of population and cultivation" in the province.—Ibid., XIV: 251. See Sept. 11, 1653.

24 Complots having been made to Stuyvesant and the council concerning the incursions and robberies of a certain Thomas Baxter, a fugitive from this province, and his companions, they resolve: "to send letters to and summon from each of the nearest subordinate Colonies two deputies, who are to meet at the City hall in this City and to whom we think advisable to join two respected members of our High Council, to wit . . . Johan la Montagne and . . . Cornelis van Werckhoven, authorized . . . to deliberate with the other delegates for . . . Security of the country and . . . some effective remedies and means to prevent and stop these incursions, of which deliberations they will give us a report with all speed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 218-19. On the following day, the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam chose by vote from their board Marten Cregier and Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, to act with the other delegates.—Rec. N. Am., I: 131. The delegates met in general assembly on the 26th. The English delegates, however, sent in a written protest against the provincial government, and asked the burgomasters and schepens "to enter into a firm alliance with them;" but, on the 27th, the delegates of the city said they were willing to be at peace with their English neighbours on Long Island, yet could not enter into the proposed alliance without the general consent of the director-general, the council, and the adjacent districts and villages. To this the English delegates replied that, if the city would not join them, "they would form a union on Long Island among each other." The city's delegates suggested that "it would be better to write about it" to the directors at Amsterdam, and, meanwhile, "they would keep them well-informed of and assist them against, robbers and other disasters of that kind to the best of their abilities and live with them as their friends." After they had agreed "to come together again from the respective places" on Dec. 10, in order to write to Holland, the meeting adjourned.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 223-25.

On Nov. 29, Cregier and Vander Grift reported verbally and in writing to the burgomasters and schepens what had been done in general assembly; whereupon, the city board by resolution petitioned Stuyvesant and the council that the assembly, proposed for Dec. 10, be granted as a necessity, and in order to "remonstrate" to the directors at Amsterdam in such manner as was pertinent "for the general peace and welfare of the Country."—Rec. N. Am., I: 131-32; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 226-27. Stuyvesant and the council replied, on Dec. 3, that the objections and conduct of the English delegates bordered on revolt against the government; vilified the supreme authority, and contained calumnies. They disapproved the principle "that subjects, bound to the authority of the Government by their oath and duty to allegiance and obedience, should be allowed to enter with each other into a defensive and offensive alliance without the knowledge or order of their Government and their Council . . . and above all pass any resolutions without their knowledge," which, as was clearly evident, they had done.

This answer led the burgomasters and schepens, on Dec. 5, to vote unanimously to "go in a body" to Stuyvesant, "and with all respect" request him to allow the meeting of the proposed general assembly on Dec. 10.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 227-29; Rec. N. Am., I: 135-36. They were rewarded for their importunity, for Stuyvesant and the council assented to a properly constituted assembly of delegates, in view of "the country's present dangerous situation," to "draw up a remonstrance" to the Directors at Amsterdam, "concerning the country's needs and circumstances."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 229. Nov. 24

On the 8th, the burgomasters and schepens addressed separate letters to the inhabitants of Breucklen, Amersfoort, and Midwout, in which they said that, "with the knowledge of the Director General," they had resolved "to summon two Delegates" from each of the towns, "to decide by a general vote on a letter" to Holland "on the condition of the country." These delegates were to appear "with full powers from their constituents," on the 9th "at the City Hall" in New Amsterdam.—Rec. N. Am., I: 140; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 230. See Dec. 10.

A general assembly at land-dag meets at the city hall of New Amsterdam. It consisted of ten Dutchmen and nine Englishmen, representing New Amsterdam, Breucklen, Vlissingen (Flushing), Middelburgh (Newtown), Heemstede, Amersfoort (Flatlands), Midwout (Flatbush), and Gravesend. As a popular assembly it transcended any that had ever met in New Netherland. On the 11th, the delegates signed a "Humble Remonstrance and Petition of the Colonies and Villages," which, having been drawn up in English by George Baxter, of Gravesend, was translated into Dutch and presented to Stuyvesant and the council, who protested and declared the assembly illegal, alleging that the delegates from Midwout, Amersfoort, and Breucklen had no standing. They also ordered the "so-called delegates not to address either them or anybody else under such a name and title."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 550-55; XIV: 231-32. On the 13th, the delegates again asked to have their assembly recognized and their requests answered; but Stuyvesant and the council replied that they were convoked illegally in a mere "conventicle," as a "self-created, unlawful gathering," and demanded that they immediately disperse, or become liable to "arbitrary correction."—Ibid., XIV: 237-40. In their "Remonstrance," the delegates complained against the "arbitrary government" and cited many grievances, among them that "Officers and Magistrates" were "appointed, contrary to the laws of Netherland, to divers offices without the consent or nomination of the people whom the matter most affects or concerns," meaning, as they said, "that the nomination ought to belong to the people," instead of the selection being vested in the director-general and council, and that a common council (Vroetschap) ought to be organized for the city of New Amsterdam, "to represent the body of the Commonalty."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 552, 554-55. On this particular part of the remonstrance Stuyvesant and his council made the following deduction, viz:—that the magistrates of New Amsterdam, who were not yet in office a full year, had "for the present not the right of nomination, the same having been withheld by the Director-General and Council for good and sufficient reasons, until the Lords-Directors" at Amsterdam gave "orders to the contrary." They said: "The Magistrates of New Amsterdam, before being installed and taking the oath in the presence of the Director-General, were each by name and surname and by his office proclaimed from the front of the Council Chamber and the community was called upon to express their objections;" and that the same procedure was followed "at the installation of other military officers, if a Captain, Lieutenant or Ensign, before the whole Company, if a Sergeant or subordinate officer before the section."—Ibid., XIV: 235. See also Dec. 24.

Stuyvesant and the council appoint Johannes de la Montagne, one of their number, as head of an expedition "to pursue, attack and capture" certain English pirates, led by Thomas Baxter, who are supposed to be hovering around Flushing, L. I., and its vicinity, and who have committed depredations in New Netherland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 237. It was this Baxter who, earlier in the year (March 20), had contracted to furnish the palisades for building the wall of New Amsterdam.—Rec. N. Am., I: 73-74. His capture and subsequent fate are recounted by Brodhead op. cit., I: 565.

The burgomasters and schepens sign a note in court for 835 florins, in favour of Cornelis Steenwyck, payable a year from date, for materials delivered to the city.—Rec. N. Am., I: 143.

In a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, the burgomasters and schepens complain that their authority, derived from the original instructions of Stuyvesant, of Feb. 2, is too limited for the proper government of the burghers. They ask that they may be permitted to adopt a form of city government, "as far as possible," similar to that of Amsterdam, and be empowered to fill the office Dec. 10

1653 of schout of the city, separating this office entirely from that of
Dec. the company's fiscal, so as to make the office of schout an independent 24 office, and the appointee a member of the city court. They apply also for a change in the excise revenues; for the right to levy some new imposts, and to have the farming out of the ferry to Brooklyn; for authority "to verify the execution of deeds and conveyances of houses and lots within this City, the fee simple of which is sold, as well as of mortgages according to the custom of the City of Amsterdam," and that, for this purpose, they may be allowed "a City seal different from the seal of the province." On account of the constant dread of invasion "by the hostile English," they request a supply of firearms, and they petition for the house (Stadt Huys or city hall, formerly the city tavern) belonging to the West India Co., in which they hold their meetings.—Rec. N. Am., I: 144-46.

The directors at Amsterdam answered this memorial, on May 18, 1654 (q. v.), and reprimanded the burgomasters and schepens for having organized a popular assembly and for sending over remonstrances to Holland. They warned them "in no wise to hold private conventicles with the English or others," whether for "deliberation over matters of State," which they declared was none of their business, or, what they considered worse, "to attempt an alteration in the State and Government thereof." So far as the reply to the memorial was concerned, the directors granted the city the separation of the office of schout from that of the company's fiscal, but provided that the schout should be appointed by the director-general and council, instead of by the city court; they denied them exemption from payment of the salaries of civil and ecclesiastical servants, and suggested the levying of some "new small excise and impost," with the commonalty's consent and confirmation by Stuyvesant; they conceded to them the execution of transports and deeds of conveyance of houses and lots, but only within the city itself, and without depriving the director-general and council "of the power heretofore conferred on them to dispose of the lots already granted" and which remained vacant. By these concessions the board was required to furnish to Stuyvesant and the council, when demanded, a "return of the transports, deeds and incumbrances executed before them." An order was given in Holland "for making a City Seal." The distribution of munitions of war was denied the board and reserved to the director-general and council; but the city tavern was granted to the city as a city hall, on condition that no one should claim "any right to it individually, or to alienate or mortgage it collectively."—Ibid., 217-19; also "Directors to Stuyvesant," in N. Y. Col. Docs., 1652, 260, ff. These despatches from Holland were sent over by the ship "Goude Beer," and were communicated to the board at a special meeting, on July 21, 1654 (q. v.). At the same time, Stuyvesant and the council appointed Jacques Cortelyou to the board as schout, but he, being "aggrieved by the instructions given him," declined.—Rec. N. Am., I: 216-17; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 280. This caused a delay in the filling of this post "until another experienced person" could be found; hence, on Aug. 31 of that year, the city court requested Stuyvesant and the council to appoint a schout "in conformity with the order of the Lords Patroons" in Holland.—Rec. N. Am., I: 233.

16-26 By the "Instrument of Government," Oliver Cromwell is made "Lord Protector of the Republic of England," and takes oath as such.—Bright, Hist. of England, Period II, 704; Blok, Hist. of the People of the Netherlands, I: 205.

— In this year, we are told by Valentine, the country seat of Jacobus Kip was built on his bowery in the neighbourhood of Second Ave. and 35th St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 950). Stone's Hist. of N. Y., Appendix XVI, contains notes by Bishop Kip in which he states (p. 99) that it was built "in 1655, of bricks brought from Holland. . . ." No definite authority is quoted by either of these writers. The only positive information that we have is that the house was erected before 1668, as it is shown on the Nichols Map (Pl. 10A). It was demolished in 1851.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, op. cit., and Stone, op. cit. (p. 100).

Bookkeeper of the Revenues" of the city by the burgomasters and schepens, his salary to commence on Nov. 25, 1653.—Rec. N. Am., I: 150. He was the first person to hold the new position.

19 Teunis Kraey or Cray, "an old burgher," requests of the burgomasters and schepens a commission for the office of city crier, "as he has long filled the office."—Rec. N. Am., I: 151.

" Claes van Elslander, Jr., requests a salary as court messenger of the city, and a proper commission for the office, as well as "a liberal allowance for his services rendered for about a year."—Rec. N. Am., I: 152.

20 Simon Joosten, having asked of the burgomasters and schepens permission "to keep a Tavern over at the [Brooklyn] Ferry (in place of Cornelis Dircksen Hoochland) for the convenience of Travelers," is granted his request for one year, upon conditions for payment of the excise as prescribed by the board.—Rec. N. Am., I: 152. See 1638, for earliest recorded mention of the ferry. See also June 2, 1654.

26 The first annual term of the first board of burgomasters and schepens being about to expire, the board resolves to call, in a body, on Stuyvesant, to make inquiry whether he desires them to nominate a double number of candidates for a new board; also how many of the old board should retire and how many should remain in office. The following day they presented the matter by formal petition, to which Stuyvesant and the council replied, on the 28th, that no changes should be made, except the filling of two vacancies in the board, as now certified. The others were desired to continue in office "for the sake of peace and harmony." Salaries were also granted them—to burgomasters 350 florins, and to schepens 250 florins per annum, out of the city revenues.—Rec. N. Am., I: 156-57.

28 Specified duties are proclaimed on imported Indian goods, brandy, wines, beer, and salt, which are to be paid henceforth, "as the staple right," at New Amsterdam, in lieu of the standard one per cent. duty imposed, but "not hitherto collected," from merchants "from their cargoes and Merchandizes." The export duties are unchanged.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 153-55. As certain merchants of the city had petitioned for exemption from the payment of the new duties, a concession was made by way of a reduction of tariff on most of the articles enumerated, and salt, on account of its scarcity, was put upon the free list, on July 22.—Ibid., 171-73.

Feb. Stuyvesant and the council summon the burgomasters and schepens to a joint meeting at the fort, at which they debate "in what manner the piracy of certain English pirates should be stopped." The board recommended as the "best means" "to station a vessel with 20 to 30 men for a certain time at and about Minnewits [Manrusing] Island in order thus to be able to keep a watch on everything." The next day, Stuyvesant, at the city hall, signified the council's consent to the above plan. The board then proposed the apportionment of a tax levy for the support of forty men, amounting to 1,600 florins per month, which was referred to the council for advice and approval. No action had been taken by the 19th, when the board urged a speedy decision. This brought a favourable response, on the 23d, from Stuyvesant and the council, who agreed to the levy among the towns.—Rec. N. Am., I: 158-59; 166-66, 168-69; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 248-49.

" At the instance of President Arent van Hattem, an order is passed that Jacob Steendam, the poet of New Netherland, deliver to the court messenger twelve cushions, made for the burgomasters and schepens, and the messenger brings them into court (at the city hall).—Rec. N. Am., I: 158.

19 In a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, the burgomasters and schepens ask for "a grant of authority provisionally to impose" certain duties on imported and exported goods, on ship tonnage, and on beer and wines, etc., and to be permitted "to appoint two sworn Beer Carriers." They plead that this grant is necessary to pay the debts incurred for the construction of public works. The council, on the 23d, consented to the burgher excise, but denied them the duty on imported goods or exported merchandise, as being not applicable to any one particular city or place, but reserved for the province in general.—Rec. N. Am., I: 166, 169.

23 The directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam resolve not to permit any Lutheran pastors in New Netherland, nor any other public worship except that of the Reformed Church.—Eccles. Rec., I: 323; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 252. See full record under Oct. 4, 1653.

1654 Feb. 25 The two burgomasters and a majority of the schepens appear before Stuyvesant and lodge a grievance with him, because he and the council, without their knowledge, have "interdicted and forbidden certain farmers' servants to ride the goose on the feast of Bacchus at Shrove-tide." This interdict was served by the court messenger, Claes van Elsland, Sr., "on the farmers' servants the day before the act, who, notwithstanding such service, nevertheless, in contempt of the supreme authority, violated the same."—Rec. N. Am., I: 172. The sport of plucking, pulling, or "riding" the goose consisted of smearing the neck and head of a goose with oil or soap and fastening it by a rope between two poles. The contestants, on horseback, rode at full gallop and attempted to seize the prize. He who bore off the goose was declared to be king of the festival.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 333.

On this day (Feb. 25) also, when the burgomasters and schepens protested against the decree, certain interrogatories were addressed to Harmen Smeeman by Stuyvesant and the council, during his examination by this supreme court on a charge of having, with others, violated the interdict. Several of these persons, including Smeeman, the ringleader of the party, were fined; two or three others, for behaving in an insolent manner, such as laughing at the court and threatening Stuyvesant, were committed to prison. The burgomasters and schepens felt aggrieved, because they looked upon the decree and sentences as an invasion of their judicial authority; but Stuyvesant and the council declared that the board was only an inferior court of justice and could "in no wise infringe on or diminish the power and authority of the Director General and Council to enact any Ordinances or issue particular interdicts especially those which tend to the glory of God . . . prevent more sins, scandals, debaucheries and crimes, and properly correct, fine and punish obstinate transgressors." At the request of the city court, the imprisoned persons were released by an order in council, on the 27th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 172-73; another translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 249-50; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch 135.

A year later, on Feb. 8, 1655, Fiscal Van Tienhoven told the burgomasters and schepens "that he had been informed that the country people intended Riding the Goose again as they did last year," and asked if the court intended to do anything to suppress it, as it was interdicted by the resolution of the council. Thereupon, the city court decided that the fiscal, ex-officio, should "declare the same to be illegal."—Rec. N. Am., I: 286. Nothing is recorded again about this festivity until Feb. 26, 1658, when Stuyvesant and the council refused permission to the farmers and their men, in the vicinity of New Amsterdam, to indulge therein.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 191.

17-27 Cromwell, the "Protector," writes to the governors of the New England colonies: "We are assured you have been long since acquainted with the hostile attempt of the Dutch, and their injurious proceedings in reference to this Nation whereby the long continued amity betwixt us and them hath not only been disturbed, but an open and fierce war raised and prosecuted, to the shedding of much blood; . . . It hath often been presented to the state here, that all (or at least some) of your colonies have met with uneighbourly and unchristian dealing from that people; in which respect, as also in compliance to your native country (according to the declaration of the late council of state, dated the 19th of July, 1652, which we doubt not was sent you) it was expected you would have improved the present opportunity to ease yourselves of that burthen, and vindicate the English rights in those parts." He continues: "We have added to the number and strength of ships design'd for those parts upon another service, and in them sent such proportion of ammunition, powder &c. as may be helpful to your stores in that kind, for furnishing a competent number of land soldiers; as also given commission to [Maj.] Robert Sedgwick and Capt. John Leverett; that if there be a concurrence in your colonies to the work . . . their utmost assistance may be given for gaining the Manhattanes or other places under the power of the Dutch. We have refer'd to such, as are to be trusted by us in this service, to consider with yourselves or others, to whom you shall commit the managing of that affair; and to determine what number of men may rationally be sufficient to carry on the design; that being fittest to be concluded upon the place, where the numbers and strength of the enemy, with his condition in other respects, may be best understood."—Thurloe, State Papers, I: 722. At the same time instructions are given to the commanders of the expedition.—Ibid., I: 721. Among other things, the instructions say: "If the Lord give his blessing to your undertaking, that the forts and places be gained, you shall not use cruelty to the inhabitants, but encourage those that are willing to remain under the English government, and give liberty to others to transport themselves for Europe."

On the collapse of this design against the Dutch, and the diversion of the expeditionary forces sent for the dislodgment of the French from the coast of Maine, see Brodhead's Hist. State of N. Y., I: 582-86.

Nicholaes Terhaer, by an order of Stuyvesant and the council, is forbidden to sell liquor any more.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 136. On June 8, he was prosecuted by the schout in the court of burgomasters and schepens for tapping to the Indians on Sundays during sermon, as well as at other times; for making a great uproar, striking a burgher, and threatening another with a knife. He denied the charges and said his wife had exchanged only a mug of beer with Indians for fish, together with half a gill of brandy, in which she had put water. The city court condemned him "from this time forth not to tap or to retail any wine or beer," and to be "absolutely excluded from said business," as well as fined.—Rec. N. Am., I: 208. On Aug. 17 and 24, and on Sept. 7, he petitioned unsuccessfully for a restoration of his tavern privileges.—Ibid., I: 228, 231, 240. He renewed his petition to the court on Oct. 5, which granted him, provisionally, on the 12th, permission to tap, "he meanwhile paying attention to his behavior, on condition that he, first and foremost," pay "the proper excise on whatever he shall lay in."—Ibid., I: 250, 252.

Laxness in the business relations through the government of New Netherland and its superiors, the directors of the West India Co., chamber of Amsterdam, is brought out forcibly in a letter of the latter to Stuyvesant and the council, which states that they are "frequently embarrassed by not having the general and special account books," "no books of account" having been "sent over for several years," and they command that "the missing books and accounts" be sent to Amsterdam "speedily by the first ship," and a regular "detailed statement of the expenses and revenues" every year thereafter.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 253. Singularly enough, no treasurer's or receiver's account books of the Dutch period are now known to be extant, either in Holland or America.

The burgomasters and schepens declare that they witness "with sorrow the dilapidated state of the works erected last year [see March 15, 1653], consisting of walls of earth, and palisades along the river, which were commenced not only with great trouble, labor, loss of time and cost of the commonality, but as far as exigency of the time and case required and demanded, were finished with the aid of the good Commonality in the completest manner." They appeal, therefore, to their "Countrymen, neighbors and Courts of Breuckelen, Midwout and Amesfoort," to aid "the prosperity and preservation of the public interests" by lending "a helping hand in the construction and repairing of the palisades required along the river." They add: "It is our request, then, that your Honors may please each in his jurisdiction to procure and order, that every farmer or hoor shall cut and deliver at the Ferry twenty five round palisades as straight as possible, twelve feet in length and at the least 18 @ 20 inches in thickness." They say the welfare and "preservation of the Country in general" will be served thereby.—Rec. N. Am., I: 177-78. The magistrates of these three villages replied, on the 28th, that, "as members of the same body," they would do all in their power for the common defense, and invoked like coöperation for their own localities.—Ibid., I: 181-82. On the 30th, the burgomasters and schepens resolved to send a deputy to Stuyvesant and the council, to ask whether they concurred "that the decayed fortifications" of the city "should be again repaired and the North River shut off also with palisades and thus brought into a state of defence;" also if they would "take measures, so that the people out of the City" might "lend a helping hand therein," and give the city authorities the "necessary authority" to proceed.—Ibid., I: 182. The deputy reported, on April 13, that he had interviewed Stuyvesant, who found the proposal "entirely agreeable," and expressed his purpose of aiding the plan by going "in person around" and speaking "to the outside people on this subject." But "nothing of this had been done."—Ibid., I: 185-86. Here the matter rested until resumed in the following June. See June 8, 1654.

1654 Stuyvesant visits Fort Orange (Albany) at the end of this month to examine into difficulties there over jurisdiction, boundaries, etc. In April, after he had returned to New Amsterdam, various decisions were made on these matters by him and the council.—Rec. N. Am., I: 178; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 256-59.

Apr. In the former year, and now again, "some Pirates and Vagabonds," said to be "Runaways and Transports from New England," are guilty of "frequenting Long Island and the Mainland" between the Dutch and New England, spying out even the city of New Amsterdam, "under the colour and guise of Travelers." They have committed depredations "at the Flatland," and, it is alleged, have received in their nefarious acts protection and covert from some of the inhabitants in the English towns of the Dutch province. These practices induce Stuyvesant and the council to issue an ordinance, which enjoins everybody from communicating with, aiding, or abetting the freebooters in any manner. Prompt publication of the presence of pirates is to be made to the nearest magistrate, and whoever fails to do so is to suffer confiscation of property and banishment. The magistrates of the different villages are required to establish and maintain a watch for apprehending the outlaws. As an encouragement to the people to do their duty, they are promised 10 shalers "for every Pirate or Vagabond" who is "delivered into the hands of the Director General and Council or their Fiscal." Strangers in any place are to make their identity known by passes, or, if without a pass, to be examined by the local magistracy. Inhabitants are "not to lodge any unknown Strangers without first making known" their names to the proper officers of the place. Guns are not allowed to be discharged between sunset and sunrise, except when a raid is manifest, and then three discharges are to be made in quick succession, as a signal to the nearest watch, and so in succession by watches, to call together "each under his competent Officer, at the appointed place of Rendezvous." This ordinance was published and posted throughout the province of New Netherland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 155-8. For regulations regarding the defense of the Dutch towns on Long Island, see ibid., 159-60.

Cornelis van Tienhoven and Capt. Martin Cregier (or Krigier) are commissioned by Stuyvesant as special envoys to Gov. Theophilus Eaton, of New Haven Colony, to negotiate in regard to the suppression of English piracies. They received their passports on the 14th, and, on the 27th, the journal of their proceedings was read in council and communicated to the burgomasters and schepens.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 254-55, 256; Rec. N. Am., I: 188.

Jan Pieterens Verbrugge acquires a part of the lot of Cornelis Groesens (granted Jan. 10, 1645), and lays out a garden and orchard north of the land gate and west of the Highway (Broadway).—See PIs. 10 and 22-a, Vol. I, and I: 210; Castello Plan, C. A treaty of peace between England and the States of Holland is signed by representatives of both nations.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 264. A few days later, it was proclaimed in England by Cromwell.—Cf. Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 586.

Cornelys van Ruyven receives a ground-brief for a lot on the site of the present Nos. 39, 41, and part of No. 43 Broad St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 291; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 394.

A placard by the director-general and council, concerning certain robberies by English pirates, is published and posted at the city hall "after previous ringing of the bell."—Rec. N. Am., I: 188.

In response to an order of the burgomasters and schepens on the previous day, the captains, lieutenants, ensigns, sergeants, and corporals of both of the burgher companies of New Amsterdam assemble at the city hall, where an ordinance is enacted relative to establishing good order in the burgher or city watch. On the 29th, this was published and affixed at the city hall "after ringing of the bell."—Rec. N. Am., I: 188-89.

Complaints are made to the directors at Amsterdam that there is no proper regulation, or at least observance, regarding weights and measures at New Amsterdam. They wrote, therefore to Stuyvesant and the council, on May 18, declaring that they had directed that some Amsterdam standards of weights, yard, and other measures be sent over to New Amsterdam, "to be kept there in the City Hall" (zest huys).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 263. However, even before this letter had been written in Holland, Stuyvesant himself had ordered the erection of the scales, in the spring of this year, and the weigh-house was in existence before May 4.—Rec. N. Am., I: 195, 246.

On Aug. 10 (q. v.), Stuyvesant and the council passed an ordinance for regulating the business of the weigh-house, in which they referred to "the Complaints of some evilminded persons," who had charged "that no order is observed in this Country in regard to Weights and Measures." The ordinance recited that "a suitable Weighinghouse" had been "made and constructed, at the cost and charges of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Directors at the Chamber of Amsterdam," by order of Stuyvesant and his council, who had placed therein, "in addition to the stamped Weight," also "a stamped Skepel and Ell," agreeing with the Amsterdam standard, "according to which all other Weights, Measures and Ells" within the province were to be standardized. All goods subject to weight or measurement, hereafter brought into or carried out of the city, were to be "weighed and measured by the sworn Weighmaster and Mesurer before such Merchandizes or Goods" were brought into or exported from the city. Fees for weighing were established, both by the hundred weight and for odd or lesser weights, as well as for measuring. Goods could also be weighed in loco, at the place of sale, on payment of a per diem fee to the weighmaster and another fee for his trouble in bringing along the scales and weights; but persons who had their own scales and weights were required to pay only for the time of the weighmaster. These fees were to be "handed into and paid in current pay at the General Office" of the company, until such time as the council had opportunity "to farm out the Weighhouse." Goods of or for the company, the board of deacons, or other charitable bodies were exempt from fees.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 174-77.

The burgomasters and schepens, on Sept. 22, apprised the directors at Amsterdam of their part in proposing the erection of "a Public Scales," and complained that whereas Stuyvesant "was pleased, last Spring, to order, himself, the erection of the Scales," he did not "grant the proceeds thereof" to the treasury of the city. They appealed to the directors for a grant of the revenue to the city, or to so dispose of the matter as was deemed proper.—Rec. N. Am., I: 246. Before Nov. 23d, the directors at Amsterdam had learned of the regulations for weights and measures, and said they were now "at ease" in the matter; that they had ordered and were sending over "whole and half schepel measures."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 302. The ordinance of Aug. 10 was renewed, with amplifications, on April 27, 1656 (q. v.). Office hours were now established at the weigh-house, during which alone the regular weighing should be done. Extra pay for extra weighing out of hours was prescribed. The farmer of the weigh-house was required to "take care that the Scales or Balances" were "kept clean and free from dirt," and that the scales were regulated before they were used; also "that such cleaning be frequently done to the Weighinghouse," in times of bad weather.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 224-27. This weigh-house was probably on Pearl St., near the pier built on Schreyers Hoek in 1648-9; but there is no documentary evidence to prove its exact location. See, however, Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 123. See also Feb. 10, 1653.

A new burgher excise is enacted by the burgomasters and schepens, in conformity with the authority granted to them, on Feb. 23, by the director-general and the council. Regulations for the administration and observance of this ordinance are prescribed in detail.—Rec. N. Am., I: 192-96. In a duplicate of this city ordinance, in ibid., I: 17-18, the date of publication is given as the 10th.

Isaac Allerton's place (on the south side of Pearl St., between Fulton and Ferry Sts., then the shore of the East River), is referred to under this date.—Rec. N. Am., I: 194. Also "Mr Allerton's quay" is mentioned in court proceeding of Aug. 23, 1655, and "Allerton's Wharf" in a proceeding of Sept. 6, 1655.—Ibid., I: 347, 355. See also "Alderton's Building" on the "Duke's Plan" (Pl. 10, Vol. I).

In a letter of this date, the directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant and the council that, as a means of increasing population and promoting the cultivation of the soil in New Netherland, they are sending over in the ships "Perboom" and "Gelderse Blom" some boys and girls from the orphan asylum of Amsterdam, "making first a trial with 50 persons."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 264. On July 8, they characterized the sending over of these orphans as "an experiment," and "most seriously" recommended that good care be taken of them, and that they be placed "with good masters" or be given such other employment as would be beneficial to them and of advantage to the country.—Ibid., XIV: 265. This first party of orphans arrived in the autumn, in charge of a matron (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147), and on Nov. 9, Stuyvesant and the council resolved "to hire the house of Mr. [Isaac] Allerton and lodge there the children seat over by the Poorasters."—Ibid., XIV: 296. The "written conditions" or "rules" made for their care in New Netherland met with the approval of the directors, who, on May 26, 1655, wrote they were about to send another party of boys and girls in the ship "de Waegh," a man-of-war. This ship arrived at New Amsterdam on Aug. 13.—Ibid., XIV: 322. Seventeen orphans, boys and girls, ranging in ages from 12 to 23 years, came in this ship. The burgomasters of old Amsterdam recommended them to Stuyvesant's care, and besought him "to receive these children and youths kindly."—Ibid., XIV: 325-26. Another party of "six children from the Almshouse" was sent over in 1659, in the ship "Trouw," to be "apprenticed to farmers."—Ibid., XIV: 434.

This plan of sending over orphans had been considered by the directors at Amsterdam as early as the year 1650, when it was proposed to transport "300 to 400 boys and girls," but it then came to naught, "being found to offer too many inconveniences."—Ibid., XIV: 136. It was taken up anew in 1652, when all arrangements were made to send over 150 orphans, at the charge of the city of Amsterdam; yet, when they thought they "were quite sure of it, it happened that the ships of the English Parliament, commissioned with letters of reprisal" against the Dutch, captured about 60 Dutch merchantmen, among them one from New Netherland, and put a stay upon the proposed plan.—Ibid., XIV: 166-67. These orphans were to be bound to their masters as apprentices "for four years, during which time they were to receive clothing and board or if they chose fl. 60 [§24] annually for clothing themselves." If a girl married, with the consent of the director-general, before the expiration of her time, she was to be granted her freedom. Those who served their full time could remain with their masters upon such conditions as they themselves made, whilst those who wished to remain free of service were to be granted twenty-five morgens (50 acres) of land each, or as much thereof as they were willing to cultivate.—Ibid., XIV: 166-67, 175-76.

By the same letter the directors in Holland accede to the request of the burgomasters and schepens that the office of schout be hereafter separated from that of the company's fiscal, but that the appointment of the new officer shall be made by the director-general and council.—Rec. N. Am. I: 218; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 262. The change did not, however, become operative at this time. See May 30, 1656.

They propose, further, the appointment of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter as the first incumbent of the separate office of schout of New Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 262. Stuyvesant and the council did not heed this request, no doubt because Kuyter had shortly before been chosen as one of the new schepens of the city court.—Ibid., XIV: 244. When the directors wrote, on Nov. 23, they were already aware of the recent murder of Kuyter; yet, in that letter, they said they demanded a reason from Stuyvesant and the council why Kuyter "was not appointed as proposed," a respect they considered due to them, instead of the appointment of someone unknown to the directors. This was a reference to the choice of Jacques Cortelou, who, as they seem not to have known, had refused to serve.—Ibid., XIV: 280, 302. See July 21, 1654.

In compliance with a petition made by the burgomasters and schepens on Dec. 24, 1653, the directors now empower them to execute transports and deeds of conveyance for houses and lots within the limits of the city of New Amsterdam, but with certain reservations. For this purpose, they also agree to have made in Holland a city seal, differing from the provincial seal of New Netherland, which they promise to send over when finished.—Rec. N. Am., I: 145-46, 219; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 262. This "seal, cut in silver," and also a "painted coat of arms of the City of New-Amsterdam," were sent from Holland in July, in the ship "De Perreboom" (Peartree). See Dec. 8.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 309; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 241. Impressions of this seal are very rare. There are several in the New York Hist. Soc., one being attached to a conveyance of a house and lot on the south side of the Marckvelt Steegh, east of the Marckvelt (present Whitehall St.), to Jan Evertsen Bout. See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82e,

Vol. II, and II: 255 (No. 21); Frontispiece, Vol. V; Wilde, Civic Ancestry; Pine, Seal & Flag of the City of N. Y. See also Dec. 24, 1653.

Finally, the directors state: ". . . we have granted and allowed, that the house [stadthuis] in which the Burgomasters and Schepens meet, shall be given to the city to be appropriated to its use. . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 262-63.

The directors at Amsterdam say, in a letter to the burgomasters and schepens, that they cannot understand why they should allow themselves "to be stirred up by the disaffected so far as not only to assist in organizing an independent Assembly without authority but moreover to send in remonstrances," which the directors consider, "in the present circumstances, to be very inexpedient," however advantageous they may otherwise be. Rec. N. Am., I: 217; there is another translation, in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 266. To this the burgomasters and schepens replied, on July 27, that they were not guilty of fomenting disaffection, and they knew of none; that they had not meditated "holding private convocations with the English, or others," or deliberated "on matters of State, or, what is still worse," attempted "to make a change in the State and in the Government thereof." They said their only object was to present to the directors in Holland an account of the state of the country, because they believed "necessity most imperatively demanded it."—Rec. N. Am., I: 221, 222.

Cornelis van Tienhoven receives a ground-brief for a lot now covered in part by the Broad Exchange building, corner of Broad St. and Exchange Pl., and the bed of Exchange Pl. from the middle of Broad St. very nearly to William St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 396.

In a patent to Carel van Brugge, the Sheep Pasture is mentioned (Liber HR-2: 6, Albany), but not for the first time, as stated in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967. An earlier mention occurred in a patent of July 1, 1652 (q. v.).

Nicasius de Sille writes from New Amsterdam to Maximiliaan van Beeckerke of The Hague, and describes New Netherland, thus: "This country suits me exceedingly well. I shall not try to leave it as long as I live. We are longing very much for tidings from Europe, as to how it may go with the English [in the war with the Dutch]. We have here such neighbors also, but they do not attack us as yet. We receive no news from Patria, which at times causes us to heave a sigh. We are waiting for good news [in the] papers."

"This country does a large trade in furs, especially beavers, which are sold to us by the savages by the thousand for Dutch merchandise. All the people here are traders. Big cattle and oxen and horses are still scarce. They are not slaughtered much, for the main object is to get the increase. It goes here after the manner of the Old Testament; wealth consists in oxen and horses to plow with, and in cows, sheep and goats. The country can supply us with grain; children and pigs multiply here rapidly and more than anything else, but there is a lack of women; we need people to cultivate the soil and to increase the population. There is plenty of land and forest, and the soil is good. He who comes from Patria with farm laborers can in one year cultivate enough [land] to support himself on what he gains. Horses and oxen they must buy here. The rivers are full of fish, good edible fish, which is very cheap, three large sea crabs for a stiver; also fruit. The Indians offer these for sale. Likewise venison, which I bought this past winter at a half stiver a pound, being as fat as mutton. Oysters we pick up here before our foot; among them there are some so large that one must cut them in two or three pieces. The weeds consist mostly of strawberries, catnip and blackberries. There is a good increase of poultry. The Indians bring us wild geese, turkeys, partridges, wild pigeons, ducks, and various other birds and animals; in fine, one can live here and forget Patria. Beer is brewed here as good as in Holland, of barley and wheat. Wheaten bread is more common here than rye or buckwheat. Oats, peas and corn are fair. In the way of fish we have perch, sturgeon, bass, herring, mackerel, weakfish, stone bream, eel, eleven, twelve and thirteen, and various other kinds of which I do not yet know the names. My children already begin to speak the language of the savages and can trade with them. No gold or silver circulates here, but beads, which the Indians make and call seawant. Six white beads are worth one stiver, and three black beads one stiver. We can buy everything with it and gladly take it in payment. In short, once more, it is good here, but last winter the Spaniard left us and the Frenchman ran away, but the Duke of Brandenburg stands by us faithfully [an allusion to kinds of wines]; we must keep him company with a little smoke. We are looking again for aid from the friends [i. e., wines] who deserted us, for their absence makes us melancholy; they all drink here, from the moment they are able to lick a spoon. The women of the neighborhood entertain each other with a pipe and a brazier; young and old, they all smoke. Tobacco costs here but a shilling a pound of the best quality. Very good tobacco is grown here, and the trade in Virginia tobacco is very large, so that for a wry face people here give away the tobacco by the pound for nothing. I intend one of these days to start a large tobacco plantation myself. In a postscript of July 15th, he states that "Owing to the bad rumors from New England, the ship was held up. We had to keep it both on account of the ammunition and the crew, but we frightened them so that as yet they have not made war against us. We have bravely fortified ourselves for defense. Furthermore, I know nothing more to write than that there are no sparrows here, but wild pigeons fly here as thick as the sparrows in Holland this time of the year and eat strawberries and cherries. They are shot here by the thousand in our squares, streets and gardens. They taste like partridge. We wish only for peace." In another postscript, on July 17th, he writes: "A ship just arrived here from Amsterdam with tidings of peace, to the joy of us all."—Quarterly Journal of N. Y. State Hist. Ass'n, I: 101-3, from De Sille's letter, here first printed by A. J. F. van Laer. See also Aug. 23, 1653; and Sept. 23, 1654.

29 Notwithstanding that peace negotiations between England and the states-general were in progress, a number of ships were sent to New England to engage in a menacing expedition against "the Manhattos, or other places under the power of the Dutch."—Thurloe, quoted by Brodhead, in Hist. State of N. Y., I: 582. On May 29, Stuyvesant communicates to the burgomasters and schepens "the current intelligence from New England, that 6 ships with munitions of war &c., have arrived at Boston. He proposes that means be provided for defense through "a morgen tax, a horn tax and a tax on lots."—Rec. N. Am., I: 200-1. In a letter of June 8, he told them that he had apprised them immediately upon the receipt of the rumor and intelligence from the North, that Captain [John] Leverett had arrived with four Parliament's ships and some military troops, although the intent and certainty thereof were unknown "to him, and had recommended action for defense and resistance, but they had done nothing "towards the defence of this City or to the repairing of its works." He accused them of being "lulled to sleep by an idle rumor of peace," and feared that the cannon planted in the previous year, against his advice, on the outer works of the city, would be used by an enemy and turned against the city and its fort.—Ibid., I: 208-10; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 271.

Stuyvesant took up with his own councillors, on May 30 (q. v.), the project of invasion, and made it known that Isaac Allerton was his source of information. He and the council declared, on June 13, that on the previous day they had heard "some probable sounding rumors and news, told by an Englishman to several of our subjects, among others to Govers Lookermans, Pieter Wolfertsen [van Couwenhoven], Jacob [Wolphtersen] van Couwenhooven and Jacques Corteljou, . . . to wit, that the English at the North recruit soldiers . . . and that three large ships were to come into the Bay or to the Cape to cut off our retreat; also that soldiers in boats should land near Hellegat, preceded by a ketch to demand the surrender of the Fort and offer us many good conditions." It was deemed wise "not to be caught napping or neglecting anything."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 272.

What was taking place in New England is revealed in a communication of Capt. Mark Harrison, of the ship "Church," sent to the "Navy Commissioners," on July 1, in which he gave an account of his voyage since leaving Portsmouth, Eng. He said that the ships lost the company of the "Black Raven" and the "Augustine" in storms and extremity of weather, and were forced to Fayal. It was concluded by Maj. Robert Sedgwick and Capt. John Leverett to send the "Black Raven" home again as unfit to go to the westward. Harrison said that he arrived at Boston on May 12, waiting for three weeks the coming of Maj. Sedgwick, who arrived with Capt. Robert Fenn in the "Augustine," and that they commenced raising forces for taking the Dutch plantation, the assistance of the southern colonies of New England being not wanting in carrying on that design, but Massachusetts did not act with that life that was expected, supposing they had not a just call for such a work. After spending some time in raising soldiers and having accomplished their desires, they received news of the peace concluded with the states-general, whereupon the colonies deserted them and they were forced to let the design fall through. Masts not being ready, it was thought good to turn their attention toward the French.—Cal. State Papers, Colonial Series, 1675-1676 (addenda), 89 (item 205). This expedition captured Fort St. John and Fort Royal in Acadia. For the English plan of the expedition, see Thurloe, op. cit., I: 721, 722; II: 418, 419, 425.

30 Stuyvesant submits proposals to the council, saying: "For a day or two rumors have been current, which were confirmed last evening in detail by Mr. Isaac Allerton, that 10 or 12 days ago six ships arrived at Boston from Old England, namely, two merchantmen and four men-of-war of the Parliament or the present Government of England, having on board Colonel Sussex, Captain Leverett and Captain Hull and a number of soldiers on each vessel, also ammunition and engineers' implements. Mr. Allerton declared not to know, whether they were intended to be used against us or against the French, for the instructions had not yet been opened and were not to be opened until ten days after their arrival at Boston. According to our calculations this must have been done yesterday or the day before, but we cannot and shall not know their tenor and correct meaning, until the blow is struck and then it will be too late. The continuation of Captain Leverett the losses suffered at the hands of and the deeds committed by Captain Hull last year and the repeatedly received information, that they had both gone to Old England last fall with the view of soliciting and obtaining ample authority to proceed against this Province and its inhabitants prognosticate no good, but warn us to be on our guard and while trusting in God to consider all possible means of defense." Stuyvesant called the meeting, among other things, to consider how to provide for maintaining "the Nation's honor and the most effective protection of this place and its inhabitants."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 267-68. The council's resolutions, of June 2, are in ibid., XIV: 269-71.

The Swedes, under John Rising, deputy governor of New Sweden, capture Fort Casimir, on the South (Delaware) River, from the Dutch on Trinity Sunday, and name it "Treffalldigheit," or Fort Trinity, placing Swen Schute in command.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 577, 592-94. Stuyvesant found opportunity to retaliate on Sept. 22 (q. v.).

An agreement (only a fragment of which survives) is signed by Egbert van Borsum and the provincial secretary, in regard to the ferry from New Amsterdam to Breucklen, which reads: "And in order that the Ferryman may the better pursue his business, it is granted him on the part of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company, that he shall have the use for a time of the Ferryhouse standing on Long Island, providing he keeps it in necessary repair at his own expense; the committee on the part of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General and Council promising to give the Ferryman all proper support in regard to his business."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 113 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 269. See July 1, 1654. On Aug. 28, Van Borsum obtained a grant of a lot in Brooklyn at the ferry on that side of the river.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 381. On April 26, 1655 (q. v.), he made a contract with three carpenters for the construction of a new ferry-house, which was to be 30 by 18 feet in dimensions.

In their resolutions passed on this date, Stuyvesant and the council declare that "all possible means must be used . . . first in the repairing of the fort and to provide it with proper gabions and palisades; for the completion of those begun at the Gracht [i. e., the ditch that ran along the present Broad Street], then in endeavoring to enlist, as quickly as possible, against monthly pay some soldiers, at least 60 or 70 men," if it were possible to "obtain them without noise or beat of drum."—

1654 N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 270, but with revisions made from the original Dutch text.

At a meeting of Stuyvesant and the council, it is adjudged that the people of the English villages in New Netherland are inclined rather to fight against than for the Dutch government, and for that reason it is resolved unanimously "to pass them in silence and not to call upon them either for the repairs or for the defense" (of New Amsterdam), so as not to "drag the Trojan horse" within the city's walls.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 270.

Albert Liotwaver is ordered by Stuyvesant and the council not to infringe the rights of Eghbert van Borsum, who has rented the ferry, by passing people over the East River.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch., 138. See 1638; Jan. 20 and June 1, 1654.

Among other things, Stuyvesant writes the burgomasters and schepens that he has not been able "to discover up to this time" that they have "undertaken anything towards the defence" of the city or "the repairing of its works"; that it appears to him they are "lulled to sleep by an idle rumor of peace." He upbraids them for their unfulfilled promises, and warns them of his apprehension in case of an invasion, "that, for want of repairs and defence of the outer constructed work, our own arms and cannon, planted last year [1653] on the outer works [along the present Wall St.] contrary to our wish and advice," will be turned against the city. If they can not, as they declare, repair and defend the outer works, they ought to see to it, he says, that the cannon are "removed and brought back from there," where they are useless and a menace, and restored to the fort.—Rec. N. Am., I: 209.

The city court called a special meeting for the following day (9th).—Ibid., I: 208. On the 13th, they replied to Stuyvesant and the council that they would willingly assist, "according to their ability," in fortifying and defending the city. The provincial authorities considered it reasonable "that the Outside people" should do their share of constructing, repairing, and defending, and said they were "well disposed to command the same by proclamation," since it was only a fair return for the help "rendered and got up three @ four times last year [1653] by the Burgomasters and Schepens for the Outside people;" therefore, "absolutely obstinate and refractory" persons should be punished as they deserved. The city fathers concurred in the necessity of such an order, and they promised to "employ all diligence and means, to commence the work most speedily," on condition that "proper Resolutions" were "first adopted as to the manner the works are to be constructed and made."—Ibid., I: 210-11. The result of this was the provincial ordinance of June 14 (q. v.).

Rumours of an invasion by New Englanders having reached Stuyvesant and the council, they propose to the burgomasters and schepens media for the defense of New Amsterdam and its fort. These suggestions are "that besides the repair and security of the fort, the old ditch (Gracht) be dug up and gabions be set up [there], which being done, to fortify the City Tavern [city hall] with a small earthwork and breastworks, and to plant on the same 2 to 3 light pieces." The proposals provide also for changes in the outer works or palisades, built in the previous year—that the cannon be removed from thence, lest they be turned on the city by an enemy, especially as the angles are completely destroyed.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 272-73, but with revisions made from the original Dutch text in the N. Y. State Library. The above suggestions seem to mean—(1) the repair and securing of the fort; (2) the deepening and reinforcing of the ditch that ran along the present Broad St.; and (3) the fortifying of the city tavern, which, on May 18 (q. v.), had been granted by the West India Co. to the city as a city hall, for which purpose it had been used since Feb. 24, 1653 (see Feb. 6 of that year). Regarding repairs of the ditch, see Aug. 24. It is not certain just when the city hall defences were completed, but they are shown on the Castello Plan of 1660 (Frontispiece, and Pl. 82, Vol. II), and were soon thereafter superseded by a "rounded" or stone half-moon, which appears on later views.—See "Half-moon before the Stadt Huys," Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

On account of rumours unfavourable to the security of New Amsterdam and its fortress, Stuyvesant and the council consider it "highly necessary not only to repair the Works constructed last year, but also, first and foremost, in addition to the repair and strengthening of the Fort, likewise to make some other new Trenches and interior Works, in order the better to defend the one from the other, and in case of need to be able to retire from the one or the other." This old and new work is declared to be imperative, and all officials "of the Subaltern Courts" of the province are commanded, by ordinance, to do all in their power to forward the hiring of "some able Ditchers and Diggers from each Village, Colonie or Hamlet," and cause them to come to the city on the following Tuesday (the 16th), "with a spade and axe, to help to construct and repair such Works" as will be "pointed out to them by the Director General and Council or their commissioners," for which the labourers are to be paid two guilders per day. Those drafted are obliged to respond or, in default, to pay a fine for each day's delinquency.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 161-62; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 275-76. Overseers and superintendents of the works were chosen and regulations were also made on the 16th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 214-15; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 278.

The merchants of New Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant and the council, approve of a levy or "toll of one tenth on all goods and merchandises" that may be sent to Holland "during this summer;" subject, however, to repayment or return in a year, for the security of which the revenues of the city shall be "a special bond and mortgage." They ask that the city "be allowed to nominate six able members" of the community, from whom three shall be elected by the provincial government, "to control the expenditure and distribution of the said moneys subject to the orders" of the provincial and the city authorities.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 276-77. On the following day (16th), the burgomasters and schepens, instead of nominating six, as the merchants had proposed, designated two of their number by plurality vote, from whom Schepen Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt was elected in council. Cornelis van Ruyven, the provincial secretary, acted with him, on behalf of the superior government. Their function was that of treasurer and paymaster—in fact "Administrators of the moneys . . . raised from the Merchants."—Ibid., XIV: 278; Rec. N. Am., I: 214, 215.

Michiel Jansen, of Pavia, (N. J.), which was "within the jurisdiction of this City of New Amsterdam," appears before the burgomasters and schepens and asks permission "to brew some beer," for "the accommodation of the neighborhood." His petition is granted and an agreement is made with him for one year to pay 50 guilders as an annual excise for all the beer he shall brew and sell at Pavia, and an additional legal excise on all beer that he may deliver at New Amsterdam or any other place to tapsters or other persons.—Rec. N. Am., I: 213-14.

Adriaen Derickson Coen receives a ground-brief for a lot on the site of No. 28 South William St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 298; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 397.

Peter Montfoort receives a ground-brief for a lot now covered by Nos. 49, 51, and 53 Broad St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 393.

The directors at Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant and the council on May 18, enclose a placard or edict, which they order them to publish, post, and execute with diligence. It relates to promoting the increase of cattle in New Netherland, and the directors suggest that the object would be greatly forwarded if a census were taken of the number of cattle in each colony and recorded in a register. This edict is not among the records, but the letter in which it was enclosed was received in New Amsterdam in July, and publication of the edict must have been made at that time.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 171; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 261. This was the first general census of cattle proposed for the province.

The first ferry ordinance is issued by Stuyvesant and his council. It is thought to be necessary because "very great confusion and disorder prevail more and more among the Ferrymen on both sides of the Ferry of the Manhatans [present Dover and Pearl Sts., and Fulton St., Brooklyn] to the serious inconvenience of the Passeengers and Inhabitants of this Province, so that those under the necessity of going over, are frequently obliged to wait whole days and nights, and then again are constrained to give up their journey not without gross extortion of double and higher fare, disputes and other unmanly practices to the great loss and vexation of Strangers and the good people of this Province." The idea of the ordinance is to provide service "in a proper manner . . . and at the smallest expense." Therefore, it is ordered that henceforth only "the Lessee of the Ferry," who has the authorization of the government, "shall be at liberty to keep or have any from New England, with the design of inciting commotion and disaffection. An ordinance is issued for the arrest of the disseminators, and a large reward is offered to anyone who brings about an arrest and conviction.—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 168-69.

Johannes Megapostenis and Samuel Driusis, the two Dutch clergymen at New Amsterdam, writing to the classis of Amsterdam in regard to the propagation of Christianity among the Indians, say: "It is indeed true that a sachem of the Indians has sojourned for a length of time among us at the Manhattans, who was diligent in learning to read and write, which he learned to do tolerably well. He was also instructed in the principal grounds of the christian faith, and publicly joined in recitations on the catechism by christian children. We gave him a Bible that he might peruse it and teach his own countrymen from it. We hoped that in due time he might be the instrument of accomplishing considerable good among the Indians. But we acknowledge that he has only the bare knowledge of the truth, without the practice of godliness. He is greatly inclined to drunkenness, and indeed, is not better than other Indians. We do not expect much fruit of religion among these barbarous nations, until they are brought under the government of Europeans, as these latter increase in numbers."—Eccles. Rec., I: 326-27. See Aug. 5, 1657.

On the 17th, Stuyvesant and the council informed the burgomasters and schepens that a treaty of peace had been concluded between England and the states-general at Westminster, on April 5/15 last past, and that, therefore, they should duly publish the same by proclamation. They do so on this day, "according to the printed copy" sent from Holland, "at the City Hall after the usual preliminary ringing of the Bell."—Rec. N. Am., I: 215-16. Aug. 12 was later appointed as a day of general thanksgiving in New Netherland.—Ibid., I: 222-23; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 339; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 264.

Stuyvesant calls a meeting of the burgomasters and schepens and delivers to them the despatch of May 18 (q.v.) from the directors at Amsterdam, permitting the appointment of a schout distinct from the office of fiscal.—See summary under Dec. 24, 1653.

Jacques Cortelyou is appointed by Stuyvesant and the council schout of the city of New Amsterdam. He feels himself "aggrieved by the instructions given him," and refuses to serve; wherefore the appointment of a schout, the first one who is "independent of the Fiscal's office," is postponed until another person can be chosen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 280. See also May 18. For an account of Cortelyou, see Castello Plan, II: 211-13.

It is "provisionally resolved that extraordinary sessions of the court of burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam are henceforth to be paid for by the person at whose request the session is convened."—Rec. N. Am., I: 220.

The ordinance of July 1, 1652 (q.v.), relative to regulating the purchase of lands from the Indians is renewed.—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 173.

The necessity of devising and considering ways and means for the support of "Civil Government, Divine Service and the Militia" has been urged repeatedly upon the burgomasters and schepens by Stuyvesant and the council, who now again remind them that it must be done "without any further dilatory exceptions," and that an answer must be given by the following Monday, "together with an account of the receipt and expenditure of the Tapsters' Excise" collected by the city.—Rec. N. Am., I: 223-24. The board appoints Paulus Leendertsen vander Grit and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, together with Secretary Jacob Kip, "to prepare the account of the expenditures incurred last year on the public works," and orders the receiver to "briefly make out the balance of the Excise and then communicate the same to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> General together with the Resolution adopted on the letter, and likewise verbally to propose some points."—Ibid., I: 224.

On Aug. 10, they made an estimate of the expenses for "the outer and inner works constructed this and last year for the defence of the country," which amounted "to about sixteen thousand guilders," and offered their quota, which they claimed to be "about three thousand guilders." This proportionate share they engaged to furnish if they were given authority by the council "to lay a tax on real estate" under their jurisdiction, wherever they might find it.—Ibid., I: 224-25.

On Aug. 31, they offered "to support henceforth at the expense of this City of New Amsterdam" the following: One minister, a precentor, who should be at the same time schoolmaster, one

Ferryboats or Scows to carry or convey over strange Passengers or Inhabitants of this Province, or Cattle, Goods or any thing else, his own property excepted," on pain of being penalized. The lessee is also "bound to keep continually his Ferry provided with proper Boats and experienced Men, and maintain on both sides of the River" for public use "a covered Shed or Lodge" as a shelter from inclement weather. The lessee is given "liberty to build for his convenience a flat bottomed Boat to convey across Wagons, Carts, Plows, Cattle, [etc.] and receive" for the service such rates of ferrriage as are now established. The adult fare is six stuivers (12 cents) for single persons, or half that when two or more persons are ferried over, but only "half fare" is charged "for a child under ten years" of age. The lessee may refuse service to anybody who does not pay the ferrriage in advance of transportation. The hours for running the ferry are "on Summer days, only from 5 o'clock in the morning till 8 o'clock in the evening, provided the Windmill [west of Fort Amsterdam] hath not taken in its sail," and in the winter months from seven in the morning until five in the afternoon, but not "in a tempest, or when the Windmill hath lowered [reefed or furled] its sail in consequence of storm or otherwise." The ferrriage rates are not collectable from the director-general, members of his council, marshals, or bailiffs "sent across by the government with a pass from the Secretary." To prevent anybody from pleading "ignorance" with respect to this ordinance, the lessee of the ferry is commanded "to affix a copy of this Ordinance publicly in the Ferry houses on both sides of the Ferry."—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 162-65. See June 1 and Sept. 22, 1654.

Domine Samuel Driusis receives a ground-brief for a piece of land, on the east side of the present Trinity Pl., including the site of the rear part of the Columbia building, and also a part of the bed of Morris St., near Trinity Pl.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 87, 82, Vol. II, and II: 220-21; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 362.

Aneke Jans Bogardus receives a ground-brief for land constituting the "Predicant's Bowery," which is described in the confirmation by Gov. Nicolls, March 24, 1667 (q.v.).

Several secret meetings were held on June 28 and 29 at Gravesend, L. I., by about 50 Englishmen, "among whom were some privateersmen from the North, the rest being English subjects . . . from the villages of Gravesend, Heemstede and Middelburgh." It was rumored that they were bent upon mischief against the Dutch.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV, 278-79. These rumors reached New Amsterdam and caused some of the recalcitrant English residents to "immediately remove and carry away their Movables, Furniture, Beavers and other Valuables to the English Villages," thereby causing increase of uneasiness and spreading disaffection among "the good and well disposed Citizens" of the city and "in the Rural districts also," whilst exposing the weakened state of the city to "Privateers and other threatening enemies" of the province. Stuyvesant and the council therefore issue an edict, which forbids any more removals of goods, on account of "any evil report," to the outlying settlements, under a penalty of the forfeiture of such goods; and those who have repeatedly committed such acts are to lose also their citizenship and be banished from the city within twenty-four hours.—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 166-67; cf. Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 584-85.

The "works of the Fort" of New Amsterdam have "been repaired and restored 2 or 3 times at considerable expense and labor, and every time trod under foot and thrown to the ground by the Hogs, from which the now repaired and newly constructed Works" are said to be "exposed apparently to the same danger." This state of affairs is responsible for an ordinance passed by Stuyvesant and the council, which requires the inhabitants to so secure their goats, sheep, and especially hogs, that they cannot run at large; and, if any are found within 24 hours after the ordinance has been published "on the walls or constructed works of the Fort, either on the outer or interior works," they are to be impounded.—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 170.

Stuyvesant and the council are informed that reports are being spread again by "some of the Magistrates of Gravesend" charging a plot by the Dutch to plunder and kill off the Englishmen by the aid of some Frenchmen and Indians hired for the purpose. Similar reports had precipitated a meeting of all the inhabitants in June, at Middelburgh, where reprisals had been proposed against the French and Dutch.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 279. The allegation is declared to be false and propagated largely by English refugees 1654 dogwhipper or beadle, a schout, two burgomasters, five schepens, Aug. a secretary, a court messenger, and such others as they deemed necessary. They also offered to devise "some small subsidies," in case the revenue proved insufficient.—Ibid., I: 232-33. They opposed supporting the military, as a concern not of the city alone, but of the country in general.—Ibid., I: 233.

On Aug. 27, Vander Grift and Van Corlandt met Stuyvesant and the council on invitation, and were informed that the council were intending, for the benefit of the city, "to impose a tax of one per cent on all real estate." This was along the lines submitted by the city fathers on the 10th, and, therefore, the burgomasters and schepens resolved, on the 31st, "to levy the one per cent on all real estate" within their jurisdiction. They said they hoped no objection would be made by Stuyvesant and the council to their action.—Ibid., I: 233-34. A full reply was made by Stuyvesant and the council, on Sept. 16, which contained a reasonable concession in connection with the real estate tax levy, but in which the city fathers were severely castigated for "deceitfully and perversely" misleading the director-general and council in not fulfilling their promises and agreements, and for misapplication of the excise revenues. They were told that the excise revenue would be taken away from the city and be let to the highest bidder, so that the salaries of the clergymen could be paid, and that their memorial and the council's answer would be sent to the directors in Holland for disposal.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 291-94. Notwithstanding this letter to them of Sept. 16, the burgomasters and schepens memorialized the directors at Amsterdam, on Sept. 22, and claimed, what must have been an untruth, that they had not yet received an answer from Stuyvesant and the council to their memorial of Aug. 31.—Rec. N. Am., I: 246-47. Meanwhile, Stuyvesant and the council retaliated by advertising the lease of the tapsters' excise of the city to the highest bidder, and against this the city fathers protested, on Nov. 23, averring that this revenue was theirs by authority of the directors at Amsterdam.—Ibid., 266-67; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 305-6.

Secretary Van Tienhoven delivers to the burgomasters and schepens a "printed placard about building on the lots" in New Amsterdam, and another "Placard about buying and taking possession of lands without the knowledge of the Director-General and Council, requesting, that they may be published by the Burgomasters and Schepens," which they do this same day, "in front of the City Hall after the ringing of the Bell."—Rec. N. Am., I: 222-23.

An elaborate ordinance is passed by Stuyvesant and the council for the regulation of the newly-established weigh-house at New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 174-77. See May 4.

Adriaen Vincent, having petitioned the burgomasters and schepens, is granted "permission to retail brandy and other strong liquors out of doors by the large and small measure . . . on condition that he pay the proper Tapsters' Excise."—Rec. N. Am., I: 225. His tavern was at the north-east corner of the present Broad and South William Streets, then, however, respectively the Heere Gracht and the Slyck Steegh. See Castello Plan, II: 293-94, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981.

This is the day appointed for general thanksgiving for the peace between England and Holland.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 139. The proclamation thereof was published by the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, on the 4th, "in front of the City Hall after ringing of the Bell."—Rec. N. Am., I: 223.

Stuyvesant and the council resolve to resume the tavern excise of the city for the company, because the proceeds have been misapplied by the burgomasters and schepens during their control thereof.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 284.

An ordinance for regulating the duties of the provost-marshal or jailer is passed by Stuyvesant and the council. This official is declared to be a subordinate of the director-general and council and under the immediate control of the fiscal. The ordinance provides that for arrests he is to receive specified fees and for minor offences certain fines, whether the prisoners are from the military or the commonalty. His residence is "in Fort New Amsterdam," where he is provided with the keys, locks, and chains of the prison, of which he is obliged to take good care, and "to lock up and feed the Prisoners in the manner . . . ordered by the Fiscal." He is required to visit the prisoners in the morning and evening, "and take particular care that no file, rope, ironwork or anything sharp" is left with any of them. Other duties also are prescribed for him.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 177-79. On Aug. 23, Arent Jansen, of Vlaringen, was appointed and qualified for the post.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 140. See also Jan. 25, 1656.

Jacob Barsimson, who sailed from Amsterdam in the "Pereboom" (Peartree) on July 8, bearing a licent brief (passport) from the W. I. Co., arrives at New Amsterdam, being the first Jew of record to settle in New Netherland.—Oppenheim, Early History of Jews in New York, 3, 52; Cal. MSS., VIII: 439-41.

The sheet-piling which was constructed at the graft or canal (present Broad Street) by Aukken Jansen and Christiaan Barentsen, carpenters having "again fallen down," due to "the heavy rain and water," the burgomasters and schepens contract with them "for reconstructing it and bringing it again into good condition" for the sum of 32 guilders, and agree to furnish them "two good diggers."—Rec. N. Am., I: 231. This is the earliest reference to the formalizing of the Graft.

Jan Valenty is granted by the burgomasters and schepens permission to tap, provided he pays the proper excise and no objection is made by Stuyvesant, "one of whose servants he is."—Rec. N. Am., I: 231.

On June 2, Stuyvesant and the council proposed an additional provincial revenue for the support of government, by a tax upon real estate and cattle.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 270. This proposal is now taken up anew and enacted into an ordinance. The collection of "the tenths" being found impracticable, costing almost as much to gather as the receipts therefrom, it is decided "not to demand and collect the tenth for some years to come, until the population shall have increased, levying instead a tax on cattle and land."—Ibid., XIV: 287-88. Every morgen of land owned by anyone by a patent is to be taxed 20 stuivers once a year; upon every head of horned cattle, if above three years old—goats and sheep excepted—a tax of 20 stuivers is fixed; and on houses and lots granted for building purposes in New Amsterdam, Beverwyck, "the neighborhood of The Ferry and elsewhere," a tax of "the hundredth penny of the real value" is to be "paid at the General office" of the company in New Amsterdam. Two tax appraisers are to be chosen from the respective courts of the city and villages, to act with a commissioner from the supreme court, to fix upon the valuation and attend to the disposal of vacant lots upon which the present owners have neglected to build.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 180-81.

Another ordinance is passed by the director-general and council against selling strong drink to Indians.—Laws & Ord. of New Neth., 182. For summary of such laws, see June 18, 1643.

Jan Montfort receives a ground-brief for a lot now at the north-east corner of Broad and Beaver Sts.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 393.

The burgomasters and schepens vote that each member of their board shall draw upon the receipts from the excise for 100 florins, in part payment of their several salaries, and order the secretary to make such payments.—Rec. N. Am., I: 236. They drew again upon this fund, on Dec. 7.—Ibid., I: 270.

Early this month, 23 Jews, adults and children, arrive at New Amsterdam on the ship "St. Charles," of which Jacques de la Motthe is master. This is the first party of Jews to arrive here. The master of the ship brought an action in the city court, on Sept. 7, for "payment of the freight and board of the Jews whom he brought here from Cape St. Antony according to agreement and contract," for which each was held bound in solidum. This case resulted in the sale of their goods and chattels until the debt was paid.—Rec. N. Am., I: 240, 241, 244, 249, 252. Whether the St. Antony from whence they came was at Recife (Pernambuco) or near Bahia, Brazil, it is not possible to determine; but the probabilities strongly favour the former. Recife capitulated to the Portuguese in January of this year. The Jews in several ships departed for Holland soon thereafter. One of these ships was attacked by a Spanish pirate and the Jews were rescued and conveyed to "New Holland" by a French privateer. The records show that the "St. Charles" was a frigate, mounting five iron guns. It was owned by Capt. Simon Felle, a native of France; the name of its master was French, and the contract made with the Jews was written in the French language.—Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 1654-1664 (1909), 4, 37-49, 68-70, giving revised translations of Dutch documents and other hitherto undeveloped evidence.

An ordinance of Aug. 28, which prohibited the furnishing of intoxicating liquors to Indians, and provided for the arrest and imprisonment of all drunken Indians, is published and affixed at 1654 the city hall of New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 182-84; Oct.

St. 7 Rec. N. Am., I: 240-41. 5

The sworn beer and wine carriers present a written petition to the burgomasters and schepens, in which they complain that others, to their injury, are disposing of wines brought in by ships. Consideration is deferred until next court day, and meanwhile Stuyvesant is to be spoken to in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., I: 240.

Hans Stein petitions the burgomasters and schepens for leave to tap a small quantity of brandy by the small measure. This is granted, on payment of the proper excise.—Rec. N. Am., I: 240. In March, 1656, he was charged by the schout with infractions of the Sunday ordinance, and with permitting "fighting in his house," among his guests. He denied the brawl, and said he had tapped on Sunday only to those who came to his place "to eat their usual Sunday meal."—Ibid., II: 53.

14 Maryn de Voos and John (or Jean) Perie request permission of the burgomasters and schepens to sell wine and beer by the small measure. Granted, on payment of the proper excise, and their comporting themselves like others.—Rec. N. Am., I: 243.

The burgomasters and schepens allow the following account: "Item—fl. 58 to Jah. Pieter Verbrugge to pay for beer at the bonfire for the victory, according to order."—Rec. N. Am., I: 243. Evidently, this was the celebration of the treaty of peace between England and Holland.—See April 5, 1654.

16 Arent van Hattem, the first president of the board of burgomasters and schepens of the city of New Amsterdam, resigns his office and returns to Holland.—Rec. N. Am., I: 244-45.

22 The burgomasters and schepens write to the directors at Amsterdam, making inquiry, among other things, as follows: "What do your Lordships understand regarding the Ferry between this City New Amsterdam and Breuckelen—is it granted to this city or Not?"—Rec. N. Am., I: 246. See July 1, 1654; Sept. 19, 1658.

See A. A Swedish ship, the "Golden Shark," bound for the South River, enters Sandy Hook Bay by mistake, and anchors behind Staten Island. Discovering his error, the captain sends a boat up to Manhattan for a pilot. Stuyvesant, on account of the capture of Fort Casimir by the Swedes, orders the boat's crew to the guard-house. On Sept. 25, he sent soldiers to seize the ship, and bring the factor a prisoner to Fort Amsterdam.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 594, and authorities there cited.

23 Niciasus de Sille writes to A. de Mist Uytgen Haghe, "from America, in New Amsterdam in New Netherland, on the island of Manahans, the 23d of September, my birthday" (he was born in 1610), and says: "I wish that you were here with me. I should look you in my cellar until you had finished sulking. What have I done to you that your mind should be filled with wrath so long? If my sudden departure [from Holland] is the cause of it, I can not help it, for after I had taken the oath [as first councillor for New Netherland] on Thursday, I had to go on board the following Saturday. God be praised and thanked, we arrived here safely and all in good health, as you no doubt have learned from my letter sent to Mr. Beeckerken [see Aug. 23, 1653]. This country is good and healthful, for as yet there is neither a doctor nor an apothecary, and the people are seldom sick. We have excellent rivers, game and fish, yes, even grain and cattle enough to feed us. They brew good beer here, but the wine still comes from the fatherland, although there are enterprising people here who plant vineyards. Farmers are needed here to turn the woods into plowed land, and there is a lack of women, for it is a fruitful land for everything. The increase of cattle and people, but mostly of children and pigs, proceeds merrily; in fine, I shall not go back to Holland, but intend to remain here for the rest of my life.

"Since my arrival no ships have arrived, except [one] yesterday, so that a mutse [fourth of a gill] of brandy costs twelve stuivers [24 cents]. The Frenchman and Spaniard were driven away, but now show up again and bring recruits to the Brandenburger [reference to various wines]. We have here the same fruits and vegetables as in Holland, for this country is almost like Holland, only of melons, watermelons, peaches and sweet and sour cherries there is an abundance. I can not praise this country enough.

"My children begin to speak the language of the savages, and to trade with them." The remainder of the long letter relates to his financial troubles, principally with a nursemaid to his children, in Holland.—Quarterly Journal of N. Y. State Hist. Ass'n., I: 104, ff., translated by A. J. F. van Laer. See also Aug. 23, 1653; and May 23, 1654.

Jan Vingé appears at the court of burgomasters and schepens and complains "of the damage he sustained by the erection of the city walls;" that his land lay open and the cattle were destroying his planted crops. He requests that the land be surveyed, and that the damage, with the land taken away, be paid for. He is referred to Stuyvesant to arrange the matter with him.—Rec. N. Am., I: 250. On Nov. 23, Stuyvesant and the council issued an order that a new fence be erected for Vingé at public expense.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 143.

Pieter Lucaessen, for himself and partners, sells to Petrus Stuyvesant "the little ship called Abraham's Sacrifice, in length from stem to stern 63 feet, in width 19 feet, hull 9 feet, with standing and running rigging, sails, cordage, anchors, cables, and furthermore, whatever appears by inventory, good and bad as the above named ship now lies and can be seen, to the said Hon<sup>ble</sup> Gen[er]al's account of the Directors" of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. The transaction is for 400 beavers, "and in addition the payment of half the monthly wages earned" during two and one half months, "amounting in all for the entire . . . ship's crew, to fl. 225 net." In the inventory of things sold with the ship are "2 prince's flags," "2 iron 3 pounders," some halls, muskets, and gunner's powder-horns.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 120 (N. Y. State Library).

Cornelis van Tienhoven, as schout, informs the court of burgomasters and schepens that he has found "drinking clubs [parties], on divers nights at the house of Jan Peck [Peek], with dancing and jumping and entertainment of disorderly people; also tapping during Preaching, and that there was great noise made by drunkards," especially the last Sunday, "in this house, so that he was obliged to remove one to jail in a cart, which was a most scandalous affair." The schout demanded annulment of Peck's license and a fine, to which the court agreed on the 26th. By Nov. 2, Peck, by petition to the court, sought leave to tap again. On Nov. 9, the court warned him to behave himself, and, in consideration of his being "an old Burger," and being "burthened with a houseful of children and more besides," restored to him his tavern privileges. But Peck was in the city court again, under charges by the provost-marshal, in December, and, on Jan. 26, 1655, was ordered by the provincial council not to sell any liquor in future without a permit.—Rec. N. Am., I: 255-56, 259, 261, 264, 272; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 145.

Jan Swan receives a ground-brief for a lot now in the interior of the block bounded by Morris and Greenwich Sts., Broadway and Battery Pl., near the corner of Morris and Greenwich Sts.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and No. 361.

Daniel Litschoe's tavern (site of present No. 71 Wall St.) is spoken of as "the best and most principal tavern of a sergeant of the trainbands, Daniel Litschoe."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 81. See March 16, 1648; and March 11, 1661.

The "Waal" or bank of the East River in front of the city hall (Pearl St. and Counties Alley) having been more or less washed away by the high water and heavy rain, "so that the city hall may be in danger, the burgomasters and schepens decide to contract "at the earliest opportunity" for having it "properly protected with sheet-piles," and for this purpose authorize Paulus Leendertsen vanter Grift and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt to make an agreement with carpenters according to their best judgment.—Rec. N. Am., I: 261. A few days later (9th), the city court considered a petition of Sibout Claessen, a carpenter, in which he complained that the sheet-piling before his lot, running through from "Hoogh Straet" (Stone St.) to the shore of the East River (now Pearl St.), between the graft and the city hall, had "fallen down through the last high water," and that his abutting neighbours had left "their lots unsecured." He claimed that he should not be obliged, alone, "to repair the same at considerable expense," and requested an order "that the gardens from the corner of the Ditch [canal, now Broad St.] to the City Hall, be all equally planked up." The court considered the request "reasonable," and ordered "that each one" should "plank up (beschoeyen) in front of his lot from the City Hall to the corner of the Ditch (Graft) including the City Hall building;" failing therein, the work was to be done by the city "at the expense of the lots . . . in default."—Ibid., I: 264; see also March 13, 1656. Sibout Claessen contracted with Schepen Vander Grift, of the aforementioned committee, "to construct sheet piling (Schoeing) before the City Hall."

A planking and severe winter soon ensued, which, as Claessen said on Feb. 22, following, prevented him from performing the work.

- 1654 He asked the court whether they still persisted in their original resolution, or desired "a change in the work;" also whether they would "deliver the materials" as soon as "the plan is made." The court ordered procedure "according to contract, and undertook that the plan and necessary materials" should be delivered to him.—Ibid., I: 287-88. On the following day, the provincial council took a hand and ordered the repair of the sheet-piling of the city hall, as well as the appointment of a committee of the council to find out how far the commonalty were disposed to assist in repairing the sheet-piling on the bank of the East River.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 146.
- Nov. 2 On March 1, the burgomasters and schepens resolved, in recognition of the generosity of the directors at Amsterdam in granting the city hall to the city, that "early measures must be taken to repair and protect the said house with sheet piles (Schoeyinge)."—Rec. N. Am., I: 291-92. At the same time (Feb. 22, 1655) that the city court had considered Claessen's petition, they considered also one from Daniel Litscho, who wanted to "erect a wharf before his door on the Strand," just outside of the city gate, at the present Wall and Pearl Sts. He had also requested "that the other neighbours be ordered to do the same." But as the object of his petition lay outside the city's gate, it was referred "to the Supreme Council."—Ibid., I: 288. However, this improvement seems to have been included in the work ordered by the city a year later (see Feb. 1, 1656), and known to have been completed before Sept. 25, 1656.—Ibid., II: 170.
- 9 Stuyvesant and the council resolve "to hire the house of Mr. [Isaac] Allerton and lodge there the children sent over by the Poormasters [of Amsterdam] and to direct Peter Lefevre, who has hired the same house, not to move into it for this and other weighty reasons."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 296.
- 16 At a meeting "of the Burgers' Court Martial in the City Hall," on the 10th of this month, the burgomasters and schepens, with the approbation of Stuyvesant, proposed the establishment of "a Rattle Watch [Night Patrol] of 4 to 6 men," to guard the city by night, and that all persons who desired "to undertake the same" should be on hand "on Monday next, the 16th Novemb, about 11 o'clock, at the City Hall," where the conditions could be heard. On the appointed day, "the rules for the Rattle Watch were made." Only three members of the board were present, and they "waited until the appointed time" (11 A.M.), but nobody came to take up the night watch, so "the meeting adjourned without anything having been done."—Rec. N. Am., I: 265. The watch was successfully established on Oct. 4, 1658 (q. v.).
- 23 Warnar Wessels presents a petition to the court of burgomasters and schepens, in which he asks leave "to sell wine and beer by the small measure, on paying the proper excise." The request is denied, because "neither Brewers nor Distillers can tap, according to the custom of this City, and the placards of the Noble Director General and Supreme Council."—Rec. N. Am., I: 266. See Castello Plan, II: 258. See also Nov. 22, 1656.
- 25 The provincial council resolves as follows: "Whereas there are no bidders come at present, the Tavernkeepers' Excise on beer and wines to be consumed in this City [New Amsterdam] during the next year should be let publicly to the highest bidder on next Monday at the house of Sergeant Daniel Litschoe [Pearl and Wall St.] and this is to be made public by handbills."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 306.
- " It is resolved by the provincial council "to let publicly at the Ferry at the first opportunity to the highest bidder the excise on wines and beer in the village of Breuckjellen, Midwout, Amersfoort and adjacent places."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 306.
- 30 "Albert Pietersen, Trumpetter," requests permission from the burgomasters and schepens "to sell beer and wine by the small measure, on payment of the proper excise," which is granted to him.—Rec. N. Am., I: 269. His tavern stood at the present Nos. 78 and 80 Broad St., the site of the Popham building. See Castello Plan, II: 254, 289.
- Dec. 1 Before the provincial secretary, Cornelis van Ruyven, appears "the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Fiscal Cornelis van Tienhoven," making a declaration that he, "on behalf of the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Petrus Stuyvesant director general, and the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Council of New Netherland," has farmed "to Warnar Wessels from Dordrecht, the excise on Wine and Beer which will be consumed by the tapsters and tavernkeepers within the jurisdiction of this City New Amsterdam below the Fresh Water in a year from date," Wessels agreeing to the following conditions: "He, Warnar Wessels, shall pay for the aforesaid farming for one year from date, 2,550 guilders, "in good current pay; one fourth part of the said rent quarterly." Jacobus Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven enters himself as bail for Cornelis Hendricksen from Dordrecht, who was entered as security for Wessels in the transaction. On Dec. 9, 1655, Wessels also had the farming privileges for beer and wines consumed by tavernkeepers and tapsters on the west end of Long Island.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 126 (N. Y. State Library).
- " William Bredebenet receives a ground-brief for a lot lying mostly in the present bed of New St., running northward from Beaver St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 241; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II and II: 371.
- 8 Stuyvesant informs the council and the burgomasters and schepens, at a joint meeting in Fort Amsterdam, of "the necessity of his voyage to Curaçao." He proposes that the city court be augmented to its full quota, which results in the selection of Allard Anthony as a burgomaster and Johannes Nevius as a schepen, who take the oath of office.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 309; Rec. N. Am., I: 271.
- " Stuyvesant delivers to Martin Creigier, president of the board of burgomasters and schepens, "the painted coat of arms of the City of New-Amsterdam and the seal, cut in silver, sent by the Noble Lords-Directors in the ship De Perreboom" (Peartree).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 309. See Frontispieces, Vol. IV and Vol. V.
- 14 The burgomasters and schepens vote a recess from ordinary sessions of the court until three weeks after Christmas, "as the winter and holidays are at hand."—Rec. N. Am., I: 274.
- 16 This is the day appointed for a complimentary repast to Stuyvesant. As he was about to depart to Curaçao, the burgomasters and schepens, on the 12th, resolved unanimously to "compliment him, before he take his gallant voyage," and that "for this purpose" there should be provided "a gay repast on next Wednesday noon [Dec. 16], at the City Hall, in the Council Chamber." A list was made out "of what was required . . . and what was considered necessary was ordered."—Rec. N. Am., I: 271. See Dec. 24.
- 17 By resolution of Stuyvesant and the council, Andries Hudde is given a permit to act as surveyor.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 144. A few days later, he petitioned for leave to keep a school at New Amsterdam, but this request was referred to the minister and consistency by the council, on Dec. 31 (q. v.).—Ibid.
- " Vacancies having occurred in the list of officers of the burgher companies of New Amsterdam, they are filled as follows: Lieut. Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift is appointed captain "in the Company under the blue flag," Daniel Litschoe is advanced from sergeant to lieutenant, and Cornelis Jacobson Steenwyck is named as ensign.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 310.
- 24 Stuyvesant sails with three ships from New Amsterdam on Christmas eve for Curaçao, to establish trade in the West Indies.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 596-97, 603. He had chartered the "Perreboom" (Peartree), on the 17th, and commissioned, on the 22d, Pieter Luccassen to command the ship "Abraham's Sacrifice," and Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift to command the ship "Dolphin."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 58, 144. After an absence of nearly seven months, he returned to New Amsterdam, in July, 1655 (Brodhead, op. cit., I: 603), and, on July 14, the council made record that he had submitted to them a report of his transactions in Curaçao and the Caribbean Islands, which report they ordered to be deposited in the office of the provincial secretary.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 150.
- 31 One of the first ordinances proclaimed during the administration of Stuyvesant was an edict against destroying or stealing fences, fruits, etc. from the farms, orchards, or gardens in the province (see July 1, 1647). Through repeated renewals and postings, this law was generally observed; but now (1654) complaints are made that burghers and farmers are being "daily robbed of Clapboards, Palisades, Posts, Rails, and other fencing stuff." The earlier penalty had been a fine of 100 guilders, besides arbitrary punishment. The new law now enacted, in midwinter, provides that corporal punishment be inflicted, "without mercy or favor," on any one who is found guilty.—Laws & Ordin. N. Neth., 185-86. That this promised punishment did not act as a deterrent is evidenced by the daily complaints that were made in the following autumn, when Stuyvesant and the council referred to the matter in another ordinance, of Oct. 9, 1655 (q. v.), which provided even severer penalties—branding and whipping for the first offense,

1654 and for the second violation the guilty one was to be "punished Dec. with the halter until Death ensue." To make the capture of 31 offenders easier, a reward was offered to informers, with a promise that their names would be concealed.—Ibid., 193-95. This last-named ordinance was renewed on Dec. 30, 1658 (ibid., 365), as it was also on Jan. 7, 1659 (Rec. N. Am., I: 42-43).

" Andries Hudde petitions the Dutch council for a license to keep a school in New Amsterdam. The petition is referred to the minister and consistory.—Cal. Dutch MSS., 144 (Albany). Pratt, Annals of Pub. Education in N. Y. State, 19, ascribes this petition to Dec. 31, 1665, an obviously impossible date. Hudde had been, for years, a prominent figure in the province; he was appointed, on Oct. 12, 1645, to be commissary at Fort Nassau, on the South River, a position he was still occupying four years later.—Cal.
Dutch MSS., 51, 98. Prof. Kilpatrick considers this request for a license unusually interesting, because it was referred to the minister and consistory. "When we take into account," he says, "the ecclesiastical hatred of heretical teachers common in Holland, and Stuyvesant's fanatical zeal against heretical sects, we are inclined to wonder whether suspicion may not have rested on Hudde's orthodoxy. . . . That Hudde should have wished to teach is strange considering his many business concerns."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 113. There is no record of his petition being granted.

— In this year the first ferry-house was built on the Brooklyn side of the East River.—See Castello Plan, I: 245.

18 — Cornelis van Tienhoven, the provincial secretary, informs the burgomasters and schepens that the provincial council intend to appoint Dirck van Schelluyne as "Concierge" (high constable, baillif, or city marshal), and asks if they have anything against it.—Rec. N. Am., I: 278. The new officer received his appointment on Feb. 6 from the council, with the consent of the city court.
His commission was signed by Secretary Van Tienhoven, and had
"on one side" thereof "the Provincial Seal, impressed on red Wax." His duties were "the maintenance of justice and the execution of judgments" that were rendered either by the council or the city court in civil cases. Stuyvesant was absent on his journey to Curaçao when the appointment was made, but knew of the proposal on Dec. 17, a week before his departure.—Ibid., I: 282-83.

Schelluyne's instructions are in ibid., I: 283-85; cf. also Cal.

19 Certain persons having cut up and burned a number of the city's palisades, on account of cold weather, are let off by Stuyvesant and the council on condition that they cut and haul 100 palisades, in lieu of those they burned.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 145.

25 — On this day, and again on Feb. 1, the burgomasters and schepens ordered certain public auctions "in front of the City Hall."
This shows the place where these public sales were habitually held.

28 — Jacob Steendam, the poet of New Netherland, is summoned to the city court for having erected his house, without the consent of the fence viewers or city surveyors, wholly out of the line of the street (Hoogh Street, now Stone St.).—Rec. N. Am., I: 275-76.
The house was on the lot now 26 Stone St. Its rear was the present 59 and 61 Pearl St.

Feb. — The provincial council having appointed a new board of burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam on Jan. 31, its members now take their oath of office. The burgomasters are Allard Anthony and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, and the schepens Johannes Nevius, Johannes de Peyster, Johannes Pietersen van Brugge, Jacob Strycker, and Jan Vinje (Jean Vige). They took their seats on Feb. 8.—Rec. N. Am., I: 281-82, 285; Cal. Hist. MSS., and traffic in New Amsterdam.—Oppenheim, Early Hist. of the

" — The burgomasters and schepens vote to meet on the next day with the council "for the purpose of agreeing on something relative to the Fire Inspectors, chimneys, and the banks of the river" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., I: 288-89; cf. Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 146.

" — Cornelis van Tienhoven informs the court of burgomasters and schepens "how Gysbert van Imbroeck has by petition requested the Supreme Councillors for permission to make a lottery of a certain quantity of Bibles, Testaments and other books according to catalogue, that two be appointed to value the same, and to select something for the Poor therefrom; and asked if Burgomasters and Schepens had any thing to say against it, as it was a matter, which concerns the Commonalty." The burgomasters and schepens considered the plan advantageous and resolved that it be proceeded with.—Rec. N. Am., I: 288. On March 1, the board was informed that the council had given its approbation to the "book-lottery . . . and that the books be accordingly valued at one hundred [%] of the Invoice, whereof the poor should receive one third including expenses; the surplus to be for petition-er." Johannes la Montague was chosen to represent the council, and the burgomasters and schepens selected by plurality vote Allard Anthony and Johannes Nevius as commissioners to conduct the said lottery.—Ibid., I: 291; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147. This is the earliest recorded lottery held in the city.

" — Cornelis van Tienhoven, the schout or sheriff, informs the burgomasters and schepens that "some of the Company's Soldiers and Servants" will seek permission to tap beer, etc., which he opposes because "many Soldiers and Servants" will be thereby "led into debauchery" and "many irregularities" will occur.
The same day the board refuses a permit to a soldier to tap.—Rec.
N. Am., I: 286-87, 288.

" — Caspar Steynmets is granted by the burgomasters and schepens permission "to tap beer and wine, for the accomodation of the burghery and strangers."—Rec. N. Am., I: 287.

23 — The council grants a request of the burgomasters of New Amsterdam that they be allowed "to demand for a Deed executed before them for Houses and Lots" situate within the city's jurisdiction, one heaver or eight guilders, to be applied as follows:
Three guilders for the seal; one and one half guilders for two schepens who sign the deed; three and one half guilders as a fee for the clerk.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 189.

" — Sieur Cornelis Schut, a wealthy Amsterdam merchant, is at present residing in New Amsterdam next door to the tavern of Michiel Tadens (11 Pearl St., where a part of the Maritime bldg. covers the site). He is charged by the farmers of the excise with selling liquor without a permit, and at the same time they ask

- 1655 for an ordinance for the regulation of their business.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 146. See Castello Plan, II: 272.
- 19 Mar. Cornelis van Tienhoven, as schout, appears in the court of burgomasters and schepens against "Abram de la Sina" (Abraham de Lucena), a Jew, charging him with keeping his store in New Amsterdam open during sermon, and also with selling by retail. He requests that De Lucena be deprived of his trade and be fined 600 guilders. The case is put over, and, apparently, there was no execution in either case.—Rec. N. Am., I: 291.—See Oppenheim's Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 6 (note), 7, 73. This is the first case on record of a Jew in New Netherland being prosecuted for breaking a Sunday ordinance. At this meeting, the burgomasters decided that a resolution requiring the Jews who arrived in September, 1654, to depart forthwith should take its course. No further action was taken.—Ibid., 5-7.
- " The city hall is encumbered "by a quantity of salt deposited therein by Cornelis Schut," as well as by other goods and lodgers. Therefore, the burgomasters and schepens order Schut "to provide himself with a store-house for his salt," and the lodgers to find other quarters, "so that the City Hall be not wholly spoiled by the salt, nor occupied by others."—Rec. N. Am., I: 292. Schut delayed his removal of the salt, and was warned by the board on April 12 that they would remove it at his expense.—Ibid., I: 304. On April 19, he petitioned for more time, but was referred to the resolution of the 12th.—Ibid., I: 308. He was again warned by the board through the court messenger, on Aug. 16, "without further delay" to obey the former orders promptly.—Ibid., I: 340. Schut requested, on the 23d, "a little time to remove his salt from the City Hall," and he was once more referred to the former orders and given three days in which to comply.—Ibid., I: 348.
- " Guert Coerten petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission to tap, but, for the time being, is refused.—Rec. N. Am., I: 292. On the 8th, he renewed his request and was referred to the former decision thereon.—Ibid., I: 295.
- " Jan Rutgersen petitions the burgomasters and schepens for leave "to sell beer by the pot in the City Hall where the little sail loft was given him to dwell in." The board grants him permission "to lodge in the City Hall for one month, as his house was burnt down in the winter, at the expiration of which time petitioner shall depart; meanwhile he can look out for another dwelling," but the rest of the petition is denied.—Rec. N. Am., I: 292. On April 19, he requests, by another petition, that, "inasmuch as he is sorely impoverished by the fire, and an old inhabitant, he may have leave to sell, with others, a few trifles and a can of beer and wine, and to receive lodgers," which is granted.—Ibid., I: 308. See also Castello Plan, II: 296; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980, for his tavern on the Heere Gracht, now No. 69 Broad St.
- 2 The provincial council issues an order on the application of the burgomasters and schepens for a transfer to them of the building formerly the city tavern ("Stads Herbergh"), and for two years used as the city hall ("Stad Huys"), which now passes wholly under the city's jurisdiction.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147; Rec. N. Am., I: 291. This building had been granted to the city by the directors at Amsterdam, on May 18, 1654 (q.v.).—N. Y. Cal. Docs., XIV: 262; Rec. N. Am., I: 219.
- " The two burgomasters visit the meeting of the council and suggest "how necessary it was, that proper attention and care should be paid to the matter of survey." One of the fence viewers, Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, having gone to Curaçao with Stuyvesant, leaving Van Tienhoven as the only remaining fence viewer, the burgomasters, therefore, request that "another fit person, conversant with surveying," be adjointed to Van Tienhoven, "in place of the late Fence Viewer, Lubbertus van Dinslagen." The council finally designate Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven for the place.—Rec. N. Am., I: 295; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147.
- 15 Ten residents on the "Straet van de Graft," or street from the ditch (Brouwer or Brewers', later Stone Street, running from Whitehall to Broad St.), petition the burgomasters and schepens, saying that they have found "by daily experience that the said street" is "becoming more and more unfit for public use;" therefore, they are inclined, for their "own accommodation and the public good, ornament and welfare" of the city, "to pave the said street with round stone [cobble] on the first favorable opportunity." They propose that this work be authorized and executed by the city, and request "permission and such directions in the premises as to surveys, levels, and drains, etc." as the board considers best for the community. The petitioners pledge themselves "to furnish the stone, the raising and lowering necessary thereto, each to the extent of his house and lot, and further to follow the general rule relative to paving and expenses," and ask that others, if unwilling, shall be constrained to do likewise, "so that if the work be begun, it may be completed." The board grants the request of the petitioners and orders the fence viewers (city surveyors) to cooperate with them "soon, so that the necessary work can go on. Meanwhile, the property owners are "to prepare all the materials necessary thereto."—Rec. N. Am., I: 300-1. This work was not executed, however, before the year 1658 (see Jan. 24, 1658), and then by the city by a pro rata assessment on the abutting owners.—Ibid., II: 309-10; VII: 167. It has often been claimed that this was the first street paved in New Amsterdam. That view is untenable. The record itself refers to "the general rule relative to paving and expenses," as a system in vogue and understood by the petitioners. See, however, Oct. 25.
- 18 Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, writing to the classis of Amsterdam about the arrival of Jews at New Amsterdam (see Sept. 22, 1654), says: "For as we have here Papists, Mennonites and Lutherans among the Dutch; also many Puritans or Independents, and many Atheists and various other servants of Baal among the English under this Government, who conceal themselves under the name of Christians; it would create a still greater confusion, if the obstinate and immovable Jews came to settle here."—Eccles. Rec., I: 335-36.
- 22 The burghers court-martial of the city asks the burgomasters and schepens to procure two drums, one for each of the burgher companies; this is referred to the council.—Rec. N. Am., I: 302. On May 17, the burgomasters and schepens grant the purchase of the drums, "at the least possible cost, which shall be paid for out of the City's funds."—Ibid., I: 314. See also Addenda.
- " Jan Paulusen Jacquet petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission "to sell drink out of his house by the pot with other trifles." Granted.—Rec. N. Am., I: 301-2.
- 23 Harmanus van Hobooken is appointed by the council, with the consent of the consistory of the church at New Amsterdam, "as Chorister and Schoolmaster" of the city, "at thirty-five guilders [$14.] per month, and one hundred guilders [$40.] extra, per year, for expenses." He succeeds Willem Vestius (see Oct. 1649).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147, trans. in Dunshee, Hist. of the School of the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church in the City of N. Y., 23. He was mentioned as a petitioner, on Feb. 21, 1656, to the burgomasters and schepens, who said they would consider his case after he had informed them of "what he is allowed for each child per quarter."—Rec. N. Am., II: 39. Some months later (Nov. 4), he asked the city court to "be pleased to grant him the hall and the side room [of the city hall] for the use of the school and as a dwelling," because he did "not know how to manage for the proper accommodation of the children during the winter," as they required "a place adapted for fire to be warmed, for which their present tenement" was "wholly unfit." Moreover, he said he was "burthened with a wife and children," needed quarters for them, and could not "pay so heavy a rent as a whole house" cost. The court did not allow him the use of "the hall and little room" in the city hall, because they were "not at present in repair," and were "required for other purposes." Yet, as the youth were "quite numerous," he was granted 100 guilders allowance for house rent "for a school."—Ibid., II: 219-20. On Jan. 16, 1660 (q.v.), he petitioned the burgomasters for "an allowance from the City," as he was "behind hand with the building of the School [i. e., rent, not construction, as some have believed], and for divers other reasons set forth in the petition." They allowed him "his current year's salary," to be paid "at a more convenient season" on their order upon the treasurer, and abolished his allowance thenceforth.—Ibid., VII: 244. His services ended when Evert Pietersen was commissioned to replace him, on May 2, 1661. On Oct. 27, he was granted his request for other employment, and was engaged as "Adelborst" (cadet) under the company; he was also allowed to serve as schoolmaster and clerk on Stuyvesant's bowery, when not needed in the company's service as "Adelborst."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 231, trans. in Dunshee, op. cit., 29-30; ibid., 295. On April 28, 1663, he was referred to as "Deacon at the bowery" of Stuyvesant.—Min. of Orphanmasters Court, II: 44.

1655 Fire-wardens were created, and fire regulations made, by the
Apr. 23, 1648 (q.v.)—Lees & Ord. N. Neth., 82-83, 344. This was an act of Stuyvesant and the council before the 13 organization of an independent city government. Now, however, the burgomasters and schepens make nominations for fire-wardens of the city, from which the supreme council designates three,
namely, Hendrick Kip, Govert Loockermans, and Jan Paulusen Jacquet—Rec. N. Am., I: 304; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 148.
" Joannes de Decker, having petitioned the council for employment, is appointed notary public. At the same time, Pieter vander See A. Linde is appointed tobacco inspector.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 15 147. The city court enacts an ordinance for governing the time of 16 attendance of the schout, burgomasters, schepens, and secretary, "both in Ordinary and Extraordinary Sessions,"—namely, "to appear, on notification by the Court Messenger, at all ordinary sessions in the City Hall precisely at 9 o'clock on the ringing of the bell or at extraordinary sessions at the hour appointed." Those who arrive half an hour after the ringing of the bell or the time appointed, when the court messenger shall turn a sand box, or hour glass, are to be fined six stuivers; if an hour late, twelve stuivers, and if wholly absent, or arriving after the court has adjoined, forty stuivers for each time, unless a good excuse is given,

"such as sickness, being from home, to wit at Fort Orange, at the South or North." These fines are to be paid down immediately, "without any exception," and to be "collected by the others, to be expended or employed in time and circumstances, as by plurality of votes" is found proper.—Rec. N. Am., I: 306.

19 Jan Rutgers requests permission to keep a tavern, and his petition is granted.—Rec. N. Am., I: 308. His house was on the site of the present 69 Broad St., where now the building of the Consolidated Stock Exchange stands. Rutgers's house was sold under execution in 1665 (Ibid., IV: 104, 167, 182, 207), and he soon afterwards died.—Ibid., V: 74. See Castello Plan, II: 296; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

20 Nicholas Langevelthusen, a corporal in the soldiery of the West India Co., petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission to tap liquors. As he is a servant of the company, his request is referred to the council for approval, which he obtains; whereupon, the board allows his request.—Rec. N. Am., I: 308.

26 The form and manner of construction of an ordinary house in the Dutch period of New York's history are described in the following contract for the erection of the ferry-house, or tavern, on the Long Island side of the East River, for Egbert van Borsum, the ferry-man (see June 1, 1654):

"We, Carpenters Jan Cornelisen, Abram Jacobsen, and Jan Hendricksen, have contracted to construct a house over at the ferry of Egbert Van Borsum, ferry-man, thirty feet long and eighteen feet wide, with an side passage of four feet, to place in it seven girders, with three transome windows and one door in the front, the front to be planed and grooved, and the rear gable to have boards overlapped in order to be tight, with door and windows therein; and a floor and ceiling grooved and planed beneath (on the under side); to saw the roof thereof, and moreover to set a window-frame with a glass light in the front side; to make a chimney mantel and to wainscot the fore-room below, and divide it in the centre across with a door in the partition; to set a window-frame with two glass lights therein; further to wainscot the east side the whole length of the house, and in the recess two bedsteads, one in the front room and one in the inside room, with a pantry at the end of the bedstead [betset]; a winding staircase in the fore-room. Furthermore we, the carpenters, are bound to deliver all the square timber—to wit, beams, posts, and frame timber with the pillar for the winding staircase, spars, and worm, and girders, and foundation timbers required for the work; also the spikes and nails for the interior work; also rails for the wainscot are to be delivered by us.

"For which work Egbert Van Borsum is to pay five hundred and fifty guilders [520], one-third in beavers, one-third in good mer-chantable wampum, one-third in good silver coin, and free passage over the ferry so long as the work continues, and small beer to be drunk during work.

"We have subsequently contracted with said Egbert Van Bor-sum to build a cellar-kitchen under said house, and to furnish the wood for it—to wit, beams and frame timber. There must be made two door-frames and two circular frames with windows therein, with a stairway to enter it, and to line the stairs in the cellar round about with boards, with a chimney mantel in the kitchen, and to groove and plane the ceiling. Egbert must excu-vate the cellar at his own expense. The carpenters must furnish the nails. For this work one hundred guilders [640] are promised together with one whole good otter skin. Moreover, Egbert must deliver all the flat wood-work required for the house—to wit boards and wainscotting.

"Dated 26th April, 1655, at New Amsterdam.
[Signed] "Jan Cornelisen Cleyen
"X, The Mark of Egbert Van Borsum."

—From Stiles, Hist. of Brooklyn, I: 224-25. The "betset," mentioned in this document, Stiles explains, was built-in, "like a cupboard in a partition, with doors closing upon it when unoccupied," so that the sleeping apartment of an inn could accommodate several travellers with sleeping quarters, and, in the daytime, the room could be used for the general public.

Arent Jansen, the provost-marshal or jailer, is granted by the burgomasters and schepens permission "until further order to reside in the little side room of the City Hall in order to be able more conveniently to attend to the prisoners."—Rec. N. Am., I:
314. Prisoners under bond are confined in one of the rooms of the city hall, as shown by another record of this year.—Cal. Hist.
MSS., Dutch, 156.

Three thieves confined at Fort Amsterdam break out, and are advertised by hue and cry, and summoned to return to the fort before the third beating of the drum, on pain of having their names affixed to the gallows.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 148. One of these was evidently a soldier, who was sentenced, on the 14th, to be conveyed to the place of public execution and hung until dead.
At the urgent solicitation of the public at the place of execution, his sentence was commuted by the court to perpetual banishment.—

Peter Rudolf receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the present No. 46, and part of No. 44, Broad St.—See

Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 374.

Randel Hewit (or Rendel Huwit), an Englishman, who has been temporarily denied permission to keep a tavern and lodgers, is now allowed to do so by the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam.—Rec. N. Am., I: 280, 317. In March, 1656, his wife, Margaret, was up before the city court in his behalf, charged by the schout with infractions of the tavern ordinance.—Ibid., II:
53. He probably conducted the tavern at the east end of Richard Smith's building, which covered the site now Nos. 91-95 Pearl St. See Castello Plan, II: 312, and Innes, New Am. and Its People, 220.

Michiel Paulsen, or Paulusen, "old burgher, and his wife a Native of this country," petition the burgomasters and schepens for permission "to sell wine and beer by the small measure." It is granted to them, "on condition of their lodging strangers and others" and paying the "tavern license and duties."—Rec. N. Am., I: 317. Paulusen's two houses were on sites now Nos. 49 and 51 Stone St. See Castello Plan, II: 309.

Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, minister at New Amsterdam, June and Johannes de Peyster, a deacon of the church as well as a schepen 3 of the city, appear before the council and state, "in behalf of the Board of Overseers of the Poor of the city, that said Board has some time ago bought for the behalf and best [bestest?] of the poor a certain bouwery situate on the other side of Hellgate." This "Poor Farm" was "obliquely opposite" a small island "commonly called Huelicken or Borger Joris' Island," in that part of the present Borough of Queens which overlooks Berrian Island.—N. Y.
Col. Docs., XIV: 326. The poor of the city were aided from a deacons' or poor fund obtained from "alms collected among the people, and some fines and donations of the inhabitants."—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 327, 362. Among the Jay Papers, in the N. Y.
Hist. Soc., there is a colored pen and ink "Map of the Lands adjoining to the [Brooklyn] Ferry," on which this "Poor Bowry" is located exactly as above stated. See also reference to the "Arme Bouwerye" in Selyns' list of 1686.

The council orders that a petition for enlarging the city gate at the East River, so as to permit the passage of a cart, and for repairing the road, be referred to the city authorities.—Cal. Hist.

- fences on Manhattan Island, appear at the court of burgomasters and schepens against Pieter vander Liode, Hendrick van Dyck, the wife of Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, and Egbert Woutersen, for being in default, "notwithstanding proper notice served on them," in failing to repair "the common fencing here on the Island of Manhattans, conjointly," so "that the cattle belonging to them and others" may not escape and be lost. The defendants are fined, except Vaader Liode, who is "an old man" and has been excused before from making or repairing the common fencing.—Rec. N. Am., I: 320-21.
- 28 The city court of New Amsterdam resolves to propose to the council the raising of funds for the city's needs, by a tax for stamping and marking weights and measures; also that each tavern-keeper be obliged to take out quarterly a license, and pay therefor six guilders. The consideration of this proposal was renewed, on July 5, when it was signed; but it did not induce authorization from the council.—Rec. N. Am., I: 327-28. The burgomasters and schepens, therefore, renewed their petition, on Jan. 17, 1656, and urged approval of this proposal, to which Stuyvesant and the council assented on the 18th.—Ibid., II: 15-16; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 158.
- July 1 Stuyvesant returns from his visit to the West Indies, where he failed to open up trade relations with the English.—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 603. See Dec. 24, 1654.
- 19 The burgomasters and schepens resolve that, "whereas it is at present the Dogdays," no ordinary session or court shall be held "during the said Dogdays."—Rec. N. Am., I: 333.
- 27 The Jews of New Amsterdam petition Stuyvesant "to be permitted to purchase a burying place for their nation." The council considers the request and votes that, as there are no deaths and hence no immediate need of a place, a grant of land belonging to the company will be made to them when "the need and occasion thereof" arises, especially as the Jews intimate that they do not wish to bury their dead in the common burying-ground.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 150; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 75. The Jews renewed the request on Feb. 22, 1656 (q. v.).
- Aug. 6 Resolutions were passed by the directors at Amsterdam, on Nov. 19, 1654, granting to two private traders permission to sail in their ship, the "Wittepaert," from Holland "to the coast of Africa and trade there for negro slaves to carry to New Netherland and sell to the inhabitants," which is done, they say, "in consideration of the promotion of population and agriculture in New Netherland."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 304-5. This vessel arrived at New Amsterdam in the summer of 1655, and these "Negroes lately arrived . . . from the Bight of Guinea" were the occasion of an ordinance passed by Stuyvesant and the council, on Aug. 6, which declared that they had been "carried and exported hence" without the company or the inhabitants of the province "having derived any revenue or benefit thereby." On this account, the edict provided, there should be paid a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem, on all negroes "carried or exported" from the province "elsewhere beyond the jurisdiction of New Netherland."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 191. This was, apparently, the first cargo of negro slaves imported directly into New Netherland from Africa. See also April 4, 1652.
- 17 The burgomasters and schepens assemble this day to open a certain letter received by the Ship "de Waegh" (the Balance) of Amsterdam from the directors and dated May 26 of this year, which is read by the secretary. In this letter, the directors complain of the failure of the city to provide subsidies for the defraying of the common burdens of government, which, they say, is "contrary to the maxims of all well regulated countries and cities, and in especial opposition to the government of this city." They urge that, "in this present conjuncture of time and circumstances," a further delay cannot be borne; that they have considered the necessity of securing means, and, therefore, have resolved upon the following taxes, viz:—ten stuivers on each morgen of land, per year; twenty stuivers on each head of horn cattle, per year; the twentieth penny, yearly, from the rent of houses. They also conclude to return the excise revenues to "the general treasury of the Company."—Rec. N. Am., I: 340-41.
- 25 This day is set apart by proclamation of Stuyvesant and the council as a day of general fasting, thanksgiving, and prayer, for invoking the divine blessing on the coming Dutch expedition from New Amsterdam against the Swedes on the Delaware.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 91-92. The proclamation was published by the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam "from the City Hall after previous ringing of the bell," on the 20th. All common business, "such as ploughing, sowing, mowing, fishing, hunting, etc., as well as all games of tennis, ballplaying, tapping and drinking," were forbidden on this fast day, "on pain of arbitrary correction."—Rec. N. Am., I: 342-44. See Sept. 5.
- 26 Abraham Martens Clock receives a ground-brief for a lot running from the present Pearl to Stone St., facing Hanover Sq.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 323; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 405.
- 28 The captains and officers of the train-bands of New Amsterdam having asked Stuyvesant and the council "whether the Jewish people" who reside in the city shall also "train and mount guard with the Citizens' bands," after consideration, the council declares that "the said nation" is "not admitted or counted among the citizens" for such purposes in old Amsterdam or any other city in Holland, and that for this and other reasons they exempt them from military service in New Netherland, subjecting, however, all male Jews between sixteen and sixty years to a monthly tax, in lieu of service, and in consideration of the exemption.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 96; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 191-92. On Nov. 5, the council heard a petition from Jacob Barsimson and Asser Levy, two Jews, asking for leave to stand guard with other burghers of the city or else to be relieved from the tax, "as they must earn their living by manual labor." This request was refused, but consent was given to them "to depart whenever and whither" they wished.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 155, translated in full in Oppenheim's Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 25. It is evident, however, that Levy was admitted to keep "watch and ward" (vecht en wacht) before April 11, 1657 (q. v.), when he made the fact the ground of his application for admission as a burgher of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 154. Cf. Oppenheim, op. cit., 24-25, 35.
- " The council orders the enrollment into the militia companies of New Amsterdam of all persons who live by sailing sloops up and down the river, and who have no fixed place of residence in the province.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 151.
- Sept. 5 On this day (Sunday), "after the sermon," the squadron of seven vessels, with a force on board of between 600 and 700 men, sets sail for the South River, against the Swedes. Stuyvesant is in command, accompanied by Vice-Director De Sille and Domine Megapolensis. On Sept. 11, they secured, without firing a gun, the capitulation of Fort Casimir, which the Swedes had held since June 1, 1654 (q. v.)—Brodhead, op. cit., I: 604. On Sept. 25, the Swedish Fort Christina surrendered.—Ibid., I: 605. For fuller treatment of this subject, with different dating of the above events, see Johnson, Swedish Settlements on the Delaware, II: Chap. 47; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 91-97.
- 15 The Indians make an unexpected attack on Manhattan and its environs, murdering and robbing the people and burning their property.—Rec. N. Am., I: 365; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 99. It was an act of vengeance, due to the suspended scout-fiscal, Van Dyck, killing a squaw whom he had detected stealing peaches in his garden.—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 606-7. There is another good contemporary account in Hollants Mercurius, deel 6, 130-31. See also Van Tienhoven's account under Nov. 14, 1655.
- To protect Stuyvesant's bowery on Manhattan Island, during the Indian uprising at this time, some Frenchmen are hired by Corellis Aertsen, by order of the company's fiscal, to remain on the property with him. Stuyvesant is absent on his expedition against the Swedes on the Delaware.—Rec. N. Am., II: 90-91. See March 6, and May 1, 1656.
- 17 The provincial council writes to Stuyvesant on the Delaware, informing him of the Indian depredations at Manhattan and its environs, thus: "Madame, your Honor's wife, with her whole family and all those, in whom your Honor and she are concerned, are well. As the citizens are unwilling to guard other people's houses far from the Manhattans, we have, with her advice, hired 10 Frenchmen, to protect your Honor's bowery on the Manhattans, subject to your Honor's pleasure. We'll keep as good watch as possible, and expect your Honor's speedy return, for to lie in the fort night and day with the citizens, has his difficulties, as they cannot be commanded like soldiers. . . . We had much (more) to say, but not to grieve your Honor any more, we will be silent, till another occasion, about the great murder of 100 men in 9 hours; all the country-people are flying, except those of 1655 Amersfoort [Flatlands], Midwout [Flatbush], Breukelen and the English villages. There is a great deal of lamenting here, which we give your Honor to consider."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 99, where the date is given erroneously as the "12th."

20 The public works constructed along the present line of Wall Street in 1653, and repaired in 1654, are again in need of restoration and reinforcement. On the night of the 15th of this month, an assault was made by some Indians, who "fell upon" the people of Manhattan "with murder, robbery and fire." Two members of the provincial council now meet with the board of burgomasters and schepens to consider "the present dangerous condition of the times." With unanimity, the conference adjudges it "necessary that the works of this City be again repaired," and resolves "that the aforesaid erected works" shall "be repaired with plank 5 @ 6 feet high, nailed to the sides of the Palisades," and the fence viewers of the city are commissioned "to contract for the said works at the smallest expense and quickest despatch, in the presence" of the two burgomasters.—Rec. N. Am., I: 363, 365.

This work was completed by Sept. 28, when the burgomasters reminded the council in writing that, with the council's knowledge "and at the request of the commonalty for the greater safety and security" of the city, "the outer works" were "furnished with a certain of planks against an assault of the barbarous Indians." As the labour and materials were yet to be paid for, burgomasters Anthony and Van Cortlaedt met at the house of the latter, and issued an appeal to the council for authority to raise, by a contribution among the commonalty, funds to pay for constructed public works and other work "still to be performed," which was estimated then to amount to "about Four thousand guilders."—Ibid., I: 365. Two days later (30th), the council gave its assent, but advised that, before a final decision was reached, the schepens should be consulted and their signature obtained to the proposal, after which "further consideration" would be given to it by the council on the return of Stuyvesant from the Delaware, whence he was "daily expected."—Ibid., I: 365.

On Oct. 11, Stuyvesant and the council voted authority to the city to collect money and, if necessary, to make an assessment; also, at the proper time, to impose a tax on lots, houses, and real estate, for securing revenues for the repair of the city's works, the city hall, and other charges.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 152; Rec. N. Am., I: 366-67; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 166-97. From Oct. 11 to 15, the "trading skippers, merchants, factors, passengers and . . . Common Burghery" of New Amsterdam were obligated for 6,305 florins as voluntary or assessed taxes to the city's treasury.—Rec. N. Am., I: 365-75. On the 16th, the council empowered the burgomasters to collect the subscriptions and, in cases of non-payment, to levy by execution.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 153. All of the assessments were not readily collected, so the burgomasters, as treasurers of the city, on Feb. 1, 1656, appealed anew to the council for power to collect them; whereupon the council referred them to the resolutions in council of Oct. 11 of the previous year, as a sufficient warrant of authority.—Ibid., 159. Debts incurred for the planks were being liquidated by the city in the autumn of 1656 (Rec. N. Am., II: 165, 168, 171, 182); but, as late as Nov. 7 of that year, the city authorities said, when writing to the directors at Amsterdam, that "not one third part" of the assessment had been paid, "through inability of the Commonalty" (ibid., II: 218).

25 The directors at Amsterdam again try to regulate the collection and transmission of the mails.—See summary under Aug. 6, 1652.

Oct. Orders are issued for the guard duties of the garrison.—See Sept. 20, 1656.

9 The director-general and council daily bear great complaints that "posts, rails, clapboards and other parts of the fences, put up around sown fields and gardens" are being stolen day and night. They now order that anyone who wholly or partly strips any planted land of any of these protections shall be "whipped and branded for the first offence," and (for a further offence) "punished with the rope until death." Anyone reporting the offence shall be rewarded and his name concealed.—Rec. N. Am., I: 42-43. For earlier provisions, see Dec. 31, 1654. This ordinance was renewed Dec. 30, 1658, and Jan. 7, 1659.

11 A general assessment is levied to pay the city's debts.—Rec. N. Am., II: 366-75. For subsequent developments, see March 8, 1657.

12 An express having been sent to the South River to call the energetic director (Stuyvesant) home to New Amsterdam, he returns to revive the spirits of the colonists, among whom consternation had spread on account of the recent deprivations of the Indians (see Sept. 15).—Brothhead, op. cit., I: 608.

During "these dangerous times" of Indian deprivations, some of the inhabitants have not hesitated "to go into the Country in small parties, or when going out in stronger force, to separate from each other." Through this exposure, some people, caught off their guard, have been taken captive, whilst others have been killed by the Indians. To prevent this state of affairs, Stuyvesant and the council decree that nobody shall attempt "to go inland" without a pass from them, and that, when permission has been obtained by a party, no member shall run off or become separated from his associates. Those who act contrary to order are, if taken captive, to pay their own ransom.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 198.

The burgomasters write to Stuyvesant and the council that they find, by daily experience and petitions presented to them, that there are in the city widows and orphans for whom they deem it necessary that proper provision be made, "in order that they and their property and effects" may "be properly employed and administered." They request, therefore, the commissioning of certain persons who may attend to that duty, "as Orphan Masters." At the same time, they submit four names to the council, out of which two are to be designated. Stuyvesant and the council, accordingly, commission Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven and Pieter Cornelissen vander Veen, on the 19th, "to take charge, in the aforesaid office of the Estate of the widows and orphans in communication with and after instructions from the Burgomasters."—Rec. N. Am., I: 380; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 153. The appointees served as overseers of orphans, and the two burgomasters continued to sit as judges of the orphans' court, until an independent court, in the nature of a surrogates' court, was created on Feb. 25, 1656 (q. v.).—Rec. N. Am., II: 44-45. The minutes of the court, from 1655, were translated and edited by Berthold Fernow, in two volumes, for which see the Bibliography, Vol. V. On Nov. 29, Jacob Kip was appointed vendue master or public auctioneer to the court of orphan-masters.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 155. See Feb. 10, 1653.

Many people have been taken captive during the past month by the Indians in their deprivations. Some persons, "by going backward and forward to the Indians," are responsible for the circulation of false reports, both among the whites and the Indians, for which reason Stuyvesant and the council now forbid any further communication of this kind. Whenever a boat is despatched by the government "to have a talk with the Indians about the ransoming of Prisoners," on its return, the anxious inhabitants crowd the shore of the North River (very likely at the Beaver Path), and by "unseemly clamor" alarm the Indians and create an unfavourable suspicion, so that they will "not come over to speak with the Director General and Council." A stop is put to this curiosity by an ordinance. Those who are "found in or about the street" whenever "the Director General's row-boat" departs or returns, or when any Indians come over to the city, are to be arrested by the military and confined, and parents are "particularly admonished to inform their children hereof."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 200-1; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 152, 153.

Commissioners appointed by Stuyvesant, "in the name of the Hon'ble Directors of the West India Company on the one part, and Capt. Thomas Willett, of Plymouth in New England, merchant, on the other part," cause to be recorded at the provincial secretary's office a bill of sale to Willett of the ship "Abraham's Sacrifice," for 3,350 guilders, "payable in good beef and pork, to wit: the fresh unsalted beef and pork to be delivered at the Manhatans clean on the hook at three stivers and a half the pound, ox beef; and the pound of good pork at four and a half stivers; the salt beef in barrels, four stivers, the salt pork in barrels five stivers; it being understood that the half of the purchase money must be paid in the abovenamed provisions, all in good condition, previous to this winter, and the other half in the spring in the month of April [1656]. . . . It is also agreed that the Prince's flag shall be retained by the Company, on condition that so much bunting shall be delivered to Mr. Willett as is necessary to make an English flag."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 138 (N. Y. State Library).

Hage Bruynsen, in an action against a skipper in the court of burgomasters and schepens, charges him with taking away "certain stones, which he drew and had before his door [Pearl St., north of 1655 Maiden Land, to repair the street."—Rec. N. Am., I: 386. The Oct.

 Oct. interest of the item is in its reference to the repair of the street, 25 which, if paying is meant, is the earliest recorded reference to paving actually done in the city. See March 15.

27 First Councillor Nicasius de Sille makes the following extraordinary animadversions with respect to Director-General Stuyvesant and Fiscal Van Tienhoven, in a letter to Hans Bontemantel, one of the directors at Amsterdam and a commissioner for New Netherland, the original holograph letter being in the N. Y. Pub.
 Library, N. Neth. Papers, No. 1214. An annotation by Bontemantel reads: "Answered the 11th March, 1656." The text of the answer is not extant. The translation of the De Sille letter follows:

"Mr. Bontemantel:

"Very cordial greetings and commendations to aunt and cousin vander Haghe. I have to report our sad experiences, and the common misfortune. I hope that the Honorable Estimable Gentlemen will now at least open their eyes and not place any more confidence in the flattering letters. We have been, as you will perceive from the general letter and the journal of the first of September, at the South River, where we have captured the fortresses Casemier and Christina from the Swedes without any combat or firing a shot. While lying before Christina, we received letters, that at the Manathes some hundreds of savages came, who upset everything there by murdering, setting afire, and taking captives, so that the General departed from us on the 29th with the small vessels for New Amsterdam in New Netherland, leaving me behind with Captain Coninx to regulate everything at the South that was required for the repair of Fort Casemier, as you will be more explicitly informed by the journal. In consequence [thereof], I arrived here only on Friday night, the 22d of October, finding everything in a bad condition, the houses on Staten Island all burned down, also those at Pavia, with some others, more than 100 dead and many prisoners, who are daily ransomed by us.
 There were ten nations of savages and only a little over sixty of them were killed, the others still use menacing threats, lying in the environs of Manathes, but we have invited their chiefs to visit us, who have promised to come and reach an agreement. The community and all the householders who have sought refuge here, call for revenge and murder against the fiscal and two or three others, whom they loudly proclaim by name to have been the only causes [of the attack]. The General is not praised, because he does not investigate, but upholds, as it appears, the fiscal; does not lend much ear to the complainants, and when I say anything, or make inquiry, or want to do something, nobody pays attention to me.
 Everything happened in my absence, so that I do not know how things will continue here any longer. They follow me cautiously, all to belittle me, for the wagon does not go straight, everyone follows his own counsel; the General and the fiscal act together, but make it appear before everybody as if they were great enemies.
 La Montagne is also in the cabal. The people want to go to Holland; many merchants depart with these ships because there is no order; therefore it is now my humble request that you will show yourself favorable toward me. Whereas, when I propose something, or should do something, they will not give me instructions by which I can act or give orders, as has already happened when the General went to Curaçao, and other times. Neither will he [Stuyvesant] give me orders, saying, 'do as you please'; and he takes me all over with him, wherever he goes, which I neither will nor can refuse him, though it is highly necessary that one of us always remain here to keep everything in good order, as I have proposed several times; but was answered: 'Have you any writing or authorization for that?' And, perhaps, had either one of us remained here, this [Indian depredation] would not have happened. And what has been done at the South River, Captain Coninx and I could easily have accomplished. But if I have to go along with one or the other, then the one who remains can play his part, and they understand each other. For this reason I have requested before an Act or authorization from the Honorable Lords Directors with which they did not comply, hence I prefer to you the following request, if you think it advisable, to present it to the meeting, and to support the same, that I may have something to say here by virtue of their Honors' authorization in case those two [Stuyvesant and Van Tienhoven] should be continued [in their offices]. If not, as we hope, that a General be sent who is not selfish, and no untutored fiscal, and also another able councillor; because I and La Montagne have only two votes, and the Director and the fiscal have three together, so we are Oct.

 obliged to follow them whether right or wrong, whether it be to 37 the profit or loss of the Company, and, therefore, everything cannot go well here; but I fear an evil and short end. I have also before written about these matters to Messrs. van Beeck and Man, and have learned that my correspondence was not very acceptable to their Honors. But I protest before God and the world, that if no alteration takes place in this matter, that I cannot perform my duties with a good conscience, for, moreover, everything is going to ruin here. I would write more, but you and the honorable Lords Directors will be fully able to read in the general letter and the journal, and the accompanying affidavits, about what has passed here. I also think it advisable, that the passengers and the free people, who now go over with these two ships, should, each in particular, be examined; because they were all present and under arms. Then the Honorable Lords will speedily discover the reason and know the cause through which these disasters have befallen us.

"Now ending with this, I commend you and all friends to the protection of the Almighty and recommending myself to your good graces, I remain, Sir,

"Your Honor's obliging servant

Nicasius de Sille"

"With haste

"From Amsterdam in New Netherland
 the 27 Octob. 1655. Goodby."

Stuyvesant addresses a confidential letter to the directors at 28
 Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto, altho' there is a contemporary copy in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1223 (2), in the N. Y. Pub. Library. No text of an answer from the directors is known to be extant. A digest is given here of the most important items in Stuyvesant's letter, viz: He says he returned from Curaçao to "Mannades," on July 10, in the ship "De Liefde;" Councillor Nicasius de Sille not a trustworthy man; exploit on South (Delaware) River, against Swedes, and account of expedition to be had from his journal and general missives sent over to directors; has no confidence in Johan de la Montagne; blames massacres by Indians on officials of New Netherland; 28 bouwerijs destroyed, 12,000 scheepels of corn (grain) burned, 40 Christians massacred, and about 100 captured, mostly women and children; his opinion, that firm peace with Indians is best thing; that they be kept from coming into any village or place with arms (guns); that they be obliged to deliver up murderers to be punished; that drunken Indians be kept in prison; that when animals are killed by them, they should be made to pay for them; refers to swearing, drinking, and profanations of the sabbath; ammunition needed; to make a contract with English, offensive and defensive; separate country dwellings not yet close to one another; commonly want revenge against Indians; Fiscal Cornelis van Tienhoven hated, and even English speak against him; Vice-Director Mathys Bex, of Curaçao, could be used in New Netherland, as he is a man of experience, having fine credentials from Reuf, and later of Stara, where he had been director; former Fiscal Van Dijk charged with beating an Indian to death, and selling much brandy to Indians, making them drunk; Cornelis Jacobsen Steenwyck sent to Amsterdam with commission to do and adjust everything as instructed on behalf of New Netherland.

Stuyvesant and the council address a general missive to the 30 directors at Amsterdam, the text of which, also, has not been known hitherto, although a contemporary extract exists in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (1), in N. Y. P. L., and the answer of the directors is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 63-64; XIV: 349, ff. On account of the importance of this item, the principal parts are here summarized, with more or less particularity, viz: Letters relating to the sale and delivery of the lands on the South (Delaware) River were all sent over to Amsterdam by the ships "Volcomen" and "Waeterhout," in 1651; all old and new documents obtainable to be sent in best form by the ship "Nieu Amsterdam," but former Director-Gen. Kieft took away many of them; treaty of Hartford, 1650; usurpation of "Meest' Pel" (Thomas Pell) of the land called "Vreeland," and other English interlopers; English claim the West India Co. had only a limited "octroy," but this declared to be untrue, the company had an enduring right for all time from the states-general; concerning the levying of a subsidy on the commonalty of New Amsterdam, they promise that advices will be sent by the ships "Waeg" and "Bontekoe;" Jewish freedom

1655 considered very dangerous, since Christians were hindered in trading, and freedom granted to them made it impossible to refuse Oct. also to Lutherans and Papists; little obtained from the 30 commonalty for expenses against the English in the late war, or against the Swedes on the Delaware, or for surrounding New Amsterdam with planks; Indians burned 28 bouweries and 10,000 schepels of corn; changes made in the ground-briefs to be sent to the directors; revenues from land, beer, and wine; revenues of New Amsterdam countermanded by the company; income, in 1653, was 22 to 23 thousand guilders, but now greatly reduced and expenses heavy; pertinent financial report now impossible, yet to be sent by the ship "Waeg" for each year, if Carel van Brugge, the bookkeeper, does not prove derelict; full report of the exploit at the South (Delaware) River sent in enclosure No. 15; principal land conveyances and copies of particular acts to be sent over; Indian deeds and conveyances; Indians sell as often as they secure buyers; Dutch rights against Swedes over the South River to be sustained, and Dutch argument based upon prior possession, since they had there three fortresses, in the north, in the middle, and above on the river, in 1625 and 1626, together with a trading-house surrounded by palisades, etc., although afterwards deserted, and later, in 1629, bought and fortified at the mouth of the river, about the Horekill on the land of Swanendaal; and, again, in 1633, Fort Nassau was laid out in the middle of the river, being five or six years before ever the Swedes came on this river; copies of lands bought from Bronck (Jonas Bronck) and Graewits Bay (Gravesend, L. I.) given in enclosure no. 7; sending authentic copy of provisional boundary made with the English, at Hartford, in 1650; carpenters and work at New Amsterdam; faults in bookkeeping system to be overcome by improvements; villages of Breuckelen, Midwout, etc., cannot support a minister at own charges; life of Polhemius, former preacher at Tamarica, in Brazil, known to all, and he was minded to go to Holland in the "Waeg," so that these villages might learn who was to be their teacher; change in ships' recognizances from 16 to 10 per cent. not conducive to trade; conditions on the Delaware; letter from Stockholm reveals that a Swedish ship lay ready to come over to succor Swedes on the Delaware; 60 souls left to defend the Delaware; magistrates of New Amsterdam require excise collected in New Netherland and loans of Le Bleu which were sent from Holland; many passengers held back when ship "Nieu Amsterdam" sailed, and some protested; complaint against "schotten" (traders) who sell to Indians, to the damage of regular merchants; no firelocks ("snaphaens") to be used unless 3½ feet long; surgeon-barbers needed for Curaçao, Delaware River, and other places; sending remonstrance on account of depressed state of the company; sending Cornelis Jacobsen Steenwyck, former ensign of the Burgher Guard, with commission authorizing him to remonstrate everything by word of mouth.

24* The Treaty of Westminster is signed by England and France. Nov. 3 England is left in possession of Acadia.—Winsor, IV: 145; V: 476.

5 Cromwell declares war on Spain; the war continued until 1659. Notwithstanding the repeated publication of ordinances prohibiting the running at large of goats, some of the inhabitants still allow their goats to come within the city limits. The "loud complaints" of the burghers to Stuyvesant and the council, that these animals are destroying gardens, cornfields, fruit-trees and other trees in their rampage, induce them to renew the former prohibition, and to demand that all goats be "kept and herded beyond or across the Fresh Water," and at night be shut up in a barn or stable, on pain of forfeiture if found south of the Fresh Water, for the benefit of the poor.—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 201-2.

7 Stuyvesant addresses a particular letter to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto, although there is a contemporary extract in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1223(3), in the N. Y. Pub. Library. The most important items are digested here, viz: Complaint against the secrecy of the directors at Amsterdam; Indians in New Netherland are stirred up by the Dutch themselves, and restoration of captives in hands of Indians is hindered; Councillor La Montagne is a bad instrument—a snake harboured in the bosom of the colony; La Montagne's "mix up" with the Swedes after the capitulation; La Montagne went to church, and, on the way, in the presence of Fiscal Duijnhoven, Capt. Cregier, Lieut. Newton, and Secretary Van Ruyven, upbraided attacked the bringing over of the Swedes; Stuyvesant recommends keeping a wakeful eye on the Swedes, etc.; handrands wanted to equip the burghers (orpeluyden), also 200 soldiers capable of guarding all; Swedish commander, Rysing, gone to Sweden, via England; he requested passage money and was given 300 pounds, Flemish, to be returned in six months, etc.; transport of well soldiers to Sweden.

8 Nicolaes Jansen Bakker petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission "to tap and to keep tavern and lodgings," pleading misfortune, he having been driven away from his place by Indian troubles, and his property having been burnt and lost. Granted.—Rec. N. Am., I: 393. This seems to refer to Nicolaes Jansen, baker, who, on May 18, 1656 (q. v.), received a ground-brief for a lot on Pearl St., between Whitehall and Broad St.—See Castello Plan, II: 268; and Dutch Grants, II: 386.

10 On account of "divers petitions" presented to the burgomasters and schepens "by refugees and others" who are inclined to settle in New Amsterdam, and who have requested "small lots" in the city, on which each, "according to his ability," may erect a house, the board has presented the matter orally to Stuyvesant, who answered that "a proper survey must be first made." They now apply to the council, requesting coöperation and the commissioning of suitable persons to make the survey. Stuyvesant and the council reply the same day; adjudge "the survey particularly necessary," and appoint Johannes La Montagne, councillor, and Allard Anthony, burgomaster, together with the regular fence viewers or city surveyors, "to advance the desired survey," as they judge fit, "without any regard to persons, gardens or places," in order that settlers may be served "at a reasonable price." If it is found that the survey happens "to run through any persons' gardens," the surveyors are "specially authorized to value, in the readiest and most reasonable manner, the lots coming, according to the aforesaid survey, on the ground already disposed of, only leaving the approval thereof to the knowledge and advice of the Director General and Council."—Rec. N. Am., I: 393-94; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 155. This resulted in the making of a survey of the city, which "survey and plot map of New Amsterdam," according to which the streets were staked out, was confirmed and approved by the council on Feb. 25, 1656 (q. v.).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 161; Rec. N. Am., II: 43. This is the earliest plan of the city of which we have any knowledge. It may have been made by Fredrick de Koningh.—See Lost Maps, II: 165.

Stuyvesant recommends "that no Indian, coming to any place, village or hut, shall be allowed to remain there over night, except in a special place, to be fixed upon for that purpose according to the localities of the village," and "that no Indian with any kind of arms shall be allowed to come into any place or hamlet on the penalty of being seized and forfeiting the arms, which he has with him." He also decrees that the sale to any Indian of strong drink shall be punishable by corporal punishment on the seller and imprisonment of the drunken Indian "until he shall have told, from whom he has received the liquor."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 53-54.

An important recommendation is made by Stuyvesant to his council with respect to having fixed places for trading with the Indians. He says: "We ought to endeavor with all possible smoothness to balk the Indians in the use of their guns and ammunition; to accomplish which, it is, I believe, necessary, to prohibit generally, that anybody should trade and negotiate with the Indians except upon a certain place, to be determined upon, and further to forbid, that any gun or locksmith shall repair any lock or make a new one, except upon the showing of a note with our seal, in which the name, for whom, is stated and that then the gun shall be marked or branded and a record kept of them."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 54. See Nov. 27, 1655, for De Sille's opinion.

Stuyvesant suggests to his council "that from henceforward no separate bouweries or plantations shall be made, but that the out-lying farmers shall be compelled to draw together their deserted houses, and henceforward no one be allowed to settle in the open country, except in clusters of at least 10, 12 or 16 families living close together, according to the plan to be resolved upon" by him and the council, or their deputies, and "that henceforward nobody is allowed to live on the separate places, which have been either burned or deserted" during the late Indian deprivations. He also suggests "that on the occasion of forming new villages and hamlets a blockhouse shall be made of logs for a refuge and the safety of the inhabitants."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 53.

As there is some sentiment for beginning another Indian war, Stuyvesant tells the council why he thinks the time not propitious.

1655 When it is suggested that some Indians might be captured, in order to exchange them for Christians held in captivity, Stuyvesant declares that it is "too dangerous for the present and impracticable besides." He adds: "I say too dangerous, because new occasion might thereby be given to the savage tribes either to murder the captives or to carry them off further inland, without leaving us hope to ransom them and I value the blood of ooe captured Christian more than 100 Indians." He thinks it better to get back the captives from the Indians "by the friendliest means, even if it were by giving some contraband articles as presents."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 52-53, 54. See also Brodhead, Hist. Stat. of N. Y., I: 606-11.

14 Secretary Van Tienhoven, in reply to Stuyvesant's proposals of November 10 (q. v.), says that, "after a general peace had been concluded with the natives in August 1645, the peace and the articles of the treaty have been infringed and broken as follows: First in killing 14 Christians since August 1645 (up to 15th Septbr 1655) at different places and at various times, for which we have never been able to get justice done, much less satisfaction, notwithstanding we asked for it in accordance with the treaty, but on the contrary they have fooled us with lies and false reports." He says: "The Indians have violated and broken the treaty of peace in an outrageous manner in this city [New Amsterdam] on the 15th of September last, as follows: In that they landed very early on the rivershore within the city-walls from 64 canoes about 500 men, all in arms, without having given previous notice of it, and that they, immediately upon their arrival, almost before any citizens were at hand, ran in large crowds of armed men through the streets, breaking forcibly into the house of Mr. [Isaac] Allertoon, bursting off the lock of the door, threatening and beating the people; that they noisily searched the house under the pretext of looking for Northern Indians, as they did in many houses in this city, until upon the complaints of the inhabitants, and to avoid further troubles, they were driven from the High Street [Hoogh Street, now Stooe St.] to the banks of the North river, where their canoes laid [sic] and they had landed in the morning."

Van Tienhoven adds that the chiefs or sachems representing different tribes were asked in a friendly manner "to appear at the Council-chamber in the fort, which they did." Here they were asked by the councillors, "in the presence of the Burgomasters, Schepens, citizens and military officers, for the reasons of their coming thus armed" and molesting the people. The council and city authorities thereupon requested that in the interest of mutual safety "and to prevent mischief and trouble the savages should remove themselves from this island [of Manhattan] to Noten-Island [now Governors Island], which they promised and then took their departure." But "instead of leaving, as they had promised, they were joined in the evening by 200 armed savages more, they shot after guard-mounting Hendrick van Dyck, the former Fiscal, with an arrow into the breast and threatened to kill Paulus Leerdertsen [vander Grift], Captain of the train-bands, with an arrow." This led to the cry of "Murder, murder, the savages kill the Dutch," and "by this dismal cry the citizens, standing under arms in the fort, to keep good watch, were thrown rather into confusion and hastened without any order through the gates and over the walls, so that they came in conflict with the savages, who were prepared, on the strand. Two Dutchmen were killed and three wounded; three savages remained dead on the strand, where they were found (afterwards). After this rencontre had taken place the savages went over the river and elsewhere and burned during the night many houses, murdered and captured Christians, killed cattle, and a few days later cleared Staten-Island people and houses."

This action was "contrary to the articles of peace, made in the year 1645, whereby it was expressly stipulated, that if reciprocally on one or the other side one or more persons had been killed or murdered, no general war should therefore immediately be begun, but that the injured party should make its complaints to the chiefs or magistrates of those, who had committed the deed, so that then justice might be meted out to the malefactors, according to circumstances." Van Tienhoven gave judgment that it was "just and righteous to make war on the Indians for the breaking of the treaty and their fearful misdeeds." He believed it was necessary to reduce the Indians to submission, but in the season of December to March he considered it not feasible; therefore he recommended that authority to begin war be secured from the superiors in

Nov. 14 Amsterdam, and that in the meantime they should "dissemble, though it be unpleasant, and if possible not spare some small presents, in order to bribe the savages to a truce, without making an absolute compact, and help the captives" in the hands of the Indians. He also urged preparedness, by placing the villages "on a defensive footing," and by awaiting succor from Holland. Without such reinforcement from abroad, he said, he did not believe a war could, "humanly speaking, be brought to a desirable end." This opinion Van Tienhoven wrote out on the 14th, but "Delivered the 29th Novbr 1655."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 56-57. See also Sept. 15, 1655.

15 Solomon Pieterseon La Chair, notary public, is granted permission by the burgomasters and schepens "to keep [a] tavern in the house of Tennis Kraey" (present cor. Stone and Broad Sts.).—Rec. N. Am., I: 401. This is the earliest reference to him in the records. He dwelt in one of the houses owned by Jacob Steendam, the poet, and had "lived" there "one quarter" when suit was brought for the rent, on March 6, 1656.—Ibid., II: 53. See Dutch Grants, II: 383.

22 Michiel Jansen petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission "to tap, as he has in this recent [Indian] disaster been driven off and lost his all, and in addition is an old man with a large family." It is granted.—Rec. N. Am., I: 405. His devastated property was on his grant in Pavonia (N. J.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 37 (see also 61). The tavern house at New Amsterdam was at the present No. 12 State St.—See Castello Plan, II: 284-85; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 979. Jansen also had a brew-house on the Beaver St. side of the present Delmonico building.—See Castello Plan, II: 202; and Feb. 15, 1656.

27 Councillor Nicassius de Sille, in reply to Stuyvesant's proposals of Nov. 10 (q. v.), says: "if the war with the Indians is brought to a close, first the natives must be forbidden not only this island [Manhattan] but also the city [New Amsterdam] and especially the fort and that all inhabitants must be interdicted to give them lodgings and, by penalty of the gallows, to sell or give them bread, but that a trading place should be appointed for them, the Indians, outside or in the outskirts of the city, where it may be considered most suitable: that the soldiers' quarters in our fort Amsterdam must be finished speedily, also the gates provided with locks, and other means of securing it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 54.

" Councillor La Montagne gives his opinion in answer to Stuyvesant's proposals of Nov. 10, stating, among other things, that it cannot be determined whether the recent troubles with the Indians constitute ground for a war, "because it is necessary to know first, whether they [the Indians] were the cause of it or not." Referring to events which laid the Indians "open to suspicion," he says: "First the unseasonable gathering here of 1900 savages, without our knowledge and consent, of whom nearly 800 were already here, to attack, contrary to their usual manner, 50 or 60; was it not sufficient to create suspicion of their bad intentions? And did not their insufferable insolence, shown by breaking into Mr. [Isaac] Allertoon's house and beating some of our citizens in their own houses increase that suspicion?" He also adds: "As to captives, experience has taught us, that they must be ransomed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 55-56.

" Seven Indians from Long Island appear before Stuyvesant and Pieter Wolphertsen [van Couwenhoven], the latter "the Lieutenant of the train-bands, and able to speak "the Indian language." One of the Indians, named Adam, who "spoke very good English," makes a statement on behalf of the chief sachem, "Marsepain, called Tachpauaan, alias Meautinnemin," the well-known Tachpouche, chief of the Marsepings, and the other Indians of the island, declaring their fealty and observance of peace during the late Indian troubles. "He further presents a box with wampum, which, he says, has been sent by his Sachem Tachpauaan and the chiefs on the east end of Long-Island with the request to accept it as a token of their friendship," and as an assurance that whenever aid is needed from the sachem or his people, it will be given as soon as called for.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 58.

29 The provincial treasury has been severely depleted by "excessive expenses incurred the last year on account of the English troubles, and now again de novo created by the Southern [Delaware] expedition," as well as by the more recent "deplorable encounter with the Indians." To replenish it, the tavern-keepers' excise is increased throughout New Netherland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 202-3. At the same time the brewing price of "strong New

1656 Cows, hogs, and other animals are reported as having been
 Jan. stolen in the meadows, and slaughtered by persons said to be 18 whites, yet who go "under the guise and name of Indians." To prevent this misdemeanor, Stuyvesant and the council, by ordinance, establish an excise on slaughtered cattle, forbidding "even the owner to slaughter" within the city of New Amsterdam, "or any other Town, Village or Hamlet on the Flatland," unless he first enters his cattle, on the day for slaughtering, with the magistrates of the particular place to which he belongs, or with the persons whom the magistrates have designated in the respective localities; and secures a permit, for which the owner is to pay to the magistrate or collector one stuiver in the guilden on "the true value of each animal, whether Ox, Cow, Calf, Hog, Goat, or Sheep." The proceeds are designated as local funds, to be used, "in time of need," for "the maintenance and protection of the public interests and the villages," such as "the levying of soldiers or purchasing of necessary ammunition." Transgressors are to be fined, and the proceeds divided equally among the informer, the officer, and for the public benefit. Publication of this law was made at the city hall on the 20th. The revenues received by the city of New Amsterdam from the slaughter tax must have been of some account. Stuyvesant declared, however, that he was ignorant of what was being done with this income, and, on Sept. 4, he made interrogation, which led to the farming out of the excise by the city authorities.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 208-9; Rec. N. Am., I: 20; II: 19, 161, 163.

24 The presiding burgomaster, Allard Anthony, presents to the burgomasters and schepens a proposal which Stuyvesant has made to him, namely, that it is "highly necessary to divide the Old Graveyard," now "wholly in ruins," into lots to be built upon, and to make another grave-yard, "south of the Fort, and to remove the houses standing there, on a valuation." The board decides that it is "highly necessary to establish a Graveyard at another place, or to put it [the old one] in good order," but that, for the present, it is "not . . . advisable to throw down the houses, south of the Fort and locate it there." They consider "it would be better, west of the Fort, in the neighborhood of the Windmill," where there is "a good hill clear of timber."—Rec. N. Am., II: 24-25. This mill was the grist-mill of the West India Co. and stood in what is now Battery Pl., at Greenwich St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

This old burial-place lay on the west side of Broadway, a little north of the present Morris St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927. It is also shown on the Castello Plan of 1660 (Pl. 82, Vol. II) and described in II: 221-22. On June 15, 1665 (q. v.), it lay open and unfenced, so that hogs rooted in it. It was estimated that the fencing thereof would cost 500 guilders ($200), and a collection was suggested to be taken up for that purpose; but in November of that year, on account of the scarcity of funds in the church treasury, the mayor and aldermen resolved to advance as a loan from the burghers' excise a sum sufficient to pay for the work.—Ibid., V: 253, 313.

" Among the business proposed by the presiding burgomaster, Allard Anthony, to his associates on the board, is an inquiry as to whether it is not "advisable to ask the Hon<sup>ble</sup> General [Stuyvesant] for the bell which stands idle in the Fort, either as a present or on valuation, to hang it, and make use of it, at the City Hall." Whereupon, they decide it is desirable, and authorize him to take up the matter with Stuyvesant at the "first opportunity," and also to "promote its accomplishment."—Rec. N. Am., II: 25. Cf. March 29. It was, no doubt, shortly after this that the cupola was added to the city hall to accommodate the bell. It first appears on the Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82, Vol. II); see also description of Castello Redraft, II: 344.

" As "the church in the Fort" is becoming "more and more out of repair, without anything having been done to it," and as Stuyvesant is at this time "the only Church-warden," since the others have "either left or died," the presiding burgomaster, Allard Anthony, asks the burgomasters and schepens if it is not "advisable that a new Churchwarden be appointed," and Stuyvesant discharged from the post. They decide to submit a double nomination of four names to Stuyvesant and the council. This results in the appointment of Nicasius de Sille and Goveert Lockermans as church-wardens, from March 1.—Rec. N. Am., II: 25, 50-51.

25 Dirck Crynen is appointed provost marshal or jailer in the fort by the council. He was discharged from the public service by them on March 19, 1658.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 158, 192. For the duties of the office, see Aug. 20, 1654.

Gross frauds and smuggling having for a long time been experienced in connection with "the duties on Peltries" and the "imposts placed on the consumption of Wine and Beer which are exported," the provincial authorities now resolve "to publicly let them to the highest bidder" in the middle of the ensuing March, "except the duties of the Customs and the 8 per cent on the Peltries," which are sent "direct by the return ships to Fotherland." That a more certain prevention of fraud and smuggling may obtain, they warn "all Skippers, Boatmen, Traders and Merchants," whether inhabitants or strangers, "not to embark, transport, carry or remove . . . with Yachts, Boats, Carts, Wagons or in any other manner any Beavers, Otters, Bearskins or other Peltries," unless they have first been "regularly entered with the Company's commissary, each in his district;" and require that "an invoice under his signature of the full quantity thereof, by whom shipped or sent, and to whom consigned," shall "be brought to the Fiscal, on pain of forfeiting the concealed Peltries and double the value thereof, whether the Skipper or owner" brings them "for his own use or as freight for others." This law is to be enforced strictly by the fiscal, commissaries, or other officers charged with its execution, "after the publication and posting thereof," by duly inspecting "all departing and arriving Vessels, Boats, Carts, or Wagons and to proceed against the Smugglers."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 210-11. The "farmer of the Duties and Imposts" made "divers complaints of the great frauds and smuggling" that continued despite the edict against the practice, so that another ordinance was issued on April 27, prohibiting embarkation or removal unless entry were made first with the farmer of the customs, "or his Collector," at the weigh-house, at hours fixed for different seasons, a permit having first been obtained, with a bill of particulars. Duties on furs, beer, brandy, and wines were clearly prescribed. Moreover, after entry had been made, the goods were to be transported "before sundown on board or to their place of destination." Home-brewed New Netherland beer was declared exempt from export duty.—Ibid., 220-22.

Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance forbidding "Conventicles and Meetings, whether public or private," which differ from those forming part of the system of the Reformed Dutch Church, and they establish a fine of 100 pounds Flemish to be paid by unqualified preachers. (This ordinance was aimed to suppress the Independents at Middleburg (now Newtown), on Long Island, as well as to prevent the Lutherans in their endeavour to establish a congregation at New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 211-12; Rec. N. Am., I: 20-21. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 336; and Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 157, 158. For other proceedings, see June 14, 1656; Jan.-Feb., 1661.)

The condition of "the bank on the East River, near the City gate" (at the present Pearl and Wall Sts.), is bad, and it is deemed necessary by the two burgomasters of the city that "a firm sheeting of thick plank or boards" be constructed; "to begin the same at the point of the old City Works," which lie thereby, "and again to raise up the fence; also a large and suitable gate [the water gate] according to the plan and design of Capt. Coniuck [Fredrick de Koningh], and already begun to be fixed in the works;" that this work shall "be executed with all possible speed and without any delay or alteration." They also resolve "that the sheeting before the City Hall" shall "be renewed with thick plank or boards, like the other work at the gate aforesaid according to the plan of Capt. Coniuck."—Rec. N. Am., II: 29. It is interesting to note that this captain, whose engineering plans for the improvement of the city are here mentioned, had been commissioned by the directors at Amsterdam, on May 24, 1655, to take command of the man-of-war, "de Waegh" (Balance), immediately after they had chartered her from the city of Amsterdam. She was one of the four largest ships owned by that city, carried 36 guns, and was manned by about 200 men to sail for New Netherland, where she arrived on Aug. 13, 1655, under instructions to participate in Stuyvesant's expedition against the Swedes on the Delaware, in that year. She was the flagship of the expedition. Capt. De Koningh's ship continued about New Amsterdam for many months after the success of the Delaware expedition, and arrived again at old Amsterdam at the end of the year 1656. It was while lingering, ad interim, at New Amsterdam that his engineering plans and survey were designed for the city.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII:

7 As Stuyvesant and the council have decided that the presiding burgomaster shall "be changed every three months," Oloff Steven-11 sen van Cortlandt presides over the court.—Rec. N. Am., II: 30.
 " Lodewyk Pos, a burgher of New Amsterdam, is granted permission by the burgomasters and schepens "to sell wine and beer by the small measure."—Rec. N. Am., II: 33. His place is advantageously situated for a tavern, near the roadstead and landing-place on the North River, "in front of and near the Beavers' path" (Battery Place), and close to the fort. See Castello Plan, II: 215-16. Pos later became captain of the watch.—See
 Nov. 15, 1658.

15 Michiel Jansen, a "farmer and former resident" in New Amsterdam, petitions Stuyvesant and the council for "a lot within the city next to Abraham Clinek, 30 to 36 feet wide." He says he has lost his entire savings of seventeen years in New Netherland by the recent Indian depredations, "all of which [at Pavonia] has been cruelly burned or taken away" by the Indians, leaving him, his wife, and six children "in no means in this world," and "he desires to gain a living" in the city. He is "granted a small lot . . . next to Abraham Martensen Clock, measuring in front and rear 26 to 27 feet and as long as the lot of the said Abram Clock, provided that the petitioner shall fence the aforesaid lot on the side toward the strand in the same manner as the fencing has been begun on the city-gate." But a memorandum added, states: "The above order was annulled for some reasons on the 15th February 1656 and another lot granted to him."—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 61. That other lot was on "The Schrijers Hoeck." The building now at No. 12 State St. exactly covers the site of his house and tavern.—See Castello Plan, II: 284-85, and Dutch Grants, II: 391. See also Nov. 22, 1655, and Addenda.

21 In reply to a petition of Van Hoboken, the schoolmaster (see March 23, 1655), for financial assistance, the burgomasters and schepens direct him to let them know "what he is allowed by each child per quarter, pursuant to instructions from the Lord General and Council, which being done, further order shall be taken on petitioner's request."—Rec. N. Am., II: 357.

22 The states-general ratifies the Treaty of Hartford, with respect to the boundary line between the "United English Colonies" and the "Dutch Province of New Netherland," which was agreed to on Sept. 19, 1650 (q. v.).—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 215, 457; N. Y.
Col. Docs., I: 611-12.

" Stuyvesant submits to the council proposals urging the providing of ways and means for the support of the government, the balancing of the public accounts, and the concentration of the outlying settlers into villages.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 160. These suggestions seem to have been renewed by him on March 3, when he added another proposal in relation to Indian affairs.—Ibid., 162. See also Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 234-35; Rec. N. Am.,

" The Jews renew their request of July 27, 1655 (q. v.), for a burying-place. The council thereupon instructs Niciasius de Sille and Cornelis van Tienhoven "to point out to the petitioners a little hook of land situate outside of this city for a burial place."—Cal.
Hist. MSS., Dutch, 160; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 75-76. The location of this cemetery has been placed near the New Bowery and Chatham Square.—Oppenheim, 19; Daly, Settlement of the Jews in North America (1893), 35-42. See also chapter on "The Dutch Period," I: 60. That the burial-ground here pointed out was made use of, and that it was situated at the above place, where there was "a little hook of land," is plausible; but there is no record of it other than as above cited. The Jews purchased land in the same locality for a place of interment, in 1681-2, part of which still exists as the oldest burying-ground on Manhattan Island. Singularly enough, its oldest grave-stone bears date of 1682.
 See Pl. 30, Vol. I; Landmark Ref. Key, III: 927; and Dec. 17, 1729.

25 The two burgomasters petition Stuyvesant and the council to be relieved from the duties of orphan-masters, as the business has greatly increased and they are unable to do justice to the obligations. They request the appointment of an independent court, in the nature of a surrogate's court, charged solely with the administration of the property of "orphans and minor children" who are residents within the jurisdiction of the city government.
 Four names are submitted by the burgomasters, from whom Stuyvesant and the council elect and confirm Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven.—Cal. Hist.

MSS., Dutch, 161; Min. of Orph. Court, I: 14-15; Rec. N. Am., II: 44-45. See Feb. 10, 1653; Oct. 18, 1655.

A survey of the streets of the city of New Amsterdam, as laid down on a plan or map, "according to which the Streets" are "set off and laid out with stakes," is confirmed by Stuyvesant and the council. This, the earliest plan of the city of which we have any knowledge, was authorized on Nov. 10, 1655 (q. v.). The carrying out of the city improvements is now referred to the two burgomasters, who are authorized, "first and foremost," to give public notice and fix a time within which everyone who has a claim against the city for being "damaged or injured by the said Survey" may present that claim, and have it settled on the lowest terms, and "for the benefit of the City." When there is a disagreement, the case is to be referred "to two or three respectable persons conversant with the subject and not interested in the Survey," who are to act as arbiters. After all is done, the burgomasters are to "appraise the aforesaid Lots according to the determined quota," and to distribute them amongst those who are prepared to build thereon, giving the preference to interested parties "to build on their own lots themselves, according to the Survey," if their circumstances allow it, "and remain in the mean time possessors and owners of their Gardens and Lots falling without the line of the Streets, until payment shall have been made therefor." If, however, there is a dearth of vacant lots at the distribution, then disposal is to be made to others. It is left to the burgomasters
 "to determine what Streets and Lots" shall be first built on, "only that according to ancient usage the patents required therefor" shall "be applied for and obtained from the Director General and Council."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 219-20; Rec. N. Am., II: 43.
 The burgomasters fixed the time for damage claims "within the period of eight days" after publication of the notice (Feb. 26).—
Rec. N. Am., II: 44. The plan of this most important survey is lost. It was probably made by Capt. Frederick de Koningh (see Feb. 1, 1656) during the early weeks of this year (Rec. N. Am., II: 44), while stationed temporarily in the city. It is also definitely referred to and attributed to him in N. Y. Col. MSS., VI: 301 (N. Y. State Library). O'Callaghan states that the survey showed 120 houses and 1,000 inhabitants.—Hist. N. Neth., II: 540.
 See also Castello Plan, II: 210; also Nov. 10, 1655; April 21, 1656. For the second general survey, see April 19, 1657. As a result of this survey it appears probable that some of the streets were first named. See, for example, 1658; July 6, 22, and Aug.
 8, 1658.

" Jan Peecq or Peeck, "burthened with a wife and nine children," is appointed and confirmed as broker to the Dutch and English merchants of the city, because he speaks both languages and is considered well recommended for the office. His remuneration is to consist of one and a half stuivers (3 cents) commission on "every pound Flemish, Holland currency" involved in the transactions, to be paid fifty per cent. each by buyer and seller.—Rec.
N. Am., II: 45-46. This is the first instance we have met with of a brokerage system in operation in the city.

The city's first fire-wardens are appointed. See Jan. 18. 26
 On Jan. 27, Stuyvesant and the council proposed the observance Mar.
 of a general day of fasting and prayer on March 1, on account of 1
 "the increasing population, the merciful protection against a dreaded and threatening war with our neighbours [New England] unexpectedly changed into a wished for and acceptable peace," etc. The proclamation recalled the Indian uprising of the previous year, when "many Inhabitants" had been "savagely murdered and stripped of property and life; many Boweries, plantations and houses burnt, and the public good . . . retarded." This proclamation was published at the city hall on Feb. 24.—Rec.
N. Am., II: 40-42.

The two burgomasters are authorized, after consulting with 3
 the captains of the burgher companies, "to cause a corporal's guard . . . to patrol and keep watch during Divine Service" on Sundays.—Rec. N. Am., II: 51-52.

To prevent the burghers or others from lodging Indians in their houses over night in the city, the two burgomasters are authorized to prepare ordinances on the subject. At the same time Stuyvesant and the council advise them "to set off and enclose" the city "with palisades in the form" already begun, as a better means "to exclude the wild barbarians and bring them [into] subjection."—Rec.
N. Am., II: 51, 52.

166
 Mai. 5 Charges having been filed by certain householders of the city with Stuyvesant and Councillor Nicasius de Sille, which place the responsibility of "the last disaster and Indian Massacre" (Sept., 1655, q. v.) upon those who were entrusted with the government during Stuyvesant's absence on his expedition against the Swedes on the Delaware, the petitioners are allowed to prosecute inquiry for elucidating their charges, and the burgomasters and schepens are instructed to appoint from their own number a commission "to hear and examine the witnesses" to be brought before them. Accordingly. Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, burgomaster, and Johannes Pietersen Verbrugge, schepen, are commissioned thereto.—Rec. N. Am., II: 54-55.

9 The following minute is made in the Register of Resolutions of the directors at Amsterdam, concerning free passage to New Netherland: "Some deliberations having been had concerning the population of New Netherland, it was resolved and approved, that all mechanics and farmers, who can show that they will be able to make a living there, shall receive, with their wives and children, free passage thither—provided that, if they should wish to return here, they shall be obliged to pay double passage, which shall be communicated to the absent members" (of the chamber).—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1218, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

13 The directors at Amsterdam wish to Stuyvesant and his council, expressing their vexation over the Indian depredations of the previous year, and recommend "that not only the poor prisoners may be ransomed in a suitable manner and returned to their families, but also such precautions may be taken at every instance, that such disasters are not to be feared in the future." Regarding the proposed concentration of the people into villages, they add: "Your Honors' proposition, made for the security of the people in the open country, to settle in close neighborhood and provide their settlements with some means of defence, sufficient at least against an attack, is not extravagant, we think, and it would seem to be quite advisable, to make a provisional treaty, that the savages must keep away from the places, where our people have settled." They suggest a possible "offensive alliance with the English, for which plans have been made before" (in the Hartford treaty). With respect to "the requested subsidy for the suffering and impoverished people," they think "the twentieth penny on the houses and the tenth on the plantations and bouweries, which remained intact," to be a sufficient revenue to be used provisionally for the year, and promise to exert themselves to secure something more than they ask from the city "for the relief of these poor people." To prevent as much as possible the Indians from obtaining arms from the Dutch, "to their own damage," they resolve "that the passengers and free men, who may henceforth go to New-Netherland, shall be obliged from now to take with them a matchlock in the case of a flintlock, as may be seen by their passports."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 63-64.

In a letter of this date, the directors at Amsterdam order Stuyvesant and the council to dismiss Cornelis van Tienhoven from all public offices held by him, and suggest that Nicasius de Sille perform, provisionally, the duties of fiscal. His dismissal was due to a long series of complaints against him.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 342. A rumour of his dismissal reached the ears of the burgomasters and schepens on May 30, but as Van Tienhoven was absent on public business at the South (Delaware) River, the city court awaited his return and confirmation thereof. As fiscal he had been also city scout in the city court. He, himself, appeared at that court on June 7 (see summary under May 30), and gave confirmation of his dismissal, which had been ordered formally on that day by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., II: 108, 109, 111; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 167.

On Aug. 1, Johannes Pietersen Verbrugge (or van Brugge), bookkeeper of the company, complained that he could not close his accounts, because the receiver's books were missing, and Stuyvesant and the council addressed a letter to Van Tienhoven, who had also held the office of receiver-general of the company's revenues, in which they ordered him to furnish the books.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 171. As Van Tienhoven absconded, the council ordered the seizure and sealing of all books and papers belonging to him, on Nov. 7.—Ibid., 176.

On Nov. 18, the new fiscal, De Sille, asked the council for leave to remove the books and papers from the late residence of Van Tienhoven, who, evidently, had committed suicide, since his bat and cane had been found floating on the water; and, on Dec. 21,

De Sille applied for permission to seize all of the real and personal estate, because it was found that Van Tienhoven's wife (Rachel Vigne) was nightly moving goods in baskets from the premises. The council ordered De Sille to take an inventory of the personal effects, but forbade all transfers of the real estate until Van Tienhoven's accounts had been audited. On Dec. 27, the wife petitioned the council for a revocation of the order for taking an inventory, and obtained a stay, but the order of attachment on the real estate was continued.—Ibid., 178. The council, on Feb. 6, 1657, ordered an examination to be made of Van Tienhoven's papers, and the delivery to his wife of such as were private. She was also empowered to sell some lots in the Smith's Vly. On March 13 of the last named year, the council appointed three commissioners to investigate the accounts, and Cornelis van Ruysen, the council's secretary, was added, on the 27th, to assist them in their investigations.—Ibid., 181, 182. See also May 30, 1656.

The directors at Amsterdam wish to Stuyvesant: "The care and tender affection, which we have had all the time for promoting the increase of population and the cultivation of New Netherland, has induced us to resolve and decide that henceforth all mechanics and farmers, who can prove their ability to earn a living there, shall receive free passage for themselves, their wives and children; provided that whenever they wish to return here, they shall pay double fare."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 342.

That Jews were not allowed to worship, collectively, in a synagogue in New Netherland, is shown in a letter from the directors at Amsterdam to Stuyvesant, as follows: "The permission given to the Jews, to go to New-Netherland and enjoy there the same privileges, as they have here [Amsterdam], has been granted only as far as civil and political rights are concerned, without giving the said Jews a claim to the privilege of exercising their religion in a synagogue or at a gathering." This did not preclude them from the exercise of their religion, "in all quietness . . . within their houses."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 341, 351; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 21, 33.

Sibout Claessen, on Nov. 9, 1654, petitioned the city court for relief from intolerable conditions along the shore of the East River (now Pearl Street), and the court ordered his immediate neighbours to plank up their water front with sheet-piling (see Nov. 2, 1654). Claessen now exhibits to the city court his original petition of 1654, and points out the apostil or marginal note of the former burgomasters and schepens; at the same time he requests that the order be obeyed, "so that further loss be prevented by the high water." The court now orders the court messenger to accompany Claessen in calling on the neighbours, and, the work at the city hall having been finished, to require them "to line the bank with boards," in compliance with the earlier order, or the work will be done by the city at their expense.—Rec. N. Am., II: 61.

On June 19, Sybout Claessen, Jacob Steendam, Adolph Pietersen, Sybrant Jansen (also called Galma), Adriaen Blommaert, and Jacob Schellinger (son-in-law of Cornelis Melyn) appeared at the city court as neighbours and expressed their unanimous consent "to construct the sheet piling before their lots near the City Hall on the Strand," but asked that some provision be made for the work in front of the lot of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, deceased, as nobody came forward to represent that property. They also asked for a confirmation of "the survey of the slip and their houses and gardens." These petitioners "were ordered to proceed with the work, and Secretary [Jacob] Kip, as Vendue Master of the property of the deceased," was instructed to pay the expenses against the Kuyter property's proportion. The street inspectors or city surveyors were ordered "to complete, with all diligence, the survey of the sheet piling, houses and lots;" but Jacob Schellinger's house, which lay "in the canal and on the road," as projected by the survey for public improvements, was not to be proceeded with any further.—Ibid., II: 113.

By Sept. 25 (q. v.), the sheet-piling "in front of the City Hall [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley], and before the Water port on the East River [city gate, at Pearl and Wall Sts.]," and at "other places thereabout," was finished.—Ibid., II: 170. On Oct. 2, Claessen was in court as plaintiff against Jansen and Pietersen for having "failed to construct and make the sheeting, which they, with him," had undertaken. They were ordered to get to work together by the following Thursday morning.—Ibid., II: 178. On Oct. 9, these "carpenters of the sheeting before the lot alongside the City Hall" came again into court and requested an order

1656 as to "how far" they were to "erect the sheet-piling." The two
 Mar. burgomasters were delegated to make an inspection and dispose 13 of the matter.—Ibid., II: 183. Yet another hitch occurred in the work, and, on Oct. 30, they appeared again in the city court and requested the magistrates "to signify in what manner the wing on the sheet 'piling at the Caal" (Gräf) should be constructed; whereupon it was ordered that inspection be made the following day, when directions would be given.—Ibid., II: 203.

14 Although permission was granted by the directors at Amsterdam, on Feb. 15, 1655, to the Jews in New Netherland to reside and traffic there, provided they did not become a charge on the deacoury or the West India Co., Stuyvesant and the council refused to permit them to own real estate or to carry on a contiguous trade on the South (Delaware) River, at Fort Orange (Albany), and at other places in the province. A committee of the Jews, therefore, on Nov. 29, 1655, petitioned the provincial government not to hinder them in the enjoyment of their guaranteed rights; but, "for weighty reasons," their request was declined. One of the Jewish merchants at New Amsterdam bought a house at public auction, on Dec. 14, 1655, which, "for pregnant reasons," Stuyvesant and the council would not permit the seller to convey. On the other hand, the government levied heavily on the Jews for funds for the public works.

Now (March 14, 1656) the Jews petition anew, recite the liberties granted to them in 1655, and recall the action taken by the provincial authorities on their previous petition. They declare they are "willing and ready . . . to contribute according to their means," if they may "enjoy the same liberty allowed to other burghers," in trade and in the purchase of real estate. Stuyvesant and the council seek to evade the undoubted right of the Jews to enjoy these liberties and declare them subject to the tax, because the public works are for the "security of the persons and goods of the inhabitants," including Jews.

In the mean time, the advice of the directors is sought as to "the purchase and ownership of real estate" by Jews. The directors, on June 14, 1656, reprimanded Stuyvesant and the council for having forbidden the Jews the open trade and ownership of real property, and ordered execution thereafter "punctually and with more respect." Jews, they said, were not "to establish themselves as mechanics," nor to "have open retail shops." The last prohibition did not stand; such Jewish shops or stores were already in operation at New Amsterdam before the directors wrote, and were allowed to continue.—Texts and translations of original records, in Oppenheim's Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 9-14, 20, 21, 27-28, 29-30, 31-32, 33, 34; Rec. N. Am., II: 63, 262.

15 Members of the city court who absent themselves from the bench are fined. The discharge of these fines is now set down to be monthly.—Rec. N. Am., II: 63.

" An ordinance passed to prevent drunkenness among the Indians, and prohibiting the sale of brandy to them, is published and posted at the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., II: 52, 63.

29 Dirck van Schelluyoe, "Coadjeger" or high constable, asks the city court for instructions as to the confinement of "persons of quality or of good name and character" who are arrested for debt, and is told to take them "to a decent tavern," if they pay their own expenses, or, "otherwise, to the City Hall."—Rec. N. Am., II: 80. See also Jan. 18, 1655.

" Sarah Schepmoes, widow of Jan Schepmoes, deceased, claims the ownership of a haad-bell (schel) in use by the city court at the "Stadt Huys" or city hall. Having proved ownership, she is granted payment of ten florins ($4.) "for the bell out of the burgher excise."—Rec. N. Am., II: 78, revised with Dutch original in office of city clerks, New York. There is no connection here with the bell (black) which the court voted on Jan. 24, 1656 (q. v.), to be hung on the city hall.

Apr. Sander Toursen and his wife are ordered banished from New 2 Netherland for selling liquor to Indians, who became "exceedingly drunk," and had "run about the streets" of New Amsterdam
 "and into the Fort with a great deal of noise."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 67-68.

4 The farming out to the highest bidder of the revenues of the weigh-house in New Amsterdam is considered by Stuyvesant and his council, who, on the 27th, passed an ordinance for regulating the weigh-house fees. No goods were to be weighed before the fees are paid and all goods weighing above 25 lbs. are subject to fees.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 164; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 222-27.

Mattheus de Vos is admitted and appointed as a notary Apr.
 by the council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 165.

" For the good of this City Carel Van Brugge" (Charles Bridges, 4 an Englishman) is "notified by the Court Messenger, to let him take without any hindrance, from the Hill before his lot, lying next the City Hall as much earth as shall be required for filling in before the City Hall."—Rec. N. Am., II: 85.

The magistrates and people of Gravesend petition Stuyvesant 10 and the council for some ordinance and ammunition to protect their village, which has been surrounded with palisades; they are granted "two of the pieces lying near the Packhouse on the Strand [Pearl Street] of the East river," as well as some powder and ball.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 347.

12 Some inhabitants of New Amsterdam, whose children and kindred were held by the Indians, petitioned the city court, on March 20, that means be raised "by a general collection or otherwise" for ransoming the captives. The court at that time approved, and recommended the matter for speedy action to Stuyvesant and the council. The latter now order a contribution in cloth to be made by each merchant of the city for this purpose.—Rec. N. Am., II:
 64; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 165; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 68.

21 The determination of matters relating to the carrying out of the new survey of the city having been left to the burgomasters (see Feb. 25, 1656), the two street inspectors now complain to these officials that surveys are being run "of lots, houses and stoops" in the city without their knowledge, and request that a penalty be imposed, to prevent the disorder occasioned thereby. They also ask for a graded fee for measurements and surveys, on lots, houses, stoops, and fences, respectively. The burgomasters order them "to pay particular attention, that all building be done in good order according to the last survey confirmed by the Director General and Council," and no one is to build before these inspectors have been "on the spot." Fees are established as follows: for a door, "or such like," three stivers (60 cts.); for a house, three guilders ($1.20).—Rec. N. Am.,
 II: 86-87.

The ordinance for regulating the business of the weigh-house
 27 (see May 4, and Aug. 10, 1654) is renewed with amplifications.—
Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 224-27.

29 Stuyvesant and the council order that the excise be paid in strung wampum, in bundles containing at least 25 or 30 guilders.

May Jan Cornelissen Buys (alias Jan Damen) and the widow of Lubbert Gysbertsen, had, in 1654, obtained patents for land in 1 "Gamoenepa" (Communipaw, in the Pavia section, now included in Jersey City, N. J.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 37.
 The place was devastated by the Indians, in September, 1655 (q. v.), the people, being "driven from their houses," taking refuge in New Amsterdam. These two now petition the burgomasters and schepens for permission to conduct taverns in the city, which is granted to them.—Rec. N. Am., II: 93; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 381.

" Thomas Hall and Cornelis Aersen (or Aertsen), who have been commissioned by Stuyvesant and the council as overseers of fences on Manhattan Island, bring suit against nine persons, because "the common fence" has been out of repair, and has been put in order by them as overseers, for which they want the nine to pay, proportionately, at the rate of "one guilder per head of cattle." The court fixes upon this rate, and the parties, "for the most part," are "willing to pay." Jan Vigoe, however, says he has "a private pasture of his own," and so has no use for the common grazing place; but the court holds "that the erected fence" is "for the public advantage," and that those "in default in contributing their share in proportion to their stock," shall "be bound to pay the same . . . according to valuation," within fourteen days.—
Rec. N. Am., II: 92-93. For earliest mention of the Sheep Pasture ("Schapeo Weytie"), see July 1, 1655, and Landmark Map Ref.
 Key, III: 967.

8 Willem Beckman and Thomas Hall appear in the city court as plaintiffs against Skipper Lourens Coroelissen vander Wel and Jacob Schellinger, charging that they have "applied repeatedly to debts to enclose by a common fence their land lying next to theirs, and that they and others" have neglected "to enclose it . . .
 whereby they" are "suffering great loss from the cattle in their crops." The defendants assert that their land is "not under common fence"; claim they obtained from Kieft "a particular groundbrieff thereof," and are "not bound to make a fence in

- 1656 common." Beckman, as schepen, asks Stuyvesant's advice in the dispute "regarding a certain parcel of land, about 5 or 6 morgens land lying within the public Enclosure [the Common] near the Valley, beyond the Fresh Water," where Vander Wel has refused and failed "pro rata to maintain with others the common fence," as he maintains he is not liable. Stuyvesant replied (on the 9th) that "special groundbriefs" were "passed for all lands within the Common Enclosure and even if they were not, and the lands lay within the Common fence, that would excuse no one from maintaining the public enclosure, or from defraying the charges necessary thereto, or aiding to defray the same." The defendant was obliged "to construct his part of the common fence" within two days, or lose his rights.—Rec. N. Am., II: 95, 96-97.
- 18 Nicholas Backer receives a ground-brief for a lot, the present No. 51 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 130; Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e Vol. II, and II: 268-69; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 386. See also Nov. 8, 1655.
- 29 Harboursing of Indians "during the night," between the wall of New Amsterdam "and the Fresh water," is forbidden by ordinance, after Stuyvesant and his council have conferred on the matter with the burgomasters and field officers of the burgher corps. A fine of 25 guilders is named, to be collected from anyone who hereafter lodges "a single Indian during the night without a ticket signed by the Director General or the Secretary." This action was taken to prevent massacres.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 228; Rec. N. Am., I: 22; II: 51-52, 107-8.
- 30 It is rumoured that Cornelis van Tienhoven has been "dismissed from all his offices." This rumour reaches the ears of the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam. If true, it means that a vacancy, among others, has been created in the office of city scout. The city court says that they are "ignorant of the certainty" of the report, and decide to wait until Van Tienhoven, who is absent on a mission of investigation at the South (Delaware) River, has returned, and the dismissal has been confirmed. But the court decides, as soon as the fact is established, to ask Stuyvesant and the council, as they have several times requested before, that the office of scout be filled as a separate office "from the Burghery," unrelated to the office or person of the company's fiscal.
- In a few days, Van Tienhoven returned, and the burgomasters and schepens appealed to Stuyvesant and the council, to whom they also exhibited the concessions obtained by them from the directors, on May 18, 1654 (q. v.). They were answered, on June 7, that the separation of the offices could not be made, "at least" not "without further advice and information" from the directors. This was really prejudged (cf. with N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 317); but that opinion prevailed, and Stuyvesant and the council appointed, on June 26, Nicassus de Sille, who had acted, ad interim, in the dual office, to serve regularly as city scout until an alteration should be made by the directors.—Rec. N. Am., II: 108, 109, 121; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 167, 168.
- At an extraordinary city court session, on June 7, Van Tienhoven appeared, related his dismissal, and asked if the court "had any thing to say relative to the performance of his duties" while schout; if so, would they let him know, so that he might "purge himself" of any charges, or, if not, would they give him "a formal Acte as to his department" in that office. The court resolved, unanimously, that there was "nothing against" him, but, "on the contrary," thanked him "for his services rendered for the good" of the city, in a certificate confirmed with the city seal.—Rec. N. Am., II: 111. See also Feb. 2, 1653; March 13, 1656.
- June 7 Prior to this date, as shown by a reference in a mortgage (Mortgage, 1654-60, trans. by O'Callaghan, 33), Jacob Wolghertsen van Couwenhoven erected his brew-house, the site of which is now covered by Nos. 27 and 29 Stone St. In a court record of Dec. 6, 1664 (Rec. N. Am., V: 167-68), it appears that he had for some years two partners in his brewery, Joannes Withart and Jacob Vis; also that a record of the amount of beer brewed was entered in "beer books." This partnership had expired long before 1664, but from another entry, of July 25, 1665, it appears that he took as partners Vis and Symon Jansen Romeyn.—Ibid., V: 281, 283. Jacob Wolghertsen died, bankrupt, prior to April 12, 1670.—Ibid., VI: 231. The curators of his estate appear to have conveyed the brewery to Oloff van Cortlandt, Johannes van Brugh, Cornelis van Borsum, in right of Sara Kiersted, his wife, and Hendrick Vandewater, "who appear to have been a sort of syndicate of creditors."—Innes, New Am. and Its People, 149. See Liber Deeds, B: 175-76 (New York). See also Castello Plan, I: 304-6.
- The English traders petitioned the burgomasters and schepens, on May 8, for a modification of the export duties imposed on wine and beer, and were assured that the request would be presented to the director-general and council for favourable action. The "free Traders" in the city, a week later, asked for "a repeal of the duty," as it tended to ruin the trade. The supreme authority now takes action by an ordinance, which establishes a new rate.—Rec. N. Am., II: 94, 100; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 231.
- Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto; altho' a contemporary extract exists, in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (4), in N. Y. Pub. Library, and an answer, in part, of the directors, of Dec. 19, is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 371, ff. On account of its importance, a digest of its principal items is given here, viz: They consider granting of freedom to the Jews in New Netherland, on a par with other residents, as "abominable," and say that the Jews have sought it several times, unsuccessfully; capitulation of the Swedes on the Delaware was necessary, reasons given; ship "de Waeg" and Swedes on the South (Delaware) River; the ship "Mauritius" manned with 120 men; attempt to populate the South River in order to conserve it; all captives ransomed from the Indians, save two or three children (a reference to those taken during the raid of 1655); Indians come to Manhattan in new large numbers, from one to three hundred, with things to sell, which Stuyvesant does not despise, yet always keeps an eye on them; wine and beer revenue this year, 5,030 florins; exported wine and beer; Rensselaerswyck refuses to pay taxes (tenths), and also opposes the tapsters' beer and wine excise; Heemstedt, Vlissingen, and Gravesande pretend exemption so long as Rensselaerswyck does not contribute; Fiscal Cornelis van Tienhoven and his brother, Adriaen, given releases in consideration of the fiscal's good service for the company, and desire to go into other employment; Jan de Decker to be made commissary over the store goods in the "Packhuys," and to have seat in the council, but is still at Fort Orange; the ship "Dolphyn" taken from the Swedes with cargo of tobacco; books and accounts to be sent, could not be got ready earlier, because Fiscal Van Tienhoven was at the South River.
- The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant that they would "have been better pleased" if the New Netherland government "had not published" the ordinance of Feb. 1 1656 (q. v.), "against the Lutherans," and "committed them to prison," as it has always been their "intention, to treat them quietly and leniently," that similar laws, without their knowledge, should not be published in future. They order Stuyvesant to "pass it over quietly and let them have free religious exercises in their houses."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 351. For further particulars regarding the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.
- In a letter of this date from the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam, the first intimation is given of the division of the territory on the Delaware, which led to the establishment of the new colony of New Amstel, under the dual jurisdiction of the city of old Amsterdam and the company. Negotiations for the division were under way on Dec. 19, 1656, and the new government was in operation from 1657 until the surrender of New Netherland in 1664. For the documents, see N. Y. Col. Docs., XII.
- A Jewish quarter, "in a convenient place on one or the other side of New Amsterdam," as the Jews might choose, is recommended by Stuyvesant by the directors at Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 351; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 194; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 33. No such concentration of the Jews was carried out.
- Various farmers and owners of plantations on Manhattan Island appear before the council and are notified to pay their tax of tenths during the summer, leaving the same in the field. They excuse themselves on various pretexts; but, on June 27, the director-general and council passed an ordinance warning all persons who were obligated by patent or deed to pay tenths not to remove their crops from the field before coming to an amicable agreement with the government in the selection of the tenths.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 168; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 232; Rec. N. Am., II: 134, 135, 136.
- Dirck Houhuysen is appointed by the council as smith of the 1656 company.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 168. He rented a house owned June by Dr. Jacob Hendricksen Varrevanger, and absconded in 1660, 19 leaving an involved and insolvent estate behind him.—Rec. N. Am.,

III: 192, 233, 234 280, 313; IV: 11, 39, 51.

20 William Beckeman receives a ground-brief for a lot lying "beyond the Fresh Water, whereon his house now stands."—See Liber HH-25: 55 (Albany). He received a confirmatory grant for the same plot on March 7, 1695.—Cal. Coun. Min., 103. The location was at the northern boundary of the present Chatham Square, at about Pell St., and is shown on Pl. 174, Vol. III (at about block 165).

" Haus Dreepier receives a ground-brief for a lot at the corner of the present Broad and Pearl Sts., now covered by the Bush Terminal building.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 130; Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 269; Map of Dutch Grants, 38 Broad St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II:

246; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 374.

present 40 and 42 Broad St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, 25 The farmer of duties complains that vessels depart from New 27 Amsterdam "without asking or receiving from the Fiscal a proper pass . . . and without duly entering their exported goods," which are subject to duty. To prevent the defrauding of the public revenue in this manner, a provincial ordinance is passed, forbidding "any Ships, Yachts, Barks, Ketches or any other vessels, of what nation soever," to "cast anchor before, or near" the city and to raise the same for departure to any place whatever, before "having asked and obtained a proper pass from the Fiscal; under a penalty of 50 pounds Flemish." Nobody is allowed "to embark any Peltries, Wines or Beer . . . subject to import or duty," unless first entered and the duty thereon paid.

Smuggled goods are made forfeit "and three times the value thereof." The fiscal is also ordered to inspect the ships and cargoes before granting a pass.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 233-34.

30 Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven receives a ground-brief for a lot with building thereon called the "Old Church," the location of which was the present No. 39 Pearl St.—See Castello Plan,
C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 266-67; Map of Dutch Grants,
C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 385; see also Aug. 19, 1666.

July A joint conference is held at Fort Amsterdam between the provincial 1 authorities and the burgomasters of New Amsterdam on account of the increasing number of Indians who run about the city's streets in a state of intoxication, and to consider means for ascertaining positively "where they get the liquor." Now "suspicions point to one Jan Dircksen and his wife, whose house the savages frequent" often. They decide that this couple shall "be privately informed and directed to leave by the next ship," but, "upon the intercession of the Burgomasters . . . and the requests of the preachers, and for other reasons," the deportation order is suspended, and instead a reprimand and warning are administered.—N. Y. Cal. Docs., XIII: 69.

4 Dirck Clasen Braecktt becomes the burgomasters and schepens for permission to keep a tavern, which is granted.—Rec. N. Am., II: 137 (cf. 131). This perhaps refers to Dirck Claessen, the potter, who dwelt on the East River shore at about the present Roosevelt St.

24 Stuyvesant and the council, as a supreme court, issue a commitment against Jan Peck, a tavern-keeper, for felonious assault on a soldier in his tavern in the Smits Vly. He is locked up in the city hall, where he protests to the city court that he is illegally held, as he "only defended his house" and wife against the soldier's violence.
—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 170; Rec. N. Am., II: 144, 149.
He was a leading tavern-keeper of the city (ibid., II: 263, 266, 268), but his tavern gave the city and provincial authorities considerable annoyance from illegal acts. See Dec. 30, 1663.

25 Michiel Tadens, a tavern-keeper, is indicted in the supreme court of director-general and council for furnishing liquor to Indians. The case had come up before the city court, which referred it to the higher court.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 170; Rec. N. Am., II: 145. Tadens made his plea and answer. On the 31st, an Indian to whom he had sold liquor gave evidence to the court, and, on Aug. 3, Tadens was sentenced to a fine of 500 guilders, to be imprisoned until it was paid, and afterwards to be banished from the province. He asked that the banishment be commuted to a fine. On Nov. 7, he again petitioned the council for pardon and leave to reside on Long Island, which was granted, he to pay 25 beavers to the church.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 171, 172, 176. His tavern was on the south-west corner of the site of the Maritime building, or No. 11 Pearl St.—See Sept. 5, 1652; July 1, 1664. See also Castello Plan, II: 272; Dutch Grants, II: 387; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981, where the reference should be "Key to Castello Plan, Block G, No. 4," instead of "No. 3." In 1663, he was several times charged with excise violations (Rec. N. Am., IV: 265, 320; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 257), and, on July, 1664, was again charged with selling liquor to Indians.

Aug. Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors 11 at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto, altho' a contemporary extract exists in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (5), in N. Y. Pub. Library, and the answer of the directors, of Dec. 19, is printed in N. Y. Cal. Docs., XII: 131-33; XIII: 70-71; XIV: 371-75. As it is important, the principal items are summarized here, viz: The account books sent over have many errors; Sinnekas and Maquaas; Sinnekas bring 4,000 beavers; ordinance against selling guns and ammunition to Indians to be renewed; firelocks to be 3 to 3½ feet long; Sinnekas dangerous, not to be entertained in the fort or city of New Amsterdam, and trading with them to be done in a trading-house on the river "Achter het Col," where the colony of Nederhorst formerly was; negotiations for Maquaas land at Fort Orange; information received that a Jesuit from Canada has come into the Sinnekas country with about fifteen Frenchmen; Sinnekas a powerful nation, able to take revenge on the Maquaas and the Dutch at Fort Orange; desire for succour for the South (Delaware) River; all necessities are dear, and recommendations for cargoes; no improvement in trade to be expected, whilst beavers are taxed eight per cent.; this year good, and company's debts mostly paid; militia; income from tithes or tenths very small, and colony of Kenschelaerswyck will not pay tenths or excise; Jan de Decker's thanks for seat offered him in the council, but for weighty reasons cannot accept, as he must go to Holland; people at Fort Orange and Beverwyck built a church, toward which there was contributed, on behalf of the company, 1,000 and 1,200 guilders and a bell, the money being paid, and the court there given directions to solicit the bell from the company; "Midwyck" (Midwout) and Hemstedde solicit through the preachers that, with a little bell, three to four bells of 200 to 300 pounds weight be sent over; Dirck Jansen Croon re-are contraband, such as guns and munitions.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 236-39; Rec. N. Am., II: 150-51.

places for ships before New Amsterdam, on both the East and North Rivers, for revenue purposes, and to prevent smuggling

19 On April 8, of this year, the lot, now No. 39 Pearl St., with the "Old Church" which was built in 1633, was sold by order of Gov. Stuyvesant and the council to the highest bidder.—N. Y. Cal. Docs., XIV: 346. Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven was the purchaser (see June 30, this year), but he almost at once became involved in debt and was obliged to give the deed to the baillif, to sell the house and lot, as security for the debts. The "voluntary sale" was fixed by the city court for Aug. 19. At the sale so ordered, Isaac de Forest buys the property.—Liber Deeds, A: 71 (register's office, N. Y. County). On Oct. 2, the creditors of Van Couwenhoven, who had not yet been able to obtain the amount of their claims, were allowed by the court to have the purchase money lifted from De Forest by Secretary Cornelis van Ruyven, as vendue-master, in satisfaction of the debt.—Rec. N. Am., II: 151, 153, 177. See also 1653.

The roadstead for ships on the North River is at the foot of 24

1656 the Beaver Path (now Morris Street). Regulations for the anchorage are now made; they were revised on June 12, 1657.—Rec. N. Am., II: 10; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 237, 248, 312. See Aug. 11.

Sept. 4 Stuyvesant appears in the court of burgomasters and schepens, and makes certain proposals. The court requests in writing, "so as to deliberate thereupon." He draws up an informal minute, in which he gives the substance of what he wants. He says he has come before them solely to ask "once more and for the last time" that supplies be provided, since for want of them the city works are held up, such as surrounding the city with palisades, erecting "other forts or defences, and rendering it defensible and close against a sudden assault either of Indians or others." Worst of all, he says, the work already done is "wholly in ruin," and scarcely a hand is raised to repair anything. He does not impute this state of affairs so much to the "negligence or indisposition" of the city government as "to want of money" for repairs and the completion of what is unfinished. He reminds them of the many plans that have been proposed by him and the council for raising means, apart from the voluntary contributions that were taken up in the previous year. He says they have been allowed to collect a tax on "the cattle slaughtered for consumption" in the city, but he is ignorant of what they have done, and he deems it "not inadvisable to farm it out now." So, too, they have been allowed to "impose and levy something on beer and wine consumed" in the city, and, if it has not profited, the fault is mainly their own. The directors at Amsterdam have ceded to the city "the conveying of lots" in the city. Some persons have lots of very great size, "whether for pleasure or in hope of future advantage and greater profit," which serve only to prevent and retard building operations. For this reason, the directors have instructed that the city shall impose and levy "a reasonable assessment on the lots," and this proposal is now urged anew by Stuyvesant, so that funds may be available to pay "the incurred debts," some of which have "existed already three, others two years," and that the lenders may "receive, henceforth, a reasonable interest, until the discharge thereof." He says the city ought to have an income to pay its debts and to provide a reserve fund, "to be used in time of need." He gives the city government the alternative of fixing upon a tax rate and of liquidating the city's debts, or of having the levy made by him and the council, who would then "assume the incurred debts to themselves" and repair, as far as feasible, "the decayed works, and endeavour to complete the work begun with palisades on the North River."—Rec. N. Am., II: 161-63.

On Sept. 8, the burgomasters and schepens voted to farm out the revenues of the slaughtered cattle and burgher's excise; to explain to Stuyvesant and the council why the new imposts had not been enforced; "to impose some subsidies . . . and make therewith all necessary repairs," on condition of obtaining a formal grant that the same should forever "belong to the City and be disbursed by the Burgomasters;" to solicit from Stuyvesant and council a release of the commonalty "from the outstanding debts," or to write to the directors in the matter. Resolutions were accordingly drawn up on the 11th, in which the city government asked to be relieved from the expense of fortifying and strengthening the city's works, because the city was a "frontier place," whereon the entire country depended, and the charges should be defrayed "from the general revenue" of the company.—Ibid., II: 165-65.

Stuyvesant and the council replied by apostil on the foregoing points on the 20th, claiming that the conditions for new imposts were "premature," because indefinite; "somewhat unbecoming," because "a perpetual and everlasting tax" was "not resorted to in any place;" and "unnecessary," since it was "unexampled" to take anything from the burgomasters and schepens which had been imposed by them "on the burghery by consent of the Director General and Council." But they were counselled to "deliberate on some ways and means to be introduced with the previous knowledge and consent of the Director General and Council."

The city court, on the 27th, concluded that the marginal answer did "not agree with the intention of the petition."—Ibid., II: 174-75. They resolved, on the 28th, "to write at the first opportunity" to Holland, "in order to prevent as much as possible all differences."—Ibid., II: 176. The excise on the slaughter of cattle and the burgher excise on wine and beer were, after some delays, farmed out on Oct. 30, at 710 and 4,200 florins, respectively.—Ibid., II: 176, 179, 204, 208-11. On Nov. 7 (q. v.), Sept. 4 they addressed their grievances to the directors at Amsterdam.—Ibid., II: 216-19.

The fees for a bill of lading at the custom-house, and for the government porters for carrying goods to the company's public store, are prescribed by a provincial ordinance, which regulates also the fees for passports.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 249-50.

Country food products have been brought to New Amsterdam "now and again by Farmers to besold," who are "obliged frequently to remain a long time [at the Strand] with their wares to their great damage," because the people who live at a distance from the beach on the East River are unaware that such things are being offered for sale. This inconvenience the burgher and seriously damages the farmer, who often loses more "by his absence from home" than he gains from his sales. Therefore, Stuyvesant and the council, seeking a remedy, order that "henceforward the Saturdays shall be Marketdays here within this City, on the beach near or in the neighbourhood of Master Hans Kierstede's house" (at what is now Whitehall and Pearl Sts.).—Rec. N. Am., I: 23; II: 169; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 251. See also Castello Plan, II: 263-64; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 959; Pl. 174, Vol. III; and Frontispieces, Vols. I and II. This was the first public market-place in New Amsterdam.—See I: 123, and De Voe, Market Book, 36.

Several commissioners are named by the burgomasters of Amsterdam, Holland, to have the oversight of the affairs of that city's colony of New Amstel, on the Delaware. On the 16th, the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. selected two of its directors for the same purpose.—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (6), in N. Y. Pub. Library. This record is new, and not among the printed evidence.

Hendrick Jansen (de Boer) receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present No. 41 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 129; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and I: 385.

Although orders were issued on Oct. 7, 1655, in regard to the soldiers of the company's garrison at New Amsterdam, requiring them to appear "before the colors at beat of drum," and to post themselves and remain on guard, they were not properly enforced "by the superior and inferior officers." So now another order is given, requiring every soldier to appear "fully armed before the colors," and if found absent "on the third beat of the drum," he shall suffer a fine for the first offence and corporal punishment for the next. If he breaks ranks while standing or marching, or discharges his gun without an order from his superior officer of the troop, he is to be fined a month's pay. Those who are detailed on guard duty are ordered to appear fully armed at drum beat and not to absent themselves without leave, nor put a substitute "in their stead, unless with the knowledge and consent of the Director General, the Captain," or other officer at the time in command, on penalty of forfeiting half a month's wages for the first offence, a month's pay for the second, and corporal punishment thereafter. Other regulations are made against appearing drunk on guard, drinking while on guard, etc. Ner are the soldiers to discharge their muskets "either within or without the fort," except by order of duly appointed superiors. The sergeant of the guard is obliged to drill his men every morning at least an hour and a half, when the weather is "dry and suitable." Fines are distributed, one-third to the complainant and two-thirds to the officers and soldiers of the company.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 252-54.

Jan Jansen, Jr., petitions the city court for permission to keep a tavern, and is granted his request.—Rec. N. Am., II: 170.

The sheet-piling "in front of the City Hall [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley], and before the Water-port on the East River [Pearl and Wall Sts.] and other places thereabout" (from Broad St. to the city hall), was by this time "finished." It is now "deemed expedient, not only for the welfare" of the city in general, but for "the neighbours resident about the beach in particular," that the sheeting be altogether erected and completed, and the burgomasters and schepens give notice through their court messenger to all persons who have "houses or lots on the East River, between the City port and City Hall," to lie their lots properly with planks, "according to the executed plan and survey," made by Capt. De Koningh in the early part of this year, and to finish the work by Dec. 17, or suffer a penalty of 25 florins each, and have the work done by the city at their expense.—Rec. N. Am., II: 170. On Dec. 20, Govert Lockermans informed the city court that the sheet-piling was "not being proceeded with according to order,"

- 1656 so the court again sent its messenger around "to notify the occupants or proprietors of the lots" involved to do each his part properly and without further delay, or the provisions of the former order would be enforced.—Ibid., II: 250-51. See also March 13, 1656.
- " Houses, fences, gates, etc. are erected in New Amsterdam by many persons without the knowledge and approval of the official surveyors, which results in a great deal of irregular and bad building, and tends to the disrepute of the city. It is, in fact, an infraction of an ordinance of July 25, 1647 (q. v.). Therefore, the city court now renews the prohibitions and penalties previously enacted, and publishes the same from the city hall on the 28th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 23; II: 170-71.
- 27 Stuyvesant has resolved to go to Fort Orange (Albany) to settle affairs there, but the two burgomasters attend a meeting of the council and beg him "not to go . . . in the existing circumstances of the Country"—namely, the fear of an Indian attack. He says he "must necessarily be at Fort Orange;" yet, as the magistrates "of Breuckelen, Amersfoort and Middeldwout" have also requested him to remain in the city, he calls another conference of the burgomasters and council at the fort on this day, "to come to some resolution" on the subject. The city court adheres to its former request, and the burgomasters do not attend the conference. The council, however, declares his voyage is necessary, and he goes to Fort Orange.—Rec. N. Am., II: 175-76, 179; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 175; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 368.
- " It having been found that export duties are often paid with very bad beavers, so that when the company's receiver tries to make purchases with them these beavers are refused as payment by the merchants, even "by the very same persons" from whom they were received, "to the serious loss and damage both of the Company and of its Servants in this country;" therefore, the fiscal and the provisional receiver are instructed "not to receive for the Export duty any other pay than good, whole, merchantable Beaver," and in no case to accept "any Summer skins or drieling's" (meaning those at 3/4 the full value), which are "generally rejected and refused by the Merchants themselves."
- Eight guilders to the beaver is the exchange rate named for exported merchandise. The "remitted 4 per cent" duty is made payable in silver coin, at the rate current in Holland, or in good beavers, "reckoned no higher than six guilders, or in goods," if the company needs them, "at 50 per cent advance on the duty." Odd amounts are to be adjusted, payment to be made "in silver coin, or whole well strung Wampum," according to the value then in vogue, or by a return of any overplus amount by the receiver, in like coin or wampum. Half beavers and small pieces are to be valued by weight per pound.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 255-56.
- " Willem Bogardus is appointed by the council to be comptroller of the company's wind-mill, situated west of the fort. He was appointed, on April 25, a clerk in the office of the provincial secretary, which post he still holds.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 166, 175, 183; Rec. N. Am., II: 25.
- Oct. 9 George Wolsey (or Woolsey), of Yarmouth, Eng., who, as representative of Isaac Allerton, Sr., resides in Allerton's warehouse (present Pearl St. and Peck Slip), applies to the city court for permission to keep a tavern there, but is refused. On the 24th, he petitioned the supreme council, which gave its consent on the 26th, for one year.—Rec. N. Am., II: 183; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 39, 176. Wolsey was one of the curators of Allerton's estate in New Netherland, in 1659-61, and had removed from Manhattan Island before May, 1664.—Rec. N. Am., III: 90, 238; V: 55.
- " At the request of the schout, burgomasters, and schepens, Evert Duyckinck, the New Amsterdam glazier, supplies glass for the church windows in the fort, for each division of which he charges two and one-half beavers. Evidently, these were leaded sash with painted family arms, as he was told by the court to collect payment from "each one, for whom the glass was" put in.—Rec. N. Am., II: 183. See also July, 1768. The unfounded statement has been made, based on this and similar records, that glass making was practised in New Amsterdam in Dutch times. See also Addenda.
- 23 Mention is made of the tavern kept by "Michel" Jansen.—Rec. N. Am., II: 194. Michael Jansen (Vreeland) built his house, at (present) No. 12 State St., in 1656 (N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 61), but went hence to New Jersey in 1661.—Laws & Ord., N. Neth., 403-4. See Castello Plao, II: 284-5; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 979.
- Hans Dreper is permitted to tap.—Rec. N. Am., II: 197 His tavern, on the modern plan, would be at the intersection of Pearl, Bridge, and Broad Sts., now covered by the Bush Terminal building. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978.
- The Lutherans petition Stuyvesant and the council for permission to enjoy their own public worship.—Eccles. Rec., I: 358-60. See summary under Oct. 4, 1653.
- As the laws previously enacted against the desecration of the Sabbath and the giving of intoxicants to Indians (see June 18, 1643) are constantly disregarded, Stuyvesant and the council make another law, providing that all ordinary labour on the Sabbath, as well as hunting and fishing, shall be prohibited, "on pain of forfeiting One pound Flemish for each person." Moreover, a double fine is prescribed for "any lower or unlawful exercise or Amusement, Drunkenness, frequenting Taverns or Tippling houses, dancing, playing Ball, Cards, Tricktrack, Tennis, Cricket or Ninepins, going on pleasure parties in a Boat, Car or Wagon, before, between or during Divine Services." A fine of six guilders for each person is to be levied against tavern-keepers or tapsters who entertain clubs, tap, give away, or sell "any Brandy, Wine, Beer, or Strong Liquor to any person before, between or during the Sermons;" and "every person found drinking" is to be subjected to a fine of three guilders. Taverns are also not to entertain parties or sell intoxicants "to any person at night, on Sundays or on other days, after the posting of the guard or ringing of the bell, under the same penalty." This order exempts "imatoms of the family" or domestic guests, or "persons appointed on public business with the consent and by order of the Magistrates." The law inveighs against "the very dangerous, injurious and damnable sale, bestowal and giving" of intoxicants to the Indians, and puts a complete ban on this traffic, under punishment for disobedience of a fine of 500 guilders, corporal punishment, and banishment from the country. Everybody, even servants, are enjoined to give information about infractions, and failure to reveal is to characterize the delinquent as "privy to" the infringement and make him liable for the payment of half the fine. Peddling liquors of any kind along the rivers by skippers, sloop owners, canoe-men, boat men, "or any other free or bound Inhabitants," is to be stopped, and shipments of liquors are to be made only in conformity with prescribed regulations, under a permit, and subject to subsequent proof of delivery made to the consignee.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 258-63; Rec. N. Am., I: 24-27; II: 204-8. Published on Oct. 30. Note the variations in the two translations. See also Jan. 9, 1657.
- Pelgrom Cloek (or Clocq), upon his petition to the council, is granted appointment as a notary in New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 176. On July 21, 1661, he was suspended by the city court for six weeks, on account of irregularities in office, and later was fined for a similar offense.—Rec. N. Am., III: 348-49, 416-17.
- Dirck van Schellunne resigns his office as "Concierge" (high constable, bailiff, or city marshal) of New Amsterdam (see Jan. 18, 1655), and Mattheus de Vos, city notary, applies to the city court for the office, pleading as a recommendation that the burgomasters have "already conferred on him the appointment of governor of the City Hall" (Gastelynschap). The court gave him the place on the 6th, and his appointment was confirmed by Stuyvesant and the council on Dec. 7.—Rec. N. Am., II: 220-21; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 177.
- Three sworn butchers are appointed for the city by the burgomasters and schepens, "to serve in butchering and cutting up, and to provide, have and possess their own ropes, hand-barrows, troughs and other articles requisite for slaughtering." Rates for slaughtering and dissecting oxen, cows, calves, pigs, sheep, and goats are established, subject to approval by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., II: 222-23. On the 20th, the city court, with Stuyvesant's approval, gave "every one" who made "a profession of slaughtering," or should "kill for himself," the right to do so, "but at such price as the Court" had fixed or should establish, and only upon receiving "a proper permit from the Farmer."—Ibid., II: 232.
- Gysbert Op Dyck applies to the burgomasters and schepens for permission to keep a tavern, "as he hired the house next the City" (city hall?), and was "occasionally asked to lodge strangers and to sell them wine and beer," which is granted.—Rec. N. Am., II: 222. Op Dyck had been several times commissary at Fort Good Hope (Hartford, Conn.). He held an imperfect patent for Coney Island from 1644 until declared void in 1662. In 1656, he was a commissioner of tithes and a court messenger of the city court of New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 49, 70, 109; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 57, 360, 508; Rec. N. Am., II: 276.

The frequent resolution of the burghmasters and schepens to lay their grievances before the directors at Amsterdam (see Sept. 4) now finds expression in a letter, in which they petition for the restoration to the city treasury of the revenue of the weigh-scales and the ferry. See the "Form of Government," of Feb. 2, 1653. They also say that the receipts from the slaughtered cattle and the burgher excise are by no means adequate to pay for the general public works, much less for more urgent "repairs and erection of the City Walls, which were hastily built of sods and afterwards a plank curtain added," but are now fallen into ruin; nor for "the sheet piling along the river;" for "the repairs of the City Hall;" for "watchhouses;" for "the building of schools;" for "the construction of the Graft [Canal] and other similar matters," necessary "to serve as better defenses in time of need"—all of which, they add, could be done if the directors would favour the city with the additional revenues, "and release it from the old debts incurred in the troubles" with their English neighbours. They say that, on account of "the inability of the Commonalty," "not one third part" has been collected of the general assessment levied in Oct., 1655. Among other things, they ask that effect be given to the former grant of the directors, of May 18, 1654, in regard to the separation of the office of city scout from that of the company's fiscal.—Rec. N. Am., 216-19. But the directors, on April 7, 1657, informed Stuyvesant that they were still resolved "not to separate the office of Scout from that of the Fiscal . . . that the duties of both be performed by one person."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388.

On the other hand, Stuyvesant and the council made a provisional grant of one fourth of the revenue of the public weigh-scales to the city treasury, on Jan. 25, 1658 (see summary under Jan. 22, 1658), subject to ratification by the directors at Amsterdam; but the directors objected, on Feb. 13, 1659 (q. v.), because the grant had been made without first consulting them, and Stuyvesant and the council replied, on July 29, that the proceeds had never been handed over to the city and, in view of their displeasure, would not be paid over without their order.—Rec. N. Am., II: 314; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 432, 441, 449.

William Hallett, a Baptist, who was confirmed as schout or prosecuting officer of Vlissingen (Flushing) in March, 1656, is now held a prisoner by order of Stuyvesant and the council, because he has "the audacity to call and allow to be called conventicles and gatherings at his house," and, in violation of the provincial ordinances, has permitted "an exegesis and interpretation of God's Holy Word," together with "the administration and service of the sacraments [the eucharist and baptism] by one William Wickendam," a Baptist from Rhode Island but native of Oxfordshire, England, all of which the authorities declare to be "in direct contradiction with the general political and ecclesiastical rules" of the mother country, and particularly violative of the provincial laws, which they declare Hallett "as schout . . . was bound to uphold and strictly enforce," but nevertheless "himself . . . transgressed and disobeyed." Hallett is dismissed from his office, fined 50 pounds Flemish, and ordered "banished" from New Netherland, meanwhile being held a prisoner until his fine and the costs of the court are paid.

On the same day, the provincial court sentenced Wickendam to pay a fine of 100 pounds Flemish and be banished, but to remain in prison until he paid his fine and the costs of the prosecution. However, on the 11th, the court (having been "credibly informed" that Wickendam was "a very poor man with a wife and several children and a cobbler by trade," which trade he did not follow, and so had no means) remitted his fine, on condition that he quit the province and, if ever caught thereafter within its confines, be obliged to pay the sum remitted.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 343, 369-70. "No appeal was made to the charter of the town by the condemned prisoners for the manifest reason that the charter of Flushing did not guarantee freedom of worship, but freedom of conscience. It was only when this freedom of conscience seemed to be called into question by 'an order from the Hon. Director General not to admit, lodge and entertain in the said village any one of the heretical and abominable sect called the Quakers," that the people of Flushing appealed to the right guaranteed in their charter.—Zwierlein, Religion in N. Neth., 165-66.

Complaint is made in the city court against Jacob Stevensen by his next door neighbour on Pearl St., Hon. Jacob Strycker, because he neither repairs nor pulls down his chimney, which endangers "the whole street" with "a sudden destruction by fire." Stevensen, and his wife, Mary Joosten, are forbidden to build any more fires, "under such circumstances," and the case is put at the disposal of the fire inspectors of the city. Stevensen and his wife had come over from Holland in the previous year, and were soon in court, charged by their neighbours with living "dreadful and immoral lives," for which they were threatened with banishment.—Rec. N. Am., I: 317; II: 230-31.

Paulus vander Beek, as farmer of the burgher excise, asks the city court to "fix some hours in the day" when he may "issue licenses" and when they may "be taken by the Burghers;" also that the brewers be prohibited from delivering beer, except through the sworn beer carriers, "so as to prevent all fraud." The court decides "that the Farmer or his collector" shall "sit every morning from 8 to 11 o'clock, and in the afternoon from 1 to 4 o'clock, at a certain place," which Vander Beek says will be "the office of Isaack d'Foreest." Here, and only at the prescribed hours, licenses are to be issued, "except occasionally to some strangers" who may wish to take away with them wine or beer, "and who are to be accommodated out of hours. The delivery of beer is allowed the brewers only through "the sworn beer carriers or one of them," unless special consent is given to the contrary.—Rec. N. Am., II: 228.

Solomon La Chair, as farmer of the slaughter excise, suggests to the city court specifications for regulating the business of his office, and the court establishes rules, rates, and fines, accordingly.—Rec. N. Am., II: 232-33.

Neeltje or Cornelia Wessels, mother of Warnea Wessels (see Nov. 23, 1654), petitions the burghmasters and schepens for "leave to follow the trade of an eating house" and tavern, which is granted "on condition that she observe such order as is proper therein."—Rec. N. Am., II: 233; cf. 263, in list of tavern-keepers. Stevens locates this tavern on "Paerel Straet" (Pearl St.), near "de Heere Graft" (Broad St.).—N. Y. Herald, Dec. 17, 1893.

Paulus vander Beek, the farmer of the burgher excise in New Amsterdam, sends a communication to the court of burghmasters and schepens, requesting to be maintained in his rights. He states that he went on the day before with the court messenger to the house of Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, brewer and one of the burghmasters, "to inspect his cellar," in order to find out if any beer or wine was there; but he was forbidden to do so by Van Cortlandt. This action, he alleges, has prevented him from catching all the other brewers in town who have not made a return to him. He cites a law of old Amsterdam, of 1586, as his evidence that beer should not be taken to any houses from breweries "without a permit from the excise officer." As the brewers have failed to make entry through him, he maintains that he has the right to search their cellars, and asks that Van Cortlandt and the other brewers be condemned to pay fines. With Van Cortlandt and other brewers as members of the court, a ticklish situation is presented. The members of the bench who are not brewers are unwilling to "decide absolutely in the case," so it is agreed that they shall communicate with Stuyvesant about the question and, after deliberation, make a decision. The brewers claim they are not classified as "beer merchants," so are not under the law cited. These points were submitted to Stuyvesant, whose answer came in a provincial ordinance on Nov. 25, which further regulated the excise. It was a compromise, so far as the immediate controversy was concerned.—Rec. N. Am., II: 233-37; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 263-65. (These two translations of the ordinance of Nov. 25 are irreconcilably different.)

Vander Beek again asked the court, on the 28th, for "an act of consent, to visit all cellars and houses, in order to prevent all smuggling, and for the maintenance of the City excise." The court decided that all who received wine or beer from Holland or other places should have to "bargain with the Farmer for what they consume in their houses over the ordinary duty," and when disagreements occurred the court would regulate the same. The brewers who were members of the court objected to Stuyvesant's ordinance as prejudicial to the interests of all brewers in the city,

1636 and determined to address Stuyvesant in the matter, so as "to Nov. prevent, if possible, the same being enforced." 9

23 A conference was held with him on the 20th; he told them "that he had offered merely a simple advice," and now left it to the city court to "make such an order on the Farmer's petition" as this court "should deem proper."—Rec. N. Am., II: 237-38.

Vander Beeck was summoned before the city court on the 30th for examination; he insisted that the regulations be enforced, that the brewers be bound, "like other Burghers, to pay the Burgher excise," and be required to make entry of what they brewed as soon as they put it in barrels, "so as to prevent all frauds," and to "regulate the gauging," and also enter what the brewers had hitherto failed to have entered for excise. The immediate outcome was a set of rules drawn up by the burgo-masters and schepens, which Stuyvesant approved on Dec. 5, and which were published and posted at the city hall on the 6th, so that nobody might "pretend ignorance."—Ibid., I: 27-28; II: 238-41.

On Dec. 11, Burgomaster Van Cortlandt, Schepen Jan Vigne, Schepen Willem Beckman, and Pieter van Couwenhoven, all brewers, and three of them members of the bench, were defendants in the city court, charged by Vander Beeck with smuggling.—Ibid., II: 244-46. The cases were postponed; but, on Dec. 22, the farmer of the excise delivered his answer in court and the schout and remaining members of the bench, who were not under charges, voted to absolve Vigne, Beckman, and Van Couwenhoven from the charge of smuggling, because the order in regard thereto was not made until after the acts complained of were committed. But they were required to pay to the farmer specified sums as well as the costs of suit in each case. Van Cortlandt's case was not so easily settled. The court could not "agree in opinion," and concluded "to go in a body" to Stuyvesant, "with all the papers" in the case, "hear his advice thereupon, and follow his conclusion."—Ibid., II: 249, 250, 252-54. For the regulations that followed upon this excise matter, see Jan. 9, 1657.

Dec. The burgo-masters of Amsterdam, Holland, with the advice and consent of the lords of the states-general, promulgate a revised code of regulations governing the transportation of all persons to New Netherland, whether servants, colonists, or "other Free persons," and their conduct during the voyage. The fourteen chapters of this important code concern: First,—obedience due to skippers and military captains; the administration of justice by a board of six persons on shipboard, consisting of the skipper, supercargo, commander of the soldiers, pilot, chief boatswain, and gunner. In case of conspiracies or "notorious capital crimes," on either the outward or homeward voyage, the guilty persons, after investigation by the board, are to be delivered over and punished, either in Holland or in New Netherland, "according to their deserts."

Second,—penalties for cursing and blaspheming; respect due to the clergy; the requirement to attend morning and evening prayers. "No man shall raise or bring forward any question or argument on the subject of religion, on pain of being placed on bread and water three days in the ship's galley."

Third,—no persons to be received on board without passports; no persons "bound to service," etc., to be brought from New Netherland by the skipper, etc. "except with special consent of the Director there, on pain of forfeiting Six hundred florins for each person." All skippers, etc. are to keep a journal on each of their voyages, which they shall "deliver over to the Burgomasters or their commissaries, appointed over the Colony in New Netherland," or suffer penalty. Officers, soldiers, and sailors are required to repair on board the ships at drum beat. They shall not run their ships into foreign ports, except in case of urgent necessity justifiable under bond. Persons going to New Netherland in the service of the city of Amsterdam "shall be bound to remain there and to serve by water and by land, for the term of four years, exclusive of the time spent in going and returning, or as much longer or shorter as the City shall have need of them, and this Voyage may require." They may be sent home sooner, however, at the discretion of the city officials of Amsterdam. Penalties and punishments are prescribed for deserters.

Fourth and fifth,—provisions relating to wages under various circumstances, the care of the wounded, etc.

Sixth,—provisions relating to private trading enterprises by persons in the service, the disbursement of goods from the public store, etc.

Seventh,—the obligation to be content with fixed rations during the voyage. "Every one shall be bound to drink every day his ration of wine without being permitted to save it or sell it to any body else, and the ration of him who may not require to drink it shall remain in the pipe, and he shall not be at liberty to demand said portion afterward." A penalty is provided for stealing provisions, or throwing food overboard on the pretext that it is not good, except by consent of the skipper or commissary.

Eighth,—the care and inspection of arms and powder.

Ninth,—the duty of surgeons to give due service cheerfully, with no other compensation than monthly pay.

Tenth,—regulations relating to wills and the property of deceased persons.

Eleventh,—orders concerning various offences and disorders on the voyage. Dice, cards, or other implements of gaming are not to be brought on board, under penalties for infractions, "unless the skippers or ship's Council should permit something of the sort for pastime." The loser of a wager in a forbidden game shall not be obliged to pay, or, having paid, the winner must repay it or let it be deducted from his monthly wages, and both winner and loser shall pay a fine. Any person guilty of drunkenness, assault, drawing a knife in anger, or doing bodily harm to any person, "shall be nailed to the mast with a knife through his hand and there remain until he draws it through and if he wound anyone he shall be keel-hauled, forfeiting nevertheless six months' pay." If guilty of murder, "he shall while living be thrown overboard with the corpse, and forfeit all his monthly wages and booty." A person who carries "fire or a light into the hold, the ship's battery or the powder magazine," or who uses "any fire or candles except by permission of the Skipper and Commissary," shall be "whipped with cat-o-nine-tails through his quarters," etc. To further prevent the danger of fire, and "the trucking which arises from bartering tobacco and drink," there is prohibition against selling or bartering of tobacco, and against the use of it except during the day, and then only on the forward deck before the mainmast, with the consent of the skipper and commissary.

Twelfth,—concerning the enforcement of all these regulations.

Thirteenth,—the duties and obligations of the soldiers and council of war. "All Military Officers and Soldiers, and when necessary all others in the City's employ shall, without any exception, be bound . . . to labor at erecting and repairing of Forts, Batteries, Trenches and other works, . . ." Every one "shall be charged with his arms and have their cost deducted from his monthly wages received from the City. . . ." No one is permitted to do injury to the person or property of the inhabitants of New Netherland, "whether French, English or other Christian Nation, or to the Natives of the Country. . . ."

Fourteenth,—munitions of war not to be sold to Indians. "And, therefore, every one must, if needs be, submit to a proper inspection and examination of his Chests, Cases, Casks and other packages, before he be able to go ashore."

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: "We consider a change of the value of your currency, that is, placing the heaver at 6 fl. instead of 8, and wampum at 8 for a stiver, instead of 6, a matter of great importance and have therefore deferred the consideration of it until next spring. Meanwhile we shall think about it and later inform you of our opinion and wishes."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 372. See April 7, 1657.

The directors at Amsterdam, in order to obviate any "further expenditures and troubles," write to Stuyvesant their "consent to have the fort there [New Amsterdam] surrounded by a wall of cut stone," and say they intended "for that purpose" to send over "some good masons also some carpenters, in the spring." They recommend to Stuyvesant, meanwhile, "to prepare the work there and have everything ready as far as possible." They say it is "not necessary to wait for the required sailors, because the Company's negroes" are "sufficient to bring and fetch the needed material."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 373.

A year later (Dec. 22, 1657), they write again, as follows: "At your urgent solicitations and in order to push the walling in of the Fort we have engaged three stone-masons, who with . . . sailors, called for formerly, are now going over at such wages, as the enclosed list shows; as yet we have not been able to engage carpenters, because they are more inclined not to enter service and to go there as free men, as some are doing now with these ships, so that if need be you may employ them on day's wages."—Ibid., XIV: 401.

1656 On March 19, 1658, Bartholomeus van Schel and the two other Dec. masons who had recently arrived from Holland to complete the stone wall around Fort New Amsterdam applied to the council for an increase of allowance, which was granted.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 192. A few months later (Aug. 19), Stuyvesant presented proposals to the council for completing the stone wall of the fort, as well as for enclosing the city at the river side with palisades.—Ibid., XIV: 200.

The extra allowance granted to the masons displeased the directors, who, on Feb. 13, 1659, wrote: "We cannot approve of it, the more so as according to your testimony these men are progressing lazily and slowly in their work. We direct you therefore, to discharge them, if these masons are not willing to work diligently and properly for the stipulated pay of 14 fl., and in that case to deduct and make them pay for the passage here [Holland]. To finish the work on the Fort you may then engage such English masons, as understand to build with stone."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 428. Stuyvesant and the council explained, on July 23, that the increase of one guilder in wampum was not in day's pay, but for board money, and said a change would be made in the boarding regulations of these men to meet the objections.—Ibid., XIV: 439.

We see, then, that the plan for walling in the fort with stone had its inception in 1656, yet that the actual work had scarcely begun before 1658, and was still in progress in 1659. We also know that Bartholomeus van Schel and the other masons received their discharge from the public service on May 23, 1661.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 224. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944.

The receipts from duties in New Netherland during this year are estimated by the directors at Amsterdam to amount to 51,400 florins ($205,560), which does not include "all the other revenues in the country." Nevertheless, all the revenues together are "hardly sufficient to pay the old debts," gross defalcations having taken place in the treasury through the misconduct of Adrian van Tienhoven and his brother, Cornelis, the company's fiscal.—From a report by the directors to Stuyvesant, N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 373.

20 An important criminal action has been before the city court for several months, in which Geert (Gertrude) Coerten and her husband, Guert, have been accused of slandering the reputations of Cornelis Steenwyck and the wife of Willem Beckman, one of the schepens. The gossips of New Amsterdam have a live subject, and Beckman pursues the case relentlessly.—Rec. N. Am., II: 184, 200, 250. But the court considers its authority "too limited" to pronounce judgment, which inspires them to petition Stuyvesant and the council for an extension of authority, so as to be able to "judge and execute sentence in all criminal matters, capital cases excepted."

On the 21st, Stuyvesant and the council granted this inferior court the right "to judge all injuries and criminal delicts of a minor degree to branding and incarcerating," unless an appeal were taken by the defendant to them, as the supreme court, within 24 hours after sentence had been pronounced. If the judgment of the lower court was confirmed or revised by the higher, the final "execution of the punishment of the prisoner" was to be left to the city court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens.—Ibid., II: 250-52; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 178; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 268-69.

In a deed recorded this day, Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven conveys to Nicholaes de Meyer the "lot where the Mill stands" on the south side of the Slyck Steegh.—Liber Deeds, A: 83 (New York). This mill stood in the rear of the present No. 41 Stone St.—See Castello Plan, II: 308-9; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961, and Pl. 174, Vol. III. See also 1656 and 1660.

21 The council grants Isaac de Forest permission to conclude a contract with Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven for all the strong beer he shall brew for a year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 178. At this time, Van Couwenhoven is financially embarrassed; is being pursued in court by his creditors, and is obliged to sell off some of his property to avoid an execution sale by either the schout or the city marshal. He seems also to have considerable owing to him by others, which he cannot easily collect.—Rec. N. Am., II: 151, 153, 177, 242, 249, 281. De Forest's contract is designed, among other things, to prevent the abandonment of Van Couwenhoven's "well-situated brewery" (the site of present 27 and 29 Stone St.), and to save its owner from ruin.—Innes, New Am. and Its People, 147, 148.

But Van Couwenhoven continued to be harassed by debts. Dec. On Jan. 21, 1658, he was sued in the city court for the payment of a mortgage of fl. 643:19 st. on "the stone house, the mill and lot" which he owned, and on Feb. 11, the attorneys of the mortgagor asked the court "that the mortgage be sold by execution," so that the moneys might be obtained.—Rec. N. Am., II: 307, 326, 334, 340, 368. Perhaps about this time, Van Couwenhoven formed a partnership in the business of brewing with Johannes Withart and Jacobus Vis, which could not have lasted many years, judging from a long court litigation, in 1664-5, over the closing of the accounts of this copartnership, said then to have ended "several years" before.—Ibid., V: 154, 158, 163, 167, 281, 283. At any rate, Van Couwenhoven continued the brewery, heavily mortgaged to Pieter Rudolphus (d. 1661).

On June 12, 1663, Fredryck Flypsen (Philipse), who had only recently married Rudolphus's widow (Margaret Hardenbrook), exhibited in court "a judgment, mortgage and settlement" against Van Couwenhoven, and demanded in satisfaction thereof the sale by execution of the "brewing materials, hypothecated to his predecessor and subsequently to him." To which Van Couwenhoven replied he had already "allowed his dwelling house, brewery and its contents to be seized for sale on the 2d July next," so as to satisfy his creditors therefrom, and the court ordered Flypsen to wait, "saving his action in case of preference or concurrence." On July 3, Flypsen requested the court for a warrant to the city marshal "to sell the dwelling house, brewery, brew vat and brewing apparatus" of Van Couwenhoven in satisfaction of the mortgage, which the court ordered the marshal to execute, who presently undertook "to seize his brew kettle and brewing apparatus." When Van Couwenhoven appealed to the court (July 12) for leniency, he was ordered to see Flypsen in the matter.—Ibid., IV: 256-57, 271-72, 282; Bolton, Hist. of Westchester Co. (ed. of 1881), I: 511-12.

Gysbert Op Dyck and Claes van Elslant, Jr., are admitted as court messengers of the city court on a yearly salary, each of 150 guilders, on behalf of the West India Co., and 50 guilders, each, on the part of the city.—Rec. N. Am., II: 276.

A renewal of the ordinance "against any person shooting or drumming, etc., on New Year's day, or planting Maypoles on May day," is published from the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., II: 254.

1657

The West India Co. expended fl. 5,269:10 st. during this year for transporting and victualing soldiers who went over to New Netherland in the ships "Draetvat," "St. Jan," and "Gulde Otter," as well as for certain persons conducted back to Holland, for ammunition, etc.—New Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Nicholaes Bernard receives a ground-brief for a lot on William St. just south of Wall St., the ground being now part of the site of the building of the National City Bank.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 406.

Stuyvesant and the council receive "manifold complaints of Inhabitants and Strangers . . . respecting the great, excessive and intolerable dearth of all sorts of necessary commodities and household supplies, the prices of which are enhanced from time to time, principally, among other causes, in consequence of the high price of Beaver and other Peltries in this country beyond the value, which, by reason of the great abundance of Wampum, is advanced, to ten, eleven and twelve guilders for one Beaver; And Wampum being, for want of Silver and Gold coin, as yet the most general and common Currency between Man and Man, Buyer and Seller, domestic articles and daily necessities are rated according to that price, and become dearer, from time to time; the rather, as not only Merchants, but also, consequently, Shop-keepers, Tradesmen, Brewers, Bakers, Tapsters and Grocers make a difference of 30, 40 @ 50 per cent when they sell their wares for Wampum or for Beaver. This tends, then, so far to the serious damage, distress and loss of the common Mechanics, Brewers, Farmers and other good Inhabitants of this Province, that the Superior and inferior magistrates of this Province are blamed, abused and cursed by Strangers and Inhabitants, and the Country in general receives a bad name, while some greedy people do not hesitate to sell the most necessary eatables and drinkables, according to their insatiable avarice, viz. the can of Vinegar at 18 @ 20 stivers; the can of 1657 Oil at 4 @ 5 guilders; the can of French wine at 40 @ 45 stivers; Jan. the gill of Brandy at 15 stivers, and two quarts of home brewed 3 Beer, far above its price, at 14 @ 15 stivers, &c., which the greater number endeavor to excuse on the ground that they lose a great deal in the counting of the Wampum; that it is partly short and partly long; that they must give 11 @ 12 and more guilders before they can convert the Wampum into Beaver."

These conditions determine Stuyvesant and the council to work out regulatory measures, in an ordinance of this date, which declares: "Wampum a commodity and merchandise in the matter of commerce and wholesale trade; to wit, only among those who import it from abroad, or trade it in this Province with Indians for Furs; but inasmuch as, for want of Silver and Gold coin or other pay, Wampum must, in smaller quantities, serve as currency between Man and Man, Buyer and Seller, it is resolved "to rate Wampum, and as far as is possible to cause it to be rated at the value of Beaver, the Beaver being still reckoned, until further Order and advice from Parlia, at Eight guilders and no higher." To prevent further "complaints of miscounting of the Wampum" and loss to the Company's treasury, it is ordered that hereafter "Wampum shall not be paid out or received, between Inhabitants and Inhabitants of this Province, even for merchandise or for contracts made before this in Wampum, by the tale or silver, but only by a stamped measure, authorized to be made and stamped for that purpose, by the Director General and Council, the smallest of which measures shall be five stivers; the whole ten, and the double two stivers."

If a purchase amounts to less than half the smallest measure, or 2½ stivers, "the Receiver or the Payer" are to "make up the smallest fraction under or over 2½ stivers, by the tale;" each white Wampum bead being reckoned at half a farthing, and each black bead at one farthing. Publication of the law and obedience to it "everywhere within this Province of New Netherland" is enjoined. A fine of 50 pounds, Flemish, for the first infraction and double penalty for a second offence are the punishments to be meted out to those who "paid out or received any Wampum by the tale, or any other measure than that Ordained and stamped" as provided by this law.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 289-92.

On Jan. 8, Nicasiaus de Sille, the first provincial councillor, informed the burgomasters and schepens that the director-general and council intended "to publish a certain Ordinance relative to the zeevan and that by a certain measure," meaning the proposed law described above. He told them that the provincial authorities wanted the advice of the city fathers therein, who, considering it "a matter of great importance" to the public, thought it wise "to invite some of the principal Burgbers and traders to the City Hall to aid in advising with them, in the form of a Common Council, on the subject for the public good."

The afternoon of the 8th was fixed upon for this purpose, when the meeting took place in the city hall. Stuyvesant was accompanied by De Sille. The city bench was represented by Allard Anthony, Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, Johannes Verbrugge, Jacob Strycker, Jan Vigne, Willem Beckman, and Hendrick Kip. Those invited by the city bench, "after having communicated with" Stuyvesant, were Cornelis Steenwyck, Govert Loockermans, Joost Teunissen, the baker, Coenraet Ten Eyck, Isaac de Foreest, Daniel Litschoe, and Abram de La Noy. They assembled "in the ordinary Council Chamber of the City Hall." Stuyvesant placed before the meeting "certain oral propositions relative to the decline of the zeevan and the causes thereof." He told them the subject had been considered "in the Supreme Council at various times about six months or longer ago, and that it was finally resolved to fix the zeevan at a certain rate whereof his Hon<sup>d</sup> submitted a sample, which should be about eight zeevans for one stiver." He then asked "why it should not be so rated . . . or if possible to propose and to aid in devising a better expedient," since it was "the intention" of the provincial government "to render the zeevan as current as beavers or other pay, because the Commonalty can obtain necessities for that, and to obviate the severe scarcity which now causes a difference fully of 30 per cent in all payments in zeevan." The invited representatives of the commonalty were "requested to retire to confer thereupon together." They did so, but returning again said they deferred "to the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Burgomasters and Schepens . . . as Fathers and Protectors of the Commonalty" to make "such disposition" as they might "deem expedient." They also declared that, "as no zeevan is to be expected immediately, that they should wish much, the rating may be postponed for 6 @ 8 weeks or longer until the trade comes and every one can get rid of what zeevan he has." They maintained also "that changing the rate of the zeevan will not make any thing cheaper nor afford any person better accommodation, but create considerable confusion," and that, as it would immediately become known to the Indians, more would be charged for everything by the Indians, who would "enrich themselves," and as a consequence the rate could never be restored to its previous state. Then "various debates arose thereupon." The invited representatives of the people "finally withdrew," leaving the determination "to their Superiors and the Burgomasters and Schepens."

Then, "after divers debates in Court" between Stuyvesant, De Sille, and the burgomasters and schepens, "it was determined to postpone the rating of the zeevan to a better and fitter opportunity, and to let it go at the same rate as it has done to the present time; and it was thought necessary to make a difference by Ordinance in the payment of zeevan, silver, beavers or tobacco as already exists among all as well in trade as in labor, and to fix the price accordingly of beer, wine, bread, and other daily necessities, each different according to the pay."—Rec. N. Am., II: 260-61.

Formal suspension of the ordinance, "until the Wampum be somewhat reduced in quantity" was voted by the provincial council on Jan. 9.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 292-93.

On Dec. 22, the directors at Amsterdam referred to the wampum ordinance, sent it back to Stuyvesant, with a "few alterations," adjudged that wampum should not be rated or exchanged at a higher rate than in New England, and ordered that all ordinances or edicts should in future be issued in the name of the chamber of Amsterdam, instead of using only the title of the West India Co.—Ibid., II: 293; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 400. See Jan. 8, 1657. See also Nov. 29, 1657, for the further ordinance concerning wampum.

A conference, "in the form of a Common Council," is held between Stuyvesant, De Sille, the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, and seven of the principal merchants of the city, "in the ordinary Council Chamber of the City Hall," to deliberate concerning the decline of wampum as money (for full particulars, see Jan. 3); but other matters are "proposed and decided to be taken into deliberation," and with this view a memorandum is made by the schout. These proposals relate to establishing a "law of citizenship" or Burgrecht, "to keeping open store and selling by retail practised to the present time both by Jews and all foreigners."—Rec. N. Am., II: 260-62.

Warnaer Vessels applies to the burgomasters and schepens for "the office of gauger and assizer of barrels" in the city. He receives the appointment. On the 9th, he took the oath, and, on the 13th, regulations were made for him for gauging and stamping or branding "all barrels, whether beer barrels, half barrels, quarters or other casks made or used" in the city "and delivered from one to the other, whether to tapsters, burgbers, or strangers." Nobody was allowed to make delivery of any barrels before they were gauged, and a penalty of 25 guilders was fixed upon for infractions of the ordinance.—Rec. N. Am., I: 291; II: 260, 262, 263, 266-67.

An ordinance was passed by Stuyvesant and the council on Oct. 26, 1656, by which it was forbidden to carry on the business of baker or of tavern-keeper without a license, to be renewed every three months. On the 30th of that month, the edict was published at the city hall of New Amsterdam, and it was to become operative from Nov. 1.—Rec. N. Am., I: 26-27; II: 207, 208; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 262. See also Nov. 23, 1656.

The burgomasters and schepens now resolve "to summon all the tapsters" of the city to appear at the city hall on the morrow, to be informed of their duty to take out quarterly licenses and pay each time 6 fl. or one pound Flemish ($2.40). Accordingly, 22 tavern-keepers, men and women, whose names are recorded, gathered together and had the provincial ordinance read to them. They were given time to retire from the court chamber and "confer together thereupon," and, after a short deliberation, returned to court, and through a committee of four made known that they could not agree, but were willing to abide by whatever the court should "consider proper herein for the public welfare," provided they might sell their wines and beer without being subject to a fixed sale price, inasmuch as there was "considerable trust and bad pay," and nobody could serve for nothing. The court held

1657 that there must be a fixed price for beer, yet, on wines, which were
Jan. "not so necessary for the common people," they allowed discretion 9 and there was no fixed rate. The price of beer was fixed upon as not higher than twelve stuivers (24 cts.) the half gallon or "Vaen" (4 mengel = 5 qts.), and licenses were ordered to be taken out within a day after publication of the rescript.

The city authorities did not favour the licensing of the bakers, because it was "not customary in any place for tradespeople to pay anything in this shape," and said, if such a thing were introduced, "it would hereafter be imposed also on other handicrafts."

On Jan. 11, the presiding burgomaster informed the court that a committee of the tavern-keepers had requested through him "an abatement" in the license fee from six to three florins, as no more was required of tavern-keepers in Holland; and that the sale price of the "Vaen" of beer be fixed at 12 or 13 stuivers. The court held fast to its original order, and required its enforcement, especially "as many" had "already paid." Some of the tavern-keepers, however, petitioned anew, on the 15th, but got no further concession.—Rec. N. Am., I: 28-29; II: 263-65, 266, 268; cf. also the order for renewal of licenses in April.—Ibid., VII: 155. On Jan. 23, another provincial ordinance was passed with regard to licensed taverns and the excise under supervision of the subaltern courts of the villages throughout the province.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 296-97.

13 The city court passes an ordinance prohibiting everybody from using in the city "any other ell, weight or measure than that used" at old Amsterdam, and directs that all these measures in use in the city shall be brought to the city hall once a year, on Jan. 25, to be there stamped as correct, by the court messenger of the city, "in the presence of two of the Courts." A stamping tax is fixed upon, and a series of fines is established against those who use any unstamped measures.—Rec. N. Am., I: 29-30; II: 260, 262, 266-68.

16 Numerous complaints are registered with the provincial government concerning "the chopping of Firewood and cutting of Timber on lands claimed" by divers inhabitants "in virtue of Patents" originating from the fact that "many land-grasping Inhabitants" of the province have received, several years ago, "many and large tracts of land on Letters patent from the Director General and Council, on the express agreement to cultivate and improve them," but which in many cases the patentees have "allowed to lie" waste, unfenced and unimproved. Such a disregard has militated against the interests of the West India Co. and "curtailed" its revenue, whilst it has delayed "the settlement of the Country." Other inhabitants, who have sought "to earn an honest livelihood for themselves by chopping and cutting Firewood and Timber," have been hindered by the patentees of the unimproved lands, so that quarrels have often ensued. Stuyvesant and the council, on this account, order all persons who claim any lands, by virtue of patents or deeds, to "properly set off and fence them in," so that the government may visualize what lands still remain ungranted; and they give permission to the inhabitants to cut firewood or timber "on unfenced lands," at the most convenient places, without hindrance from anybody. The ordinance was published at New Amsterdam at the city hall, on the 22d.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 294-95; Rec. N. Am., II: 272.

22 The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, in a petition to the provincial government, remonstrate against the daily increase of peddlers, who are arriving from Holland and refuse to sell their goods in the city, but rather proceed "immediately to Fort Orange or to some other place, aud, having finished their trade," return to Holland "at the first opportunity," so that the city derives no profit from them. They now allege that "even the provisions" which were brought over from Holland in the summer of 1656 have had to be "received from Fort Orange," because the trade there is "much better" than at New Amsterdam. This commerce is deemed to be in violation of the twelfth article of the Freedoms and Exemptions, which designated Manhattan Island as the staple port for the whole province of New Netherland. The city government having assumed obligations for defence against English encroachments and the Indians, the city fathers request that the commonalty be favoured "with some privileges." They want a grant of the burgherright or citizenship, "one of the most important privileges in a well governed city," and the restriction of public trading within the jurisdiction of the city to those who will be known as burghers. Residents who are not regular settlers, they say, should "not be allowed to trade to any quarter" Jan. in the environs of the city, except by permission of the supreme 12 authorities.—Rec. N. Am., II: 272-73.

On Jan. 30, Stuyvesant and the council, answering the foregoing representation of the city fathers, admitted the justness of the complaint against the itinerant peddlers and the fatal consequences thereof to the people of New Amsterdam. They decreed that henceforth traders who arrived in the province should "be held, by virtue of staple right and pursuant to order and instructions of the Lords Patroons, to set up and keep an open store within the gates and walls" of New Amsterdam "in a hired or owned house or room and to ask from the aforesaid Burgomasters and Schepens, beforehand, the common or small Burgherright or citizenship (Poorier recht) to enable them" to trade. For the right, 20 guilders were to be paid to the city, and "during their stay in this City" they were "to bear like other Burghers and citizens their burdens, expences [taxes], rounds (tochten) and watches."

The city was granted also the privilege of establishing "a Great Burgherright" for those who might apply for it, and to collect a fee of 50 guilders therefor. Only those persons who possessed the great burgherright could be nominated and hold office in the city, and they were to have certain concessions, such as freedom from arrest by order of any inferior court in the province.

On the 31st, the city fathers asked for an "explanation of the conceded privilege,"—i.e., to whom for the present the privileges of the large and small burgherrights should apply. They requested that the great burgherright might be held by all former schouts, burgomasters, and schepens, those then in office, as well as those who were to be chosen presently for the new year.—Ibid., II: 286-88; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 298-300; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 180.

Reply to this query came in a provincial act on Feb. 2. It designated for the great burgherright all persons who had been and then were "in the High or Supreme government of the Country . . . and their descendants in the male line;" "all former and actual Burgomasters and Schepens" of New Amsterdam and "their descendants in the male line;" "the Ministers of the Gospel," now or formerly in office "and their descendants in the male line;" "the commissioned officers to the Ensign inclusive" belonging to "the City regiment," as well as "their descendants in the male line." Others could procure the grant by virtue of the method provided in the law of Jan. 30.

The small burgherright was given to all persons who had been bona fide residents for the preceding year and six weeks; to "all born" in the city; to all who had married or thereafter might marry "native born daughters of Burghers," and to those who should secure the right according to the system laid down in the law of Jan. 30. The proceeds from burgherright fees were to be spent by the burgomasters "principally in the strengthening and circumvallation" of the city. The law ordered the burgomasters to make out lists, respectively, of the great and small burghers, in "a true Register," and deliver a "copy thereof into the Office of the Secretary of the Director General and Council."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 301-3; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 180.

On Feb. 6, forms of certificates of the great and small burgherrights were drawn up, and, on March 29, the burgomasters issued a warning against trading in the city save by those who procured a burgherright. On April 9, all who claimed to be burghers were ordered to hand in their names to be registered.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 181; Rec. N. Am., VII: 147-48, 149.

Persons who had had a residence in the city, and removed, forfeited their burgherrights and were required to reestablish themselves according to law. The acts of Jan. 30 and Feb. 2 so provided, and the city bench confirmed them in cases brought up in court.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 149, 158.

From April 10 to May 3, there were inscribed on the records of the city the names of 20 great burghers and 206 small burghers (Ibid., VII: 150-53; see also p. 154 for the form of oath taken, as well as refusal of burgherright to Jews). In Jan., 1658, when the nomination and election of new city officials was being taken up, a communication was sent by the director-general and council to the city court which referred to "the small number of the Great Burghers and the consequent trifling change of persons fit" for city magistrates. Therefore, the great burgherright was conferred on "six old and suitable persons," men like Isaac de Forest and Frederick Lubbertsen, who came to be among the best citizens of their generation in the province.—Ibid., II: 315.

1657 The burgomasters and schepens resolve to petition Stuyvesant
Jan. and the council for the privilege of appointing city officials with 22 the approval of the supreme provincial authority. They formally made this request on the 31st, as a privilege appertaining to municipalities in Holland; but Stuyvesant and the council, on Feb. 2, refused to allow it.—Rec. N. Am., II: 272, 288; Cal. Hist.
MSS., Dutch, 180.

" The brewers of New Amsterdam ask the city court to prohibit Paulus vander Beeck, farmer of the burghers' excise on wine and beer, from selling or brewing beer, because it is a "violation of the order in Netherland." Action is deferred.—Rec. N. Am., II: 272.

23 Jacques Cortelyou petitions for the office of surveyor-general, receives the appointment, and takes his oath of office.—Cal. Hist.
MSS., Dutch, 180. His salary is fixed at 250 guilders per annum.
He is also to take six stivers for each morgen of land surveyed for private individuals and three stivers for every morgen surveyed for the council or company.—New Neth. Papers, No. 1222(9), op. cit.

25 Willem Pietersen, also called De Groot, seeks permission from the burgomasters and schepens "to construct the sheet piling [embankment; beschoeing, a lining of planks, piles, or stone], in front of his lot on the East River, of stone." His neighbours having "sheeted with timber pursuant to the order" of the director-general and council, his request is placed before Stuyvesant for an opinion.
This resulted, on the 29th, in a refusal of his request and instructions to employ timber "before his house and lot according to the general order."—Rec. N. Am., 275-76, 281.

29 The retiring board of burgomasters and schepens nominate a double number, from whom their successors are to be appointed by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., II: 282-85.

Feb. 6 Proclamation is made by the council appointing the first Wednesday in March a day of general thanksgiving and prayer throughout New Netherland.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 181.

" Anthony Lodewycksen Baeck, nominated by the burgomasters and schepens, is confirmed as city jailer of the jail in the city hall of New Amsterdam.—Rec. N. Am., II: 289; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 180. As such officer, he is obliged to receive "all prisoners
... committed or delivered over to him by the Schout, Burgomasters and Schepens or Burgher Court Martial . . . or in their name," whether arrested in civil or criminal cases. He is obliged to "sleep every night in his ordinary chamber," even if there are no prisoners in the jail. Searching of capital prisoners, periodical inspection of the cells, and cleaning of the prison every week are only a part of his duties, for which full instructions are given.
Prisoners who are permitted to "sit in the prison chamber" are allowed candle light and fire; "but no fire nor light" is allowed
"in the other rooms of the prison" at any time.—Rec. N. Am., II:
294-96. This was the beginning of the first city jail administered by the city itself.

" Grain and lime measurers for the city of New Amsterdam, nominated on the previous day, are now appointed.—Cal. Hist.
MSS., Dutch, 180. Jacob Leendertsen vander Grift and Michiel Jansen were the persons named, according to another record, on the 19th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 30-31.

13 The vacant offices of orphan-master, city surveyor, and fire-warden of New Amsterdam are filled by appointment of the council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 181.

" Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt is elected a member of the orphan-masters' court.—Min. of Orph. Court, I: 29.

20 It having been found that "many burghers and inhabitants" are throwing "their rubbish, filth, ashes, dead animals and such like things into the public streets," as well as into the graft or canal (Broad Street), a city ordinance is issued putting an end to such nuisance in future and prescribing that "all such things" must be brought to the "most convenient of the following places to wit, the Strand [of the East River], near the City hall [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley], near the gallows [Pearl St. and Whitehall], near Hendrick [Willemsen] the baker [north-west corner of Bridge and Broad Sts.], near Daniel Litsco [Litscho, just outside the water gate, Pearl near Wall St.], where tokens to that effect" are to be displayed. Fines or punishment are prescribed for violations of the ordinance; moreover, "everybody" is enjoined to "keep the streets clean before his house or lot," or be likewise subject to the penalties.—Rec. N. Am., I: 315; id. also 33, for continued violation.

Mar. 8 Pieter Tonnenman, whom the council appointed on the 6th to be a church-master at New Amsterdam in place of Niciasius de Sille, retired, is now confirmed in office by the burgomasters.

Govert Lookermans is his associate.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 141-42; Mar.
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 181.

" The two burgomasters resolve that they will "meet once a Week for the future in the City Hall," and appoint and fix "Thursday Morning at 9 o'clock, to consult then together about all, that may concern the City, and to dispose thereof as shall be found proper." The burgomasters who introduced these administrative sessions were Allard Anthooy and Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, and the minutes of their business transactions were kept separately as administrative minutes from this time onward.— See Bibliography, Vol. V. The reasons which impelled them to this action are given in the preamble to their first minutes, as follows: "Whereas divers matters daily occur here within this City of Amsterdam in New Netherland, which according to the custom of our Fatherland and the privileges granted to this City, concern only the Burgomasters; such as the repairs and construction of necessary works; finances, how to find means; and order, that everything proceed in order [sic]; also should any one have to request or propose any thing relating to the City to direct it for the public good; Moreover if any public office or service regarding this City or any thing else be necessary for the public good, to propose it to the Right Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General and Council and to make a nomination."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 140.

" On Jan. 29, a majority of the city court favoured a double nomination by itself of a treasurer for the city, but consented to lay the matter aside, temporarily, at the request of their presiding burgomaster and the schout. But the two burgomasters, who took office on Feb. 2, brought the matter to the attention of Stuyvesant and the council, who decided, on March 6, "that henceforth the place of Treasurer" should "be filled and served by the last retired Burgomaster," one of the two going out of office each year, and, accordingly, commissioned Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt
"to administer the City's income on orders signed by the Burgomasters then ruling and not otherwise," whom the burgomasters now confirm in office (on the 8th).—Rec. N. Am., II: 282; VII:
141, 142; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 181.

" The city's revenues are not forthcoming and the city's debts remain unliquidated. A general assessment levied in October, 1655, has not been paid by many persons in New Amsterdam, and Allard Anthony and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt have "disbursed considerable of their private funds" in the city's interest as a loan.
The two ruling burgomasters, therefore, resolve "that the monies expected from the Farming of the Burgher Excise and the Slaughterring" shall be used to reimburse "the aforesaid gentlemen in deduction of their disbursement in the year[s] 1655 and 1656," and that those who have thus far failed to pay the old assessment of October, 1655, shall be implored to do so, in order that recent debts and current expenses may be met.

" On the 9th, the burgomasters drew up a list of nearly sixty delinquents, among them quite a few of the principal inhabitants, whose debts aggregated 1,408 florins, and ordered collection to be made by a court messenger. The city treasurer, however, soon complained that the moneys were "not brought forward" and, on the 29th, the city marshal was "charged to detain by execution" the delinquents for the amounts due.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 140-41, 142-43, 144, 148.

" On account of "increase of trade and population," the business at the company's warehouse and scales on the Strand of the East River, as well as transportation of beer and wine by the beer porters, is clogged. Stuyvesant and the council consider it imperative "to not only increase the number of sworn labourers at the said Warehouse Scales, and the beer carriers to nine," but to have them work in daily shifts of at least three each; to "work together in one common purse," and, "in case of fire, fresher or other very urgent necessity," to be ready to repair to the place of disaster "before all others;" as well as to attend upon the arrival of all ships in sufficient numbers to "accommodate the skipper, trader, Burgher or stranger," and the burgomasters are enjoined to name a double number of men from whom the allotted number are to be appointed by the director-general and council. The burgomasters, when undertaking the nominations on the 15th, found the number of applicants too few, and were able to name only twelve instead of eighteen men; but suggested the choice of an overseer or foreman. Possibly these ideas were put into operation, yet the records do not reveal the termination of the matter.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 144-46; Cal.
Hist. MSS., Dutch, 181, 182.

1657 Pieter Cornelissen vander Veen, a merchant of New Amsterdam, Mar. in a petition to the burgomasters, says he has "incurred great expense on his dwelling house at the corner of Pearl Street" (south-west corner of Pearl and Whitehall Sts.), and is "about to make greater improvements as an ornament thereunto." On this account, he asks them to provide "that a Square may remain and be made by resolution there." The burgomasters refer the case to Stuyvesant for settlement, but he declares "the aforesaid Square was disposed of, long before the distribution of the lots was granted to the Burgomasters," and therefore does not belong to them, so Vander Veen is referred to Stuyvesant and the council, "if dissatisfied."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 147, 149. His house and lot he had obtained by deed of Oct. 15, 1653, from Govert Loockermans, as attorney for his wife, Maritie Janse, late widow of Tymen Jansen, and Vander Veen had married, on Jan. 7, 1652, Elsie Tymense, Jansen's daughter. He died in 1661, and, in 1663, his widow was married to Jacob Leisler, whose occupancy of the house, better known by his name, then had its beginning.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 231, 379. Purple, Marriage Records of Ref. Dutch Church, 16, 28; Innes, New Am. and Its People, 241-42. See also, regarding Leisler's marriage and estate, May 16, 1689. See Castello Plan, Vol. II, Pl. 82, for location and appearance of this fine house, a year later.

29 Certain lots in the city of New Amsterdam were granted in 1656 "to divers persons who were in want and had no places to build on." Some of these persons having failed to build or even make preparations therefor, "to the evident obstruction of population," the burgomasters now give notice and warning that all delinquent grantees shall "be bound to make preparations within 14 days from date to build on their lots," or suffer forfeiture.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 148. That this order still failed to move the delinquents is evident from a provincial ordinance of Jan. 15, 1658, on the same subject.—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 325-27; Rec. N. Am., I: 36-37; II: 301-3.

30 For some time it has been known in New Netherland, as well as in Holland, that the tobacco traders, factors, or agents, have been committing frauds by the shipment of "poor, had, rotten or mouldered Tobacco," making gross overcharges for this poor stock, so that the importer cannot even "realize the ship's freight." A provincial law is now passed to provide for a better inspection of tobacco, namely, "the Virginia Tobacco . . . as well as that of New Netherland." To prevent the fraudulent changing of brand marks on hogsheds, a new system of branding of both Virginia and New Netherland tobacco is prescribed for the different grades. Exported tobacco, designed for Holland, is subjected to inspection "by a proper, trustworthy and sworn person, in or in front of the Company's store," on the strand of the East River, before the tobacco is "embarked or shipped." The poorest quality, which is marked zero, cannot be exported "except on the Shipper's own account," and his giving "sufficient security for the ship's freight and other charges" to be incurred. The bills of lading and invoices are obliged to carry the findings of the inspector as to quality and brand marks, "in addition to the Merchant's marks." A fine of one pound Flemish is fixed upon for every hogshedd shipped in violation of this law.—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 307-9.

Apr. 7 Silk-worm culture in New Netherland is proposed by the directors at Amsterdam, who send over "a small box with eggs, that the experiment" may "be made there also." In this correspondence they refer to bales of silk arrived at Amsterdam from the English in Virginia.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388; more eggs were sent over in December of this year (ibid., XIV: 401), and in December, 1659 (ibid., XIV: 452).

"The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: "Concerning the proposed change of the value of your currency or reduction of the beaver and the wampum, we have after due consideration come to the conclusion, that depreciation of the currency means destruction of the commerce and consequently ruin of the country. To prevent this we have decided, to make no sudden change, but to proceed gradually beginning with the wampum, which is to be reduced from 6 to 8 for a stiver; it being well understood that this reduction shall not take effect before the beginning of next year, 1658, and in the meantime, upon the receipt hereof, the people must be informed of it, as such measures are published here in all well-governed republics and kingdoms, to cause the least possible inconvenience and loss to the community." The reduction on the currency value of beavers from 8 to 6 guilders is deferred.

—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 386-87. See Dec. 19, 1656; Jan. 3, 1657.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council that they have "by no means the intention to grant the Lutherans any more liberty regarding the exercise of their religion, than stated in" their letter of June 14, 1656, and by which they still stand.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388. For full particulars of the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

"The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant that they are still resolved "not to separate the office of Schout [of New Amsterdam] from that of the Fiscal . . . that the duties of both be performed by one person."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388. See Nov. 7, 1656.

"It appears that Stuyvesant and the council have applied to the directors, at Amsterdam for some ship carpenters, but that the directors, thinking that house carpenters were meant, "because of the small shipping owned there [New Netherland] by the Company," reply that it is expensive to cage such people, "and therefore trades as carpentering, brick-laying, blacksmithing and others ought to be taught to the negroes, as it was formerly done in Brazil;" they say further that "this race" has "sufficient fitness for it," and that it will "be very advantageous."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 387.

"Nicholas Verleth (or Varlett) is appointed by the council as commissary of imports and exports, and Warner Wessels is chosen inspector and searcher of customs. On the 21st, Verleth, as store-keeper, was granted permission to receive merchants' goods on deposit in the public store of the Company.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 183, 184.

11 Andries Jochemsen petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission to keep a tavern, which is granted on condition that he take out a proper license.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 155. It was conducted in his "great house," the most southerly one of three which he owned on the present sites of Nos. 125 to 131 Pearl St. See Castello Plan II: 327-28.

On Jan. 17, 1662, Schout Tonnenman demanded that Jochemsen be fined 18 guilders for having tapped for three negroes on Sunday during the time of preaching, contrary to law, and requested that he "be condemned not to tap any more for a year and six weeks," paying also the costs of the prosecution. The court ordered Jochemsen to "deposit the money with the Secretary" of the city, and provisionally ordered him "not to tap."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 9. On Jan. 24, the case came up again. A petition from Jochemsen was considered, in which he declared that, if given time "until the next Court day," he would "prove to the contrary" the charges against him. The schout was, thereupon, ordered "to produce further proof" by the next court day, when also the defendant should appear with witnesses.—Ibid., IV: 13-14. On Jan. 31, the court examined further into the charges and decided "that the negroes of Cornelis Steenwyck, Govert Loockermans and Tomas Hall be summoned" to court on the next court day.—Ibid., IV: 22. On Feb. 14, the schout produced his papers in the suit, and requested that Jochemsen "be ordered to produce by the next Court day the papers in his defence, on pain of deprivation of right," to which the court agreed.—Ibid., IV: 33-34. On Feb. 28, the schout appeared against the aforesaid negroes. Resolved Waldron acted as their interpreter, and they were asked "one by one . . . if they had not drank one Sunday during the preaching, at Andries Joghemsen's house?" Their testimony disagreed, but in the main showed they were at his place only once, when the preaching was nearly over. The case was continued until the next court day.—Ibid., IV: 41-42. On March 7, the schout requested "definitive judgment on the monies deposited" by Jochemsen "regarding the irregular tapping on the Sabbath to negroes and heard the 28 Feb. last." Jochemsen again denied the charge. He was asked to swear "that he gave no drink, either directly or indirectly, himself or by his wife, at the time when Steenwyck's negro [Matthieu] played the Jews harp at Govert Loockerman's." He confirmed the same "on oath at the hands of the President," and the court then excused him from the fine and dismissed the case.—Ibid., IV: 45-46.

Schout Tonnenman, however, kept an eye on Jochemsen. On June 12, 1663, he charged in court that Jochemsen had violated the ordinance for tavern-keepers, alleging "that he saw people sitting" at his house "at night between ten and eleven," which was contrary to the law, which required that "no person can tap after 1657 nine o'clock." Jochemsen denied the charge. He said they merely Apr. 19

 "sat together conversing with each other, among other things of the sale of houses." The court then simply reprimanded him, which was done in his absence from the chamber.—Ibid., IV: 254-55. By the schout returns, on June 26, demand was made of the court that Jochemsen be fined 25 guilders "for having sold drink by the pot, found to be too small, . . . defrauding the public and wronging them intentionally;" also the schout requested another fine of 54 guilders "for having there found on Sunday, being the 17th instant, seven @ eight persons bowling and two others sitting ticktacking or playing backgammon," in violation of provincial ordinances recently reeved by the city court. Jochemsen said in rebuttal that he had "not tapped with the pots seized nor made any use of them, admitting that he tapped, but that such was done after the preaching at the Bowery was over." This referred to the service at Stuyvesant's bowery. The court condemned him to pay a fine of ten guilders "for having tapped with unstamped and under sized cans," and decreed "that no tavernkeeper can have in his house any other pots than those of full size and stamped" as the law requires. The rest of the charges were dismissed.—Ibid., IV: 264-65.

" Tibout Riversen asks the burgomasters for permission to keep a tavern in New Amsterdam, but they answer that it cannot be allowed until he has purchased his burgherright in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 154.

" Jacob Cohen Hendrickus, or Henriques, a Jew, asks the burgomasters for "permission to bake and sell bread" in New Amsterdam, "as other bakers, but with closed door." The request is denied as "directly contrary" to the special privileges granted to the burghers and as contrary to the orders of the directors at Amsterdam. On the same day, Asser Levy, another Jew, petitions "to be admitted a Burgher;" claims it ought not to be denied him, because he keeps "watch and ward (socht en wacht) like other Burghers," and exhibits to the burgomasters a certificate of his burgherright in old Amsterdam. They decree, "as before," that it cannot be granted, and refer Levy to Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 154. A committee of the Jews of the city, on April 20, drew up a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, in which they expressed their "great surprise" at the turning down of Levy's request. They exhibited proof of the burgherright as enjoyed by Jews in old Amsterdam, and asked that their people should not be excluded therefrom in New Amsterdam, in view of the guarantees of freedom accorded to them by the directors at Amsterdam. Stuyvesant and the council endorsed upon their petition a command to the burgomasters "to admit the petitioners . . . and their Nation to the Burghership, in due form."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 184, fully given in revised translation in Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 36. See also Aug. 28, 1655.

19 " A second general survey of New Amsterdam was finished shortly after this time by Jacques Cortelouy, who was appointed surveyor-general on Jan. 23, of this year (q. v.). This survey, which apparently had been completed by May 3, altered considerably, in some localities, streets, lots, and fences.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 156-60. For the general survey made in the previous year, see Feb. 25, 1656.

" Certain neighbours of Marten Cregier or Krigier "on the Gract" (ditch or canal, now Broad Street) petition "for the repair of the Gract," but the burgomasters defer the determination of the matter "until the general survey vide infra be done."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 156. This survey was completed within a few weeks thereafter, and, on June 26, the burgomasters appealed to Stuyvesant and the council for a loan to the city of 1,000 to 1,500 florins, with which to repair "the City's works as well at the City Hall as the sheet piling at the Gract etc.," and promised "to repay it from the City revenue" at the earliest opportunity. Work of excavating and sheeting the graft, so as to make it accessible for small boats, was declared to be "just commenced," on Dec. 3, when it was also said that filth, ashes, dead animals, etc. were being thrown in by the house holders or their servants, and "again filling up" what had been excavated. On Jan. 25, 1658, the city authorities were reminded that no accounting had ever been made for the loan, which had amounted to 1,000 florins ($100), received by them "for the repairs of de burgh wal" (canal).—Ibid., I: 33; II: 313; VII: 162, 170.

" Sheetting of a part of the graft had been first put up before the summer of 1654, for we find in August of that year that heavy rains and tides had broken down the planking thereof, necessitating a reconstruction.—Ibid., I: 231. The larger operations begun in 1657 proceeded slowly. On Feb. 21, 1658, the city court summoned before it "the three laborers of the gracht" (canal), and asked them why they did not continue at the work, who replied that the weather was unfavourable. They were told that complaints were being made against them because there was no filling in, and they were ordered to go on with their work at once and "not stop."—Ibid., II: 336; VII: 173. The work on the Heere Gracht, as it was now called, was completed in 1659 (ibid., VII: 210, 215), and cost 2,792.19 florins, which amount was levied early in 1660 on the owners of lots on both sides of the canal.—Ibid., VII: 246-47.

" The "neighbours in the Glaziers Street" petition the burgomasters "for a cart way to the Strand" of the East River, and are informed that their request will be given "further attention" as soon as "the general survey" of the city is made.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 156. The street referred to was the Slyck Steegh (Muddy Lane), now South William Street. "Glaziers Street" was an allusion to Evert Duyckingh, the glazier, who lived and had his business there. The street was an impasse at the time. As an outcome, the lane was cut through, and Smeer Straet (William Street) was extended. See Pl. 82c, Castello Plan of 1660, and II: 299.

26 " Warner Wessels and Paulus vander Beek, farmers of the weigh-scales at New Amsterdam, ask the burgomasters to have "a sworn attendant on the Scales" appointed, according to the custom in Holland, and propose the name of Joost Goderisen (or Goderus) for the place, "promising to give him a reasonable fee from themselves in addition to his ordinary salary . . . , and even to keep the great book" (ledger as distinguished from journal). As the weigh-scales concern the company, the matter is referred to Stuyvesant. On the 26th, Goderisen received the appointment and took his oath of office to "do equal justice to every one, both buyer and seller, . . . and duely and honestly enter all that shall be Weighed."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 155, 156-57. At the same time, Wessels asked "that the weights in the Weighhouse" should "be corrected and stamped," they being "not correct."—Ibid., VII: 157.

May 3 " Pursuant to an order of the burgomasters to the inhabitants of New Amsterdam, to make known what damage they have sustained by the survey of the city in this year, Daniel Litscho asks an award for a lot "taken away by the survey." Other claimants included Johannes Nevius, for a lot; Madalene Vincent, for part of a lot cut off for making a road; Jan Vigne, on behalf of his sister, Rachel, widow of Cornelis van Tienhoven, "for the lot through which the road is run;" Allard Anthony, "for the survey through his garden and the taking away his lot given again to Borger Jorisen in satisfaction for Borger's lot, through which the street was run;" Albert Leenderterse, "for the survey through his lot, which was granted his wife" by the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 158-59, 164.

" Among the claims put in against the city is one by "the heirs of decd Aryaentie Cuvilje" (Adrienne Cuville, mother of Jan Vigne), "for breaking of fences and injury of grain, etc., in consequence of running the Walls of this City through their land." The burgomasters disallow the claim, because it is for damages resulting from the survey of 1656, whereas their recently-issued order relates only to damages claimed for losses resulting from the later survey of 1657.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 159. For the surveys referred to, see Feb. 25, 1656; April 19, 1657.

" The burgomasters issue a formal notice to the inhabitants of New Amsterdam to regulate their fences "according to the general survey" just completed, and to do so within two weeks after due notice.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 160.

" Daniel Litscho demands payment from the city for planking which he delivered "for the arranging the shore piling" of the East River.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 158.

7 " The "Deputati ad causas Indicas" report to the classis of Amsterdam that "a Lutheran minister named John Earnest Gutwasser" has been "sent to the North River" (Hudson), and recommend a remonstrance to the burgomasters of old Amsterdam as an aid in securing from the directors of the West India Co., Amsterdam chamber, a refusal of permission to the Lutherans overseas to "freely exercise their forms of worship."—Eccles. Rec., I: 377. For full particulars about the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

8 " The council grants amnesty to all deserters who return within two months.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 185.

- 1657 The council issues an order declaring West India sugar free of import duty, in order to encourage that trade.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 186.
- 15 Jan Jansen, of Amersfort, makes a contract with the burgo-masters "to build for the City," as a city carpenter.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 160-61.
- 9=19 Gov. Bradford of Plymouth dies.
- 26 Owing to the bad management of the finances of the West India Co. in New Netherland, the directors at Amsterdam draw up a new plan of financial administration, so that they may "for once . . . see well and correctly kept books." They appoint Johannes de Decker chief administrator of the same; make him also a member of Stuyvesant's council, and commit "the funds and books of the treasury to the care of Secretary van Reuven" (Cornelis van Ruyven).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 391. The specifications of this interesting plan of reform are printed in extenso in ibid., 392-93. De Decker was formally commissioned by the provincial council on Dec. 20, 1657, and a copy of his commission was filed on March 19, of the next year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 192. On July 23, 1659, Stuyvesant and the council informed the directors that the "accurate accounts" kept by Van Ruyven "since the dismissal of the former Receiver Van Tienhoven" gave general satisfaction to everyone.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 445.
- " Jacques Cortelyou surveys for Cornelis Jansen Pluier a house and lot. On the following Nov. 17, Pluier acknowledged before the schepens an indebtedness on the property due to Cristiaan Barenens, from whom he had purchased the same.—Liber Mortgages, 1654-1666, 69-70 (in office of N. Y. city clerk); Liber Deeds, A: 113. The form of the lot was an ell. Here Pluier kept a tavern.—Register of Solomon Lachaire (trans. by O'Callaghan), 169. Prior to June 29, 1671, he had sold the property to Christian Peters for the benefit of the Lutherans, and on that date Asser Levy, a Jew, held a mortgage upon the property as security for a loan made before April, 1659.—Liber Mortgages, 1654-1666, 129-31; Rec. N. Am., IV: 73.
- " On Jan. 16, 1672 (q. v.), the Lutheran congregation was already seeking permission from Gov. Lovelace to erect another house of worship, and sent an agent to the Delaware country to solicit contributions for that purpose.—Ex. Coun. Min. (ed. by V. H. Palstis), II: 587, 589. On Oct. 17, 1673 (q. v.), the new Dutch governor, Colve, ordered the removal of certain buildings, among them the house on the old Pluier plot, and gave the Lutherans in exchange lot No. 5 in the Company's Garden, on May 22, 1674 (q. v.). The new site was near the south-west corner of Broadway and Rector St. The original site of the first Lutheran Church was on land now a part of the Trinity Churchyard.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 13; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 633-36, 716; N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIII: 433-36. The original grant of May 22, 1674 (q. v.), is still preserved by the church. See also Pls. 82, 82b, 82c, Vol. II, II: 224-25; also, for history of Lutheran Church, see Oct. 4, 1653.
- See A. 1684 Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors June 3 at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto, although a contemporary extract is preserved in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (7), in N. Y. Pub. Library, and an answer of the directors, in part, of Sept. 15, is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 197-98; XIII: 77-74; XIV: 397-99. On account of its importance, a digest of the principal new items is given here, viz.: Indians bold, therefore the order for all settlers to concentrate on their farms; ask advice on order in regard to price of beavers in wampum; Rensselaers-wyck unwilling to pay tenths or other taxes, ask advice therein; the income of about 65,000 florins has been in beavers, wampum, etc.; effects of late receiver, Cornelis van Tienhoven, put under arrest until books of accounts have been examined; ask for masons; French continue in "Sindekes" (Seneca) country, and a Jesuit lives also near Fort Orange; Jan de Decker's misunderstandings at Fort Orange, and La Montagne to be sent there instead; transfer to Jacob Alrix (Alrichs) of Fort Casemier, now called Nieuw Amstel, on behalf of the burgo-masters of Amsterdam; garrison of Casemier departs immediately to Fort Cristina, now called Altena, with 16 to 18 soldiers; New Gottenberg, now called Cattenburg, not a fort, but only a plantation (Hoff), and left deserted by order of late Swedish Gov. Prints; man who lives on Werkhoven's bowery (New Utrecht, L. I.), a surveyor (Jacques Cortelyou), desires to go to South (Delaware) River, and knows Jacob Alrichs; soldiers on the bowery of Heer vander Capellen (Staten Island); inquiry as to whether the ministers at New Amsterdam who live in the company's houses should seek cottages to reside in; want medicaments for horses, 600 lbs. of powder, paper, and books; soldiers left at Fort Casemier putting up quarters on Cuyppers Island, because Fort Cristina is ruined; Director Alrichs takes oxen, cows, and horses and other necessary things from Swedes, left at the capitulation; authority over the South River, and lands of Swedes there should fall finally to the company; village or town should be formed near Fort Altena; convenience of trade with the Minquaes, and Pieter Tonnemans to look into it; Jan Paul Jacquet, against whom many complaints were made, is replaced.
- June 3 Jacob Kip, who has been city clerk from the beginning of the city government (see Feb. 2, 1653), resigns his office, and requests that a successor be appointed. On the following day, however, the council ordered his continuance in office until he had finished the transcribing of the records in his care, and at the same time Timotheus Gabry was appointed to succeed him.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 186, 187. Gabry did not continue long in this office, having been succeeded by Johannes Nevius by the following January.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 168.
- " The council gives notice that crops shall not be removed from the field until the "tenths" of the preceding year have been paid.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 187.
- " A renewal is made of laws pertaining to Sabbath observance (see Oct. 26, 1656), against selling liquor to Indians (see June 18, 1643), and smuggling; designating the anchorage for ships at the port of New Amsterdam; providing for postal regulations, and putting a ban on fast driving through the streets of the city.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 310-14.
- " Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance regulating the delivery of incoming mail.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 313; see summary under Aug. 6, 1652.
- 13 The burgo-masters, Allard Anthony and Paulus Leodertsen vander Grit, represent to Stuyvesant and the council that they are "forced almost entirely to neglect their private affairs relating to their families," on account of their daily preoccupation with the city's affairs. They say they attend "all ordinary and extraordinary Court days along with the Schepens," sit every Thursday on city business, and are also obliged to "attend to building, piling, surveying and a multitude of Burgher matters." It appears that Nicasiaus de Sille, the schout, is endeavouring "to depose the said Burgo-masters from their presidency, and to make himself president of the Bench," a right they claim by concession of the provincial council with approval of the directors at Amsterdam. Therefore, "in order not to nullify the privileges given and granted" to their court, the burgo-masters ask for their dismissal "from the Bench of Schepens," so as to be able to "properly attend to the matters concerning their office and the City," and request that "the presidency of the Schout and the Schepens" be disposed of by the director-general and council. The relief "from the Bench of Schepens" must have been disallowed by the provincial authorities, although the records are incomplete and do not reveal the answer given to the burgo-masters, but show that they never were separated from that duty.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 162-63.
- 16 Johannes Earnestus Gutwasser, the first Lutheran clergyman sent to New Netherland, arrives at New Amsterdam in the ship "Goude Meulen," "to the great joy of the Lutherans, but to the special displeasure and uneasiness" of the Reformed Church in the city.—Eccles. Rec., I: 393-94. Brodhead, op. cit., I: 635. For particulars of the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.
- July 6 Christian Barenens receives a ground-brief for a lot, including what is now the south-east corner of Wall St. and Broadway, the south-west corner of New and Wall Sts., the bed of Wall St., between the corner of New St. and Broadway, and a part of the bed of New St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II and II: 366; Rec. N. Am., VII: 158.
- Aug. — Megapolensis and Driusius, the Dutch clergymen of New Amsterdam, write to the Classis of Amsterdam: "We have had an Indian here with us for about two years. He can read and write Dutch very well. We have instructed him in the fundamental principles of our religion, and he answers publicly in church, and can repeat the Commandments. We have given him a Bible, hoping he might do some good among the Indians, but it all resulted in nothing. He took to drinking brandy, he pawned the Bible, and turned into a regular beast, doing more harm than good among the Indians."—Eccles. Rec., I: 398-99. See July 15, 1654.

On this day a strange ship approached the fort, "having no flag flying from the topmast, nor from any other place on the ship." It fired "no salute before the fort," as was "usual with ships on their arrival," and "no honor or respect" was accorded the fiscal when he boarded her. The master of the ship, when he came ashore and before Stuyvesant, "rendered him no respect," but stood still "with his hat firm on his head, as if a goat." With some difficulty, Stuyvesant learned that the ship had "come from London in about eight weeks," and at last discovered that it was "a ship with Quakers on board." She sailed away again on the next morning, through Hellgate, apparently bound for Rhode Island, whereto, in the language of the Dutch clergymen, Megapopolis and Drisius, who recorded the particulars about the ship, "all the cranks of New England retire."

These Quakers left at New Amsterdam "two strong young women" (Mary Weatherhead and Dorothy Waugh), who, "as soon as the ship had fairly departed . . . began to quake and go into a frenzy, and cry out loudly in the middle of the street, that men should repent, for the day of judgment was at hand." The inhabitants, "not knowing what was the matter, ran to and fro, while one cried 'Fire,' and another something else." The upshot of the matter was the arrest of the women by the fiscal and an assistant, who "seized them both by the head, and led them to prison." On the way, and in prison, the women "continued to cry out and pray according to their manner," and "from this circumstance," the Dutch clergymen perceived "that the devil is the same everywhere."—Eccles. Rec., I: 399-400, 409-10, 426; cf. Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 636.

The smuggling of imported goods into New Netherland continues, "under the name and cloak of Sailor's freight," and is detrimental to the company, the farmer of the revenue, and reputable merchants, who are unable to compete with those who evade the customs duties. A provincial act of this date prohibits "all Skippers, Ship's Officers and Sailors" from bringing "with them any goods or merchandises, under the name of Sailor's freight, without exhibiting" in port "a correct list thereof signed" in Holland, and, moreover, not of a value above two months' wages, under a penalty of forfeiting "unentered Merchandise or goods."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., I: cf. 346, art. 21. The directors at Amsterdam, on Dec. 22, approved with some modifications this act of their representatives in New Netherland, and sent over printed copies of the revision to be placarded. They reverted to the subject in subsequent correspondence. There was some question as to the meaning of the clause about not bringing in a value above two months' wages, as to whether the same was subject to or exempt from duty. So, on Dec. 22, 1659, the directors informed Stuyvesant and the council that it had never been their intention to allow officers and men of the ships who came to New Netherland "to trade to the amount of two months' pay without paying duties."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 400, 419, 420, 427, 430-31, 438, 448.

Stuyvesant writes a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, the purport of which has been known only in part from an answer of the directors, on Dec. 22 (printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 75-76; XIV: 399-401), although a contemporary extract exists, in New Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (3), in N. Y. Pub. Library. Stuyvesant discusses affairs at Curaçao; a Spanish prize, Capt. Augustio Beaulieu, a Frenchman, commander; Lutherans; massacre of Indians, etc.; soldiers wanted; provincial salaries, 33,000 guilders.

The consistory of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Amsterdam, Holland, receives a letter from the Rev. Johannes Ernestus Goetwasser, announcing his arrival in New Amsterdam, but telling of orders issued by "Gen. Stiebesch" for preventing the "exercise of Lutheran religion."—From archives of Evan. Luth. Church, Amsterdam. See also Sept. 8, 1657; May 5, 1659.

Stuyvesant and the council address a general missive to the directors at Amsterdam, in answer to theirs of April 7 (printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 183; XIV: 386-90; cf. their answer, Dec. 22, in XIII: 75-76; XIV: 399-401). The text of this missive has not been known hitherto, although a contemporary extract is preserved in New Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (2), in N. Y. Pub. Library. On account of its importance, the principal items are here summarized, viz: Reduction of wampum from 6 to 8 for a stuiver, etc.; tappers issue 10,200 florins and weigh-scales excise 3,500 florins, in New Netherland; masons needed for repair of the forts and company's works; no able negroes fit to learn a trade; express surprise that the company should allow a Lutheran preacher to come over, since a state of unity is not promoted thereby; books of the receiver, Cornelis van Tienhoven, have been badly kept, but to be put in shape, and sent to the directors with the first ship; map of the South (Delaware) River, made by Andries Hudde, to be sent to the directors; beer and wine sent to Virginia, etc.; tobacco; fierce murders daily by the Indians; ask that powder be sent over with all ships for the magazine; proper orders against smugglers; passage money paid by the company.

Previously published laws relating to an inhibition against the "bringing on board and embarking of Goods and Merchandise without the knowledge of the Fiscal or his deputy" have not been "observed as they ought to be," and the company is thereby "subjected to serious loss of revenue." A new law demands a "stricter observance," and prohibits loading of any goods on vessels before "duly entered," under a penalty of confiscation.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 316.

The consistory of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Amsterdam, Holland, receives a letter from the Rev. Johannes Ernestus Goetwasser, relating to further experiences in New Amsterdam, and enclosing certified extracts from resolutions of Stuyvesant and his council, of Sept. 4, 1657, in regard to himself.—From archives of Evan. Luth. Church, Amsterdam. See also Aug. 14, 1657.

The financial records of the West India Co., from this date until the end of June, 1658, show receipts in New Netherland from ordinances (ordonnancien), apparently fines, of 9,742:5:3 florins; and expenditures for monthly wages of employees of 7,166:14 florins; also, for the monthly pay of soldiers, 797:18 florins. It is doubtful if these accounts are complete.—New Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Thirteen ships' recognizances of goods to and from New Netherland produce receipts of 32,196:8 florins for the West India Co.—New Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

The city authorities, with the approval of Stuyvesant and the council, forbid everyone from building "within a cannonshot from the City's wall." On Jan. 15, 1658 (q. v.), the provincial government declared by ordinance that "no Dwelling-houses" should "be built near or under the Walls or Gates" of the city, until the vacant lots in the city had been properly improved and built upon.—Rec. N. Am., I: 32, 37; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 327.

Formal notice is given by the city authorities to everybody under their jurisdiction, regulating the slaughter and consumption of "any ox, cow, calf, sheep, lamb, hog or goat" from this time until Sept. 26, 1658, as well as the use of imported, salt, or fresh, meat.—Rec. N. Am., I: 32.

The Lutheran clergyman, Johannes Ernestus Gutwasser, is ordered by Stuyvesant and the council to depart from New Amsterdam in the ship "Waag" (Scales) when she is ready to return to Holland. On Oct. 10, some of his people petitioned to have the order set aside, but the provincial authorities were obdurate and demanded compliance, saying that two ships had sailed since he was first ordered departed on September 4th.—Eccles. Rec., I: 405-7. For full particulars of the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not hitherto been known, although a contemporary extract exists, in New Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (8), in N. Y. Pub. Library, and an answer of the directors, of May 20, 1658, is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 214; XIII: 80; XIV: 417-20. On account of its importance, a digest of principal new items is given here, viz: Inventory of goods in ship "De Hey," sent on behalf of the Swedes on the Delaware; Cornelis van Ruyven to keep correct accounts of the company's exchequer; complaints against Alich, that ship "De Waeg," laden with clapboards, was detained, and freight of merchants at the Delaware left behind; James Grover, a seditious English merchant, accomplice of George Baxter and James Haybert (Hubbard), who, in 1655, set up the arms of Cromwell at Gravesend and then fled to England, received from Cromwell a letter, which he brought back to the village of Gravesend on purpose to have it read there, but the authorities of Gravesend sent the letter unopened to the provincial authorities at New Amsterdam; fear that English on Long Island will revolt and go under protection of England; Indians on rampage took about 500 guilders from a brewery (brauery), seized hogs from plantation on "Staeten" Island, and plundered a small ship; ask recruiting of soldiers; understand no Lutherans

1657 are allowed to preach and same forbidden at New Amsterdam, Nov. 29
 Oct. whilst Lutheran preacher, Jacobus Ernestus Goutswaers, is to be 22 deported; desire policy toward Spanish, French, and English who come to buy.

30 Stuyvesant addresses a particular letter to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto, although contemporary extracts are preserved in New Neth. Papers, Nos. 1222 (8), and 1223 (4), in N. Y. Pub. Library, and it is cited in the letter of the directors, of May 20, 1658, printed in N.Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 418. A digest of some important parts is given here, viz:
 English at the eastern end of Long Island seek, through a written request of Cromwell, to be taken under the protection of England;
 their hope built upon a missive written by Cromwell, "To the English wel affected on long islandt, in America," which letter was brought into the village of Gravesand (Gravesend), and the messenger sought to have it opened and read there; Cromwell's letter and enclosures sent to Holland, etc.; advises the directors of keeping a watchful eye on the situation, so that the whole of Long Island may not be spoiled for the company through a revolt of the English, and thus become a total loss to Dutch, as well as the whole region of the North River; recommends sending over more free persons, to strengthen the province, etc.; complaints of inhabitants against Capt. H. de Raeth, skipper of "De Waech;" all goes well with the English masons at New Amsterdam, but carpenters are needed; wants 18 to 20 sledge-hammers (moocheren) to split clapboards, also some iron and coal; complaint about smuggling of goods coming under cover of the colony of New Amstel on the Delaware; complaint against Skipper De Raeth for his insolence;
 Stuyvesant seeks permission to go over to Holland.

Nov. The burgomasters order "that a notice be drawn up about 15 the stealing of the timber" by persons in the city, and "also a placard regarding the throwing of fish into the Graft" (canal, present Broad Street)—Rec. N. Am., VII: 163. Regarding the latter subject, see Feb. 20, 1657; and regarding the former, see
 Dec. 3, 1657.

29 A provincial ordinance for regulating the currency is passed by Stuyvesant and his council. It follows in general the premises of the suspended law of Jan. 3 of this year (which see for particulars), but shows a variation in the tabulated prices of necessities, namely,
 "articles of food and drink." The new ordinance is designed "to introduce some better order herein, as far as possible," since nothing better has been discovered "after much serious consideration and advice, even of the Lords Patroons themselves." Therefore, wampum is declared to be "in trade an absolute merchandise, to buy, barter, sell and rebarter it at wholesale, according to the value and quality thereof. But, inasmuch as Wampum, for want of Gold and Silver Coin, as already stated, must still serve as smaller change," it is judged "necessary to reduce, at the general Counting House [Pearl near Broad Sts.], the Wampum due the Company for Rents or other outstanding debts," and "to keep, receive and pay it out at Beaver value, the Beaver being reckoned still, and until further advised from Fatherland, at 8 guilders; therefore, fixing and reducing the Wampum at the general Counting House, provisionally, from six to eight White for one silver, and from three to four Black Beads for one stiver, at which rate Wampum shall be received and paid out, after the publication and posting hereof, at the general Counting House, without any distinction of persons;
 provided that the Wares, labor or services charged to the Company shall be computed according to the value so much lower, at least not higher, than the price of Beaver. If, on the other hand the Receivers are willing to continue the old rate, the Director General and Council resolve and ordain that the Company, or its servants on its part, can then agree respecting the quantity or portion of Wampum, as it is ordinarily current." Since some persons may have in their possession "a large quantity of Wampum," a recognized commodity, and suffer loss from sudden action, Stuyvesant and the council declare that they "do not intend, by this reduction of the Wampum at the general Counting House, any alteration or impairing of any private Contracts, Agreements or sales of Merchandise heretofore made or hereafter to be made," and they grant the privilege to public debtors, who pay within three months at the company's counting-house, to rate at six white and three black beads to a stiver, after which time all payments must conform with the present orders.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 317-20.

On July 11, 1658, the burgomasters of New Amsterdam resolved "to propose to the Board of Burgomasters and Schepens the regulation of the Seawant (Wampum)."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 189. Nov. 29 On Sept. 14 following, the city court "resolved to fix the seawant at eight white and four black beads for one stiver, and to communicate the same" to Stuyvesant.—Ibid., III: 10. In this communication, which was sent on Sept. 19, they said that they perceived

 "the great quantity of seawant coming hither to this City from N. England to the great advantage of the latter and loss of this place, inasmuch as those of N. England give 25 per cent more of the seawant they bring hither, whereby this place is so overstocked that it is held in no esteem, and bakers, brewers, traders, labourers, and others are so particular, that much difficulty is experienced in managing with it." They requested the provincial authorities, therefore, "provisionally to fix the seawant at eight white and four black beads for a stiver," if Stuyvesant and the council considered it "for the advantage of the Commonalty."—Ibid., III: 16;
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 201. The new ordinance was issued on Nov. 11, 1658 (q. v.).

Meanwhile, however, the burgomasters and schepens wrote to the directors at Amsterdam, telling them that "the money and daily currency in this Province, and especially in this City of [New Amsterdam, consists of seawant, in which great deception occurs and great quantities of which are brought hither from the neighbouring places, so that it is of no value any more, and no business can be done with it with the merchants, traders, shopkeepers, bakers, brewers and other such like, or any thing with difficulty be bought for it, unless goods be paid for @ three to four hundred per cent, and then get bad wares." They asked the directors to send over to Stuyvesant "silver coin of an unusual stamp or mint, and having received that, better order can be introduced then by the General and Council in the Seawant and beavers."—*Rec.
 N. Am.*, III: 17. The directors at Amsterdam, in a long letter to Stuyvesant and the council, on Feb. 13, 1659, revealed that Stuyvesant had sent them a "private letter" in which he had said "that it would be very desirable, if coin could be brought to New Netherland." They, however, saw "as yet no chance for it, there being many more places in the world, where this kind of currency is not to be found, as for instance among the people along the Gold Coast of Africa, where for want of it they make shift with some kinds of dress goods or small shells or other objects of little value, which for all that has quite as good a circulation, for anything will pass as currency in trade, as long as a value is placed upon and benefit derived from it." They added: "Even if we saw any chance and had the means to bring coin into the country, we see no way of keeping it there, especially as long as so much is lost on the return cargoes from there. The experience in Brazil has taught us the same lesson, for notwithstanding that the gold and silver coins were made 25 to 30 p. ct. lighter, specie could not be held there, and was exported." They consider the remedy ad measures "to prevent a further crying down of wampum by a general reduction of it."
 They did not agree with Stuyvesant's limitation of the reduction
 "only in the Company's office," but were "quite sure . . . that a general reduction will cheapen all commodities and goods and therefore the laborer and the people generally will profit more by it, than the natives" (Indians)—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 428. See also Oct. 9, 1658.

Claes van Elandt, Jr., one of the city court messengers, is ordered by the burgomasters to find out from the persons who have obtained recent grants of lots from the city if they will begin to build on them, and to inform those who will to make their appearance at the city hall on the morning of Dec. 6. On that day (not the 7th, as of record) a number of persons appeared in regard to this matter, or to be interrogated as to sheeting the bank of the East River (de Wad) before their lots. Hendrick Willemsen, baker, also agreed with the burgomasters to set up a fence beside the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 164-65.

Complaints having been made to the burgomasters and schepens that many of the tapsters of New Amsterdam are luring their patrons to linger unduly long in their taverns, not only taking from them their daily earnings but also receiving goods in pawn, in payment for more drink, and the impoverishment of families, who have become a burden to the decency or poormasters of the city, the tavern-keepers are now therefore forbidden "to receive in pawn any goods, of whatever nature they may be, such as clothing, furniture, or the like, and to sell drinks thereof." Heavy penalties are fixed for infractions.—Rec. N. Am., I: 33-34; *Laws & Ord. N.
 Neth.*, 320. Cf. Peterson & Edwards, op. cit., 50-51.

1657 Frequent complaints having been made to the city authorities
Dec. "that timber for piling, for building houses," etc., is being stolen
3 and carried off, the burgomasters, on Nov. 15, ordered that a notice be drawn up on the subject. Such a notice is now issued by them and the schepens, prescribing "arbitrary correction for the first offense," to be metted out even upon parents whose children are guilty of the theft, and abettors are to be punished likewise.—Rec. N. Am., I: 33; VII: 163.

" The surgeons of the city are required, whenever they dress a wound for a patient, to find out who wounded him, and to make a report thereof to the scourt.—Rec. N. Am., I: 34.

" Digging for the graft (in Broad St.) is "just commenced."—See Apr. 19, 1657.

15 In a fire ordinance enacted by Stuyvesant and the council, they declare as follows: "Further, whereas in all well ordered Cities and Towns it is customary that Fire-buckets, Ladders and Hooks be found provided about the corners of streets and in Public houses, in order to be the better prepared in time of need, which is more necessary here than elsewhere, because, for want of stone [or brick], many Wooden Houses are built within this City, the one adjoining the other; Therefore . . . [we] Order and authorize the Burgomasters of this City, that they, of themselves, or by their Treasurer, shall at once promptly demand, collect or cause to be collected, from each house, whether large or small, One beaver or eight guilders in Wampum, according to the rate at the Counting House, in order, with the proceeds thereof, to send, by the first opportunity, to Fatherland for one hundred to 150 leather Fire-buckets, and for the balance to have some Fire-buckets and Fire-hooks immediately made, and, further, once a year, from each Chimney, one guilder for a supplement and repairs thereof."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 333; Rec. N. Am., I: 34-35. See Jan. 18, 1656; July 1, 1660; Aug. 27, 1661.

Pursuant to this order, the burgomasters ordered the city treasurer, on June 13, 1658, "to proceed with the bucket money."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 189. And, on Aug. 1, four of the shoemakers of the city were called before the burgomasters, who informed them that it was "intended to have a considerable number of Fire Buckets made, shewing them, with that view, two made in this country, to give their opinion thereon and the lowest price" they would make them for. One declined to bid; another declared there were no materials to be had. Finally, the burgomasters contracted with Reinout Reinoutzen and Adriaen van Laer on the following conditions: "Reinout Reinoutzen undertakes to make the aforesaid buckets and to do everything that shall be necessary to them except cordage, for each of which he shall receive, six guilders ten stivers, half azeit half beavers, it being well understood, that the fourth part of the beavers shall be half beavers and three fourths whole beavers, and on the aforesaid conditions a contract is entered into with him for one hundred buckets, which he promises to manufacture between this and fourteen days after All Saints." Van Laer contracted, on the same conditions, for fifty buckets.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 191-92. The court messenger of the city bench was told by the burgomasters, on Aug. 8, 1658, "to go again around and to receive himself the bucket money;" while on Oct. 1, the city treasurer was instructed to hold in the treasury whatever the court messenger collected, and to record the names of delinquents and report them to the burgomasters.

That there was opposition to this tax is evident; so too that there were delinquents. For on Nov. 29, 1658, the court messenger, Pieter Schaaftbank, was ordered out again on a collection tour. This time he was instructed to get from the recalcitrants an answer as to whether they would or would not pay the levy.—Ibid., VII: 192, 194, 201.

On Jan. 4, 1659, the treasurer reported to the burgomasters that "nothing comes in from the bucket money," so the court messenger was told to hand over the assessment lists and returns to the treasurer who, in turn, was to show the presiding burgomaster the names of those who "failed to pay the bucket money, that they be summoned before the burgomasters."—Ibid., VII: 206. On Jan. 10, Reinoutzen brought to the city hall 100 "leathern fire-buckets," as per contract; and at the same time Van Laer brought 25.—Ibid., VII: 207.

Immediately, the burgomasters made provision for the hanging up of the buckets, which were to be numbered, as follows: In the city hall, nos. 1-50; at Daniel Litscho's, nos. 51-62; at Abraham Planck's house in the Smith's Valley, nos. 63-74; at Joannes

Pietersen Verbruggen's, nos. 75-86; at Paulus Lendertsen vander Grift's, nos. 87-98; at Nicasius de Sille's in the Sheep Pasture, nos. 99-110; at Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven's, nos. 111-122; and others at the houses of Jan Jansen, the younger, Hendrick Hendricksen Kip, the elder, and Jacobus Backer.—Ibid., VII: 207.

Allard Anthony, the city treasurer, reported the objections of residents on Perel (now State St.), and, on Jan. 11, four buckets with private house marks were brought to the city hall. On the same day Evert Duycking, the glazier, agreed with another to mark the stock of buckets as required.—Ibid., VII: 207, 208. The burgomasters having inspected the fire-buckets, on Jan. 31, reported no. 124 missing, but made record of 122 others as placed according to former orders at houses named. The same day Van Laer brought 25 more buckets to the city hall, the balance of those he contracted for, which were "taken away by Evert Duycking to put the City Arms on them and to number them."—Ibid., VII: 209.

Paulus Lendertsen vander Grift, the new city treasurer, was ordered on Feb. 28, 1659, not to collect "bucket money individually from the poor people" who lived "in hired houses" and could not afford the assessment; but to levy one half the amount and charge it "to the account of the owners" of the houses. The unpaid assessments were now to be collected by the treasurer through Resolved Waldron, the under-scout, and by one of the court messengers, for the amounts registered on the revised assessment lists.—Ibid., VII: 213-14. Vauder Grift was able to report, on March 28, that "something" had been collected. But, as "many" persons were "removing," the city treasurer urged that the under-scout be "empowered to collect the bucket money before May."—Ibid., VII: 217-18, 220.

The burgomasters ordered the city secretary, on Aug. 8, 1659, "to give a minute to the Fire Wardens, ordering them to complete the fire ladders, fire hooks, and to inspect the buckets, whether they are tight and fit for use in time of need."—Ibid., VII: 228. For a later assessment, see July 8, 1661.

The English magistracy, about a quarter century later (see Feb. 28, 1687), required householders to provide buckets for themselves, the number for a given house depending upon the number of hearths in the house.—M. C. G., I: 187.

It is found that street altercations and fights continue, despite the laws against them, because the fine imposed is so small that quarrelsome persons even joke about it. Therefore, Stuyvesant and the council prohibit anew such misconduct, because it is mischievous and sometimes leads to murder. The new fine imposed is 25 guilders "for a simple blow of the fist;" if blood flows, four times the amount, and when perpetrated in the presence of an officer, burgomaster, or schepen, a double fine.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 324; Rec. N. Am., I: 35-36, where the date is Dec. 25, an error.

Nicasius de Sille receives a ground-brief for a lot at the southwest corner of Pearl and Whitehall Sts.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 279; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 390.

Because it appears that Stuyvesant has "presented some lots to some people," and the same lots have also been given by the city authorities to others, through inadvertence, the burgomasters resolve, in order to prevent future mistakes, to ask Stuyvesant "to grant them an Acte giving them the disposal of the lots, . . . not mentioned in the ground briefs;" also those "still ungranted and of those disposed of," to concede them as he might think best.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 165-66.

Jacob Strycker is granted a lot (for his brother) on the south side of Wall St., near William St. The building of the Dutch Company of America now covers this ground.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 392.

The directors at Amsterdam offer to send over to the provincial government of New Netherlaad 1,000 lbs. of powder and a detachment of about 50 soldiers, as reinforcements, to withstand Indian depredations. They also say "that henceforth the said savage tribes" should not be "indulged in such liberties and freedoms, as they have now there and at the Mannhattans, for they are only emboldened by it and made to respect our people less, who, to gain an advantage in trade one over the other, caress and cajole them, even have armed them to their own destruction."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 75.

Two moans sent by the directors at Amsterdam are about to leave Holland for New Amsterdam to help in facing the fort with stone.—See summary under Dec. 19, 1656.

- Evert Duyckinck was referred to in this year as a "glass-maker."—Liber Deeds, A: 132. Likewise in 1679, the Labadists, in their Journal (p. 276), recorded that he "made and painted in the city" (New Amsterdam) the glass for the church "in the Hysoopus" (Esopus). Regarding the interpretation of this "making" of glass, see description of the Castello Plan, II: 299.
- "Het Marck[th]velt Steegh" (Steegh meaning Lane) was mentioned in 1648 (probably for the first time on July 6) in an instrument recorded in Liber Deeds, A: 134 (New York). This street, a block south of Beaver St., became Marketfield Street by 1677 (M. C. C., I: 58-59, 61). It is, however, called Petticoat Lane on the Miller plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-a, Vol. I). In 1730, the Bradford Map shows it as Marketfield Street.—See Pls. 26, 27, and 27-a, Vol. I. The part of the street extending from Whitehall St. to New St. was sold by the city to the N. Y. Produce Exchange under authority of the Laws of N. Y. (1880), Chap. 159. Between New and Broad Sts., it is still Marketfield Street.—See Pls. 82 and 87, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005. See also July 24, 1677.
- The land gate, on Broadway at Wall St., is mentioned in a deed of this year.—Liber Deeds, A: 130. This is the earliest mention found. It is shown on the Duke's Plan, Pl. 10, Vol. I; also on the Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, Vol. II.
- The name "brugh steech" (Bridge Lane) is also found mentioned in this year.—Rec. N. Neth., III: 142 (in State Library). This little street ran from Pearl to Bridge St., between Whitehall and Broad Sts. It was then closed by the time the Miller Plan was drawn (1695)—Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. See also C. Pl. 87, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995.
- In this year, Cornelis Steenwyck erected his dwelling-house.—Liber Deeds, A: 136 (New York). This house, a large and fine one for that time, stood at what is now the south-east corner of Whitehall and Bridge Sts., known as No. 27½ Whitehall St. An inventory of Steenwyck's house, made two years after his death (which occurred in 1684), valued this building at £700. See Castello Plan, II: 264-65; C. Pl. 82, Vol. II. Prior to 1763, this house became the King's Arms Tavern.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 952, 979.
- In this year, a house was built (see recital in Liber Deeds, A: 151, New York) on the site now covered by No. 34 Broad St., which later was occupied as the "Diaconies Huys" or deacons' house for the poor.—Vide infra Dominic Selyns's List of 1686. The inmates were transferred, about 1701, to a house at what is now No. 37 Wall St.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1460-62; cf. Liber Deeds, XII: 121 (New York) ibid., XXIII: 45, 57, 59; ibid., XXXII: 100. See also Castello Plan, II: 242, 246. The site is now covered by the Johnson building. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 953, 955; Pl. 174, Vol. III.
- Jan. — A great commotion over the preaching and activity of Quakers in various towns on Long Island, particularly at Flushing and Gravesend, leads to the arrest, examination, and fining of a number of persons for harbouring "the abominable sect of Quakers." The records relating to this subject are printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 402-9; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 188; Eccles. Rec., I: 409-10, 433. A good narrative account is found in Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 635-39.
- 4 — Henry Bresier is ordered by the burgomasters to make up his sheet-piling in front of his lot on the East River shore, just north of the Ferry (Fulton Street).—Rec. N. Am., II: 289; ibid., VII: 166.
- 7 — The secretary of the city is ordered to make out a list of all persons who hold the great burghright, in order that the retiring burgomasters and schepens may nominate therefrom persons as their successors who are "fit for such dignity."—Rec. N. Am., II: 291.
- 14 — In a proceeding before the city court, the provincial "Secretary's house in the fort" is mentioned.—Rec. N. Am., II: 297. We know, from the Rev. John Miller's plan (1695) of the fort, that the secretary's office was then the first house in the fort to the right of the entrance. It is shown in the Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82a, Vol. II), to the west of the fort gate, but not named; see also Pls. 23 and 25, Vol. I; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 975, title "Secretary's Office."
- 15 — Pursuant to the practice in Holland, notice of proposed marriages had to be given by publication three times before solemnization of a marriage could take place. There were some persons who, after the third publication, delayed for weeks and even months to enter the married state. This was in contravention of the laws in force and led to irregularities. The provincial government of New Netherlands, therefore, now orders that marriages shall be solemnized within a month after the bans are published, or, this being impossible, that the persons in default are to appear in court and state their reasons. For the first week's delay a fine of 10 guilders is imposed, and for every week thereafter the fine is fixed at 20 guilders. Furthermore, no common law marriages are allowed. If a man and woman live together without legal wedlock, they are to be fined 100 guilders, more or less, according to their station and ability to pay; whilst such persons may "be amerced anew therefor every month."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 328-29; Rec. N. Am., I: 17-38; II: 304.

There were "many spacious and large Lots, even in the best and most convenient part" of New Amsterdam, which lay vacant "without Buildings," and were "kept by their owners either for greater profit, or for pleasure." Ordinances demanded that they be improved, but these were unheeded. There were other people who were deprived of sites, especially "newcomers," who "would be encouraged in case they could procure a Lot at a reasonable price on a suitable location." Such a state of affairs promoted neither population nor business, nor did it add to "the embellishment" of the city. It is possible only because no penalty exists for neglect of the orders, and "the propriety owners" are, "for a great many years, occupying and reserving the Lots free of any Tax in expectation of greater profit or, using for pleasure, as Orchards and Gardens." The company's profits depend upon population, consumption of materials, and trade.

Because of the above-mentioned conditions, Stuyvesant and the council had "lately caused the vacant and unimproved Lots" to be surveyed (see April 19, 1677) by the "sworn Surveyor [Jacques Cortelyou] in the presence of the Burgomasters" of New Amsterdam, and had "found some hundreds of Lots inside the walls," south of the present Wall St., that were "not built on."

To encourage the use of these sites for building purposes, they now amplify former edicts (see, for example, Oct. 1, 1677), by requiring that all lots that "were lately measured and laid out by the Surveyor" shall "immediately after the publication and posting" of the new act, be "assessed and appraised, first and foremost by the owners in possession, themselves," to the end that they may not thereafter "complain of under valuation," and that the owners, so long as they retain the lots or allow them "to remain without proper and habitable houses built thereon," shall "pay for the same yearly the 15th penny in two installments, the one half on Mayday," and the other half before the Fairday of the city; the proceeds to be devoted "to the fortification" of the city "and the repairs thereof." The burgomasters are directed "to summon the Owners of the Lots without regard of persons before them" at the city hall; "to cause the Assessment to be made," and to "have it recorded by their Secretary in due form;" and the city treasurer is to receive the proceeds for the city's use. Should anyone prove stubborn and refuse compliance, he is to be fined and his lots are to be appraised "according to the value and the situation of the locality." He may retain them by payment of the tax rate on the new assessed valuation, otherwise he shall be obliged to part with them "for that price to the Burgomasters for the benefit of the City." Also, the burgomasters are empowered to condemn unimproved lots at the owner's appraised value, "for the account of the City, and to convey them to others" who will improve them. At the same time, the director-general and council, "in order to promote the population, settlement, beauty, strength and prosperity" of New Amsterdam, command that henceforth "no Dwelling-houses" shall "be built near or under the Walls or Gates" of the city, "before or until the Lots" found by the surveyor are "properly built on."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 325-27; Rec. N. Am., I: 36-37; II: 301-3. Publication was made of these regulations at the city hall on Jan. 17. The three translations of the act, while substantially the same in the main premises, vary in other respects. See further on this matter under March 14, 1659.

The burgomasters and schepens, "at least the major part of them," unable to obtain their yearly honoraria, ask Stuyvesant and the council "from what fund" they shall "receive their pay."—Rec. N. Am., II: 308. They are referred back to a decision of 1658 1654 (see Jan. 26, 1654), which provided for salaries from the city's revenues.—Ibid., II: 310. But the revenues are now insufficient; the proceeds being eaten up by expenditures for public works.—Ibid., II: 310-11. So, on the 29th, Stuyvesant and the council said they might profit by raising some subsidies pursuant to a recent concession to the city; yet, meanwhile, would have to abide by the expressed grant to their predecessors, of Jan. 25, 1656 (ibid., II: 24), which had provided for the opening of a city account in favour of their salaries.—Ibid., II: 321.

" The burgomasters petition Stuyvesant and the council for a grant of either the whole or a part of the revenue of the weigh-scales at New Amsterdam, alleging that the city's revenues are insufficient to provide for their salaries or "the many necessary repairs to the City works," and saying that, if the grant is made, they will, "according to the usage of the City of Amsterdam, cause a new scale to be erected or repair the old [one] and bring it" wherever the director-general and council shall "please to order and find it most proper."—Rec. N. Am., II: 308-9; VII: 167-68. On Jan. 25 (q. v.), Stuyvesant and the council declared they could not "condescend to grant the aforesaid petition without the advice" of the directors at Amsterdam, "because the Weighscales is a domain or regalia exclusively depending from the right of Patroonship," and the city's public works ought to be paid for by its inhabitants without recourse to the general revenues of the company. They said the city government did not always administer its revenues as wisely as should be done, and emphasized the charge by including, seriatim, a list of the revenues of the city from the year 1653 to date. None the less, to relieve the city from "the old and new debts," they consented, subject to ratification by the directors at Amsterdam, "that hereafter a just fourth of the Scales" should go to the city's treasurer or receiver, but subject to an accounting.—Ibid., II: 312-14; VII: 169-71. That this was not done, and that all the revenues of the weigh-scales continued to go into the treasury of the company, we know, because the directors were opposed to the concession to the city.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 441, 449, 470. See also Nov. 7, 1656; Feb. 13, 1659.

24 Residents of the "Brouwer Straet" (Brewers' later Stone Street) requested permission of the city court, on March 15, 1655 (q. v.), to have their street paved with the usual cobblestones. Nothing, however, was done at that time. On Jan. 4, 1658, the matter was revived. In view of the wretched state of the street from the bad wintry weather, the city authorities "deemed it expedient to recommend to the Street Inspectors" the laying out, regulation, and paving thereof, and discussed with them ways and means for carrying out the work.—Rec. N. Am., II: 289; VII: 166. No conclusion was arrived at then. Now, on the 24th, the burgomasters appoint Isaac de Forest and Jeronimus Ebbingh as special overseers to make a contract during the winter for beginning the work of paving with cobblestones in the spring, to levy a proportionate assessment on "each house standing in the street," and when the work is finished, to pay the expenses incurred for the improvement.—Ibid., II: 309-10; VII: 166-67.

On March 28, De Forest complained to the court that the inhabitants on the street were unwilling to pay the levied assessments, and requested an order.—Ibid., II: 366; VII: 181. The court thereupon (April 15) authorized its messenger, Claes van Elstrandt, Jr., "to speak to the neighbours" on the street in regard to their assessments and report the results to the burgomasters.—Ibid., II: 375-76. He reported (April 26) that some had the money ready, whilst others would "pay on the earliest opportunity."—Ibid., VII: 185-86. The overseers, De Forest and Ebbingh, at the same time asked for their discharge from the superintendency of the street, as they wished to go to Fort Orange (Albany), and Isaac Kip and Matheus de Vos were appointed in their stead. However, on June 13, they were again restored to their previous office.—Ibid., VII: 185, 189. On Aug. 8, the paving was suspended until the arrival of De Forest, because Ebbingh had again expressed his intention of going to Fort Orange and obtained his discharge, handing over to Burgomaster Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt "the money in his possession and the account remaining with him."—Ibid., VII: 192.

25 Stuyvesant and the council make a provisional grant of one fourth of the revenue of the public weigh-scales to the city treasury, subject to the ratification of the directors at Amsterdam.—See summary under Nov. 7, 1656, and Jan. 22, 1658. For the answer of the directors, see Feb. 13, 1659.

Because "some Secretaries, Notaries, Clerks and other licensed persons" are exacting excessively large fees, Stuyvesant and the council order that nobody in New Netherlands shall be allowed to draw up or write any public instruments, except those who are duly licensed and sworn by the director-general and council on Feb. 5 of each year, and a table of fees is fixed upon in great detail. Licensed scribeers are obliged to keep a register of all transactions, and are prohibited from accepting gratuities or receiving money in advance for services; nor are they to compound with anybody "about a Fee and pay for writing" that is as yet unearned. However, they may receive a fee before or after a suit, on rendering a bill of particulars. Violation of the ordinance shall result in forfeiture of the license, and a fine of 50 guilders. All instruments are required to be signed by the licensed scrivener in the presence of the person executing the same, and are to be sealed, a fee of six stuivers being allowed for the ensailing. Poor or indigent people are to be served gratis. In September following, the notaries, who had petitioned the provincial government for a modification of the fee ordinance, were granted their fees by payment in beaver or wampum.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 329-331; Rec. N. Am., II: 314-18; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 200.

" In order to hasten the settlement of the country on the west side of the North River, and quiet doubts respecting title, Stuyvesant formally purchased from the Indians all the territory now known as Bergen, in New Jersey, beginning from the great rock above Wichackan, and from there right through the land, until above the island Sikakes, and from there to the Kill van Col, and so along to the Constable's Hook, and thence again to the rock above Wichackan." The farmers at "Gamoeneop," or Communipaw, who had been forced to desert their settlements in 1655, now petitioned to be restored to their former homes. The director promptly complied with their request; but, to guard against future danger from the savages, required them to concentrate their dwellings, so that a village might eventually be incorporated there.—Broadhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 642, and authorities there cited.

" A double set of nominations is made by the burgomasters and schepens for their successors, and is referred to Stuyvesant and the council for choice of a single set therefrom. The latter, while having no objection to the personnel of the list, refuse to give their approval, because the nominations were "not made in the presence of the Schout" (Nicasius de Sille), who, they say, as "head of the bench, moderator and collector of the votes," has "a double voice in case of equality of votes." It is also charged that the nominations have not been made in conformity with a previous order, of Jan. 18, 1656 (q. v.), by which the designation was "left to the Bench," on condition that it be made "in the presence of the Deputy to the Director General and Council," and that irregularities exist in the papers. The city court agreed, on the 31st, to begin de novo; but other complications arose which, seemingly, were overcome by the next day (Feb. 1), when nominations were again sent in to Stuyvesant and the council, revised in form to meet the aforesaid objections. A dispute arose as to the right of any of the servants of the West India Co. to be chosen as members of the city court, but this matter was settled amicably, and, on Feb. 2, a new board of burgomasters and schepens was duly elected and confirmed.—Rec. N. Am., II: 319-25.

"t Marck[ivelt] is mentioned in a conveyance recorded in Liber Deeds, A: 121 (New York). This was the later Whitehall St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005.

9 Frederick Philipsen receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the north-east corner of Stone and Whitehall Sts., a part of the present site of the New York Produce Exchange.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 49; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 380.

14 Petrus Stuyvesant petitions the provincial council of New Netherlands and the burgomasters of New Amsterdam for a ground-brief or patent and a transport or deed of the lots on the East River (now Pearl St., at the foot of the present Whitehall St.), upon which he has erected a costly and handsome building, known in later years as "Whitehall." See "Stuyvesant's Great House" in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 952. The circumstances of this transaction were as follows:—The right of granting ground-briefs resided with the director-general and council as supreme representatives of the directors at Amsterdam, who were the lords patrons of Maahattan Island; but issuing of transports or deeds of conveyance rested with the burgomasters, because that right

- 1658 had been surrendered to the city by the company. Stuyvesant, as director-general, could not give himself a valid patent. Therefore, he petitioned those who had the authority to secure him and his heirs in the possession of these lots, through regular processes. Stuyvesant said they of their own knowledge knew that he had "fenced, recovered and raised up, at great cost and labour, out of the water and swamp, certain abandoned lots granted in the year 1647" by Kieft to Jan Pietersen, who had conveyed them "to one Thomas Baxter," subsequently "a bankrupt and fugitive from the Province," and the same person who in the English troubles had turned pirate and plundered inhabitants in the Dutch province. On account of Baxter's absconding and failing to appear when summoned by ringing of the bell, his lots were forfeited and reverted to the company. Stuyvesant asked for the annulment of Kieft's ground-brief, which, however, he said, could not be "found on the Register," and for a new ground-brief, etc., to him and his heirs, so that they might "enjoy in peace the fruits of the great expense incurred and still [to be] incurred" on the property. The council allowed the ground-brief, "After proper survey be made," and the burgomasters gave "due conveyance thereof according to the survey," because the object was considered laudable, and the request could not well be refused.—Rec. N. Am., II: 329-30; VII: 171-72.
- 1658 Jochem Kierstede, brother of Dr. Hans Kierstede, obtained a patent from Kieft, on April 12, 1647, for land on the East River (now Pearl Street) at the foot of Whitehall St.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 374. Jochem was one of those who perished with Kieft in the ill-fated "Princess," in 1647. His brother, Hans, laid claim to the granted lot as heir. Now (1658) Stuyvesant complains that this land, which is south of his own "sheeted and fenced ground," lies not only unbuilt on, but also "unsheeted, unfenced and unleased." He says that if the claimant is to continue in possession, he ought to be ordered "to sheet, raise and fence in" the lot, so that he, the next door neighbour, as well as others, may not "suffer any loss or damage thereby," also that it is the common custom for neighbours to "erect together the common sheet piling or contribute to the expense thereof." The burgomasters order the heirs to attend to its sheeting and raising or, in default, to surrender the lot.—Rec. N. Am., II: 330-31; VII: 172-73.
- 1658 Jacob van Corlaer, whose name survives in Corlaer's Hook (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965), was at this time a school teacher in New Amsterdam. He is ordered by the director-general "to cease holding school, until he has asked for and obtained the consent in proper form."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 412. For the remonstrance of his patrons, see March 5.
- 1658 Jacob Leendertsen vander Grift is elected and confirmed by Stuyvesant and the council as "sworn measurer in matters of receipt and delivery of any grain, lime or whatever is measured by skepels or barrels" in New Amsterdam. Regulations are made for the administration of his office.—Rec. N. Am., II: 337.
- 1658 Claes van Elsland, Sr., petitions the city court for the post of "hal knecht," or attendant at the shambles or meat market of New Amsterdam, because "both English and strangers" have asked that a person be appointed who shall "keep block, scales and weights in the shambles," to serve them when they come there with their meat, etc. The request was denied, on Mar. 7, "for certain reasons" not revealed in the records.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336, 349; VII: 173-74, 177.
- 1658 Allard Anthony is ordered by the burgomasters "to make an inventory of all the papers remaining with him regarding the City; also the a/c of the Great and Small Burgher right." On the 28th, he exhibited all of the papers in the city court.—Rec. N. Am., II: 337, 343; VII: 174, 175.
- 1658 Sibout Claessen is ordered to make tight the sheet-piling of his lot on the East River.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336; VII: 173. His lot ran through from "Hoogh Straet" (now Stone Street) to the East River (now Pearl Street), just above the "gracht" or canal (now Broad Street).
- 1658 Warnar Wessels is "allowed the gauging of the barrels for all his life, but the branding for one year."—Rec. N. Am., II: 336; VII: 174. See March 19.
- 1658 The city court directs that all fines shall be applied as follows: One-third for the officer, one-third for the city, and one-sixth, each, for the church and for the poor of the city.—Rec. N. Am., II: 340.
- 1658 Upon nomination by the burgomasters, on Feb. 21, Stuyvesant and the council now elect and confirm Willem Beeckman as orphan-master and Hendrick Jansen vander Vio as a church-warden of New Amsterdam. They were accepted by the city on the 28th, and the secretary of the city was, on March 21, ordered to furnish them their commissions.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336, 340-42; 357; VII: 174, 175, 178; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 191.
- 1658 Albert Jansen receives the grant of a lot. His widow, Elcke Jansen, received a ground-brief for this on Oct. 19, 1660. The property is now the north-west corner of William St. and Exchange Pl.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82-82e, Vol. II and II: 287-88; Map of Dutch Grants, II: 393, and C. Pls. 82, 82e, and 87; Rec. N. Am., II: 343; VII: 176.
- 1658 The origin at this time of the village of New Harlem on Manhattan Island is related in a provincial ordinance of this date. Stuyvesant and his council have contemplated the insecurity of the northern portion of the island, as Indian raids have demonstrated in recent years. To promote agricultural pursuits, the raising of cattle, and the security of Manhattan, "as well as for the greater recreation and amusement of this City of Amsterdam in New Netherland," they now resolve "to form a New Village or Settlement at the end of the Island, and about the lands of Jochem Pietersen [Kuyter, deceased]," and those adjoining. This proposed new village is "favored by the Director General and Council with the following Privileges," to wit—Each settler to receive 18 to 20 morgens of arable land and 6 to 8 morgens of flats, to be exempted from the customary payment of "tenths" for a period of 15 years, beginning with May, 1658, but "on condition" that the grantee pay in instalments eight guilders for each tillable morgen of land within three years, for the benefit of those persons who have been driven off the lands by Indian calamities or otherwise. The provincial government promises the new inhabitants protection in their possession, to "maintain them with all their Power, and, when notified and required, to assist them with 12 to 15 Soldiers on the monthly pay" of the West India Co., "the Village providing quarters and rations." When as many as 20 to 25 families are settled in the village, there is to be erected an inferior court of justice, the membership whereof is to be chosen at first from a double number of nominees named by the inhabitants, and annually thereafter in the same manner, but on recommendation of the village magistrates in office. Also, when this stage of organization is reached, the village is to "be accommodated with a good, pious orthodox Minister, toward whose maintenance" the provincial government promises "to pay half the Salary; the other half to be supplied by the Inhabitants in the best and easiest manner, at the advice of the Magistrates of the aforesaid Village, at the most convenient time." The provincial government promises to assist the inhabitants at a convenient time in constructing, with the help of "the Company's Negroes, a good wagon road" from New Amsterdam "to the Village aforesaid, so that people" may "travel hither and thither on horseback and with a wagon." Until this village has a chance to get started, no other villages or settlements are to be allowed by the director-general and council, and "certainly not until the aforesaid number of Inhabitants in Harlem is completed. To encourage intercourse "with the English of the North," a "Ferry and a suitable Scow" are contemplated, as well as "a Cattle and Horse Market."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 335-37. See Nov. 27, 1658. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.
- 1658 The burgomasters and schepens refer to the director-general and council a petition remonstrating against the order to Jacob van Corlaer to close his school (see Feb. 19). The petitioners "find themselves greatly interested thereby, inasmuch as their children forget what the above named Jacob van Corlaer had to their great satisfaction previously taught them in reading, writing and cyphering, which was much more than any other person, no one excepted." Burgomasters and schepens join with the petitioners in requesting "that your Hon<sup>rs</sup> may be pleased to permit the abovementioned Corlaer again to keep school."—Rec. N. Am., II: 348. Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 115. The request was denied on March 19 (q. v.).
- 1658 The council of New Netherland gives notice to the burghers of New Amsterdam to lodge as many married soldiers as they can conveniently in their domiciles, at a certain rate.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 192.
- 1658 This day was set apart by proclamation of Stuyvesant and the council as a day of general fasting, prayer, and thanksgiving in New Netherland. The text of the proclamation was prepared in January, in both Dutch and English. Publication was made in

- 1658 New Amsterdam "from the City Hall after the usual ringing of
Mar. the bell" on March 4. Among the "signs of God's just judgment 13 and certain forerunners of severe punishment," the proclamation recited the "raising up and propagating a new, unheard of, abominable Heresy, called Quakers; seeking to seduce many, yea, were it possible, even the true believers." All amusements and hilarity were forbidden on this day.—Rec. N. Am., II: 346-47; Cal. Hist.
19 MSS., Dutch, 190. Cf. Broedhead, I: 638-39.
- A provincial ordinance is passed to prevent fraud in the shipping of tobacco to Holland. It requires the shipper to make a declaration to the fiscal of the company at New Amsterdam of the number of casks and the exact weight of each cask.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 337.
- The provincial council resolves to rent the ferry at New Amsterdam (Dover and Pearl Sts.) to the highest bidder.—Cal. Hist.
21 MSS., Dutch, 192. See May 28, 1658.
- The provincial council resolves to farm out the wind-mill of the West India Co. in New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 192.
- Bartholomew van Schel and the two masons recently arrived from Holland to complete the stone wall around the fort obtain from the council an increase in pay for board money.—See summary under Dec. 19, 1656.
- The burgomasters make regulations for the branding of barrels, and choose Jan Jansen van Brestee (or Bresteede), cooper, as brander for one year. All barrels are required to be branded annually in May of each year with the year mark.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336, 349, 356-57; VII: 174, 177-78, 221. See also Feb. 21.
- Pieter Schaafbanck (or Schabbanck), the city jailer at the city hall, requests the burgomasters to allow him to "lay in beer for the prisoners, also, wine and liquors, free of excise, likewise fire and light gratis," which is granted on condition that he will not "allow any parties directly or indirectly," that is associated drinking.— 23 Rec. N. Am., II: 355.
- Replying to the communication of Mar. 5 (q. v.) from the burgomasters and schepens, Stuyvesant says: "School teaching and the induction of School Masters depends absolutely from the Jus Patronatus, by virtue of which the Director General and Council for pregnant reasons interdicted Jacob van Corlaer, he having presumed to take such on himself without their Order." To which order and resolution "they still adhere."—Rec. N. Am., II: 348.
"The school, which was also a religious institution, was likewise under the direct control of the colonial government. The presumption of Jacob van Corlaer to teach in a school without the order of the Director-General and Council brought a very clear assertion of the powers of the government, which then refused to grant the requisite permission even in spite of the humble application of the Burgers and inhabitants and the intercession of the Burgomasters and some Schepens."—Zwierlein, Religion in 25 New Neth., 46. See March 26.
- The president of the city court states that several of the inhabitants who have purchased their burgherright "for a year and a day" have failed to pay, and even scoffed at the burgomasters when the city messenger approached them for collection. On the next day (26th), the burgomasters decreed that henceforth all burgherrights must be paid promptly into the treasury of the city, and that those persons who had already procured the right must pay within 24 hours, or be subject to an execution.—Rec. N. Am., 27 II: 359, 365; VII: 180.
- The burgomasters and schepens renew their system of fines for non-attendance of their members at the sessions of the city court.— 29 Rec. N. Am., II: 364-65.
- To Jacob van Corlaer's petition for permission "to keep a school in this City for the instruction of children in reading, writing, etc." the brief reply is: "For weighty reasons the Director-General and Council decree: Nihil!"—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 413.
The petitioner's school had previously been ordered closed because of his presuming to teach without proper authorization (see March 9).
- The burgomasters offer to pay half of an account for planks delivered by Schepen Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, because the delivery is for the benefit of the city and for the fact, the latter pertaining to the expenses of the company.—Rec. N.
31 Am., II: 366; VII: 181-82.
- It is ordered by the burgomasters that the street or lane running from "Hoogh Straet" (now Stone St.) to the East River (now Pearl St.), between the lots of Charles Bridges (called Carle van
provisionally "for the use of the City until further order."—Rec. N.
33 Am., II: 366; VII: 182.
- This lane divided the original grants of Mar. 28 1645 to Thomas Willet and Richard Smith, and lay between the Stadt Huys Lane (Coenties Alley) and the Burgers Path beyond.
- Cornelis Steenwyck petitions the city court for payment of 935 florins, "together with all loss and interest accrued thereon,
1 Apr. arising from planks and nails delivered in the time of the English troubles [1653] for erecting the entrenchments of this City." He is referred to Stuyvesant and the council in the matter.—Rec.
2 N. Am., II: 368-69. They gave him an order, on the next day, to the burgomasters and schepens for payment of the account.—
Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 193. See also Sept. 2, 1659.
- John Denman asks the city court for permission to tap, but is refused, "the principal reason" being "that there is so great noise and racket" at his place "that the whole neighbourhood is kept awake." He says this happened while he was absent at Boston.
The court advises him to "pay attention to his conduct, and that such disposition shall be made as circumstances permit."—Rec.
4 N. Am., II: 364, 369.
- The provincial council resolves to summon the principal merchants of New Amsterdam, for consultation on proposed changes in the customs.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 194.
- Abraham Pietersen, who has been the miller of the company at New Amsterdam, is granted a permit by the provincial government to erect a water-mill on the Fresh Water.—Cal. Hist. MSS., 6 Dutch, 193. Innes says that it was a tide-mill, and stood near the present James and Cherry Sts. on the brook of the Fresh Water.—
New Am. and Its People, 346. Regarding Pietersen, see Castello Plan, II: 231-32; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961-62, where the mill is situated at Water St. near James Slip.
- Certain laws are renewed, relating to the prohibition against importing munitions of war, unreasonable loading and unloading of ships, and carrying persons away from New Netherland without a pass. These laws were apparently drawn up in Holland and sent printed to New Netherland for execution.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 8 346.
- Cornelis van Ruyven, the provincial secretary, is ordered to make an abstract of the principal ordinances in force, in order that they may be renewed. This first revised edition of the laws, consisting of 21 sections, is approved by Stuyvesant and the council on this day.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 324-46.
- The burgomasters conclude, in compliance with a placard of 11 the director-general and council, to authorize the city treasurer
"to collect and take up from each house one beaver or eight guilders in seawant according to the rating of the Treasury." Those who cannot pay are to be listed and reported to the burgomasters, and the treasurer is required to collect the amount "from the occupants of the houses," the tenant deducting half the sum from his landlord.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 182.
- Some persons are observed cutting sods "between the wall of this City and the Fresh Water," approximately between the present Wall St. and Pearl St., as well as on the Highway (Broadway), south of Wall St., which militates against "the neatness and serviceableness of the road," and makes sods scarce when needed for mending and repairing the city's fortifications. Stuyvesant and the council therefore forbid "all persons, of what quality soever
... from attempting to cut or causing to be cut any sods on the Common Pasture," between the city's palisades and the Fresh Water, as well as "on the Highway," without their permit, subject to a fine for infraction of the law.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 347.
See also description of "A Plan of the Commons" (1785), in III: 869.
- As to "further granting of lots," the burgomasters resolve "to proceed no further before a map thereof be made," and they decide to ask Stuyvesant "to order the surveyor to draw as soon as possible a map of the lots within this City."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 182-83. See June 13.
- The burgomasters authorize the city schout, Nicasius de Sille, "to notify all who lie along the North River, to leave their bank and lay it off according to the General's [Stuyvesant's] plan."
—Rec. N. Am., VII: 183.
- Nicasius de Sille, city schout, is directed "to tell every one having vacant unfenced lots" to fence them within six weeks.— 13 Rec. N. Am., VII: 183.
- The treasurer of the city is ordered to send the messenger of the city court around to notify the tavern-keepers to renew their licenses and "bring in their old or last license."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 183.
- All persons are forbidden to "dig or dredge any Oyster shells

1658 on the East River or on the North River," between the palisades
Ap. 11 of the city and the Fresh Water.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 347.

As Stuyvesant and the council have asked to define what duty shall be paid for goods imported into New Netherland from Virginia, "the North [New England] or elsewhere," which are and which are not subject to imposts, they now ordain "that all Mer-chandises imported . . . outside this Province" shall pay ten per cent. ad valorem, "except Provisions, Malt, Tobacco and Sugar," which shall continue to come in duty free. In the category of "Merchandises" are included "all Wines, Beer, Vinegar and Oil."
—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 348.

The provincial council by order extends the time for covering Willem Pietersen de Groot's house in New Amsterdam with tiles, until he receives them from Holland or Fort Orange (Albany).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195. At the same time, the operation of the ordinance of Dec. 15, 1657 (q. v.), for the removal of all thatched or straw roofs in the city, is suspended for two months.—Ibid., 195; Rec. N. Am., VII: 184.

Pieter Schaffhanck is accepted as city messenger of the city courts by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., II: 376.

The council of New Netherland approves of Stuyvesant's leave to go on official business to the South (Delaware) River. He returned to New Amsterdam on Monday, May 13, and reported to the council on the 15th concerning the affairs in the Delaware country.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195, 196; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 212, where an error in the printed record is "15th" for 13th as the date of his return.

An act continuing the ordinance of April 27, 1656 (q. v.), and further regulating the duties payable on imported and exported goods, is passed by the provincial government of New Netherland.
To prevent persons from pleading ignorance of the law, it is ordered translated into French and English, so that the facts can be disseminated by posters in these languages as well as in Dutch.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 349-51.

A provincial law is passed for regulating court practice, particularly with respect to court messengers. Plaintiffs are required to summon defendants through a court messenger at least one day before trial, except in cases arising between strangers; the court messenger is required to make a written return of service, together with the answer, to the court. "All judgments, interlocutory or definitive, whereby anyone" is "condemned to pay money, or deposit it in Court," must be "put in execution within ten days," if no appeal has been lodged in cases that admit of an appeal.
The method of carrying out the judgment by the court messenger is prescribed, as to attachment of furniture or movables, or even seizure of real estate and ejectments. For the delivery of summonses and arrests, fixed fees are established for court messengers.
Such fees, within the jurisdiction of New Amsterdam, are, for a single summons twelve stuivers, of which six stuivers are to be paid the secretary for entering the action; for an arrest twelve stuivers; for committing a person one guilder and four stuivers; for keeping a prisoner overnight two guilders, and for serving a mandamus one guilder and ten stuivers. Court messengers are not allowed fees for services in cases wherein the company is concerned, but are obligated to serve under the regular salary allowance.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 351-56.

In a letter to Stuyvesant and the council, the directors at May 20 Amsterdam say: "Domine Driusius has repeatedly expressed to us his opinion [see Feb. 12, 1657] that he thought it advisable, to establish there [New Amsterdam] a Latin school for the instruction and education of the young people, offering thereto his own services." They report "no objection to this project," and add:
"If you too consider it desirable, you may make an experiment by opening such a school there; but you must not fail to inform us, how such an institution can be managed to the best advantage of the community and kept up with the least expense to the Company." To encourage Driusius in his ministerial duties, the directors increase his board allowance to fl. 300 ($120.) per year, and grant him besides "a house rent free or instead of it 200 fl. yearly," which the provincial authorities carried out.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 419; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 199, 202, and see Sept. 19.
In his latter days, Driusius suffered from "weakness" and "a failure of memory," which "disabled him from serving," and he died on April 18, 1673.—Eccles. Rec., I: 612, 613, 617; Ex. Coum.
Min. (ed. by Paltsits), I: 110-11; Corwio, Manual, 433. For an earlier Latin school, see April 14, 1652.

A resolution in the provincial council provides that the city of New Amsterdam be enclosed with palisades, having two or three openings or gates, in order to prevent smuggling.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 196; N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222(9), in N. Y. Pub. Library.
On July 11, the burgomasters resolved "to set off the City with a wall."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 190. Again, on Aug. 19, the council heard the details of Stuyvesant's proposals for enclosing the city at the river side by palisades, and for completing the stone wall of the fort.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 200. The continuance of smuggling led the directors at Amsterdam to approve of Stuyvesant's plans, as they thought it necessary to stop the practice.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., XIV: 27. See also 1656-7.

The provincial council resolves that Stuyvesant shall proceed at once to the Esopus, now Kingston, Ulster County, outrages having been committed there by Indians, and the colonists having demanded soldiers for defense. Stuyvesant departed with several private yachts, accompanied by Govert Loockermans and 50 soldiers, and arrived the following day. It was during this visit that he advised concentration of the settlers in a stockaded village, which was formed under the name of Wiltwyck. Stuyvesant remained until June 25, and returned to Manhattan on the 28th;
but, owing to renewed troubles by the Indians during the summer, he again visited Esopus in October (see Oct. 9). Each time he left a garrison to guard the place.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 196, 201; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 77-90, 93-96. Cf. Brodhead, His.
State of N. Y., I: 647-49, 650. See also July 23, 1658.

The provincial council resolves, since "the lease of the ferry from this Island of Manhattans [Dover and Pearl Sts.] to Long Island [Fulton St., Brooklyn] expires on the last of this month," to lease it again for a term of three years. As they "have ascertained, that the ferry cannot be let on the conditions proposed" by them, "namely, that the lessee shall be bound to buy or build, within four or not longer than five months, a scow, large enough for the transport of animals and other goods: because the majority of the persons, who wish to lease the ferry, are people of small means, if not poor," and so heavy an expense cannot be incurred for a privilege of only three years; therefore, they decide to endeavour to induce the present ferry-man, Egbert van Borsum, to continue "without public competition, for a fair equivalent . . .
for the term of three years, on condition" that he shall have a scow built within four or five months. They appoint a committee of council to "bring about an agreement."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 421; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 196. See March 19, 1658.

The "Land Poort" (land gate) is mentioned in a deed of this date, in which Christiaan Barents conveys to Hendrick Hendricksen (Liber Deeds, A: 130); also in a mortgage of the same date on a lot in the "Heere Wegh" (Broadway) near the land gate (Schepens Register, city clerk's office, Municipal building). This was the gate at about the present Broadway and Wall St., and these mentions of it are the earliest we have met with. It is also mentioned, under date of Dec. 12, this year, in Min. of Orph. Court, I: 59. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Just two months have gone by (see April 11) since the burgomasters decided not to grant any more lots until a map had been made, and since they asked Stuyvesant to order Jacques Cortelyou, the surveyor, "to draw as soon as possible a map of the lots within this City."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 182-83. They now decide "to Notify the surveyor," themselves, "to make out a Map" (ibid., VII: 189). On July 11, they agreed to instruct him "not to measure any lots except by foot wood-measure (hout voet); further to request the Director General that a map (Platte Kaart) be drawn of the lots measured within the City;" yet, when they brought the matter up before the whole city court on the same day, "nothing was done therein."—Ibid., II: 410; VII: 189.

The dilatoriness of Cortelyou nettled the burgomasters who, on Aug. 9, remonstrated to Stuyvesant and the council "that they had repeatedly requested the surveyor to make a map" (Platte Kaart), but could not get it from him, notwithstanding their interest in the matter. They besought the provincial authorities to order the surveyor to make the map with all despatch.—Ibid., VII: 193-94. Such an order was issued to Cortelyou by the council on Aug. 30.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 200.

The burgomasters decide "to give an order to the [Court] Officer, to warn every one to settle their vacant lots as an ornament to the place," and "to direct the Court Messenger to go around and notify every one," who has "received lots from the City," and to 1658 enquire whether they intend to build or not; also to get "the June plan" from Burgomaster Paulus Leendertsen vander Griff.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 189. See also April 11.

13 The last mention of Adam Rodantsen, the first schoolmaster of New Amsterdam, appears in a record of this date.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 189.

24 Early in May, one Hermen Jacobsen Bamboes, who had been killed by the Indians, was buried in New Amsterdam. His estate was by his widow "kicked away with the foot," and she "laid the key on the coffin,"—that is to say, surrendered his estate for the benefit of his creditors. Curators for the administration of the estate were appointed by the court, among them Hendrick Jansen vander Vin. He now asks the court to prevent "the skipper of the sloop sailing for Canada" from taking with him Dirck Claessen, before the latter has given security for the payment of what he owes the estate of the deceased, which is granted.—Rec. N. Am., II: 406; VII: 187-88.

July The inception of intercolonial trade between the Dutch at 2 Manhattan and the French of Canada is interesting. In the autumn of 1657, Father Simon Le Moyne, the Jesuit missionary among the Mohawks, visited Manhattan. "He remained here eight days, and then returned to Fort Orange, and thence by land to Canada."—Eccles. Rec., I: 434. He bore with him to Canada an expressed wish of the Dutch to open trade relations with the Canadians. On Feb. 18, 1658, Louis d'Ailleboust de Coulonge, acting governor of Canada, wrote Father Le Moyne that, as the Dutch and French were allies, he and the principal persons of Canada saw no reason why the Dutch should not be allowed to trade with Canada, and he therefore gave them consent to "come when they please under the condition that they submit to the same customs as French vessels, forbidding trade with the savages and the public exercise on land of their religion." Father Le Moyne transmitted this letter to Stuyvesant, with his own of April 7, in which he said of the proposed intercourse: "May it therefore bring happy, beneficial and fortunate results. Dear friends of the Manhatans, draw your furrows through the sea to our Quebec and some time hereafter our Canadians will unexpectedly with God's guidance safely reach your shores."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 415.
On July 2, Jean de Pré (also written Jean Du Pré, Jan Perri or Perier), a native of "Commene [Comioes] in Flanders," who received the small burgherright of New Amsterdam in April, 1657, and is now aged 29 years, petitions the provincial council of New Netherland for remission of duties on a cargo of sugar and tobacco in the sloop "Jean Baptiste," which is granted because it is the first trading voyage to Canada.—Rec. N. Am., II: 412; IV: 230 (note); VII: 152; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 197. He left some heavy debts behind him, which involved his wife, Aafse Leendertse, in court litigation, and impoverished her. He never returned, his ship having been wrecked on the Island of Anticosti. His widow was married to Cornelis Andriessen Hooghlant.—Rec. N. Am.,
III: 19, 74-75, 78, 81; IV: 230.

11 At some time prior to this date, Pieter Wolfertsen van Couwen-hoven received a lot from the burgomasters, for which he was given a deed, Nov. 18/28, 1664. The property was that on the present west side of Broad St., covered by the building of the Commercial Cable Co.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II:
229-30; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367.

23 The burgomasters having decided to regulate the working hours of the labouring classes of the city, and to determine when they shall "go to their work and come from their work, as well also their recess for meals," the city court resolves "to draft a petition to the Director General and Council to establish Guilds."—Rec. N. Am., II: 410; VII: 189-90. For examples of the operations of local craftsmen in opposition to the introduction of workmen from other provinces, who undertake to perform the same services at less pay, see April 2, 1747; Aug. 24, 1769.

" From a court proceeding before the burgomasters and schepens, held at the city hall on this date, we know that the court met upstairs and that the prisoners were confined "below."—Rec. N. Am., II: 411.

" The burgomasters resolve "to set off the City with a wall."— Rec. N. Am., VII: 190. For an account of the commencement of this movement for the city's protection, and to stop smuggling, see May 25. See also Castello Plan, Vol. II.

" The burgomasters of the city resolve "to communicate with the General [Stuyvesant] relative to having a public Well made in the Heere Straat" (Broadway).—Rec. N. Am., VII: 190. As July this is the only reference to this well in the records of the Dutch 11 régime, it cannot be determined whether it was dug as proposed, or, if dug, exactly in what part of the street it was situated.

The city court, of schout, burgomasters, and schepens, resolves to petition Stuyvesant "to communicate to the inferior Bench of Justice the privilege of the Great Burgher-right."—Rec. N. Am., II: 410.

The council makes appointments of officers in the city military companies under the orange flag and under the blue flag.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 199.

Allard Anthony, as treasurer of the city, makes a demand on 18 Isaack de Forest, schepen, for the payment of fl. 104, "for a shed purchased from the City," but De Forest, alleging "that he paid Frans: Clasen fl. 50. and again fl. 8:10 to Juffw Wessels," requests 12 days delay in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 190.

The name of "Brugh Straat" (the present Bridge Street)
22 appears thus early in a deed, in which Johannes Nevius conveys to Cornelis Steenwyck the property situated at the present 29 Pearl St., running through to Bridge St.—Liber Deeds, A: 136-37 (register's office, N. Y. County). See also Feb. 11, 1693; May 2 and 9, 1808; June 26, 1809. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995.

Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors at 23 Amsterdam, which accompanies a large number of official papers.
A liberal contemporary extract from this lot of papers, giving most important data, many of which have not been known hitherto, is contained among the N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (g), in N. Y.
Pub. Library. A partial answer from the directors, of Feb. 13, 1659, is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 232-33; XIII: 98; XIV: 427-34. A digest of the chief contents of the enclosures is given here, viz: a statement from Jan de Decker, in June, 1658, concerning finances, sent over in the ship "Otter," which left the Texel on Jan. 6, 1658, and arrived in New Netherland on March 13 or 14; books loosely kept in the province, but new receiver (Van Ruyven) an honest man with good experience, his instructions; the late Fiscal Van Tienhoven's accounts, reporting thereon too slow;
inventory showing last state of magazine, stores, ammunition, etc.;
outstanding debts from excise; number of houses of the company;
old bookkeeper unfit, new one needed; fort must be repaired and made fit; company's slaves must be taught trades; ships' names and instructions for sending them over. Letter from Domine Drisius in regard to money. Ordinance changing value of beaver and wampum, beaver at eight guilders, wampum at three to four black and six to eight white the stuiver. Order in regard to train-bands, powder, and lead, with cost; excise on wine, beer, and distilled liquors in tapsters houses at New Amsterdam, 10,500 guilders, and for Long Island, 775 guilders; report on what Stuyvesant did at Esopus in Indian troubles (see May 28 also); about 60 to 70 Christians at Esopus, who have in rich soil some 990 schepels of corn, and all the Christians have been concentrated in a palisade; Indians there promise to deliver up murderers when they find any. Report of Stuyvesant on occurrences at "Nieuwe Amstel," at the Delaware; various settlers in that colony seek to go within environs of Fort Altena, in district of the company, to settle and build there; order concerning Swedes on the Delaware; smuggling to be punished; Domine Welius aud Director Alrichs; colonists and Alrichs; various items about Swedes on the Delaware;
wages of masoos at Manhattan or New Amsterdam increased; François de Bruyo and tobacco coming from Curaçao; declaration of Pieter Plover about skipper of ship "De Wasblecker"; copy of confiscated goods of Melys; pieces and papers relating to Jan (Juan) Gallardo, a Spanish pilot. Resolutions of Stuyvesant and council in New Netherland: La Montagne made vice director at Fort Orange; Fiscal Van Tienhoven demoted; Pieter Tonnenman named, provisionally, by the council, Jan. 3, 1657. Ordinance, Jan. 16, 1657 (p. v.), requiring everyone to have lands recorded and built upon or used, also in regard to cutting wood on others property; Jacques Cortelyou made surveyor-general; New Amsterdam, traders (schotte) and merchants, the staple right, burgherright and conditions for acquiring same, Jan. 30, 1657; great and small burgherrights defined, Feb. 2, 1657; income to be employed for fortifying the city, Feb. 6, 1657; retiring burgomaster to be city's treasurer, March 6, 1657; commission chosen to revise the disordered books of former Fiscal Van Tienhoven; Commander Jaquet on Delaware and trading in Minquaes country, March 26, 1657; Rev. Johannes Megapolensis allowed for house hire and firewood, 300 guilders yearly, April 7, 1657; Fort Casemier,

1688 now named Nieuwe Amstel, together with the land beginning July west side of the Minquaes or Cristina Kil and extending to 23 the mouth of the river called "Boompies Houck," and so far landward to the shore and land of the Minquaes, with all streams, kills, etc., transported to Director Jacob Alrichs, on behalf of burghomasters of Amsterdam, Holland, on April 12, 1657; Jaquet, commander on South (Delaware) River, deported, April 20, 1657. French priva-teersman, Augustin Beaulieu, came with Spanish prize into river and allowed to anchor; what occurred about the tithes on Long Island; request of preachers to city authorities of New Amsterdam about the Lutheran preacher, Goetwaeser; several women of bad life banished; James Grover came out of England with letters from Cromwell, which were to be read in towns on Long Island, but magistrates delivered over the letters to Stuyvesant and council, who sent them to directors at Amsterdam, Aug., 1657; Lutheran preacher ordered to depart; Indian who broke into house and stole 20 beavers pardoned, Oct. 16, 1657; Rev. Gideon Schaets, preacher in Rensselaerswyck, chosen minister at Fort Orange and Beverwyck, with particulars, Oct. 16, 1657; Jan Jurienssen Becker named "Commiss" at South (Delaware) River over the company's jurisdiction; ordinance concerning reduction of wampum and beavers, to eight guilders for the beaver, and from six to eight white and three to four black to a stiver for wampum, Nov.
 29, 1657 (q. v.); thatched roofs and planked chimneys to be discontinued in New Amsterdam; every house taxed a beaver or eight guilders in wampum toward 150 leather fire-buckets ordered in Holland, etc., Dec. 15, 1657 (q. v.); Quakers lodged at Vlissingen (Flushing), order for punishment; order about unimproved land in New Amsterdam, to be taxed or granted to others, etc., Jan. 15, 1658 (q. v.); marriage ordinance, requiring solemnization to be within one month of publication of bans, Jan. 15, 1658 (q. v.); city of New Amsterdam asks that fortification of the city be done by director-general and council and also asks for share of the impost of weigh-scales; city promised assessment for liquidating debts incurred during Indian uprising; tapsters to pay license fees quarterly; land at "Col" on Staten Island purchased from Indians, Jan. 30, 1658 (q. v.); freedom given for erecting on the island a village, everyone to have 18 to 24 morgens of land at eight guilders per morgen, and fifteen years exemption from payment of tithes,
 March 4, 1658 (q. v.); order concerning bears (?) on Long Island,
 March 26, 1658; impost order on shipped goods, April 2, 1658
 (q. v.); resolution to surround the city of New Amsterdam with palisades and to introduce two gates, in order to prevent smuggling,
 May 25, 1658 (q. v.).

Aug. The shoemakers of New Amsterdam are summoned before the 1 burghomasters in regard to making some fire-buckets. See particulars under Dec. 15, 1657.

5 Jacob Alrichs writes to Stuyvesant from New Amstel, Del.:
 "I learn with regret, that at the Manhattans your Honor has been visited by chills and fever."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 222. See Sept. 4, 1659.

8 The burghomasters agree "to propose" to Stuyvesant "the paving of the Winkel [Market or Shop] Street, and to make one of the Burgers Overseer of the Ward (Burmeister) on behalf of the Company."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 192. This street, now closed, was east of and parallel to Whitehall St., and extended from the present Stone to Bridge St. Its easterly side was occupied by the five large stone houses, or shops, of the West India Co. On the 15th, the burghomasters resolved "to communicate" to Stuyvesant
 "the grading of the Winkel Street and Bridge lane."—Ibid., VII:
 194. The Brugh Stegh or Bridge Lane, no longer in existence, was at first merely a short passage running from the present Stone St.
 to the rear of the lot of Abraham Planck or Verplanck, which was on Brugh Straet (Bridge St.), about midway between the Marckveldt (Whitehall St.) and the graft or canal (Broad St.). Eventually it was extended through the Planck lot to Bridge St. and had a more contracted outlet through the next block to the shore of the East River, as a short cut to the dock and weigh-house. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995.

12 Because it is found that "considerable brandy" is being sold by the burghers of the city to Indians, the president of the city court asks his colleagues if it is "not prudent to establish strict regulations regarding it by a fine of fl. 250."—Rec. N. Am., II: 418.

" The city court directs the "Officer" or schout to warn all persons in the city who have "placed thatched roofs on their houses," or who have plastered chimneys, "to remove them."

On the 27th, he reported that he had gone around as ordered, but that the people "made fun of him" when he told them what was required of them. He asked the magistrates to fix a penalty on those who were "unwilling to obey the order."—Rec. N. Am., III: 419, 424.

The director-general and council act favourably on a petition from Jan Lubbertsen (Lubberts) to be allowed "to open a school for instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic." He must "behave himself as such a person ought to behave."—N. Y. Col.
Docs., XIV: 424; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 199. Lubbertsen had been a clerk in the employ of the Company.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 141.

Until this time the city court held its regular sessions on Mondays. The provincial council now orders that in future the sessions be held on Tuesdays. Compliance with this requirement began on the 20th of this month.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 199; Rec. N.
Am., II: 419.

The proposals of the director-general (see summary under May 25) to enclose the city at the river side with palisades, and to complete the stone wall of the fort, are heard by the provincial council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 200.

Megapolensis and Driusis, the two Dutch clergymen of New Amsterdam, allege that the Lutherans of the city are misrepresenting to the directors at Amsterdam, and say the Lutherans have "sought, for five or six years, to call a Lutheran preacher," and actually held "separate meetings" from 1655 until the ordinance against conventicles was passed in 1656. They say that "Laurence Noorman . . . was the host who concealed" Gutwasser (the first Lutheran clergyman to come over to New Amsterdam) when he fled the preceding winter in order to escape deportation.—Eccles. Rec., I: 428-31. For fuller particulars of the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

As early as May 2, the burghomasters resolved to renew an ordinance of Feb. 20, 1657, in regard to the disposal of filth in New Amsterdam, and to add to it an order for "the removal of privies on the street having their outlet level with the ground;" also to propose to the whole city court the advisability of prohibiting the burghers from keeping hogs within the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII:
 187. On Aug. 15, the burghomasters fixed upon the 19th as the time for publishing such ordinance (ibid., VII: 194). On that day an ordinance was drawn up, which ordered the removal of all such privies within eight days after publication, and required them to be rebuilt in such places as would prevent their becoming a public nuisance. The "roads and streets" of the city were "made unfit for driving over in wagons and carts" by reason of "the constant rooting of the hogs," so the ordinance provided "that every owner of hogs in and about the City" should be obliged to "put a rieg through the noses of their hogs," to prevent them from rooting.—
Ibid., I: 38-39. The actual publication of the ordinance was deferred until the morning of Aug. 27.—Ibid., VII: 194.

Upon the initiative of the burghomasters, the city court of New Amsterdam passes an ordinance regulating the gauging system and the dry and wet measures, so as to obviate disputes "and especially that everybody" may "be treated alike." All persons who use measures and weights in their business, either "for receiving or delivering wares," are now instructed to appear in person with their measures and weights on the morning of the last day of August, at the city hall, where the court agrees to sit "from 9 to 11 o. c. A. M. and 2 to 5 o. c. P. M. to mark the measures and weights brought," for which marking or stamping fees are established for the benefit of the city. Anybody who is caught using unstamped measures or weights, after the day set, is to suffer fines for the first and second offenses, and to have his store closed for the third violation. The enforcement of the ordinance is reposed in the schout, who has authority "to make visits of inspection and carry it out." An inspector of weights and measures is also created; his rates for stamping and his general duties are clearly set forth. Andries de Haas was inducted as the "swora Inspector" in December, and Jan Jaansen van Brestede was named official gauger of barrels.—Rec. N. Am., I: 39; VII: 199, 202, 204-5, 221.

The city court orders "that some notice be affixed concerning the farming of the excise on slaughtered cattle."—Rec. N. Am., III: 4.

A remonstrance relative to foreign trade, "signed by some of the Burgers and inhabitants," is handed to the burghomasters of New Amsterdam (Rec. N. Am., III: 13). The latter sent it to 1658 Stuyvesant and the council on the 17th (ibid., 8-9), who, on the Sept. same day, adjudged it necessary to have the matter considered 11 by the directors at Amsterdam (ibid., 13). On the 19th, the burgomasters and schepens wrote a long memorial to the directors, in which they spoke of "the sober condition of the trade" and "the high price of goods," referring therein also to "a certain humble remonstrance on the subject of foreign trade," which had been placed in their hands by "many of the Commonalty," and of which they enclosed a copy. Because of its intricacy, they delegated Schepen Cornelis Steenwyck, about to depart for Holland, to further elucidate the subject to the directors.—Ibid., 13-15.

 The merchants of New Amsterdam sought for permission to trade directly with foreign countries that were within the limits of the West India Co.'s charter.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 201.
 This appeal from the people of this "early budding place," beyond
 "the Lords Majores as Patroons of this Province," to the directors at Amsterdam, shows the successive stages of this procedure under the conditions of Governmental control then prevailing.—Rec. N.
Neth., III: 8-9, 13. In a letter of Feb. 13, 1659 (q. v.), the directors at Amsterdam granted greater liberty to the people of New Netherland in foreign trade.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431; Rec.
N. Am., VII: 225-26. For an account of its operation in the first direct trade with France, see Sept. 17, 1659.

3-13 Oliver Cromwell dies. The next day, his son, Richard Cromwell, was proclaimed "Protector." Macaulay said of Oliver Cromwell that "he was laid among the ancient sovereigns of England with funeral pomp such as England had never before seen; and that he was succeeded by his son, Richard, as quietly as any king had ever been succeeded by any Prince of Wales."

14 Isaac Allerton makes acknowledgment before two schepens of New Amsterdam, Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven and Isaac de Forest, of a conveyance to Edward Law of his house and land in the Smits Vly (Peck Slip), known as the Quay (de Key), which he received by a conveyance of April 10, 1647, from Philip de Truy.—Loose sheet record, copy furnished by Samuel Oppenheim; the De Truy conveyance is in Liber Patents, IV: 92, Albany.
 See also April 10, 1647.

17 The burgomasters and schepens petition the commissioners for New Netherland that a Latin school may be established.—Rec. N.
Am., III: 15-16. A school was established in 1659 (q. v.).—N. Y.
Col. Docs., XIV: 435-37. It was held in a building the location of which was on the site of the present No. 26 Broad St. It was demolished in 1662.—Liber Deeds, B: 147; Deeds & Conveyances, etc., 1659-1664 (trans. by O'Callaghan), 272-73. See Castello Plan, II: 230; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941.

19 In a long memorial, the burgomasters and schepens apprise the directors at Amsterdam of the poor state of the trade, the high price of goods, the heavy burdens of imposts, and the scarcity of means for liquidating debts in New Amsterdam. They complain that loans of large sums have been made by traders and inhabitants in times of trouble, which, after several years' standing, are not yet wholly repaid. They cite Schepen Cornelis Steenwyck as one to whom a considerable sum is owing, notwithstanding he has applied for payment "by petition divers times both to the General and Council and to the Burgomasters and Schepens." The burgomasters have, indeed, "promised payment in nine months," yet the treasury is inadequate to pay old debts, as the revenues are scarcely enough to meet "the City's daily expenditure."

They petition the directors "to benefit and favor this place—called after the renowned City of Amsterdam in Europe—with the revenues of the Weighscales." Having received a grant, on Jan. 25 of this year, of "a just fourth" of these revenues, they pray now for "the entire revenue of the Weighscales and, in addition, the rent of the Ferry" to "Breuckelen."

They say they have frequently applied for the income from renting the ferry, yet have not obtained it, and hope it will now be "conferred at once" on the city, "in consideration of the heavy debt" in which it is plunged.

They promise to apply "the balance of the money" received "to the benefit" of the city, making the place "more secure" in times of peace, so that in time of war they need "fear none, but God alone." They adjudge it worthy to strengthen the city as a place of refuge for themselves and "the outside people" against their enemies. They remind the directors that they, on the contrary, have proposed "to make use of the Fort lying within this place as a retreat." They tell the directors that the fort is "not capable to protect" them "a long while from the attack of enemies." Sept.

 "Tis true," they say, "it is strong enough for a day or two against 19 a descent or a general massacre, but not for the reception of such a multitude of refugees from all places situate round about here, from which great and direful spectacles from famine are to be expected.
 To this must be added the loss of our properties, to which such a small compass could not afford security. Stripped of the means collected in our younger years, we shall be reduced to poverty and die, in the fullness of our days, beholding the misery and calamity of our wives, children and friends, having no place of refuge among any of our neighbours, being a prey to, or the slaves of the English or the savages."—Rec. N. Am., III: 13-15. See Sept. 22, 1654.

In a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, the burgomasters and schepens say, among other things:

"Further, laying before your Hon<sup>rs</sup> the great augmentation of the youth in this Province and place, which yearly increases more and more, and finds itself now very numerous, and though many of them can read and write, the Burghers and inhabitants are nevertheless inclined to have their children instructed in the most useful languages, the chief of which is the Latin tongue; and as there are no means so to do here, the nearest being at Boston in N. England a great distance from here, and many of the Burghers and inhabitants of this place and neighbourhood having neither the ability nor means to send their children thither, we shall therefore again trouble your Hon<sup>rs</sup> and humbly request that your Hono<sup>rs</sup> would be pleased to send us a suitable person for Master of a Latin School, in order that our children be instructed in, and study such language, not doubting but were such person here, many of the neighbouring places would send their children hither to be instructed in that tongue; hoping that, increasing from year to year, it may finally attain to an Academy [University] whereby this place arriving at great splendour your Hon<sup>rs</sup> shall have the reward and praise next to God the Lord, who will grant His blessing to it. On your Hon<sup>rs</sup> sending us a Schoolmaster, we shall endeavour to have constructed a suitable place for school."— Rec. N. Am., III: 15-16. This appeal from the municipal authorities makes it clear that Stuyvesant had not followed the suggestion of the directors that he "make an experiment by opening such a school," although Domine Drisius was offering his services (see May 20). For the answer of the directors, see Feb. 15, 1659.

In a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, the burgomasters 23 and schepens write: "We shall again trouble your Honors and request you may be pleased to send us three new standards with their appurtenances, as the General [Stuyvesant] intends to divide the two Burgher Companies into three, and according to the specification herunto annexed, wherein some necessities are further requested for the use of this City."—Rec. N. Am., III: 17-18. The specification is not of record. On Feb. 13, 1659, the directors wrote: "The three flags, the partisans, halberds and drums, required for the trainbands, are sent herewith, also some drumskins, snares and strings, to be used when necessary."—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 432.

In a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, the city fathers of New Amsterdam speak of the heavy tax imposed on New Netherland tobacco, and request a grant of "some facility in the impost on tobacco, especially that of N. Netherland;" also that "the weight of the scales" at the weigh-house may "be charged 6 per cent, as the English," who import "the greatest quantity of tobacco" to the city, will "admit of no discount" nor be "persuaded to it," so that the loss on the weight in Holland, which tobacco merchants suffer in consequence, ought not to "be so great and the Commonalty purchase at a lower rate the goods from the merchants and traders."—Rec. N. Am., III: 17. The directors at Amsterdam disallowed, however, this six per cent. rate on Feb.
 13, 1659 (q. v.).—Ibid., VII: 227; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 432.

The schout, burgomasters, and treasurer of the city, with the approbation of Stuyvesant and the council, propose "to let to the highest bidder the Excise on the Slaughter of all Cattle, whether salt meat in barrels or fresh brought to market for consumption within the jurisdiction" of New Amsterdam "by Officers or common Burghers," but "the Company's Magazine [Store] and the Hospital" are excepted. The excise is for the period from Sept. 26, 1658, to Sept. 26, 1659, inclusive. The farmer of the excise is to "pay precisely every quarter of a year to the Treasurer of this City a just fourth part of the promised rent" in "good pay according to the rate of the general treasury." He is also obliged "to 1658 give two sufficient securities for the promised rent-money." Nov. 9

 Sept. Gerrit Hendricksen is the successful bidder for the farming, Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven and Simon Hermessen Cort went on his bond as security on Sept. 28.—Rec. N. Am., III: 20-21. The excise was farmed out again, on Sept. 25, 1659, the successful bidder being Eghert Meijdersen, and Daniel Tourneur and Jan Hendricksen Stillman acting as securities. The term was from Sept. 26, 1659, to Sept. 26, 1660, inclusive. Meijdersen resided "at the Landport" or laod gate, which was at what is now Broadway and Wall St.—Rec. N. Am., III: 58-60. Cf. with ibid., I: 44.

Oct. A provincial proclamation for a day of general fasting and 3 prayer is issued. A few days later, Stuyvesant went to the Esopus country (now Kingston) to pacify the region which had suffered from Indian depredations during the summer.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 201; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 93.

4 The burgomasters of New Amsterdam decide to write a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, conveying it by Cornelis Steenwyck, in which a request is to be made for the right of sale of all real estate in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 195. For the grant thereof, see Feb. 13, 1659.

" The burgomasters decide "to establish a watch" at New Amsterdam. They name nine men who have applied for the posts, and engage them at 24 stivers for "every night" on which they watch, four of them to be on watch duty nightly. They are also "promised one or two heavers for candles and two to three hundred pieces of fire wood."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 195. This was the origin of the city police. Cf. the "corporal's guard," March 3, 1656.

On the 12th of this month, the burgomasters provided articles for defining "the duties of the Rattle Watch." Among the provisions were these: All watchmen were obliged to go on watch at the usual hour, "before bell ring, on pain of forfeiting six stivers." If reasonable business detained them, they had to provide a substitute, and failing therein to suffer a fine of two guilders for each omission, the proceeds being set aside "for the benefit of the general watch." They were subjected to a fine of a guilder for every time they were drunk on duty, or insolent, or committed nuisance in going the rounds; if "found asleep on the street," a fine of ten stivers for each offense was to be paid, and, if through sleeping on post, or negligence, any arms were taken or stolen, the guilty watchman was required to pay for the loss. Profanity and blasphemy against God were punishable by a fine of ten stivers; threatenings and fighting were penalized; leaving the watch without permission involved a fine of two guilders for each offense. The watchmen were required to take an oath of obedience before a burgomaster. Regulations were made for the equitable distribution among the watchmen of lock-up money, fines of prisoners, etc. When the watchmen went on their rounds, they were obliged "to call out how late it is, at all the corners of the streets, from nine O'Clock in the evening until reveille beat in the morning," for which each man received 18 guilders per month in common pay. There was a captain of the rattle watch.—Ibid., VII: 196-98. See also Nov. 15, 1658; Jan. 7, 1661. Regarding the proposed organization of a rattle-watch or night police at an earlier date, see Nov. 16, 1654.

9 The provincial council issues an order "declaring that Wampum, in settlements between Man and Man," that is in private transactions, "shall pass at Eight White and Four Black beads for one stiver, on condition that six whites be allowed to Debtors to pay outstanding debts," at the old rate of six white and three black beads.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 320, note. The city bench promulgated this order the next day.—Rec. N. Am., I: 39-40. But on Nov. 7, the city fathers sent another remonstrance to Stuyvesant and the council relative to the value of wampum, and on the 11th of this month, Councillor De Decker submitted reasons and arguments in council on the subject, which led at once to the provision of another ordinance by that body.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 202. See Nov. 29, 1657; and Nov. 11, 1658.

" Stuyvesant sails from New Amsterdam to Esopus, now Kingston, "with about 50 men . . . to see whether the Indians had made good the losses caused by them, according to their promises," given when he was there in May-June.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 93. See also May 28, 1658.

Nov. 9 The burgomasters and schepens petitioned the council for leave to erect a pier (hoofi, erroneously translated "hoist" by Valentine in Man. Com. Coun., 1850, 445-46). On the 14th, the council by order gave permission for the construction of the desired pier and for collecting wharfage.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 202 (where the date is erroneously printed the 11th.—See the original in Rec. N. Neth., VIII: 1035, State Library). This pier, the first built on Manhattan Island, with the exception of the little dock built by Stuyvesant in 1648-9 (see July 4, 1647; 1648) at Schreyer's Hook, stood at the foot of the present Moore St. on Pearl St. Actual construction began on April 21, 1659 (see April 18, 1659). It was completed on or about July 11, 1659 (q.v.), and was extended in November, 1660 (see Nov. 3, 1660), and several times thereafter. It was known as the Wijnbruch (wine-bruch, or wine-dock) or weigh-house pier.—See Castello Plan, II: 214. See also Nov. 28 and Dec. 12, 1659.

11 Resulting from a remonstrance of the burgomasters and schepens (see Oct. 9, 1658), the provincial government now promulgates another ordinance on the rates of wampum in New Netherland. The former reduction from six to eight white, and three to four black beads to a stiver has not reduced prices in "needful commodities and family necessities, arising, among other causes, from the abundance and uncurrent condition of the Wampum, which in barter for Beaver, has risen to 16 guilders and more for one Beaver," resulting in a rise of 80 to 100 per cent. in the cost of daily necessities. It is found "that the more Beads the Traders receive for a stiver, the greater length of hands or fathoms they will give for a Beaver, and consequently, the dearness of wares and even of the most necessary articles, such as Beer and Bread, will continue and be exercised on the ground of the still too great disproportion between the Wampum and Beaver." It is again declared that wampum is "an absolute article of Merchandise, to be, according to its value and quality, bought and sold, bartered and exchanged by measure or guilder, as parties—buyer and seller—can agree; and that payment in Wampum above 24 guilders shall not be valid in law, unless it appear otherwise to the Court, by written contract or acknowledgment of parties." As wampum is "a means to procure family supplies for daily use," it is now deemed necessary "to reduce, not Wampum, but the most necessary articles, such as Bread, Beer and Wine, and to raise or lower the prices of them according to the value of Beavers, as the general market rate shall require."

An interesting table of prices for commodities, as fixed by law, forms part of this ordinance, which provides that prices are to be regulated "by the Director General and Council themselves, or by the respective subaltern Magistrates, each in his jurisdiction, with knowledge of the Director General and Council." The exchange is according to three rates of prices for each commodity named, "to wit, Silver moocy, Beaver, or Wampum, as it is at present provisionally reduced everywhere throughout this Province," namely, eight white and four black beads to a stiver.

Wampum had approximately half the value of silver and two-thirds the value of beaver in the price fixing when this law was written.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 357-60; Rec. N. Am., I: 40-42. See also Nov. 29, 1657; Dec. 22, 1659; and April 21, 1660.

15 The burgomasters determine to commission the provost or captain of the rattle watch (see Oct. 4), "from now henceforth," to "collect and receive every month from each housekeeper for the support of the Rattle Watch, fifteen stivers, except those whose husbands" are absent from home, and "widows, preachers," and those who are "in somebody's service," according to a list provided. The next day Lodewyck Pos was "authorized and qualified" to collect the subscriptions.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 198-99. On Nov. 29, Johannes Nevius, the city's secretary, was ordered by the burgomasters "to receive the mooney" which Pos had collected in his house-to-house visitations.—Ibid., VII: 201-2. In his rounds Pos found there were persons whose names had been omitted from "the roll for the support of the Watch," so other names were ordered entered, in December.—Ibid., VII: 202, 203. In January, 1659, when Pos appeared before the burgomasters under interrogation, he told them that some 50 persons had not paid the watch tax; so, on Feb. 28, they ordered the treasurer of the city "to allow the Under Schout Resolveert Waldron" to go with Pos "to collect the watch money and to take a pledge" from unwilling persons.—Ibid., VII: 208, 214; cf. 217-18.

" The petition of Johannes Nevius, secretary of the city, to the burgomasters, for permission to "plant the garden behind the City Hall," is granted to him, "together with the Court Messenger" (Pieter Schaafbank).—Rec. N. Am., VII: 198.

Martin Cregier and Joannes Pieterse Verbruggen are elected and confirmed as members of the court of orphan-masters of New Amsterdam. These two additions to this court are made necessary because one of the old members, Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, is now absent on the business of the West India Co. at the South (Delaware) River, and because an epidemic of "hot fevers" is now raging during the year, "whereof many died." These deaths greatly increased the business of the court "in the regulating of estates."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 198, 199; Min. of Orph. Court, I: 56; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 203.

The earliest mention which we have found of 't Maagde Paatje (Maiden Lane) occurs in a mortgage of this date, from Anthony Moore to the heirs of Adrienne Cuville (or Cuvilje), late widow of Jan Jansen Damen, and mother of the Vigne family, on the "Brewery & lot on the Maagde Paatje, bounded E. S. & W. by the land of S<sup>d</sup> heirs & conveyed to S<sup>d</sup> Moore this date."—Book of Mortgages, 1654-1660, 115. On March 3, 1659, the property was transferred to, and a mortgage accepted by, Jan Jansen, the Younger.—Ibid., 117.

Another mention of the name is of record in a conveyance of Nov. 25, 1658, in Liber Deeds, A: 141 (New York); and later one dated Feb. 25, 1661, when Pieter Jansen, ship carpenter, asked the burgomasters "for permission to build a house in the Maagde Paatje, alongside of Cornelis the smith, back of the wharf," which was granted.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 77. This was the lot adjoining the corner lot of Cornelis Jansen Clopper, at the present Maiden Lane and Pearl St. In another record, of March 18, 1661, the Maagde Paatje is mentioned as the utmost northern limit to which the rattle-watch or night patrol was obliged to make the rounds in "bad weather."—Ibid., II: 89.

All of these references, showing the Dutch origin of the name of this street, are earlier than any hitherto pointed out (cf. article on Maiden Lane, in Sixteenth Annual Report of Amer. Scenic and Hist. Preservation Society, 1911, app. K).

In a city court proceeding of Nov. 8, 1661, the lane is mentioned again. The case was one of theft, just a month earlier, of "a quantity of cabbage at the house of one Pieter Jansen, ship carpenter, residing at the entrance" of the lane, which shows that Jansen's house had been built sometime between February and October. The accused party was Mesaack Martens, a former mason in the employ of the West India Co., who had been "caught and overtaken by the Watch" in the act, and then released by the officer, only to be caught again and placed on trial. He was condemned "to stand in the pillory with cabbages on the head" at "the usual place of execution," and thereafter to be "banished five years" from the city's jurisdiction.—Rec. N. Am., III: 405, 410; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 111. Martens remained in the province, and, wishing to return to Holland by one of the ships making ready to sail from New Amsterdam, appeared before the burgomasters by petition, asking them to allow him to work in the city and earn a little money until his departure, which they allowed on Aug. 2, 1662.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 153.

All persons who have "obtained Lots or Plantations in the newly begun Village of Haarlem" are required to take possession and begin to fence and plant there within six weeks' time, "on pain of having the Lots and Plantations" not so cared for granted to others.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 361. On the origin of Harlem, see March 4, 1658.

28

The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam having petitioned the provincial government for the establishment of two cattle fairs annually in the city, it is granted to them by an ordinance of this date. Two "Markets or Fairs," are authorized, "one for Lean cattle, to commence on the first of May and to continue until the end of said month; the other for Fat cattle, to commence on the 20th of October and to terminate on the last of November of each year, during which several periods no Stranger within the City or its jurisdiction" is to "be subject to arrest or process" of law.

The city court, "in regard to Ferieage," proposes that "in place of twenty stivers" the sum of "twenty-five stivers a head should be charged for the cattle brought over, on condition that the cattle remaining unsold should be carried back free of charge;" if the ferry-man agrees to it.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 203; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 364.

The privilege was promulgated by the city in due form on Jan. 7, 1659, according to a placard which the secretary of the city had been directed, on the 13th of the preceding month, to draw up, in which the burghers were warned "not to go to meet any one for the purpose of buying Cattle, except only at the place appointed, under a penalty" of fines for disobedience. The city court also directed that "convenient stalls for the benefit of everybody bringing cattle to the market" should be "put up."

In April, 1659, the burgomasters made clear their intention, when they decided to give notice "that the Market for lean cattle" should be located "beside the Church Yard, where some stakes" were to "be fixed." Here these cattle were to be offered for sale. The location was the neighbourhood of the present Broadway and Morris Street, the site of the old "kerkhof" shown on the Castello Plan (see C. Pl. 82b, Vol. II).—Rec. N. Am., I: 42; VII: 202-3, 220-21. See also description of Castello Redraft (Froontispice, Vol. II), II: 344. See also Dec. 13, 1658; Jan. 7, March 7, and April 18, 1659.

It having been discovered that persons, under pretence of keeping boarders, are selling wine, beer, and liquors, "to the prejudice of the general Revenue and of the Tavern keepers," who are publicly licensed to sell, therefore a new law is passed requiring all boarding-houses to pay half the tavern excise on stock and consumption of intoxicants.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 364.

Matheus de Vos, as attorney for François Fyn, patentee of Varccken (now Blackwells) Island, is granted an attachment against whatever property on the island may belong to Laurens Duyts, of Hulstein, a farmer, who came over with Jonas Bronck and first worked on a plantation belonging to Bronck in 1639. For his default on his lease, see Rec. N. Am., II: 257. Duyts was punished and banished from the province for selling his wife into immoral slavery, and for gross immoralities committed by himself.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 203.

Jan Jansen van Langedyck receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, now No. 45 Wall St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82c, Vol. II, and II: 286; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 392.

Surgeon Jacob Hendricksen Varrevanger petitions the provincial council that a hospital be established for sick soldiers and negroes in the employ of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam. He is requested to look about for a suitable location and for a steward or nurse, and then report thereon to the council.

On the 23d of the month, the council appointed Hillelje Wilbruch, a Midwife, as matron of the proposed hospital, which must have been erected before July 10, 1660, as it is included in De Sille's list of that date (C. Pl. 84, Vol. II) as the "Gasthuys," on "Bruch [Bridge] Straet," at the corner of the old brewery plot, behind the five stone houses of the company, then the corner of Brugh Straet and Brugh Steegh. The two buildings occupied by the hospital appear on the Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82c, Vol. II); See also pp. 263, 351, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987. It had been demolished prior to May 24, 1674.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 204; and cf. Historic New York, II: 297-98. This was probably the first hospital building erected on Manhattan Island. A reference to a hospital in September, 1658, occurs in Rec. N. Am., III: 20-21.

The secretary of the city court "is ordered to draw up a placard of the Cattle Market, Ordering the Burghers not to go to meet any one for the purpose of buying Cattle, except only at the place appointed" by law, subject to penalties for violations.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 202-3. See Nov. 28, 1658; and Jan. 7, 1659.

Aris Otto buys a house from Michiel Paulsen, the site of the present No. 51 Stone St. Here Otto conducted a tavern.—See Castello Plan, II: 310, 402.

Daniel Litscho, having resigned as fire inspector on account of "his bad sight and other inconveniences," and "the late Fire Warden, Cristiaan Barends" (or Barentsen), having gone to the South (Delaware) River and died there, the burgomasters propose nominations to Stuyvesant and the council, from whom the latter, on the 23d, confirmed Jan Jansen, Jr. and Joannes La Montagne, Jr.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 203-4; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 204. On Jan. 4, 1659, the new wardens were informed of their election, and the president of the city court handed them their commission and instructions. Hendrick Hendricksen Kip held over as the third warden.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 205-7.

The provincial ordinance is renewed, prohibiting firing of guns, planting of May-poles, beating of drums, or selling of intoxicants, on May-day or on New-Year's day.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 366. See also Dec. 31, 1655.

— Payments to the West India Co. for ships' recognizances, for goods to and from New Netherland, for the year 1659, amounted to 32,637 florins. In this year, there was sent to New Netherland, for the behoof of the soldiers, in the ships "Otter," "Moesman," and "Bever," the sum of 3,909:13:8 florins.—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

— During this year, Grosseliers and Radisson explored Lake Superior.—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 168.

— In this year Edward Godfrey, Oliver Godfrey, Ferdinand Gorges, Robert Mason, and Edward Rigby, with others, patentees and inhabitants "of the Provinces of Mayne, and Liconia [Lygonia] in New-England," petitioned "the Right Honourable The Parliament of the Common-wealth of England" with respect to their alleged rights and possessions, of which they had been deprived; the fifth article of their complaint read: "Fifthly, The Dutch, or New Netherlands, their intrusion, insulting, unjust claim, the Center Heart and Bowels, of the Country Hudsons River, this year the mouth, Delewar Bay, and Canada River to be theirs, and grant sundry Patents (their proceedings he hath at large); 55 years we have beat the Bush, now they catch the Bird."—The original printed petition broadside, with manuscript additions, is in the Public Record Office, London. Photostats, made in October, 1920, are in the N. Y. Pub. Library, Carter Bowden Library, Mass. Hist. Soc. Library, Library of Congress, etc.

— In this year, Jacob Steendam, the poet of New Amsterdam, in order to aid the appeal to Holland to send over labourers for the farms in this province, as well as to invite immigration in general, invoked his muse in the cause, and sent to Amsterdam the first attempt in verse in New Netherland of which we have any knowledge. It is entitled "The Complaint of New Amsterdam to her Mother," an allegory in which New Amsterdam is personified as the daughter of the old city of Amsterdam, deserted by her mother and left to the kindness of her sponsors (the West India Co.), but nevertheless grown to be handsome and with rich property upon which her envious neighbours (the English) have allowed their swine to roam. The poem (translated), in part, recites:

"For, I venture to proclaim,
No one can a maiden name,
Who with richer land is blessed
Than th' estate by me possessed.

"Seel two streams my garden bind,
From the East and North they wind,— Rivers pouring in the sea,
Rich in fish, beyond degree.

"Milk and butter; fruits to eat
No one can enumerate;
Ev'ry vegetable known;
Grain the best that e'er was grown.

"All the blessings man e'er knew,
Here does our Great Giver strew. . . ."

The poem was published by Henry C. Murphy in the Anthology of New Netherland (1865), 37-43. See also the "Memoir of Steendam" in ibid., 28-29. For his second poem, "The Praise of New Netherland," see 1661. See also Addenda, 1659.

— In a record of what it cost the West India Co. during this year for transporting persons to New Netherland, with the loan of ammunition, etc., is an item for writing-materials for the school at New Amsterdam, amounting to 2905 florins.—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

— In this year, Martin Cregier erected a tavern at what is now No. 3 Broadway.—Liber Deeds, A: 177, New York. It was rebuilt in 1664 (Liber HH, II: 135, Albany), and sold to Peter Bayard in 1685 (Liber Deeds, XIII: 183). See Castello Plan, II: 217; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977.

— In this year, the new bridge at Hendrick van der Vin's (Broad at Bridge St.) was constructed.—Rec. N. Am., III: 38. Shown on C. Pl. 82, Vol. II.

— During this year grants of land were made to divers negroes near Stuyvesant's bowery.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 269.

Jan. 4 Several of the bakers of New Amsterdam are asked by the burgomasters why they have failed to "bake any coarse bread," about which "the poor commonalty" have made complaint. They reply that it was because grain is dear and they have to "pay heavers for the grain," but get only "zewant [wampum] in return," leaving them no profit. The burgomasters resolve to lay the complaint and defense before Stuyvesant.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 206. This led to the promulgation of a new bread assize, and the prohibition against the city's bakers baking "cakes and sugarpones."—Ibid., I: 43-44. See also March 7.

Allard Anthony, the city treasurer, reports to the burgomasters that there is "not a stiver in the Treasury," and that he is unable to get any money.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 206.

The provincial law and penalties with respect to stealing fence rails and posts, resulting in the destruction of gardens, is now again renewed, as it was on Dec. 30, 1658.—Rec. N. Am., I: 42-43. For earlier promulgations of this ordinance, see summary of Dec. 31, 1654; also Oct. 9, 1655.

The city authorities issue a placard or public notice concerning the establishment of two market days for the sale of lean and fat cattle in New Amsterdam.—Rec. N. Am., I: 42. See Nov. 28, 1658; March 7, 1659.

Fire-buckets are delivered at the city hall, and regulations are made for their distribution. See under Dec. 15, 1657.

Claes van Eilandt, Sr., asks the burgomasters for an appointment as Hal Knecht, or keeper of the shambles; but his request is deferred. There is no record showing any further action until April 18 (q.v.), when Andries de Haas was given the appointment, provisionally.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 207.

Pieter Cornelis vander Veen asks the burgomasters "to be permitted to chastise his Negro Wench;" it was permitted him, but nothing followed.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 207.

Evert Duyckinck is ordered by the burgomasters "to put the Arms of Amsterdam in New Netherland on the windows of the City Hall."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 208. On Sept. 23, 1662, having done some glazing, he asked the burgomasters where he was "to receive his pay for making the windows for the City."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 161.

Stuyvesant and the council receive an Indian grant of lands on the North River in East Jersey above Weehawken, including those sold to Michael Pauw in 1650. The Dutch from New-Amsterdam made the first settlement at Bergen in 1618.—N. J. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 16, 20 et. seq.

Some time prior to this date, Cornelis Hendricksen (Tambour) received a lot at the south-west corner of William and Wall Sts., now covered by the Atlantic building.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II and III: 287; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and III: 392.

Creyn Jacobsen receives a grant from the burgomasters for a lot on the west side of William St., just south of Wall St., the ground being now in the site of the Atlantic building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and III: 392; Rec. N. Am., VII: 210.

Tenuis Krayc (or Craie) petitions the burgomasters "to be Harbor Master; also tally master of the bricks and tiles imported from Patria [Holland] and elsewhere, and that his wife may superintend the market to keep it clean." Upon his petition is endorsed: "Nothing will be done about the market for the present time; respecting the tiles and bricks it is postponed to further order, and regarding the newly made canal (gracht) if he require that, he can draw up a separate petition."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 209-10. On March 7, he was informed that no harbour-master would be appointed for the time being; yet, on that day (q.v.), the care of the canal, etc. was given over to Resolved Waldron.—Ibid., 214-15. The two court messengers of the city ask the burgomasters to appoint them "door keepers of the Orphan Chamber" (Orphans' Court), which is granted to them.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 210.

Martin Cregier, having just been elevated to the office of a burgomaster, and his new duties precluding his giving time to the court of orphan-masters of which he is a member, the burgomasters nominate Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Allard Anthony as candidates. From them, Stuyvesant and the council, on the 10th, elected Anthony as Cregier's successor, and he was commissioned on the 14th. His associates were Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven and Joannes Pietersen Verbruggen (or van Brugge).—Rec. N. Am., VII: 211-12. The last two named were also schepens in the city court and found themselves unable "to attend to their duties in both qualities besides their business;" hence, on March 7, nominations were made for their successors, and, on the 10th, Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Joannes de Peister were elected, receiving their commissions on the 14th. Anthony, 1659 of course, continued as a member of the court of orphan-masters with them.—Ibid., VII: 214, 217.

7 By a resolution of March 6, 1657 (see under March 8, of that year), the office of city treasurer was ordered to be filled by the last retiring burgomaster. In compliance with this procedure, Allard Anthony is now succeeded in that office by Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, who takes over the records and is duly commissioned by the burgomasters.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 210-11. Anthony was negligent in making up "the acct<sup>s</sup> regarding the City" during his administration as treasurer, and was peremptorily ordered, on June 27, to deliver in the account by nine o'clock on the following Monday morning (30th), so that Stuyvesant could "send it to Holland by the ship the Trouw" (Faith).—Ibid., VII: 217, 223.

13 The directors at Amsterdam find fault with Stuyvesant and his council because, on Jan. 25, 1658 (see summary of Nov. 7, 1656), they granted a fourth part of the revenue of the public weigh-house at New Amsterdam to the city without first obtaining their approval. The provincial authorities replied, on July 23, 1659 (q. v.), that the proceeds had not as yet been paid over to the city treasury, on account of this complaint, and would not be before further orders were received from Amsterdam. In December, the directors made their displeasure again known, because their representatives gave away the company's income without warrant of an authority premised upon "the reasons and the necessity for such a measure." They said they were "ignorant of the revenues and expenses of the city," and asked for a bill of particulars "by the first opportunity," ordering meanwhile that the city fathers be obliged to "give without fail a detailed account every year of the revenues already granted to the city," so that the directors might be able to determine "whether these revenues" were "properly administered."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV 432, 441, 449; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 189.

In a very important letter of this date, the directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council, among other things, about "an enlarged freedom of foreign trade for the inhabitants," which has been asked for. They find it fraught with dangers of an increase in smuggling and a deprivation of the country's revenue. They have, however, "after mature deliberation," concluded that "the experiment" of the provincial government should be undertaken on their ratification, "provisionally," but with the proviso that the ships which go "thence to France, Spain, Italy, the Caribbean Islands and other countries to vend and sell their cargoes of the produce of the country, salted fish, wares and merchandizes," shall be "bound to return directly with the freights" they obtain therefrom to Amsterdam in Holland, or again to New Netherland, "in order to pay . . . such duties and recognitions" as the West India Co. derives from them in Holland. It is also "decreed that no beavers, otters or other peltries" shall be "exported, except in ships" which come directly over to Holland. The directors say that whatever relates "to the duties to be fixed on the exported agricultural products of the country, timber, wares, salted or dried fish, and whatever else," they would "rather refer" to Stuyvesant and his council for fixing thereon "such reasonable duties, provisionally," with their approval, as may "be considered proper." The directors come to this decision because, as they write: "We are ignorant here what your English neighbours have enacted hereupon in their own regard, and being fearful of committing herein some error through ignorance."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 225-26. There is another translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431.

The directors at Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant and the council, state that they have considered a recommendation made in Holland at the request of the burgomasters of New Amsterdam and some of its principal inhabitants for "some feasible relief . . . from the duty (Paght) on the N. Netherland tobacco," and that they have "earnestly tried all possible means to exempt it entirely," but have met with "difficulties and obstacles," which they believe frustrating to their hopes. They promise to watch for a psychological occasion, when they will press the matter again, and, if successful, communicate the fact to New Netherland.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 226-27. There is another translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431-32.

The directors at Amsterdam deny the request of the burgomasters of New Amsterdam for an additional six per cent. at the public weigh-house, as they perceive "great objections" to such a change. They write: "The merchants there on purchasing tobacco and other wares, on which the English do not allow any rebate or discount, can make sufficient calculation, without any danger, thereupon; as they doubtless do; for everyone is sufficiently knowing [as] to his own interest and is therefore sufficiently alive and awake thereto."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 227. There is another translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 432. See also Sept. 23, 1658.

On Oct. 4, 1658 (q. v.), the burgomasters of New Amsterdam decided to ask the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam for supervision of all auction sales of real estate in the city. These sales were always conducted by the provincial secretary, who received a commission of five per cent. on all real estate that went to the highest bidder at public vendue. He had to attend the sales, and make all arrangements for carrying them out, collect the purchase money, and, "in case of bad debts, make up and pay the deficit," as well as pay the provincial court messenger, who acted as the auctioneer. The arguments put forth by the city, "why the office of auctioneer and the sale of real estate within the City should be committed to the charge of the commonalty or its Secretary," are so convincing that the directors at Amsterdam now grant the request and relieve Cornelis van Ruyven, the provincial secretary, from these duties. Hereafter, there is required to "be paid for sales of real estate into the Company's treasury in cases of voluntary sales the fourth penny, one half by the seller, the other by the purchaser;" and on sales by the schout, in the nature of sheriff's sales, "the 8th penny by the purchaser alone, together with one half a guilder" to the city's secretary "besides his office fees."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 195, 227; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 433, 442, 450. See also Aug. 8, 1659.

The directors at Amsterdam, in a letter to Stuyvesant and his council, say: "The arguments brought forward [see Sept. 19, 1658], why for the establishment of a Latin school there it is necessary to send from here [Holland] a fit and honest man, to instruct the children in the elements and foundations of the language, have induced us to decide, that such a teacher shall be inquired for, care being taken, that he writes a good hand, to teach the children also calligraphy; you may expect him by the ships sailing from here during the spring."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 430. Alexander Carolus Curtius was the teacher chosen (see Apr. 10, 1659).

Salt, as a commodity, is proposed as a special monopoly of the West India Co. in New Netherland. The directors at Amsterdam order that the stock shall "be stored in the Company's Warehouse [at New Amsterdam] and not be sold by anyone except by the Company at a fair and honest price."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 429. On this, very strong criticisms were drawn up by Stuyvesant and the council, in their letter of July 23, showing in detail that the execution of this mandate would be an infraction of the company's own former regulations, and divert, or at least obstruct, the commerce of New Netherland to the embarrassment and injury of the province and the company.—Ibid., XIV: 439-440. These arguments were convincing, and, on Dec. 22, the directors wrote: "We withdraw our former orders for the present, so that the salt trade may be carried with perfect freedom as formerly," subject to the usual rule of delivery of "one fourth part of the cargo . . . to the Company free of all expenses."—Ibid., XIV: 449.

Cornelis van Ruyven, as receiver-general of the finances of the company in New Netherland, is given "an advisory and conclusive vote . . . on questions concerning the finances," by authority of the directors at Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 433.

The burgomasters resolve "to demand of the Church Warden [a] correct acct<sup>s</sup> of the property of the Church." On the following day (24d), they handed to Stuyvesant and the council nominations for new church-wardens.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 213.

Allard Anthony delivers to the burgomasters "a list of assessments" of the year 1655, "for furnishing money to the City Treasury." On the 28th, he repeated his delivery of the assessment list, accompanied by "an obligation passed by Pieter Jansen Æmilius, first of Nov<sup>r</sup> 1655."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 213. This was the assessment of October, 1655, the first of which we have a list in the records.—Ibid., I: 367-75.

The burgomasters prepare a draft of a certificate for granting the great burgherright in New Amsterdam, according to the privileges conferred on the city, on Feb. 5, 1657. At the same time they authorize the secretary of the city to receive fees, "for the writing of a great Burgher certificate twenty stivers [40cts.], and for a small Burgher certificate twelve stivers." The certificates are issued by the presiding burgomaster, who affixes the city's seal.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 214.

- 1659 Jan Gillisen Koeck petitions the burgomasters for "some
 Feb. allowance to the amount of fl. 50. for ringing the bell, when any 28 placards or ordinances were published from the front (r'puy) [stand, or stoop] of this City Hall." But, as his "predecessors" received their salary "from the Deacony and Church Wardens," he is "also referred to them."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 213. On March 28, the burgomasters acted favourably on his petition by granting him
 "provisionally" 50 florins "for a yearly salary for the ringing of the bell for this City, and bringing and fetching the cushions in and out [of] the Church."—Ibid., VII: 218.
- Mar. Resolved Waldron, the under-schoot of the city, is made 7 superintendent of the canal or graght (present Broad Street). He asks the burgomasters for written regulations as to his duties, and he is given a commission which authorizes him, "according to the Placard dated 3<sup>d</sup> Decemb<sup>r</sup> 1657 published from the front" (vide supra) of the city hall "and renewed 4th March 1659," to take "good care and superintendance on [of] the newly constructed Graght, that no filth be cast into it; also that the boats, canoes and skiffs be placed in regular order therein."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 215.
 See also Jan. 31, of this year.
- " By a resolution of this date, the burgomasters decide that the cattle market ordinance of Jan. 7 (q. v.) shall be translated into English, and copies thereof sent to the English magistrates at Stamford, Fairfield (Uneque), and Stratford, in Connecticut, and at Southold and Easthampton on Long Island, with a letter, also translated, which reads as follows: "The annexed is to let your Honor<sup>s</sup> know our resolution to erect and establish in this City a Market for fat and lean cattle, requesting your Honor<sup>s</sup> to be pleased to make the same known to your subjects, so that if any proprietor be among them, who may be inclined to repair hither with their Cattle at the time fixed in the enclosed, they may regulate themselves accordingly."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 215-16. See also Nov. 28, 1668.
- " The bakers of the city petition the burgomasters for the right to "sell their bread according to the rate of the grain." The matter is referred to Stuyvesant and the council for determination.—*Rec.
 N. Am.*, VII: 215. On April 18, a detailed petition of the bakers was considered by the whole city court, who again laid the case before the provincial authorities; but, at the same time, the court provisionally fixed upon a new bread assize for the city.—Ibid., VII: 219-20.
- A week later (April 25), the burgomasters cited before them
 Jooft Teunissen and Hendrick Willemssen, bakers, and asked them,
 "Why they do not bake any large bread?" They replied they had no grain and were obliged to buy it "at a high price in beavers," and therefore "could not give a large loaf of the Weight of 8<sup>lbs</sup> for twenty stivers" (40 cts.). The burgomasters ordered the following bread assize: for "a large Wheaten loaf of six lbs," 15 stivers; for "the rye loaf" of the same weight, 12 stivers, and for "the white loaf" of one pound, 4 stivers, which was in fact a rise in the price of rye bread over the order of April 18.—Ibid., VII: 221.
 On July 19, the bakers were allowed, provisionally, to charge five stivers for a pound loaf of white bread. The schout was also authorized "to go around with one of the Schepens to all the bakers and take note of the weight of the loaf," and "to close the shops of all those" who had "not purchased their small Burger Right." Schepen Hendrick Jansen vander Vin, together with Jacob Kisp, on Aug. 30, was given formal authority to accompany the schout in this matter.—Ibid., VII: 224, 231. See also Jan. 4.
- 14 Abraham Blanck or Verplanck, on March 14, 1647, was granted a lot on Brugh (Bridge) Straet. It lay behind the five stone houses of the West India Co., on the site of the present No. 25.
 Now, when he is about to build on this site, he is restrained by the city court, at Stuyvesant's direction, because the company wants the land, "to build thereon at some future time, as occasion requires, an Hospital or Orphan Asylum."—Book GC; 187, in office of sec. of state, Albany; Rec. N. Am., VII: 216-17.
- The "Gasthuys" or hospital must have been built here soon thereafter, for it is located in the census of houses taken by De Sille in June 1660 (see The De Sille List, II: 249-51), and it is laid down on the Castello Plan (see II: 263, and C. Pls. 82, 82c, 87, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987; Pl. 174, Vol. III). It was demolished some time prior to May 24, 1674, when Colve granted the land in three separate parcels to Jan Dircksen Meyer, Andries Meyer, and Pieter Jansen Mesier.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 629-36;
cf. Rec. N. Am., VII: 13.
- On March 7, the burgomasters resolved to summon before themselves, the schout, and the presiding schepen, on the 14th,
 "some Burghers" who have "lots lying vacant," in order to "have them appraised either by themselves or by the Burgomasters," in case they will "not build on them according to the Placard published from the City Hall by the Director General and Council and by the Burgomasters and Schepens, and to have them registered by the Secretary" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 214-15. For the ordinance alluded to, see Jan. 15, 1658.
- The directors at Amsterdam select as Latin schoolmaster for Apr. New Amsterdam Alexander Carolus Curtius (or Curtius), who 10 has appeared before them as an applicant. He is engaged "at a yearly salary of 500 fl., of which one quarter shall be paid him in advance, that he may procure what books he requires. The Board further grants him a gratuity of 100 fl., which the Company will lay out in available merchandise to be used by him upon his arrival in New Netherland, where a piece of land convenient for a garden or orchard shall be allotted to him by the Director-General.
 He shall also be allowed to give private instructions, as far as this can be done without prejudice to the duties, for which he is engaged."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 436-37. Curtius sailed on the 25th (q. v.).
- Pieter Jansen Niregh (or Nienghs) promises the burgomasters 18 "to go to work next Monday [April 21] at the commenced pier (hoof) and further to complete it."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 219. This was the new pier or bridge on Pearl St., at the foot of the present Moore St. See also July 4, 1647; Nov. 9, 1658; July 21, 1659;
 and Nov. 3, 1660.
- The burgomasters of New Amsterdam "conclude to erect the Meat-Market or shambles (mees hal); further, to cover it with tiles; to have a block therein, and to leave the key with Andries [de Haas] the baker, who is given "charge thereof," provisionally.
 —Rec. N. Am., VII: 219. It stood at the present Whitehall and Bridge Sts. and was the first meat market in New Amsterdam
 See Castello Plan, II: 345; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958.
 See Jan. 10, 1659.
- The burgomasters resolve "to post some notices, that the Market for lean cattle shall be alongside of the Church Yard [kerck hof], the cemetery on Broadway, where some stakes shall be set up, in order that those, who bring any cattle to Market for sale, shall offer them there."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 220-21, revised with original manuscript in office of city clerk, New York. This indicates only a cattle market-place, for the sale of live cattle. See Nov. 28, 1658.
- The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and his 25 council: "We have lately been shown a small piece of mineral, which is said to have come from New-Netherland and which we found to be good and pure copper, so that we have thought it worth while to hear Claes de Ruyter about it, that a person who showed that he was not ignorant of it and consequently demonstrated, that a copper-mine was said to be in the Nevesinks, also that there was lying between the Manhattans and the South-river a crystal mountain, of which he says he brought several specimens, as your Honors will be able to hear from him in detail, as he at least is going over again." They request, if possible, that "samples of the one or the other" be sent over to Holland by the first ship, so that "their quality and worth" may be ascertained, and that they "are sure that the population there will increase upon the discovery of such minerals and in consequence also the country will so much sooner gain in prosperity and influence."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 99.
- On July 25, Stuyvesant and the council wrote to the directors that they learned "with astonishment . . . of a coppermine in the Nevesingsh," a thing unknown to them. They agreed, however,
 "to look for them either late in the fall or early next spring, when the woods and the hills are burned over and cleared of brush."— Ibid., XIII: 100.
- Stuyvesant is informed by the directors at Amsterdam that Curtius, the master for the Latin school (see Apr. 10), is sailing on the "Bever." At the same time he is informed that the books, for the instruction of the young people in Latin, could not be procured in the short time before the sailing, and will be sent "by the next opportunity."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 437. The Latin school had opened prior to July 4 (q. v.). Prof. Kilpatrick gives the titles of several books which were sent by the East India Co. in 1653 to a similar school in one of their possessions. Probably the same books were used in New Amsterdam.—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 109.

The Lutherans of New Amsterdam write to the consistory at Amsterdam, Holland, of the departure of the Rev. As the director-general and council have favoured the city with one fourth of the proceeds of the beam or public weigh-scales, for its own benefit, the burghmasters now authorize the city treasurer, Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, to arrange "with the [provincial] Secretary Cornelis van Ruyven for the proceeds and income of the Beam, and to receive the money."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 223. See also July 23, 1659.

Among those appearing before the burghmasters and requesting the small burgherright, is "Carel Beauvois of Leiden, intending to keep school here."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 223. Beauvois was engaged subsequently (July, 1661) as "reader, precentor, school-master and sexton of the village of Breuckelen."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 502-3. Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 124.

A few weeks prior to this date, Alexander Carolus Curtius opened his Latin school, on the site of the present 26 Broad St. (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 94). For this purpose he had been dispatched from Holland, on April 25 (q. v.), by the directors at Amsterdam. He has but few pupils, less than 25. In addition to the salary received from the directors (see Apr. 10, 1658), he is informed on this day, at a meeting of the burghmasters and schepens, "that fl. 200 are allowed him as a yearly present from the City;" an order on the city treasurer is also handed him "for fl. 50 over and above, which he thankfully accepts; but requests as he has but few scholars as yet, that his salary may be somewhat increased, as the beginning entails great expence, saying whenever he gets 25 to 30 children to the school he shall serve for less salary."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 223-24. The tuition fixed for boys at the school was six guilders per quarter.—Ibid., VII: 257. In a letter to the directors, dated July 23, Stuysenant informed them officially of the arrival of Curtius, and added: "We hope and trust, that the community shall reap the desired fruits through their children, to which God may give his blessing: the state of the school shall be reported to you in due time."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 443. See Sept. 17.

Govert Loockermans requests permission from the burghmasters "to lay a drain to carry off the water from his lot." They decide to have an examination made of the conditions, and then "dispose of the matter according to circumstances."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 224.

The secretary of the city, Joannes Nevius, is ordered to inform the skippers "lying in the roadstead" before New Amsterdam that the burghmasters and schepens have secured from the provincial government "authority to take from traders and skippers, for the erection of a Pier, and for the benefit thereof, 8 stivers per last for loading and discharging at the aforesaid Pier [on Pearl St. at the foot of the present Moore St.]; the smaller merchandise and goods in proportion," of which the skippers are to pay one-third and the owners or receivers two-thirds. Each skipper then "lying in the road [of the East River], or in the North River about to depart," is required "to pay his due quota to the Treasurer" of the city "before his departure," for the benefit of the city, "on account of the accommodation received . . . through the above-mentioned Pier."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 225. See also July 4, 1647; Nov. 9, 1658; April 18, and Dec. 12, 1659; and Nov. 3, 1660.

Stuysenant and the council write to the directors at Amsterdam as follows: "If the work of the masons continues to progress as fast as it does now, we may hope to have the fort [at New Amsterdam] completed by next summer, then it will be necessary to build new carriages for the guns, for which we shall require also wheels."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 443.

At the same time, they say that one of the reasons why they cannot at this time undertake to build a blockhouse at Oyster Bay is because "the few negroes of the Company" are required for the quarrying and hauling of stone, lime, and other materials intended "for the walls of this [New Amsterdam] fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 441.

July
23

On the same date they inform the directors at Amsterdam that the burghmasters of New Amsterdam had been allowed the "fourth of the revenue of the beam" or public weigh-scales "only subject to . . . ratification" by the directors; that nothing has yet been paid over, and that payment will be suspended until the directors give further advice in the premises.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 230. See also June 27, and Aug. 8, 1659.

Cornelis Barentsen, baker, is given, by the burghmasters, the post of measurer of "all grain and lime coming from without, and to receive as fee from one Burgher delivering to the other, according to the regulation to be given him thereof."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 227.

Michiel Cornelisz. Siperius (Siperus, Ziperius, or Zyperus), who was "for a long while at Curaçao," and "preached there, but who was sent away," now proceeds to New Netherland in the hope of receiving a call in the province. His reputation among the clergy in Alckmaer and Amsterdam is that he has been, "from his youth up, a good for nothing person." While in the high school (Gymnasium) at Alckmaer, he was chastised before the entire body of students "for many wicked acts," especially for fraudulent purchases at stores, made in the name of the rector, and then pawned in his own behalf.

Aug.—

Siperius united with the Dutch church at New Amsterdam in January, 1660, as a student in divinity. On Dec. 15, 1661, the deputies of the classis of Amsterdam warned Rev. Samuel Driusius against him, fearing that he might be allowed to preach in New Netherland; but he never received ecclesiastical permission to officiate, so far as the records reveal. Driusius accused him of most shameful conduct, "drinking, cheating and forging other people's writings." He left New Amsterdam about 1664 for Virginia, where he joined the Church of England.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 331; Eccles. Rec., I: 492, 506, 507, 514; Driusius to the classis, Aug. 5, 1664, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 413; N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., IX: 72; Corwin's Manual (4th ed.), 934.

As we have seen, the city of New Amsterdam was granted, on Jan. 25, 1658 (q. v.), the fourth part of the income of the beam or public weigh-scales, from which to relieve itself of old and new debts; and the directors at Amsterdam made objection to the privilege, so that Stuysenant and the council agreed to hold up the paying over of any proceeds until further instructed by their superiors in Hollaand. Now the burghmasters of the city address the provincial government in regard to a letter of the preceding Feb. 13, in which the directors at Amsterdam denied the city's request for an additional six per cent. of the revenue of the beam. The burghmasters, therefore, fall back on their grant of the fourth part; remind the provincial authorities that the time for payment has "long since expired;" and that the city treasurer has indeed been sent to the company's receiver of revenues for the city's part, but that he found him non-committal, although stating that, as yet, he has "no order to pay anything to the City on account of the Beam." The burghmasters ask Stuysenant and the council to "give orders to the Receiver, to count out" to the city treasurer such moneys as are allowed the city "from the proceeds of the Beam." On Aug. 21, they were again referred to the decision made by the directors at Amsterdam in the letter of Feb. 13, 1659 (q. v.).—Rec. N. Am., VII: 229-30.

The city of New Amsterdam was granted by the directors at Amsterdam, on Feb. 13 of this year (q. v.), the right to control all public sales of real estate in the city. There was some uncertainty as to the interpretation, with respect to fees and expenses. The burghmasters, therefore, now wish to have the matter clarified, and write to Stuysenant and the council for an explanation, especially because "some sales of real estate" are about to take place and a house has "been offered for sale" but has not been disposed of; whereas the vendue-master or auctioneer does not know what he is entitled to receive "both for writing, loss of time, whether sold or not; also the emoluments appertaining thereto;" and also whether the Court Messenger must be paid out of the 10 stivers for his crying," as has heretofore been done before the city was in control. Stuysenant and the council gave answer, on Aug. 21, in these words: "From the real estate which shall be sold by the City's Secretary in quality as Vendu Master, shall be taken and received 10 stiv: per Ct<sup>s</sup>. From what is offered but not sold, half so much,

1659 unless he has previously agreed otherwise with the sellers. For writing of the conditions and notices, for each page of from 25 to 30 lines, each line of 30 to 36 letters, 30 stivers; according to the Ordinance on Secretaries' fees dated January 25th 1658 [9. v.]. The Messenger shall be paid by the seller and shall receive for putting up a house or lot amounting to one thousand guilders or under, 2½ gl. and of a house or lot over 1000 gl. four guild. whether it be sold or not.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 228-30.

11 Stuyvesant writes to Esopus, now Kingston, concerning Domine Harmanus Bloem, who has preached several times in New Amsterdam, Brooklyn, and Midwout, "to the great satisfaction and pleasure of his hearers," and whom Stuyvesant has hoped to accompany to Esopus. He says, however: "I have suffered almost daily from a violent fever, which still continues, so that my indisposition does not allow me to go from home now." Instead, he sends Domine Megapolensis to accompany Bloem, and trusts the people at Esopus will find Bloem an acceptable candidate as a minister to them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 102; see also 103.

30 Augustine Heerman (or Heermans) requests the burgomasters by a petition for permission "to lay out his garden" (at the present Beaver and William Sts.), and they declare he shall "first satisfy Allard Anthony for costs incurred on the garden," and, when that is done, he may "lay out and sell the garden."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 231.

Sept. 2 Cornelis Steewyck produces in the city court his account against the city, and requests "that something now and again be paid thereon; and also an order on the Weighscales." On Nov. 18, his colleagues in the court voted him an order on the city treasurer for 300 guilders in partial payment of his claim.—Rec. N. Am., III: 37-38, 78; see also April 1, 1658. The very interesting account relates to the financing of the city's works in 1653, e. g. stockading at the present Wall Street, and shoring of the East River bank; improvements on the City Hall, and, more recently, materials furnished for the new pier or bridge at Pearl St. at the foot of the present Moore St. This statement, dated Sept. 1, 1659, is of record, viz:

4 Stuyvesant complains to the directors at Amsterdam that the "free people" sent over by the company and at its expense, proved, upon their arrival, "to be mostly traders and hence persons unaccustomed to labor," who quickly became "a charge of the Poor-masters," whilst others, "more honest," entered the military service. He tells them that what the country needs is "farmers or farm-laborers, foreigners and exiles, used to labor and poverty."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 444.

11 Stuyvesant informs the directors at Amsterdam that he has been ill "during the past four weeks, with a sickness accompanied by a hot internal fever" (perhaps typhoid fever), and indicates his convalescence under medical treatment, adding that he has now been upon his feet "for two or three days," but remains "still very sick and weak."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 444. See Aug. 5, 1658.

10 Megapolensis and Drius, writing to the classis of Amsterdam, say that Gutwasser, the first Lutheran clergyman in New Amsterdam, who was banned by Stuyvesant and the council, but who evaded deportation for several years and preached in defiance of the commands of the provincial authorities, was finally arrested, by order of Stuyvesant, "in his own house," and, "last spring [1659], was sent by the ship De Bruynvisch [Porpoise] back to Holland"—Eccles. Rec., I: 449. For full particulars concerning the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

Cornelis Steewyck is chosen a schepen of the city, in place of Jeronimus Ebbingh, who has departed for Holland in the ship "Moesman."—Rec. N. Am., III: 45.

20 Twenty of the principal men of New Amsterdam address a remonstrance to the burgomasters who, they declare, are "sufficiently acquainted with the low condition" of the city, "through the constaet complaints" of the burghers, of whom some have "fled from their lands and houses," turning to the city as a refuge in their poverty, in the hope of gaining a living there; that others who have tried to help the stricken have themselves been reduced to want, "so that the debts they . . . contracted from year to year among this poor Commonalty" are estimated to be "more than one hundred thousand guilders" ($40,000.) above what they are able to repay; some have lost heavily in life and property during the Indian uprising in 1655, and now others, through dread of a similar destruction, have "left their lands and houses." The remonstrants say it is a matter of conscience to save the needy of the "Netherlands Nation," aiding them "by disbursement of money, provisions or by new advances of goods," but when this is done it is certain the debts contracted can never be repaid. The burden falls upon the burghers who still have some means. It is a burden that works injustice. They aver that they support an "excessive heavy day and night watch; Yea, even every night," and also give "voluntary services against enemies at divers times for the public service," from which "public burthens" all "surrounding places" are exempt. They complain against "the Scots or traders," who go to and fro with their ships, taking "all the profit out of the country, sellig everything for cash (for which the old inhabitants must wait) without having to bear any burtheos." They ask the burgomasters to secure the following reforms or concessions from the provincial government, viz: (1) The burgherright in all places in New Netherland under the company's authority; (2) that a burgher of New Amsterdam, who has left the city or the country for a year and six weeks, may retain his burgherright, provided he keep at least a free room, fire, and light in the city; (3) "that no one coming first from Holland" shall be allowed to "go to Fort Orange or other places with Cargoes to trade there with the Indians or Christians," unless he first obtains his burgherright in the city; (4) that no man shall be a burgher of the city unless he promises to remain in the country three years, otherwise he shall be obliged to pay 1,000 guilders for his burgherright, a sum they adjudge reasonable for those who come to New Netherland only with cargoes; (5) that the privileges allowed the merchants of the city "on the subject of foreign trade be forthwith published." These concessions, the remonstrants believe, will redound to prosperity and be serviceable alike to the province and the Fatherland.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 232-34.

On Nov. 5, the presiding burgomaster transmitted the remonstrance to Stuyvesant and the council with a recommendation for favourable action, leaving however the amount of the burgherright tax upon traders, if considered too high, to their discretion.—Ibid., VII: 236. Stuyvesant and the council, by apostil of Jan. 31, 1660, conceded virtually everything asked for, except the fourth item, which was disallowed as it was contrary to the order of the directors at Amsterdam, and because "prejudicial to this place."—Ibid., VII: 234-35; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 206.

Stoffel Mighelisen requests the burgomasters and schepens 16 for a salary as public crier of the city, but it is told that this post is a benefice only and that he will have "to content himself with his earnings."—Rec. N. Am., III: 51. On Nov. 21, Hendrick van Bommel was appointed, provisionally, to this post by the burgomasters.—Ibid., VII: 238.

17 Stuyvesant and the council, in a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, say: "Should your Honors deem it advisable, to attack the savages on account of the present and repeated murders, we have previously asked thereto for some cavalry saddles and pistols to organize a little troop of horsemen on Long [Island] and very much needed, to keep the two places free from Indians; your Honors sent pistols before this, 25 to 30 common saddles are herewith respectfully asked for."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 111.

1659 Stuyvesant writes to the directors: "The Latin schoolmaster Sept. rector, lately sent over, complains of his salary, because, he 17 says it is impossible to support himself decently with it, as you may see by his enclosed letter to us. Your repeated instructions do not allow us, to raise anybody's salary without your knowledge, we have therefore referred him to you, promising him our favorable recommendation: we now request your Honor's advice, whether a reasonable sum may not be granted him for board money. As to his services and his diligence, we must truly testify, that his industry is astonishing and the progress of the young people remarkable." The directors are further requested to send over "some medicinal seeds and plants" from the "Botanical Garden at Leyden" for cultivation in New Amsterdam.
—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 445. For the directors' reply, see
Dec. 22.

" In a letter of Feb. 13, the directors at Amsterdam granted greater liberty to the people of New Netherland in foreign trade.—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431; Rec. N. Am., VII: 225-26; see also Sept. 11, 1658. As a result, as Stuyvesant and the council now inform them, "several prominent burghers" of New Amsterdam freighted a flyboat, named the "Moolen" or "Gulde Meulen," despatching her "directly to France," "with boards and other lumber . . . to be exchanged for wine and other goods." It was "the first attempt" to introduce direct commerce to France from New Netherland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 445. On this account, some special concessions are requested. The directors, on Dec. 22, denied these, saying that whilst these undertakers clamoured for more, because they were "the first to attempt this channel of trade," these persons would "deny to have been accessories to the first fraud, committed by this ship or by her crew in bringing over, against special order, a quantity of beavers and other furs sold by them in France," as the supercargo himself had informed them.
This was smuggling, which had to be stopped, or they would withdraw the liberty and privileges, provisionally granted for this foreign trade.—Ibid., XIV: 452.

23 Owing to the very grave state of affairs in the colony of New Amst, on the Delaware, Stuyvesant commissions Cornelis van Ruyven, provincial secretary, and Capt. Marten Cregier, first burgher of New Amsterdam, to proceed there with reinforcements and to regulate the affairs of the colony. They embark and sail from New Amsterdam on this day in three vessels, "with about 60 men," under Cregier's command, arriving at Fort Altena on the 26th.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 160-63.

" Augustine Heerman and Resolved Waldron are commissioned by Stuyvesant as envoys from New Netherland to Gov. Josias Fendall, of Maryland, to negotiate for the restitution and return of freemen and servants who have decamped from the Dutch jurisdiction, "on account of debts and for other reasons," and to promise like service on the part of the Dutch government to the province of Maryland; also to protest against the conduct of Col.
Nathaniel Utie in regard to the colony of New Amstel, on the Delaware, as a contravention of the articles of peace between the mother countries, in 1654, and to demand, therefore, from the governour and council of Maryland, "right and justice against the said Colonel Nathaniel Utie with compensation of the expenses, already had through his frivolous demand and bloody threats."—
N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 261-62. Heerman kept a daily Journal from their setting out from New Amstel, on Sept. 30, until Waldroon's return from Maryland, overlaid, on Oct. 21. This important Journal has been printed.—Ibid., II: 88-98. Although the embassy was immediately unsuccessful, its work had far-reaching consequences. Fendall and his council treated contemptuously the exceptions advanced by the Dutch envoys to Lord Baltimore's patent. Nevertheless, those exceptions formed the ground upon which the English committee of trade and plantations decided, in 1685, that Delaware did not belong to Maryland.—Brodhead, Hist.
State of N. Y., I: 669 (note).

24 A peace conference between the Dutch and Mohawks is held at the first Castle, Kaghwanage. While there, the Dutch Commissioners received "a package with letters, brought by a Maques of the third Castle from Trois Rivieres. It was directed to Mr.
Jacob de Hinson, who being present," the package was opened, and found to contain, among other letters, one to Stuyvesant from Simon Le Moynes, the French Jesuit Missionary.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 113-14.

29 Stuyvesant rides to Breuckelen, Midwout, and Amersfoort to reassure the people, who are in great fear of Indian depredations. Sept.

—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 124. 29

Stuyvesant calls together "the Burgomasters, Schepens and the Captains of the trainbands" of New Amsterdam and tells them of "the distressed condition of the Esopus [Kingston], and that succor and relief" are needed, which can only be secured "with the assistance of the citizens." An effort is made to secure volunteers by the captios of the city militia. In two days, "not more than 6 or 8 made their appearance," because "terror and fear" had "taken hold of the citizens." In the meantime, Lieut. Bryan Newton "was sent to the English and Dutch villages," and Stuyvesant "called together the six soldiers of New-Haerlem, 3 from Staten-Island, the train-men down to the clerks" in the company's office, to whom he joined four of his house-servants, three from his bouwey, and "5 or 6 newly enlisted men, making up a company of 36 men." Enlistments went so slowly, because of the unwilling-ness of the citizens to serve, who even "encouraged and instigated each other not to let themselves be employed for the expedition to Esopus," while some were bold enough to say they were not obliged to jeopardize themselves "against barbarous savages," being "bound only to defend their own place."

On account of Indian depredations, Stuyvesant and the council issue a notice in which they instruct everyone who is able and willing "to serve for the protection of the country and destruction of the Indians, whether on monthly wages or as Volunteers for plunder, to apply to the Direct<sup>r</sup> General or the fiscal De Sille, or to Captain-Lieutenant Briant Nutor [Bryan Newton], who shall give correct information to all."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 232.

Stuyvesant, in this hour of extremity, again "convened the magistrates and captains of the trainbands" on Oct. 2, when he told them he had "36 to 40 men, soldiers as well as train-men ready and hoped that 20 or 30 Englishmen would join from the villages." He "directed them to assemble under arms the three companies of citizens early next day," in order that he might, "by reminding them of their honour and duty," ascertain how many would volunteer, and, if this proved a failure, "to detail one of the three companies by lot and punish those, who opposed, according to their merits." This purpose was carried out the next day. The three companies were called out under arms, but when Stuyvesant asked who would go with him, although he was still weak from his sickness, as he reminded them, "not more than 24 or 25 men" came forward, "which number was thought to be insufficient." Therefore one of the three companies was designated by lot and "ordered to be ready for embarkation the next Sunday after divine service, under a penalty of 50 guilders" for dereliction. He told the members of this company that if any were "fainthearted or afraid" they could "find a substitute or be free upon payment of the fine," but "a sense of honour and shame compelled all to be silent."

On Sunday, after sermon, "the aforesaid company of citizens, numbering about one hundred, embarked with the few officers and clerks and train-men, to whom came late in the evening 24 or 26
Englishmen and hardly as many savages from Long Island . . .
who embarked the next morning." About noon of Oct. 6, they sailed from Manhattan, and on the 10th, on account of contrary wind and tide, landed "about a quarter of a mile below the Kil [Esopus River] in order not to lose any time and not to show any discouragement."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 124-24. See Oct. 29, 1659.

Augustine Heerman and Resolved Waldron, delegates from New Netherland, address the governour and council of Maryland in vindication of the Dutch title to the Delaware River. They allege such an apportionment of America as gave "the Dutch the Manhattans, from 38 to 42" degrees north latitude. These "Dutch plantations," they say, were "then called by the general name of Manhattans, after the name of the Indians, who first inhabited the same. And here 'tis to be noted that they commit a grave mistake who will confine the general name of Manhattans aforesaid to the particular city, which is only built on a little island;
as already stated, it signifies the whole country and Province, or at least the same particular place in the Province: As, for example, it is frequent, with many, still at this day, to say—to go to the Manhattans, or to come from the Manhattans—when they mean the whole Province, as they do by the name of Virginia or Maryland, for the particular town itself is never named the Manhattans, but New Amsterdam."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 80-81.

By proclamation, on Sept. 30, Stuyvesant set apart this day 15

- 1659 as a day of general fasting and prayer. The reasons were an epidemic during "this summer" of a "painful and long, lingering sickness," and the "devastating Indian war" at the Esopus and other parts of the province.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 78-79.
- 29 Stuyvesant sends an important letter to the directors at Amsterdam, under cover to Edward Mao, a merchant of the mother city. It is sent "by a circuitous route over New-England as well as over Virginia," in the hope that one of the copies will reach its destination "before the sailing of the summer ships" from Holland. He tells them of "the very precarious and dangerous condition of the country," which, "according to the judgment of the most sensible and best minded people," has not been so dangerous for years. His expectation is that "succor and assistance" will be speedily sent to him from Holland "for the maintenance and protection of this weak province and its inhabitants." He narrates to the directors what has transpired recently at Esopus (Kingston), the measures he has taken, with the cooperation of the officials of New Amsterdam, for defending Esopus against Indian besiegers, and his arrival with reinforcements near the Esopus River on Oct. 10. He particularly emphasizes the cowardice of the citizens who were to have accompanied him on the expedition, and states that he sees no hope in dependence upon an untrained body for defence.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 123-26. See Sept. 30, and Nov. 28, 1659. See also Addenda.
- " The schout, burgomasters, and city treasurer accept bids for farming out "the Burgher Excise of Wines and Beer to be consumed within the jurisdiction of this City of [New] Amsterdam, extending to the Fresh Water." The farmer is required to pay his "promised rent in good current pay" to the treasurer of the city in quarterly sums. He is obliged to have office hours—in winter, from 8 till 11 a. m., and 2 till 5 p. m.; in summer, from 7 till 11 a. m., and 2 till 6 p. m.; and he is obliged to give security by two bondsmen for the payment of his rent. Paulus vander Beek was the successful bidder, and Joannes de la Montagne, Jr and Thomas Verdon were his sureties, on Oct. 31.—Rec. N. Am., III: 68-69.
- 30 The directors at Amsterdam order that skippers sailing to New Netherland shall not privately bring letters to Amsterdam from there; but that letters are to be carried in sealed mail-bags; and that failure to observe the order shall subject the skipper to a fine of 100 carolus guilders for each offence.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 446; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 379; see also summary of Aug. 6, 1652. Stuyvesant promulgated the order on June 2, 1660.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 380.
- Nov. Nominations are made to fill a vacancy of church-warden in 14 New Amsterdam, caused by the absence of Pieter Tunneman, who has gone to Holland.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 237.
- 21 The burgomasters of New Amsterdam decide to send an order to Jacques Cortelyou, the official surveyor, to furnish them with "a memorandum of the breadth of each lot situated on each side of the Heere Gragt [present Broad Street] as far as it extends," which lots he has already "measured" in their presence.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 237-38.
- They again asked him for "a list of the measurement[s] of the lots" on Feb. 7, 1660; and, on Feb. 13, a record was made of 21 names of the persons taxed for the Heere Gragt or canal. At the same time, they directed the city treasurer "to collect and receive" from these residents the amounts assessed on each "in payment of the expenses incurred in making up and sheet piling the Canal."—Ibid., 245, 246-47. On the 27th of the month, several of the residents appeared before the burgomasters to seek release from the assessment, alleging that they derived no benefit from the improvement. They were ordered, however, to pay their share as others had to do, one-fourth part thereof being due within a month.—Ibid., VII: 248-49.
- This did not settle the matter. A general petition was put into circulation by the residents in June, 1660, requesting the burgomasters to "designate those who have derived most benefit from the constructing of the aforesaid Canal to help pay the expenses with them," and they asked for a delay of eight days, which was granted on June 18. Stuyvesant was also invited to take a hand in the matter.
- The collection of this assessment was resented by several persons. Hendrick Willemsen, perhaps the most prominent baker in town, was removed to the prison chamber of the city hall for refusing to pay his quota. Hans Dreper alleged he had been exempted by Stuyvesant; he was left off with an assessment of Nov. 9 guilders because he had to sheet both in front and at the side of the canal, his property being at the outlet at the East River, now Pearl Street. Joghim Beckman objected to payment because he knew "no reason for it," but acknowledged "he must bear what the Magistrates do." He was allowed, on account of "his inability," to pay his quota in three instalments, one being payable each half year. He said he could not do it, so was "ordered to be removed to the prison chamber." Conraet ten Eyck, when ordered to pay, demurred, on the ground that he had "more dirt than before" at his place and derived no profit from the canal. He was told to pay up or expect summary action. Fredrick Lubbertsen complained "of the taking away his lot &c., by which he suffered great loss," and "he was allowed to pay his assessed quota in four instalments." Willemsen, the baker, was brought again into court, and told he might pay in three instalments, to which he replied defiantly that he could not do it, "and that the Magistrates can do what they please" about it. The court then (June 28) decided that all who were assessed should pay, "to wit—those who have heavy payments, in four instalments, and the lighter in three; and that the Treasurer" should "send a note to each house and cause them to be notified three times by Jan Gillissen Koek, and after three refusals, have execution levied by the Officer [schout], P. Tonnenman."—Ibid., VII: 253, 254-55.
- The old canal in the present Broad Street is referred to in the records of 1644 and 1646 as "the Ditch" or "Common Ditch;" and in 1652 as the "Heere Gragt." It was filled up, and the street paved in 1676. The street was called Broad Street in 1692.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1002.
- Stuyvesant is again at Esopus (Kingston). He left there on Dec. 3, taking with him "the grain which has been threshed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 131. See Oct. 29, 1659.
- The burgomasters order notice to be given, on Dec. 5, that all persons who claim either the small or great burgherright, and who have "no freedom of the City," shall "procure and receive the same within fourteen days," namely on Dec. 19 and 20, when the burgomasters sit at the city hall from nine a. m. till noon for this purpose. Persons who fail therein are to be prohibited from carrying on any business whatsoever in the city. On the above designated days, numerous persons took out their certificates of denization, and others did the same on the 23d, the papers being signed by the presiding burgomaster.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 240, 241, 242.
- The burgomasters order the weigh-house porters "to keep the Bridge clean, and that notices be affixed" showing what will have to be paid by persons "who lay wood on the Bridge." The porters are also allowed "to do what" (other service) is "asked of them," when not engaged with work "at the Beam;" but they are required "to be found at the Beam," or, when they go from their post, "to leave word" where they may be found.—Ibid., VII: 239-40. The reference is to the weigh-house (see May 4, 1654) and new pier on the East River, at the present Pearl and Moore Sts. (see Nov. 9, 1658). See Dec. 12.
- Isaac Allerton, Jr., appears before the court of burgomasters and schepens, and requests that the court "appoint curators to the residuary estate in this country, of his father dec'd, and regarding the papers remaining at New Haven in the hands of the Court there, he requests that they be written to, to send the same here." The curators appointed by the city court are Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, Govert Loockermans, Jan Lauwerens (John Lawrence), and George Woolsey—the last named being the agent of the deceased Allerton.—Rec. N. Am., III: 90. These persons, "after much conversation," accepted the designation as curators, on the 16th, in the presence of the city court.—Ibid., III: 92.
- The burgomasters order the following notice "regarding the Bridge to be affixed to the Beam," viz: "Whereas the Pier or Bridge must be kept clean, each and every one, who brings fire wood or any other thing there, is hereby notified to pay to the Weighhouse Porters 2 stiv: per hhd pieces of wood, and the rest in proportion."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 240. See also July 4, 1647; Nov. 9, 1658; April 18, and July 11, 1659; and Nov. 3, 1660.
- In a city court proceeding of the under-schout of the city against Thomas Verdon, "the bill" beyond the weigh-scales (at present Pearl and Moore Sts.) is mentioned.—Rec. N. Am., III: 91.
- The city schout, Nicaeus de Sille, asks the city court to confer upon him, and the under-schout, Resolved Waldron, authority to 1599 "seize the cart whenever they find any carters sitting riding on their carts along the streets," which request the court grants.

 Dec. 16 This action is particularly the result of charges made by Waldron to the court against Romein Severin and Thomas Verdon, for driving their carts along the Strand (East River, now Pearl Street) without dismounting, for which they were fined.—Rec. N. Am., III: 91.

20 An impression of the city seal of New Amsterdam is placed on a small burghright certificate for the behoof of Cornelis Jansen van Hoorn, issued to him by Burgomaster Martin Cregier. This document is owned by the Title Guarantee and Trust Co., New York City, and, so far as known, is the only impression of this city seal extant. See facsimile and description in Wilde, Civic Ancestry of New York, 40-41, and Pl. IX; also Frontispiece, Vol. V.

22 The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council: "You are specially charged with the supervision of the city's financial administration and we direct you generally, to take care, that the finances of the Company there are well and properly managed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 449.

" The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant as follows: "Your order concerning the payment of the soldiers and other servants of the Company in wampum has our approval, as it will have the tendency of placing all on the same footing and thereby giving satisfaction; but as it has not the value of Holland money, we have concluded to direct and authorize you, to calculate wampum at that rate and for the same reason we reduce the currency value of a heaver from 8 to 7 guilders. . . . You will strictly conform to this rule." They tell him that "this special reduction of wampum must necessarily be followed by a second, more general one, if we desire to prevent its complete debasement, caused by the abundant importation of wampum by the people of New England, who make their payments with it and take out of the country not only the best goods sent from here [Holland], but also many beavers and other furs to the detriment of the Company's revenues." They refer to "this villanous wampum," and, in order that losses may be prevented to the inhabitants of New Netherland, they deem it necessary that the people "be previously warned . . . by public notices to be given in March and June," concerning the reduction of rate which is to take place "the following year" (1660).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 450-51. See Nov. 11, 1658; and April 21, and Sept. 20, 1660.

" In reply to Stuyvesant's letter of Sept. 17 (q. v.), the directors say they believe "the complaints made by the Latin schoolmaster or rector about the insufficiency of his salary are almost answered by the payment of all salaries there [New Amsterdam] at Holland valuation, as now ordered, which, with what he receives from his pupils [see May 25, 1660] every year, should be sufficient to support him decently, as long as he remains a single man; with the increase of young people in the school his income will increase daily, for the parents of his pupils will not hesitate to remunerate him fairly, if he does his duty. You can assist him in this matter according to circumstances." Such "medical seeds" as were requested, they say, will be ordered from Leyden.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 452. See April 16, 1660.

24 The burgomasters decide "to write a letter to Jacob Alrich to send back the bell which Df [Everardus] Welius had borrowed provisionally" from the city of New Amsterdam.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 242. Welius had died on the 9th or 10th of this month.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 286, 287. On the 30th, the very day on which Vice-Director Alrichs himself died at New Amstel, on the Delaware (N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 289), the secretary of the city, in the name of the burgomasters, wrote to Alrichs, as follows: "Whereas a bell was given to Domf Welius by form of a loan and for the accommodation of the Colony of New-Amstel, to use the same there provisionally, until it be asked back, and this City having again need for it, we request your Honor, to send it back to us by the first opportunity."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 243. Nothing resulted from this correspondence, and, on Feb. 27, 1660, the burgomasters renewed their request in a letter to Alexander d'Hinoyossa, Alrichs's successor.—Ibid., VII: 247-48.

" Allard Anthony is requested by the burgomasters to deliver to them "with the least possible delay the act of the Treasurer-ship" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 242. He appeared before them on Jan. 31, 1660, and presented "an act of his administration in quality as Treasurer of the Cities [sic] domains," which they examined.—Ibid., VII: 245. On Feb. 2, Anthony succeeded Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt as one of the burgomasters, and, on the 7th, Paulus Leendertsen vaoder Grift delivered the treasury papers to Van Curtlandt, the new city treasurer.—Ibid., VII: 245.

Prior to this year, a half-moon was erected before the water-gate, on the East River (present Wall St., west of Water St.). See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, Vol. II. This fortification had been demolished by 1688, as is indicated by a recital in Liber Wills, III-IV: 173. It was, however, rebuilt before 1695, as such a battery is shown on the Miller Plan of that year, Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. It had disappeared by 1717.—See Pl. 25, Vol. I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Prior to this year, the two great stone bastions of the wall, situated, respectively, at Wall St., west of William St., and at Wall St., east of Broadway, were erected, as they appear on the Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, Vol. II. See also Pl. 23-a, Vol. I, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944. They were referred to as "y<sup>e</sup> Bastion Zelandia" and "y<sup>e</sup> Bastion hollandia" in the "Court of Lieutenancy" papers in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, (1880), 403-6. See March 28, 1691. These bastions were demolished in 1699 (q. v.), and the stones were employed in building the new city hall at Wall and Broad Sts.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 271; M. C. C., II: 82.

Prior to this year, there was also erected a "flanker" or fortification on the line of the present Greenwich St., near Edgar St. This is shown on the Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, Vol. II. It was called the "Oyster Pastry Mount" in 1697.—Liber Deeds, XXI: 212 (New York). It is shown on the Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-a, Vol. I) as "The works on the west side of the City." See 1751.

The canal which ran through the present Broad Street had been spanned, prior to this year, by three small bridges at its upper end, and two "firme timber bridges with railes on each side" near the outlet.—See Castello Plan, Vol. II, and Description of the Town of Mannadens, Vol. I.

The so-called Castello Plan or bird's-eye view, reproduced and described in Vol. II, C. Pls. 82 to 82-e, inclusive, and preserved in the Villa Castello near Florence, Italy, shows the town of New Amsterdam as it was in the summer of this year. This plan, which was probably drawn between 1665 and 1670, is, almost without doubt, based on the survey by Jacques Cortelouy ordered on June 7, 1660 (q. v.), and completed just in time to be dispatched in the ship which carried Stuyvesant's well-known letter of Oct. 6 of that year (q. v.), addressed to the directors of the West India Co. This is the earliest plan of the city which has come down to us, and the only one from the Dutch period.

The statement in the description of the Castello Plan, in Vol. II, p. 213, that only two small bridges are shown, is erroneous, for three bridges plainly appear. The argument there presented, that the third bridge was built between October, 1660, and September, 1661, is consequently based upon a wrong premise. The Castello Plan should be associated with the first Cortelouy survey, of 1660, and not with the second survey, of 1661, as is stated in the historical summary in I: 91. The reference in the same connection to Appendix III should be to Vol. II. Through carelessness, street names have been omitted from the Castello Plan key (C. Pl. 82e). These will be found on the Map of Dutch Grants (C. Pl. 87, Vol. II).

From about this year, Andries Rees, who was a cadet in the service of the West India Co. in 1657, conducted a tavern on "Smeë Straet" (now William St. below Wall St.). On Jan. 30, 1663, he was charged by Schout Tonneman in the city court with failure to notify him of a brawl at his tavern, during which Pieter Jansen, a mason, was stabbed by Denys Isaacsen. On June 26 of the same year, the schout charged that he and his deputy went to the house of Rees "on Sunday last upon hearing noise and found there eight @ ten persons playing at minnepins and two at backgammon and as many as fifteen @ sixteen persons either bowling or drinking, in direct violation of the ordinances and placards of the Rf Hon<sup>ble</sup> Director General and Council of New Netherland, recently renewed by the Court of this City from the Public Stand of this City Hall." The schout demanded that Rees "be condemned in a fine of ninety guilders and forbidden to tap for a year and six weeks or to follow the business of tapping," as well as pay the cost of the action. Rees, in extenuation, said he tapped "two hours after the afternoon's preaching and he did no business during the week." The court

1660 dismissed the case.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 192, 264. See Castello Plan, II: 332.

— From 1660 to 1669, Samuel Pepys wrote his Diary.
— The houses in New Amsterdam, which numbered 120 in 1656
when surveyed by Capt. De Koninck, had increased to about 350 in 1660.—O'Callaghan, Hist. of New Neth., II: 520, citing Albany
Records, XVIII: 138; Holland Docs., XVI: 221. Cf. De Sille List, II: 349 et seq.

— "In this year, 1660, the fiscal, Jan van Cleef and his friend, hought of Jacob Wolfertse van Couwenhoven, for the use of the inhabitants of the town of Utrecht, a Horse Mill with the appurtenances which had been used for grinding in Amsterdam on the Manhattans. The mill stones and the mill work were brought and set up in the Village of Utrecht. The friend of Jan van Cleef without the knowledge of the Fiscal sold out his third part to Jan van Cleef, the Fiscal being security for both of them, and having paid out already more than 400 guilders ($160 on account of the mill. The Fiscal seeing that Jan van Cleef did not prosper, and that the last day of payment was near at hand, threatened to prosecute and compel him to act justly. On this Jan van Cleef sought a buyer to sell the mill to, at the same time the people desired the Fiscal to buy the mill, but he refused, neither would he sell this third part, having in view the benefit of the Town and the convenience of the inhabitants. In consequence of this Jan van Cleef was under the necessity of selling his two thirds to Albert Albertse, and the mill remained in the town of Utrecht, the Fiscal remaining unwilling to sell his third part."—Graessend Records, quoted in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo. ed.), I: 650. The mill stones and appurtenances alluded to were those belonging to the mill of Van Couwenhoven on the Slyck Steegh in New Amsterdam. See Dec.
20, 1656. See also, Castello Plan, II: 308-9.

— In this year, Petrus Stuyvesant erected a chapel on his bouvery, near what is now the west side of Second Ave. at 10th St., for the use of his neighbours and tenants (Corwin, Man. of the Ref. Ch. in Am., 996). It was demolished in 1687.—Eccles. Rec., I: 489-90. St.
Mark's Church in The Bowery now covers this site.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 933, 936. Grants of land near here were made to free negroes in 1659 and 1660.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 269.

— In this year, "Pierre Pia," was recorded as keeping a tavern at what is now the north-east corner of Marketfield and New Sts.—
See Liber Deeds, A: 213. He was a tapster here at least as late as 1663.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 175, 179, 186, 219. By 1677, the place was called "ye Swan," and was conducted by "Samuell" Davis.—

Ref. Key, III: 980. See also Jan. 9, 1663.

Jan. 15 Hendrick Jansen Claarbout, van ter Goes, "commonly called the Speck Coper" (pork buyer), is indicted by the city court as a felon for theft, and abuse of the public officers. The case is important in the criminal jurisprudence of the city. As the burgomasters and schepens do "not find themselves qualified by their Instructions to sentence and execute capital punishment," they request Nicasius de Sille, in his capacity of city schout, "to demand of the Director General and Council further and more ample qualification," or, in his capacity as fiscal of the company,
"to enter the demand" before the provincial authorities.—Cal.
Hist. MSS., Dutch, 205, 206; Rec. N. Am., III: 101-2. On the 20th, Schout De Sille requested the city magistrates "to take into consideration the reavoy to the Director General and Council relative to the felon, . . . so as to conclude the case;" but they instructed him "to prosecute the case of the prisoner . . . before the Supreme Council."—Rec. N. Am., III: 105. On the following day (21st), De Sille having presented the demand, Stuyvesant and the council granted and conceded to the burgo-masters and schepens the authority desired by them, with the proviso that, if he found
"the offence of the aforesaid prisoner" to be one to "be adjudged them to be capital in majori gradu, they demand the Director General and Council's approval thereof."—Ibid., III: 102. Returning to the city court with the papers, on the 22d, De Sille reported that the supreme body had referred the case back to their inferior bench, wherefore he, as prosecuting officer, demanded a sentence against the prisoner, who was thereupon brought into court.—Ibid., III: 106. Sentence was deferred until the next day (23d) when the defendant was condemned by a plurality vote to "be brought to the place where justice is usually executed and, with the rope around his neck, whipped, branded and banished the country, and condemned in the costs and mises of justice."—Ibid., III: 110-11. The supreme body assented to the sentence of banishment imposed by the city court, not only beyond the city's jurisdiction, "but also beyond the Province of N. Netherland," and likewise permitted the city to erect a half-gallows before the city hall, "should that be necessary for carrying the judgment into effect."—Ibid., III: 111-12. Claarbout, his wife, and his children were, on the 27th, ordered deported by ship "to the Virginias."— Ibid., III: 114.

Van Hoboken, the schoolmaster, is not rendering satisfactory service, as appears from a court minute of this date. He has petitioned for "an allowance from the city, as he is behindhand with the building of the school, and for divers other reasons." The court replies: "Petitioner is allowed to receive his current year's salary, which shall be paid him at a more convenient season . . .
and his allowance henceforth is abolished."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 244; cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 66. See Oct. 27, 1661. Van Hoboken's petition apparently contradicts a conclusion reached by Prof.
Kilpatrick that "it was the duty of the people [in New Netherland] to furnish school quarters and of the company to provide the master's salary." His argument that the words "allowance" and "salary," as used in the petition, refer to "the annual appropriation of 100 guilders for a schoolhouse" is not very convincing.—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 90-93. It is more probable that the local authorities were occasionally pleased to grant to a master compensation over and above the salary fixed by the company, as in the case of Curtius (see July 4, 1659). Dissatisfaction, on the other hand, could be expressed feebly by discontinuing the allowance (see Aug. 9, 1660).

There being several city ordinances in force which have "not been renewed for many years," and are "unknown to many Burgers and inhabitants," who through ignorance fail to observe them, Schout De Sille is therefore "ordered and charged by the Burgomasters and Schepens yearly at proper seasons to renew such placards as occasion demands," so that observance may be assured and ignorance may not be justly pleaded in extenuation of infractions.—Rec. N. Am., III: 108.

John Pynchon writes from Springfield to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut: "Major Hawthorne & M<sup>r</sup> Richards Goe to yt Monhatons ye first opportunity to treat wth ye dutch Governour, of Company purposing to carry on their design of Trade vp ye River [Hudson] if fairly they may."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 136 (Mass. Hist. Soc.).

Stuyvesant's request that only persons who are "friendly and not opponents" be nominated as burgo-masters and schepens is related to the city court.—Rec. N. Am., III: 120. The following day (Feb. 1) was a Sunday, and on that afternoon the burgo-masters and schepens assembled. Each one made his nomination by a ticket in writing, "in presence of Mr. Nicasius de Sille, Delegate from the Director General and Council." After several ballots had been taken, a double set of names was fixed upon and sent to Stuyvesant and the council, from which to elect a single set. The supreme body, on Feb. 2, sent in an approved list, which contained some substitutions of names not among the original nominees.
The new board was duly sworn in and installed by Nicasius de Sille, in his capacity of fiscal and as a member of the council, and by Cornelis van Ruyven, as provincial secretary, both of whom had been duly delegated for the purpose. The instructions were read to the court elect, the oath of allegiance was taken and, "after ringing the bell three times," announcement was made to the burgers and inhabitants of the city to "hold the aforesaid persons in due respect and consideration."—Ibid., III: 122-26.

The burgo-masters nominate Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt and Pieter van Couwenhoven, that one of them may be chosen as an orphan-master in place of Allard Anthony, whose withdrawal has become imperative through his elevation to a burgo-mastership.
Stuyvesant and the council appointed Van Cortlandt on the 9th.
—Rec. N. Am., VII: 45; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 206.

Stuyvesant and the council now renew the provincial ordinance of Jan. 18, 1656 (2 v.), regarding the forming of villages or hamlets as a protection against the Indians. The isolated farmers of the province are required, on pain of confiscation of their goods, and without any distinction of persons, "to remove their houses, goods and cattle before the last of March, or at latest the middle of April, and convey them to the Village or settlement, nearest and most convenient to them; or, with the previous knowledge

1660 and approval of the Director General and Council, to a favorably

The people were slow in complying, hence another order was issued, on April 12, and a notice, on May 18, to cause their removal or concentration.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 208, 111. See also May 3 and 18, of this year.

17 Stuyvesant writes to the vice-director of the West India Co. at Curaçao, as follows: "The negroes, whom the Lords-Directors ordered to send hither, must be clever and strong men so that they can immediately be put to work here [New Amsterdam] at the Fort or at other places, also if they are fit for it, in the war against the wild barbarians either to pursue them, when they run away or else to carry the soldiers' baggage, for it is quite evident, that in order to possess this country in peace and revenge the frequent affronts and murders we shall be forced into a lawful offensive war against them. An important service would be done to the Company, to us and to the country, if among the expected negroes some experienced men, who have been some time in Curaçao, were sent to us."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 142-43. Stuyvesant also requests for the cavalry at Manhattan, in the service of the company, "some good and well trained horses, strong stallions or geldings, the latter being preferable as of greater service," and he expects them "with their equipments, that is the saddles and bridles." Among them he wants "three or four good mares; all for account of the Company."—Ibid., XIII: 143.

20 The court of burghmasters and schepens petitions Stuyvesant, and the council that it be obligatory on parties applying for revision of any judgment of that court to deposit a certain sum. This was granted on February 23.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 207.

23 A proclamation is published by Stuyvesant and the council for "a day of general fasting and prayer, which shall be kept throughout this province on Wednesday before Easter, being the 24th of March" (q. v.). It is done because of the visitation of many "with hot fevers, heavy colds, giddiness of the head and many other diseases," and on account of "threatened invasions by our neighbors [New England] on the territories, streams and rivers, long possessed by us, with rumors of war and its immediate consequences, murder and arson by the savage barbarous natives committed here [Manhattan and environs] as well as principally . . . on the Esopus" (Kingston). These visitations are declared to be God's punishments, because the people have desecrated the Sabbath, used profane language, neglected divine service, and indulged in "drunkenness, feasting, voluptuousness, adultery, deception and other heinous sins." On the fast day, "during divine service," it is forbidden to play tennis or ball, hunt, fish, drive, plough, sow or mow, or to engage in "all illicit amusements as dicing and hard drinking."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 144-45.

24 It was customary to lead cows to the common pasture upon signal given by "the blowing of the horn," as is shown in a suit before the city court of this date.—Rec. N. Am., III: 137.

25 Commissary Nicolaes Varleth (Varlet or Verlett), in a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, says he "is interested deeply in the (estate of the) lately deceased Governor of Virginia" (Samuel Matthews), and that he is "exceedingly anxious to go there in person," which can be done by him "best during the present season of winter." As there is now "no suitable ship" in port, Varleth requests them "to grant or hire thereto the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company's yacht," on their own conditions, and he offers also to be of any service to them in Virginia. They agree to let the vessel to him at "a reasonable hire, certainly not less than six guilders for each day." Varleth is "summoned," and, appearing before them, the agreement is consummated, one condition being that he give "free passage both ways to the Captain-Lieutenant, who is to go to Virginia to see whether he can engage some soldiers there, and that if the said Captain-Lieutenant should get some men there, he shall take as many aboard as he conveniently can," without charge.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 144.

On the 27th, Varleth, and Bryan Newton, the captain-lieutenant, are commissioned as envoys to Virginia, to express official condolence on account of the death of Gov. Matthews, and "to renew not only the former old friendship, correspondence and neighborly intimacy, but also to propose a closer union, offensive and defensive, against the barbarous Indian natives, the enemies of both our nations, some further and surer footing in regard to commerce and trade," and to seek permission "to enlist there a detachment of 25 to 30 free men as soldiers" for New Netherland. This the Virginians would not allow.—Ibid., XIII: 144, 145-47, 163. They were given particular instructions on March 1, and at the same time the council issued a proclamation offering protection against all prosecutions for debt, for three or four years, to such fugitives as would return from Virginia and Maryland to New Netherland. The envoys were well-received in Virginia and negotiated an inter-colonial treaty of amity and commerce; they returned to Manhattan in April. On May 18, Sir William Berkeley and Theodore Bland, respectively governor and speaker of the assembly of Virginia, wrote to Stuyvesant and the council, empowering Sir Henry Moody as special envoy to receive their signatures to the treaty concluded by the Dutch envoys in Virginia. Moody appeared before the Dutch provincial authorities, on June 21; the treaty was deliberated, and presently was completed; it received the hearty assent of the directors at Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 207, 213, 217; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 297; XIV: 482; Brodhead, I: 683-84.

The burghmasters direct an order to be made "instructing each one residing along the beach of the East River to build up and raise their sheet piling higher within the space of six weeks; under a penalty of five and twenty guilders."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 248. On May 4, the schout was directed "to warn and order for the last time those residing on the East and North Rivers" to "build up their sheet piling, within three weeks' time." He was required "to cite those in default to the City Hall," and make complaint against them.—Ibid., VII: 252.

Jan Jansen Hagenaar, city carpenter, having appeared before the burghmasters for further instructions for work to be done, is ordered "to look up the City ladders and to make a shed, to keep the ladders under."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 248. From a later record of the burghmasters (June 8, 1663, q. v.), we know that the fire-ladders were kept locked up "at the prescribed place back of the City Hall."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 176.

Claes Jansen Ruyter is appointed Indian interpreter by Stuyvesant and the council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 207.

A treaty of peace is made at the city hall of New Amsterdam by Stuyvesant, his council, and the burghmasters of the city, with a delegation of sachems representing Indians of Long Island, Staten Island, Hackensack, N. J., Haverstraw, and Westchester County. These Indians declare that they will keep the peace, but do not speak for the Raritans or those of Esopus, with whom they have no desire to have intercourse. It is agreed that, to prevent murders or other mishaps, no Indian shall "come with his arms" into Fort Amsterdam or the villages, but that they "must deliver them at the gate or at the first house of the village or settlement," to be returned to them again when they leave. To obviate disagreements when the Indians bring peltries, fish, and other wares to market in New Amsterdam, it is provided that henceforth they shall come to barter at "no other places, than near the former beaver-path [at the North River landing, about at Battery Pl. and Greenwich St.] and to the neck near the weigh-house," on the East River, except that firewood may be taken anywhere by them. Another promise of the Dutch is that there will be built at the two trading places "suitable houses." Other agreements provide for doing away with the provocations of war, arranging for the apprehension and punishment of willful murderers, either Indian or Dutch, and the education of Indian children. The interpreters of these Indians of Algonquian linguistic stock were Claes de Ruyter, Claes de Norman, and Waeringh, an Indian who understood and spoke Dutch.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 147-49.

A placard is prepared by the burghmasters and schepens informing the commonalty that the directors at Amsterdam have been "pleased to favour this Province with a foreign trade, the rather as being a means to encourage some to the cultivation of land, on the prosecution and promotion of which the prosperity and advancement of this state depends; but under express condition, that the ships, which shall proceed from here to France, Spain, Italy, the Caribbean Islands and other countries, to trade or sell their freighted country produce or whatever wares or merchandize it may be, shall be bound and holden to steer right for the City of Amsterdam in Europe with the returns they may obtain [the return freight, bought with the receipts], or if to this place to discharge and traffic, to pay such customs as the Director General and Supreme Coucillors shall find reasonable." Publication of this placard was made at the city hall, with the usual formality, on the 16th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 45; III: 143-44.

A city ordinance is drawn up by the burgomasters and schepens prohibiting "all Scotsmen and traders" from selling any goods in New Amsterdam, or departing from there to Fort Orange (Albany) or any other place in New Netherland "with their merchandize or goods without having previously sought and obtained their Burgher Right and holding . . . an open shop" or store in New Amsterdam, the staple port of the province. Publication of this ordinance was made at the city hall on the 16th, in the usual formal manner.—Rec. N. Am., III: 142-43. Laxity in complying with its prescriptions, particularly by "newly arrived Traders, Scotch factors and Merchants," induced Stuyvesant and the council, on May 25, to pass a provincial ordinance against open trading, and requiring the parties alluded to above, to keep "an open store" in New Amsterdam for a period of "at least six weeks" after securing their burgherright.—Ibid., VII: 256-57; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 377. See Jan. 31, 1661.

Coethoes, chief of the Wappingts, appears before Stuyvesant and the councilors at Fort Amsterdam, under pretext of representing the Esopus chiefs in the interest of a peace, to whom reply is made that the Dutch have learned that the Esopus Indians have said "they would surprise and kill them," when the Dutch on the Esopus least expected it, and that "they would make only a mock-peace." The Indian chief parries the question as to how peace can be maintained under such circumstances, but avers that "only the barebacks" among the Indians are hostile, and that others want peace. Stuyvesant tells him that if the Esopus chiefs others want peace, they must come to New Amsterdam to make it, to which he replies that "they were afraid;" whereupon answer is given that "if they did not dare" to come, then "the Director-General would go there at an early day."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 150-51.

On the same day, Stuyvesant makes arrangements to "be absent for a short time" in the Esopus country. He leaves "the administration of civil affairs" to the provincial secretary and the two burgomasters of New Amsterdam, whilst the military authority is "absolutely committed to Capt. Marsten Cregier," who is also one of the aforesaid burgomasters.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 150-51. See March 25.

While Stuyvesant is on board the yacht "de Haen," before Heavals (Kingston), during Indian depredations in that region, he reveals his solicitude for his family at Maachatan in a letter to Secretary Van Ruyven, wherein he says: "My love to my wife and children, tide and time forbid my writing to them;" also: "Let the free and the Company's negroes keep good watch on my bowbery."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 152.

The council appoints military officers of Harlem.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 208.

This day was set apart, on Feb. 23 (7. v.), by a proclamation of Stuyvesant and the council, as a day of general fasting and prayer throughout New Netherland, because many persons had been afflicted "with Hot fevers, heavy Rheums, Dizziness of the head and many more diseases;" as well as on account of the visitation on the province in general of "threats of encroachments and invasions of neighbours on our long possessed Lands, Streams and Rivers, with Rumours of Wars and the daily fruits thereof, as Murders and Burnings by the Indians, Barbarous Natives committed here especially on our countrymen and fellow inhabitants in the Esopus." The day was to be observed in fasting, prayer, and attendance upon "Divine Service," and "all exercises and playing of Tennis or Ball, Hunting, Fishing, Trading, Ploughing, Sowing, Mowing, all unlawful games such as dice playing, and getting drunk" were particularly forbidden. This proclamation was read publicly in New Amsterdam on March 16, at the city hall, with due formality.—Rec. N. Am., III: 148-49.

War is proclaimed by the Dutch against the Esopus Indians, dated at Fort Orange, on this day.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 152. See March 15.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council: "We forgot in our last letter . . . to mention the engagement here of another preacher, besides D<sup>o</sup> Blom (who has been married here), called D<sup>o</sup> Henricus Selyns under the same salary and conditions; they both go over in the ship 'de Bever,' the first to take charge of the ministry at the Esopus, the other in the village of Breuckelen. To carry on the service some books are sent over, which your Honors will hand to them, besides the small psalters, prayers and catechisms, to be distributed and used as proper under the community in each respective place for teaching."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 155.

The directors at Amsterdam separate the office of schout of New Amsterdam from that of the company's fiscal. They commission Pieter Tonnemaa, giving him particular instructions and his oath of office. Almost from the very beginning of the city government, in 1653 (see Feb. 2 and Nov. 11, 1653), the burgomasters and schepens had sought a separate prosecuting officer for the city. They had repeatedly solicited it from the company or its provincial representatives. The directors state that they have now finally acquiesced because they believe it will not only "much gratify the burghers of the city" but also will "promote the administration of justice and law."

Apr.

On April 16, the directors wrote that Tonnemaa was "now coming over in the 'Gouden Otter,'" at a yearly salary of 250 fl. over and above what the said Burgomasters and Schepens might "give him for attending to the duties of the office . . . besides such a share of the fines and penalties" as would be found "stated in his commission and instructions;" that he was to execute his trust punctually, keep the oath to be administered to him by the provincial government, and remain "faithful to the Company." On the other hand, Stuyvesant and the council were enjoined to uphold him in his position "in all matters of law and equity." His duties as schout were "to bring to trial all, who break political, civil and criminal laws, placats and ordinances; to arrest all delinquents in the city and its jurisdiction, as his instructions direct him; to fine, execute and inflict the punishment, therein prescribed; to demand, that upon his direction and decided and all sentences matters and abuses be corrected and further to do in this speedily and without delay executed and further to do in this respect, what a good and faithful Schout is in duty bound to do" under his oath of office. He was also to "convoke the board of Burgomasters and Schepens and preside at their meetings, also move all matters coming up for deliberation, collect the votes and decide by their plurality."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 461-65; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 374-76.

On Aug. 5, Tonnemaa was sworn in by the provincial authorities as the first independent schout of New Amsterdam. He had also petitioned for reappointment as schout of Breuckelen and its jurisdiction, but this was refused him by the directors that they council, who had been forewarned by the directors that they intended that post for Resolved Waldron, whose place as under fiscal of the company they had decided to abolish.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 215; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 461. For references to the controversy over a separate city schout, see Feb. 2, 1653; Nov. 11, 1653; Dec. 24, 1653; May 18, 1654; July 21, 1654.

The city having been granted by the provincial government "liberty to take as well from the traders as skippers, for the erection of a Pier to and for the accommodation of the same, in discharging and loading at said Pier, eight stivers per last, the smaller merchandize and goods in proportion," whereby the smaller skipper has to "pay one third and the owner and receiver two thirds," Jan Jaasen Bestevaar, a skipper, is ordered by the presiding burgomaster, to pay to the city treasurer before his departure "his imposed quota for the benefit of this City, for the accommodation experienced by him through the above-mentioned Pier." On May 4, a similar order was issued to Skipper Jacob Jaansen.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 250-51, 252. Apparently, the obligation was not always met, or even understood, by skippers coming into port. Therefore, on May 4, the burgomasters resolved "to make an Order, that no person shall have power to unload any goods coming from abroad, by ships, yachts or boats, from one ship into another, or even to weigh on board, or in any ship what is subject to the Beam; but to discharge the goods on the Bridge or Pier, which is built for that purpose, and to weigh at the Beam, what is subject to the Beam."—Ibid., VII: 252. The new weigh-house and pier were on the East River, at what is now Pearl and Moore Sts.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.

Cornelis Barentsen, baker, finding his emoluments "as Measurer of Grain and Lime and Similar things" insufficient for the support of his family, applies to the burgomasters for the place of "Teller of the Bricks and Tiles coming from Patria [Holland] and 1660 other places." He is appointed, provisionally, and allowed a fee

 Apr. of "four stivers [eight cents] per thousand" bricks or tiles, to be 9 paid him half each by purchaser and seller.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 250-51. On April 13, 1663, he appealed for an increase of the fees, and was allowed to charge six stivers for counting each thousand, "the skipper or the importer" paying him therefor.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 172.

12 An order is issued by Stuyvesant to Under-Schout Resolvect Waldron and the court messenger, Claes van Elslant, directing them "to warn once more the outlying settlers, each separately . . . that in accordance with the orders, formerly issued and communicated to them [see Feb. 9, 1660], they must abandon their isolated places within a given time and move into the settlements," that is, the concentrated centers.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 160.

14 By the Declaration of Breda, issued by Charles II at Breda, in The Netherlands, he promises a general pardon, religious toleration, satisfaction to the army, and the settlement of confiscated estates on their present possessors.

16 The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council: "As we are told, that Rector Curtius practices medicine there and therefore asked to have a herbarium sent to him [see Sept. 17, 1659], we have been willing to provide him with one herewith, you will hand it to him with the understanding, that it shall not cease to be property of the Company."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 462.

20 Stuyvesant writes to the general court of Massachusetts, vindicating the Dutch title to New Netherland, and of Hudson River, in reply to a letter from Secretary Rawson, of Nov. 12, 1659, in which Massachusetts claimed the Hudson River north of 42° 20'.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 209. Rawson's original draft and Stuyvesant's original reply are in Mass. Archives, II: Colonial Series, at State House, Boston.

21 Stuyvesant writes to the directors at Amsterdam: "The distressing situation of the country had compelled us, before we received your Honors' preperatory order, to draw the outlying farmers together in settlements, to be at once delivered, as far as possible, from murders of single persons, as your Honors may see from the enclosed placat No. 5, which is now [being] daily carried out."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 163. See the ordinance, Feb. 9, 1660.

" Stuyvesant and the council write to the directors at Amsterdam that, owing to the "troublesome times" occasioned by the danger of an invasion by New Englanders, the Dutch provincial government is compelled to be economical with its depleted treasury, and that the dangers of an expected invasion compel the maintaining at New Amsterdam of "more than 200 soldiers, the officers and trainees not counted."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 470.

" Stuyvesant and the council write to the directors at Amsterdam: "We wish, that what you say so clearly regarding the reduction of wampum to the value of silver or at least of beavers and your arguments for it, could be put into practice without any trouble and without diverting our trade into other channels. We believe, it cannot be done without considerable risk, for wampum is the source and the mother of the beaver trade, and for goods only, without wampum, we cannot obtain beavers from the savages. If we receive no wampum from outside—we have none in our country—, this would certainly cause a diversion of the beaver trade.

" To your further statement, that the special reduction of the wampum must be followed by another and general one, if we desire to prevent its total depreciation in consequence of superabundant importation, we must say, under correction, that we do not quite understand, what you mean by the special reduction of the wampum. The reduction affects man and man, seller and buyer, generally, who pursuant to the placat count 8 pieces for a stiver, instead of 6, unless they have agreed upon another rate by written or verbal contract. If, as we understand it, you mean by special reduction, that wampum is received at our offices at the rate of ten for a stiver, we have to say, that it is done only in consequence of a previous contract or stipulation in letting, selling or farming out some of the Company's demesne and that except to officers of the Company it is not issued to individuals for either days' wages or commodities at any other rate, than the one established by the general reduction, to wit, 8 for a stiver, unless called for by previous stipulation, when the one is calculated with the other, as the receipts and disbursements in the ledgers show. If,

as we presume and conclude from what follows, you intend to have the wampum once more reduced by a general reduction from 8 to 10, then we think that under present circumstances it would be premature, because the reduction from 6 to 8, made last year, has been such an obstacle to its overabundant importation, that wampum is somewhat scarce now. Should the importation of it increase with the beaver-trade during the summer, then we shall consider your order for the best of the Company as well as we can, and carry it out, giving you information by every chance. Before we leave this matter, we have to say, under correction, that it matters little, whether 8 or 10 pieces are counted for a stiver, because the dealer marks, holds or sells, his goods, according to the abundance of wampum and the price, he has to give for beavers. It would be desirable therefore, as we have repeatedly stated to you, that wampum and beavers, as well as tobacco, should be declared an absolute commodity or merchandise and that the importation of no other small currency, than silver, should be allowed here, which we believe can be done when beavers, tobacco and other things are brought and kept here under the Dutch market."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 470-71. See Nov. 11, 1658; Dec. 22, 1659; and Sept. 20, 1660.

27 The old burgomaster, Olloff Stevensen van Cortlaadt, exhibits to the city court his appointment by Stuyvesant and the council of the previous day as presiding burgomaster, pro tem, during the absence of the two ruling burgomasters from the city.—Rec. N. Am., III: 155; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 209.

" The name of Jacob Leisler (Leysler), of Frankfort, Germany, appears on a roll of soldiers sent to New Netherland in this year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 292; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), III: 37. This seems to be the earliest mention of him in connection with the Dutch province. For a sketch of his life and execution for treason, see May 16, 1689, to May 16, 1691, inclusive.

May Cornelis Steenwyck and others, merchants of New Amsterdam, petition Stuyvesant and the council for permission to trade along the west coast of Africa, from Cape Verde to Cape Lopez de Gon-salvo, etc., and are at once referred in the matter to the directors at Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210.

" Thomas Hall and others, farmers and proprietors north of and adjoining the Fresh Water on Manhattan Island, petition Stuyvesant and the council to allow their houses there to stand, and that other interested parties may be permitted to build near them, in order that a village can be formed. On the same day, a council order gives Wolphert Webber and Hall permission to let their houses stand, and also allows a village or hamlet to be formed near the bowery of Augustine Heerman, or near that of Director-General Stuyvesant.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210. This appears to be the earliest official act suggesting the Bowery Village.

4 The burgomasters order the court messenger not to presume "to serve any attachment on any person or property without first communicating with the Burgomaster or Officer [schout], on pain of dismissal."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 252.

" The schout requests the burgomasters "that the gate [of the fence] in the rear [of the lot] of the City Hall leading to the High Street (Hoogh-Straat [now Stone St.]) may be made, and that the Jailer be ordered not to bring any planks or other goods on [to] the lot behind the City Hall, without having the previous consent of the presiding Burgomaster and to remove what lies there." Pieter Schaaftanck, the jailer, is accordingly ordered "to notify and direct the owners of the bricks, planks or other goods" that encumber the rear lot "to have the same removed," or, failing to comply, the removal will be done by the city at the expense of the owners. He is also charged not to allow in future "any property, of what sort soever it may be," to be brought on to the lot, unless he has first obtained leave from the presiding burgomaster.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 252.

" In a court proceeding of this date, mention is made of "the square" before the house of Burgomaster Marten Cregier.—Rec. N. Am., III: 159. This was the open space before the fort on the Heere Wegh (Broadway), which later became the Bowling Green.

6 A contract is made between Stuyvesant and the council on the one part and Nicholas Varlet (or Verlet), Stuyvesant's brother-in-law, on the other part, as farmer of the duties on imports and exports from and to New England and Virginia.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210.

- 1660 Hellegood Joris, who was appointed, in 1655, as city midwife
 May of New Amsterdam, is now granted by Stuyvesant and the council 11 an annual salary of 100 guilders for her services in attending the poor.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 148, 211. On her petition to the burgomasters of the city, they allowed her provisionally, on Nov.
 3, 1662, a similar yearly salary in current money.—*Min. of Orph.

- 1-11 Parliament votes that the government of England shall be by king, lords, and commons; and accepts the king's Breda declaration. This led, on May 8 (q. v.), to the restoration of the Stuarts.
- 18 A conference is held at Fort Amsterdam by Stuyvesant, Councilor Nicasius de Sille, Burgomaster Allard Anthony, and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, former burgomaster, with Indian chiefs representing the Hackensack, Nyack, Haverstraw, and other tribes, when peace is concluded with the Wappings, and a proposed peace with the Esopus Indians is discussed.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 166-67. See May 24.
- " The provincial council issues a notice to farmers living on isolated bouweries to pull down their houses and settle in villages.—*Cal. Hist.

- 8-18 The House of the Stuarts is restored. Charles II is proclaimed King of England, Scotland, and Ireland by both houses of parliament.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 149. See, further, May 25/June 4;

- 24 An Indian conference is held in Fort Amsterdam between three chiefs of the Mohicans and Stuyvesant, at which these chiefs seek a means of peace with the Esopus Indians. Presents are interchanged. Claes de Ruyter and Jan Darech (usually spelled Dareth) act as interpreters. But on the next day, the provincial authorities concluded that "it is quite evident" from the conference that "a firm and stable peace with the Esopus savages" is not likely "unless the captured Esopus Indians," eleven at New Amsterdam and others in prison at Esopus, who are the boldest of the tribe, are either released, who would then make more causes for trouble, or put where they cannot get back, and so that the remainder of the Esopus Indians may be "forced to a solid peace by force of arms."
 It is concluded "to send the aforesaid captives to Curaçao by the first good opportunity and at the expense of the Company, to be employed there or at Bonayro with the negroes in the service of the Company," and meanwhile "to continue a defensive and offensive war against the Esopus savages."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 168-69.
- These Indian captives were ordered deported on June 29, in a ship owned by Nicolaes Varleth and Jacob Backer; and Stuyvesant, in a letter of July 5, sent by the same ship, apprised the vice-director of Curaçao what to do with them upon their arrival.
 After the conclusion of peace with the Esopus Indians, on July 15, and their continued good behaviour warranting some consideration, Stuyvesant ordered, on April 16, 1661, that two "of the better sort" of the captives be sent back; and promised that, if they behaved themselves, the others would "be released and sent back in due time."—Ibid., XIII: 178, 179, 194. See June 3, June 12, and July 15, 1660; July 15, 1662.
- 25 A provincial ordinance is passed against open trading without possession of the burgherright of New Amsterdam.—*Laws & Ord.
 N. Neth.*, 377. See March 9.
- June Prior to this, the house was finished (present site, No. 39 Broad St.) in which Harmanus van Hobooken conducted his "trivial" school.—Liber Deeds, A: 238; cf. ibid., A: 178. See also N. Y. Col. MSS., XI: 53 (Albany); Rec. N. Am., VII: 244.
 Van Hobooken removed to Stuyvesant's bouwery, to keep school there, Oct. 27, 1661 (q. v.).—N. Y. Col. MSS., IX: 869 (Albany).
 See Castello Plan, II: 291; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941, where the date 1662 is erroneously given.
- 1 The court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens reñacts the ordinance relative to attendance by its members, and fines for tardiness or absence.—Rec. N. Am., III: 162-63.
- 2 The first post-office in New Netherland is opened, at the office of the "Secretary of the Director General and Council" in New Amsterdam. For details, see Aug. 6, 1652.
- 3 Stuyvesant and Councilor De Sille meet the chiefs of the Hackensack and Haverstraw Indians in conference, at which an armistice is arranged with the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 171-72. See May 24, June 12, July 15, 1660.
- My 25th "The Restoration" in England. Charles II, having sailed from Jan. 4 Holland, lands at Dover.
- 7 It is found that the secretary or clerk of the city court has recorded "many Judgments and Decisions rendered and pronounced" by that court, "without such having been revised, as they should have been, or submitted for the signature of the President," which has resulted in instruments not being "drawn up according to the real intent and meaning" of the court. Therefore, the supreme court of director-general and council now orders the city's secretary "not to execute any extracts of any Judgments, Decisions or any other Acts of importance," unless first "revised and signed in the Register . . . by the Court or at least by the President."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 380-81.
- The burgomasters of New Amsterdam are appointed by the provincial council to assist the director-general in deciding certain cases on appeal before the council, and to which the company's fiscal is a party.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 213.
- Jacques Cortelouy, surveyor-general of New Netherland, is directed by the provincial government to survey and make a map of the lots within the city of New Amsterdam.—*Cal. Hist.
 MSS., Dutch*, 213. This plan of the city was completed by Oct.
 6 (q. v.) The Castello Plan can, almost without doubt, be identified as a copy of this survey or of a drawing made from it. See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, and pp. 209 et seq., Vol. II; as well as Chronology, Oct. 6 and Dec. 24, 1660.
- Charles II enters London. With the king, Edward Hyde, May afterward Earl of Clarendon, returns from exile. He was made 29-Lord Chancellor, and in September (q. v.) became closely connected June with the royal family by the marriage of his daughter, Anne 8 Hyde, with James, Duke of York.
- The Esopus officials request Stuyvesant to come to them "by the first opportunity, bringing along a good interpreter . . . in order then to conclude . . . a firm, inviolable and eternal peace" with the Indians. On June 21, the provincial council agreed that Stuyvesant "should go there, as soon as the ship De Trouw has sailed, in order to conclude, if possible, a peace," on terms already fixed upon.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 174. On July 5, the council appointed Marten Cregier and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, representing New Amsterdam, to assist Stuyvesant at Esopus "in any difficulty with their advice and counsel."—Ibid., XIII: 178-79. They left for Esopus on July 7 and returned to New Amsterdam on the 31st.—Ibid., XIII: 181-84. See May 24, June 3, and July 15, 1660.
- Stuyvesant and the council inform the directors at Amsterdam 25 that only 27 out of 50 horses shipped from Curaçao in the fly-boat "Eyckenboom" have arrived at New Amsterdam, the rest having died from want of good fodder, and that most of those which survive are so weak they can "neither walk nor stand;"
 they have to be "carried in carts and on sledges from the scow and the shore to the pasture." This ship also brought 19 negroes to New Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 477.
- The city's revenues for payment of ever increasing expenses
 having been found to be insufficient, the burgomasters petition Stuyvesant and the council for authority "to impose some chimney tax" as a subsidy, from which they may "derive from each chimney or fireplace" as much as the director-general and council may deem proper, the tax so imposed "to be collected every three months by the Treasurer" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 255-56.
- A provincial ordinance is passed for the regulation of shipping 2 on the North (Hudson) and South (Delaware) Rivers. It is the result of evasions of the old ordinance of March 10, 1648. Skippers are forbidden, without first obtaining a proper commission, "to resort [to] and navigate" these rivers "and the places situate between both," and passes are not to be granted to them by the fiscal unless they first exhibit a proper commission to him.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 382.
- Schout Nicasius de Sille informs the burgomasters that when he goes around "at night and at unseasonable hours to make examination," dangerous attacks are made on him by the dogs in the city, and he requests an order for preventing these attacks.—
Rec. N. Am., VII: 256.
- The burgomasters, together with Schout Nicasius de Sille, 11 resolve "to draft a Placard respecting the hooting after Indians in Pearl Street, and the cutting of the Koockies [Koock-hacken], a game still indulged in at country fairs in Holland, and consisting in trying to cut a tough piece of molasses cake in two with a hatchet in a given number of strokes] which is done by boys."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 256.

1660 An important census of the houses in New Amsterdam is prepared by Nicasiaus de Sille. For a facsimile, first printing, and interpretation of it, see C. Pls. 83-84, Vol. II, and De Sille List, II: 349-51. The original manuscript is in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1224, in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See also II: 209.

11 Andries Andriessen receives a ground-brief for a lot on the west side of William St., south of Wall St., the ground now included in the site of the Atlantic building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 392.

13 Albert Cornelissen Wantenaar receives a ground-brief for a lot on the south side of Wall St., 29 feet east of the corner of William St.; the ground is now included in the site of the National City Bank.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II and II: 324; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 406.

15 Articles of peace are concluded by Stuyvesant with the sachems of the Esopus Indians. He returned to New Amsterdam with his associates on the 31st, and on Aug. 5 made a full report to the provincial council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 179-84. See May 24, June 3, and June 12, 1660.

25 Stuyvesant having concluded peace at Esopus, on the 15th of this month (q. v.), now goes to Fort Orange (Albany) and makes a conference with the Senecas.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 184-86.

Aug. Prior to this, the Red Lion brewery was built on what is now Beaver St., the buildings Nos. 47, 49, and 51 covering its site. Isaac de Forest and Joannes Verveelen conducted the brewing business here (Liber Deeds, A: 214, New York), De Forest owning the property by a deed from Joannes de la Montagne, recorded Dec. 29, 1661.—Ibid., A: 253. The buildings were used as a brewery by Joannes and Daniel Verveelen until 1663, and by Daniel Verveelen probably until their demolition in July, 1675.—Original Book of N. Y. Deeds in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1913), Vol. 55, 56-57. See Castello Plan, II: 288-89; C. Pls. 82 and 82e, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963.

5 Pieter Tonnenman is sworn in as the first independent schout of New Amsterdam.—See summary under April 9. See also Feb. 1, 1661.

July Two of the fugitive judges of Charles I. ("regicides"), Edward 27 Whalley and William Goffe, are welcomed at Boston and concealed from officers of the crown. They were also sheltered by New Aug. Haven.—Winsor, III: 374. See also 1661.

6 The burgomasters hear that Rector Curtius of the Latin school 9 "of his own pleasure takes one beaver per quarter from each boy" instead of the stipulated tuition of six guilders. They give the schoolmaster "warning and notice, not to take any more, than what is fixed upon," on pain of losing "his Yearly Stipend" and receiving "no further allowance."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 257. See Feb. 25, 1661.

16 An "Inferior Court of Justice" is established by Stuyvesant and the council in the "newly commenced Village of Haerlem," consisting of three commissaries—Jan Pietersen, Daniel Tournear, and Peter Cresson, before whom all minor actions between man and man are to be tried; and the senior commissary is empowered to represent the schout in all criminal actions. Appeals are possible from their decisions, in actions exceeding 50 guilders, to the supreme court of director-general and council. They are also specifically commissioned to enact ordinances providing "that the arable Lands and Gardens" may "be carefully fenced, kept inclosed, and the broken fences properly repaired."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 386-87.

30 Stuyvesant offers to pay 250 guilders annually toward the support of Rev. Henricus Selyns, provided he will preach the Sunday evening sermon at Stuyvesant's bowery.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 479. On the same day, Selyns is appointed to be minister to Breuckelen and at Stuyvesant's bowery. His formal induction at Breuckelen took place on Sept. 3.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 217; Eccles. Rec., I: 479-81. In a letter to the classis of Amsterdam, on Oct. 4, he said of the bowery: "I serve on Sundays, in the evenings only, at the General's Bowery, at his expense. . . . Catechizing will not be held here [Breuckelen] before the winter; but we will begin it at the Bowery at once, either on week days, or when there is no preaching service there. . . . I preach at Breuckelen in the mornings; but at the Bowery at the end of the catechetical sermon. The Bowery is a place of relaxation and pleasure, whither people go from the Mannhattans, for the evening service. There are there forty negroes, from the region of the Negro Coast, beside the household families. There is here as yet no Consistory, but the deacons from New Amsterdam provisionally receive the alms; and at least one deacon, if not an elder, Aug. ought to be chosen here."—Eccles. Rec., I: 487-89. Stuyvesant's Bowery chapel was west of Second Ave. near 10th St., the site being now covered by St. Mark's P.E. Church.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 936.

In a controversy between Lord Baltimore and the Dutch Sept. respecting the Delaware River, the minutes taken by the deputies 6 of the West India Co., representing the "Assembly of the XIX," at Amsterdam, show on this day the following entry: "It being submitted by the Commissioners from the presiding Chamber of Amsterdam that the English nation in New England are daily usurping and appropriating considerable tracts of land in New Netherland belonging to this State and the Company, so that they have taken to themselves to within 8 @ 9 leagues of the Mannhattans, the Fresh river there situate, wherein not only the inhabitants of this State [The Netherlands] have heretofore had their Colonies and plantations, but also the Company, a trading house or fortress. . . ." The minute recites, further, Stuyvesant's agreement on a boundary line on Sept. 19, 1650 (q. v.), to prevent further usurpations; and the further attempts by the English.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 121, 325.

Parliament passes an act of general amnesty for political offenders, except regicides, and it receives the king's assent. Aug. 29

Schout Pieter Tonnenman is ordered by the burgomasters "to 6 -St. 8 direct and charge each and every one dwelling on the East River" of the city, "forthwith to build up the sheet piling before his house and lot, each for his own, and to remove the planks, timbers and other obstructions lying in the way, under the penalty provided therefor, without respect of any person be he who he may."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 257.

Schout Pieter Tonnenman is ordered by the burgomasters "to 10 go with one of the Schepens and inspect all the bakers" of the city, to find out if they weigh the bread in conformity with the assize, and to examine whether the weights they use are stamped regularly as required by ordinance; to impose a penalty upon those who are delinquent, and to take care that nobody keeps an open store in the city save those who have obtained the burgherright entitling them thereto, entering a fine of 25 guilders against violators and closing up their places of business.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 257.

James, Duke of York, the king's brother, secretly marries 3-13 Anne Hyde, daughter of Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant in regard to 20 wampum, as follows: "We will not discuss the arguments and difficulties, raised by you on account of our order [see Dec. 22, 1650] for reducing the wampum, as far as the time to carry it out is concerned, for we perceive by your prolix explanations, that you understand what we mean and therefore we need not repeat it. But about the manner itself we say again and maintain, that it is based upon good reasons, into the explanation of which we have no wish to enter now; we only recommend to you most seriously and order, that this reduction be put into practice as soon as time and circumstances are favorable, without fail."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 481. For their previous communication on the subject, see April 21, 1660.

The supreme council of New Netherland resolves to charter 11 the company's sloop to Frederick Philippe (Felixpe), late the director-general's carpenter, for a voyage to Virginia.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 218.

Schout Pieter Tonnenman appears in the city court against 21 Walewijn vander Veen, notary, for having "insulted and calumniated the Magistrates" of that court, charging that he has called them "blockheads" and "fools and simplotous." Although Vander Veen makes a general denial, the court orders him "to repair the injury, honorably and profitably; honorably, by praying with uncovered head forgiveness of God and Justice; profitably, by paying a fine," together with the costs, and, in case of refusal, to "go immediately into confinement." From this judgment Vander Veen appeals to the supreme court of director-general and council. The city court orders him to remain in his own house in confinement, and "to be kept there by a Court Messenger" until he obeys the judgment. At the same time, the city court sends an explanation of the case to the higher court, in which they aver that "the insult" is "destroying the authority and respect" of their court of law, and request "the support of the Supreme government so that similar occurrences" may be prevented.—Rec. N. Am., III: 212-14.

- 1660
Sept. 30 Jacob Jansen Huys, skipper of the Dutch galiot "Nieuw Amstel," lying before the Manhattans, writing to the commissioners for the Dutch colony on the Delaware, says: "At present the Indians keep themselves very quiet; . . . the Manhattans, is quite rich of people, and there are, at present, fully over three hundred and fifty houses, so that it begins to be a brave place, and divers brave villages are rising up which are built in good order."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 125.
- Oct. 6 Stuyvesant and the council write to the directors at Amsterdam about wampum, thus: "Whatever orders, rules and reductions may be made and carried out, they do not prevent its depreciation and further losses. The lower it is reduced, the more the trader gives for a beaver, going, as we said before, as far as 15 or 16 fl. To reduce the price of wampum to 12 or 16 for a stiver, as we reduced it from 8 to 10 in receiving it at our office, will remedy the evil only for a brief period; the trader would give the length of one hundred hands, instead of fifty and he, who receives it at so much a guilder, would lose so much more time and have so much more trouble in counting it. To declare it absolutely bullion and not receivable at 80 much a guilder, would endanger the beaver-trade and lead it into other channels; nor can it be done as long as we have no other currency here for the retail trade. On the other side we are taught by experience, that if we let it go, as at present, wampum will depreciate more and more every year, the inhabitants grow poorer and houses and lands go to ruin. We would therefore request you once more, to consider measures by which coin or some sort of currency may be brought into this country: or we have repeatedly submitted to you our plans on this subject, namely, that beavers and other furs should be reduced in price and kept under the market price in the Fatherland; all merchants, Scotchmen and traders, be warned to pay their duties for tobacco and beavers at our office here and to make the calculations accordingly."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 485. See Sept. 20.
- " Stuyvesant, in a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, informs them that the clergymen, Blom and Selyns, have been placed in conformity with the directors "and their call," and he adds: "In the meantime three or four other villages still need preachers and are deprived of religious services, namely New Utrecht and Gravesend on Long Island, New Haeleem on this [Manhattan] Island and a newly planted village of about thirty families across the North river. Necessity therefore requires, that two pious and learned candidates be sent over besides the desired English preachers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 485.
- " That the Dutch Church at Harlem had its origin in this year is indicated by a record of the expiration, on Nov. 30, 1662, of the term of office of Jan la Montagne, Jr., its first deacon, which office, in accordance with the custom of this church, he doubtless had held for two years.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1904), 177-78.
- " In a postscript to a letter written by Stuyvesant to the directors at Amsterdam, he says: "After closing our letter the Burgomasters have shown us the plan of this city [New Amsterdam], which we did not think would be ready before the sailing of this ship. In case you should be inclined to have it engraved and publish it, we thought it advisable, to send you also a small sketch of the city, drawn in perspective by Sieur Augustin Heermans three or four years ago, which perhaps you may wish to insert in a corner," i. e., as an inset, in case the directors determined to have the plan engraved. Fernow, in his translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 486, erred in his statement regarding the small sketch; the revision is due to a discovery made by Mr. A. J. F. van Laer in Oct. 1911, while reassembling the salvaged Dutch MSS. after the Capitol fire at Albany in that year. See Pl. 6, Vol. 1; June 7 and Dec. 24.
- In London, 29 persons are tried and convicted for complicity in the execution of Charles I. Of the regicides, 25 are dead, 19 in exile, 19 imprisoned for life, and 10 executed.
- 15 Acting on a petition "of the neighbours on both sides of the Prince Gracht" (Broad St., between Beaver St. and Exchange Pl.), the burgomasters order "each and every one to pave his lot before his door as far as his lot extends," and to do it "this winter so far at least that it" can "be made use of 4-foot." The vacant lot of Jochem Beekman, the burgomasters offered to make passable.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 258.
- " The burgomasters resolved, on Sept. 24, "to appoint Sworn Butchers," who should "have the killing of all cattle to be consumed within this City's jurisdiction."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 258. Asser Levy and several others now appear before them and ask to be appointed. They are at once accepted on subscribing to the following articles and oath, viz: (1) Binding themselves "to accommodate each and every me without delay" to the utmost of their power, "and bring with them their own tools necessary for slaughtering;" (2) not to kill any cattle "before and until a proper permit" has been "exhibited to them from the Pachter [farmer of the excise] for the animal to be killed," as evidence that the excise has been paid; (3) "to kill all cattle" which shall be offered for slaughtering within the city's jurisdiction; and (4) to abide by the prescribed rate for slaughtering, namely, five guilders for an ox or a cow, one dollar (daelder, =  $\frac{1}{2}$  guilders) for a hog, one guilder for a sheep, calf, or goat, and proportionately for smaller animals. To these articles they subscribe, but Levy asks "to be excused from killing hogs, as his religion" does "not allow him to do it," which is granted. Nobody, save these sworn butchers, is allowed "to kill or cause to be killed any cattle whatsoever," under penalty of a fine of 25 guilders for infractions.—Ibid., 258-60.
- " Lowerwens Andriessen receives a deed from the church-wardens for a lot now covered by parts of Nos. 35 and 37 Broadway.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 221; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 362.
- " The burgomasters agree with "Jan Jansen Hagenaar and his son Jeremias for the making of four rods of pier" as an addition "to the pier at the Weighscales" (i. e., the custom-house bridge, built on the East River, in 1659, at what is now Pearl and Moore Sts.). The contract is for 225 guilders in wampum "and a half barrel of beer in addition."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 262. The father was drowned accidentally in the East River, on Nov. 22, perhaps in connection with this work, and Jeremias, who was 22 years of age, was ordered by the burgomasters, on Jan. 7, 1661, "to proceed with the making and completing the undertaken Pier," and to get another to work with him "in the place of his dead father."—Min. of Orph. Court, I: 159, 175; Rec. N. Am., VII: 263. See also July 4, 1647; Nov. 9, 1658; April 18, and July 11 and 23, 1659; and June 6, 1697.

—Nov. 4
- " Stuyvesant goes from New Amsterdam by yacht to Esopus and Fort Orange, principally for grain for the company's use.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 189-90.
- " Charles II establishes two councils of trade for controlling the commerce of England and her plantations.—Col. State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1660, 490, 492.
- " In a letter of this date acknowledging the receipt of a map or plan of the city of New Amsterdam (Cortelyou's survey—see Oct. 6), the directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and his council: "we noticed, that according to our opinion too great spaces are, as yet without buildings, as for instance between Smece [William] Street and Princes Gracht [Broad St. above Exchange Place] or between Prince Street and Tuyn [Garden] Street, also between Heeren Street [Broadway] and Bevers Gracht [Beaver St.], where the houses apparently are surrounded by excessively large lots and gardens; perhaps with the intention of cutting streets through them, when the population increases, although if standing closer together, a defense might be easier. We leave this to your consideration and care."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 489.
- " The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant that they are considering a petition of Evert Pietersen to become schoolmaster at New Amsterdam. "We shall communicate the result to your Honour," they say, after they have enquired about "his character, conduct and abilities."—N. Y. Col. MSS., IV: 364 (Albany). Pietersen had been employed by the company previously at New Amstel, on the Delaware, where, in August, 1657, his school contained 25 children.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 17. See May 2, 1661.
- 31 The placard is renewed "against firing on New Year's day, or planting May poles on May day or making a present of any drink to any person for that purpose."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 262.

Prior to this year, three small bridges were constructed, two over the Gracht (or canal in Broad Street), and one over the Beaver Gracht, (or lesser canal in Beaver St.)—Cf. C. Pl. 82, Vol. II; Pl. 10A, Vol. I. The statement made in Vol. II, p. 213, that but two small bridges across the Gracht are shown on the Castello Plan, is erroneous, as three are clearly shown. EARLIEST EXTANT COURT RECORD OF THE VILLAGE OF NEW HAERLEM, JAN. 13, 1662. SEE P. 217.

1661 Steenwyck's bill for planks for the new bridge (see Sept. 2, 1659) is also erroneous, as this evidently refers to the pier or bridge at the foot of Moore St., then under construction.

In this year, warrants arrived in New England for the arrest of the "regicides," Edward Whalley, William Goffe, and John Dixwell—who came to New England (see July 27, 1660) and effectually concealed themselves. Whalley and Goffe died at Hadley, Mass., about 1678 and 1679, and Dixwell at New Haven in 1689.—Stiles, Hist. of the Three Judges of King Chas. I (Hartford, 1794).

In this year, Jacob Steendam, the first poet of New Netherland, published at Amsterdam his little quarto volume entitled: 't Lof van Nieu-Nederland (The Praise of New Netherland), which he dedicated to Cornelis van Ruyven, a councillor and secretary in New Netherland. We quote some portions from Henry C. Murphy's interesting Anthology of New Netherland, 45-67. Steendam is rapturous in his praise, as follows (translated):

New Netherland, thou noblest spot of earth,
Where bounteous Heaven ever poureth forth
The fulness of His gifts, of greatest worth, Mankind to nourish.

O fruitful Land! heaped up with blessings kind,
Whoe'er your several virtues brings to mind,—
Its proper value to each gift assigned,
Will soon discover,

Air, water, soil, of greatest purity;
And all, combined in sweetest harmony,
Unite, the ploughed up land to fructify,
With strength uniting.

You seem the masterpiece of nature's hand;
Whatever does with breath of life expand,
Or comes from out the sea, or thives on land,
On you conferring.

It is the land where milk and honey flow;
Where plants distilling perfume grow;
Where Aaron's rod with budding blossoms blow;
A very Eden.

Oh happy land! while envy you invite,
You soar far over all you thus excite;
And conquer whom by chance you meet in fight;
May God protect and

Defend and save you; peace and comfort give;
All strife and discord from your borders drive;
So Netherland your happiness receive
With joy and pleasure.

In this year, a half-moon of stone was built before the "Stadt Huys" (south side of Pearl St., east of Coenties Alley), mounting three small brass guns. Compare "Description of the Towne of Mannadens, 1661" (see Sept., 1661), wherein this fortification is mentioned, with the Castello Plan of 1660 (C. Pl. 32, Vol. II), wherein no half-moon is shown.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

In this year Cornelis Jansen Plyuyver was mentioned as a tavern-keeper, at the present Broadway and Rector St. See subsequently used as the first Lutheran Church in New York. See Castello Plan, II: 225.

Notice is given that the burgomasters of New Amsterdam intend "to establish again a Rattle Watch," and those who want places are requested to make the fact known to them without delay. On the 10th, Lodowyck Pos, who had been captain of the rattle watch in 1658, asked to be again appointed, but was informed "that complaints were lodged heretofore against him." He returned, however, and was accepted by the burgomasters on a salary of ten guilders per month, on condition that if a fire broke out he would "repair thereto and attend to it," as well as see that his men came on duty in their turns. Eight men were named on the 10th as watchmen, a few of whom had served under Pos in 1658. The oath of fidelity was the same as that of Oct. 12, 1658, yet with some amplifications with respect to going at once to fires, and they were required to give fourteen days' previous notice if members wished to leave the service.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 263, 264, 265. See also Oct. 4, 1658; and Jan. 14, 1661.

The fire-wardens are ordered by the burgomasters "to go around on the earliest opportunity and inspect all the fireplaces and chimneys" in the city, to see if they are clean, and so ordered that conflagration from "large collections of soot" may be averted.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 263. The fire-wardens were Hendrick Kip, Sr., and Jan Jansen de Jongh. One vacancy existed through the removal of Joannes de la Montagne, Jr., to New Haarlem. On the 10th, the burgomasters nominated Burger Jorissen and Evert Duyckinck as candidates, and, on the 20th, Duyckinck was elected and confirmed to this office by Stuyvesant and the council, receiving his commission on the 24th.—Ibid., VII: 264, 266. The burgomasters, on the following day, renewed their order about inspection, to be begun in three days, and on the 28th communicated the same to the three fire-wardens.—Ibid., VIII: 266.

A Quaker, named George Wilson, had been active in holding conventicles at the house of Henry Townsend, of Jamaica, L. I., and other Quaker meetings were held at Gravesend. This was a violation of the provincial ordinance against conventicles, of Feb. 1, 1656 (q. v.). Persons who were involved were arrested, fined, or banished. Stuyvesant also sent half a dozen soldiers to Rustdorp (Jamaica) to restore quiet and prevent Quaker activity. When, a few weeks afterward, the people asked to be relieved from quartering these soldiers, Stuyvesant ordered them to be supported by the persons in Jamaica who had Quaker sympathies. He also deposed some of the magistrates there who had winked at the conventicles.—From "Council Minutes" in N. Y. Col Docs., XIV: 489-93.

Solomon la Chair petitions the supreme court for admission as a notary public; and the court orders first his examination as to fitness. On the 20th, he received the appointment and took the oath.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 220. Jan. 13

Lodowyck Pos, captain of the rattle watch (see Jan. 7), appears in court with Jan Jellisen Koeck, collector of the watch tax, and delivers to the burgomasters "a list of all the inhabitants" of the city. The question arises whether the servants of the West India Co. should be exempt from the watch tax; this is decided in the negative. Pos informs the court that he has made out a list, showing to what streets and corners the watch should go and call out the hours in the night.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 265. On Feb. 25, Koeck produced in court a list of persons who had paid the tax and those who were unwilling. At the same time, the burgomasters exempted the members of the rattle watch "from the payment on condition" that they would also call the hours "outside of the gates, the Landgate [at Wall St. and Broadway] as well as the Watergate [Wall and Pearl Sts.], for which the people living there" were "to pay to support the Rattlewatch."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 76-77. 14

The burgomasters resolve to ask Stuyvesant and the council "whether their Honors" have "exempted the Company's servants from the Burgher excise both of beer and wine as well as the slaughter tax," some being "unwilling to pay."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 265.

Rector Curtius of the Latin school claims exemption from payment of the excise on the ground that "Professors, Preachers and Rectors are exempt from the excise in Holland," and that "the Director General has granted him free excise." The court of burgomasters and schepens decide that "the D<sup>e</sup> [Domine] Rector shall pay the excise."—Rec. N. Am., III: 253. 25

The city court decided, on Jan. 18, to petition the provincial government "relative to the Scotsmen [pedlars] travelling thro' and fro," that, if absent four months from New Amsterdam, they should forfeit their burgherright and be obliged, upon their return, to remain a period of a year and six weeks before being again eligible for a renewal.—Rec. N. Am., III: 250. This petition was drafted by the burgomasters on the 24th (ibid., VII: 266), and resulted in an order from Stuyvesant and the council, on the 31st, which directed the forfeiture of the burgherright by persons who, being absent from the city, did not keep fire and light there for a consecutive period of four months.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 221. 31

The city court made this order known to the people on Feb. 25. Absentees were required by it to purchase anew their burgherright upon their return. It carried with it also the prohibitions against trading to Fort Orange and other parts of the province, conformably to the ordinance of May 25, 1660 (see under March 9, 1660), but so far modified it as to allow that trade on payment to the city of New Amsterdam "of twenty guilders in beavers, or the real value

- 1661 thereof, over and above their Burgher-Right."—Rec. N. Am., I: 45-46; III: 270-71.
- Feb. 1 Pieter Tonneman was sworn in as schout of New Amsterdam, on Aug. 5, 1660, and, by his instructions from the directors at Amsterdam, of April 9 of that year (q. v.), was specifically designated to preside over the court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens; but the instructions did not make it clear whether he was entitled to vote (see April 9, 1660). A controversy now arises on these points. Stuyvesant sits with the city court "to assist at the nomination of the succeeding Burgomasters and Schepens." Tonneman arises and asks if any one of the magistrates has any objection to his participation in making the nominations. By vote they decide against it, inasmuch as it manifestly conflicts "with the Instruction of the Schout and the laws and customs of the City of Amsterdam in Europa." Stuyvesant interposes at this point, and decides that the schout shall have a vote, "assuring them" that the matter would be "so concluded" by him and the council. But the burgomasters and schepens request a postponement of the nominations until an "Acte" thereon be given them. After some debate, the meeting adjourned until the afternoon. Upon reassembling, the schout delivered the "Acte," which declared "that the Schout must preside in the Court of Burgomasters and Schepens and consequently have opinion and vote in the annual nomination . . . and all other matters, wherein he is not a party." The court declared the document "contrary to the Instruction," and, as Tonneman had not brought his instructions with him, said the burgomasters were "deprived of their authority." Then Stuyvesant read the schout's instructions, and said he understood the "first rank remaining to the schout"
 to mean "the presidency;" whereupon the presiding burgomaster remarked that the instructions of the fiscal also directed that he should preside in court, but that the presidency had, none the less, always remained hitherto with the burgomasters, of which they were "now deprived." Stuyvesant replied "that such was conveyed at by the Director General and Council;" however, he was content, for the present, that the schout should "desist from the presidency granted to him inferentially today," until a decision was given on the "Acte" by the directors. The presiding burgomaster then announced that the board concluded that the schout should cooperate with them in the nomination "for the present time and desist from any further" voting, unless authorized thereto by the directors. Stuyvesant and Tonneman assented and the nominations proceeded. A new board was elected. The names were published to the commonalty, on Feb. 2, "after the usual ringing of the bell three times."—Rec. N. Am., III: 257-61.
- 8 The court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens renews the ordinance relative to attendance of its own members upon the business of "Ordinary, Extraordinary and other Meetings" of the court, and fixes upon the fines for absences.—Rec. N. Am., III: 265.
- " Pieter Tonneman, the city schout, appears against Rachel van Tienhoven in the city court, saying he has "twice subjected her to a fine for having neglected, after divers notices, to erect her sheep-pen and to fill the same in with earth." She replies that she cannot do her part before her neighbors, for example, Isaac de Forest and Tonneman himself, have "arranged their portion;"
 whereupon the court orders the schout to look after those who are "bound to erect their sheep-pen first."—Rec. N. Am., III: 261.
 This relates to the shoring on the East River (now Pearl St. between Whitehall and Broad Sts.).
- 11 Oloff Stevensen van Corlandt, retiring treasurer of the city, hands in his account-books and other papers to the burgomasters, who turn them over to Marten Cregier, his successor in that office for the new administrative year.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 75.
- 17 The provincial council issues an order for summoning those who have neglected to repair their fences at Corlaer's Hook.—*Cal.
 Hist. MSS.*, Dutch, 221.
- 18 At the request of the church-wardens of the city, the burgomasters direct Secretary Joannes Nevius "to issue two orders, one for Claes van Elslandt the elder, the other for Jan Gillisen Koek, about ringing of the bell and burying the dead."—*Min. of Orph.
 Court*, II: 75-76. On the 25th, an order was handed to Koek, authorizing him "to take care, that the bell be tolled for the dead at the proper time, also to preserve the pall, collect the hire thereof for the church as well as the fee for ringing the bell, the rent for the straps, benches and boards; to keep a record of all, who have died and are buried, without concerning himself with anything else in this regard."—Ibid., II: 77-78. At the same time, the younger Van Elslandt was requested to bring his father before the burgomasters, but he reported that his father was engaged with public business.
 They issued an order, however, directing the father "to take care only of the graves of the dead, dug in the church and in the church yard; to look after the bier being fetched and brought back to the proper place; to invite, according to old custom, everybody to the funeral, walk decently before the corpse and to demand and receive pay only for his services, without asking for more."—Ibid., II: 77, 81. The elder Van Elslandt appeared before the burgomasters, on March 4, when they told him that complaints had been lodged against him for not behaving well
 "as a gravedigger and when inviting people to a burial;" yet,
 "because of his age and long residence," they merely warned him
 "to behave better henceforth."—Ibid., II: 80-81.
- 25 Rector Curtius of the Latin school appears before the burgomasters, who again charge him with taking from his pupils "one heaver each quarter," contrary to orders (see Aug. 9, 1660). It is charged also "that he does not keep strict discipline over the boys in his school, who fight among themselves and tear the clothes from each others bodies, which he should prevent or punish. He answers about the taking beavers, that at the beginning of school the parents of his pupils came to him, urging him to teach the children well, which he promised to do and has done more than usual, but he must therefore also have more than was allowed him, for which they have promised him one heaver; concerning the discipline he says, his hands are bound, as some people do not wish to have their children punished and he requests, that the Burgomasters would make a rule or law for the school; it is also necessary, that his school [house] should be enlarged."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 76.
 See July 21, 1661.
- " The burgomasters, "having received the remonstrance of the Churchmasters [wardens] concerning the pews in the church and the vacant seats in them," order "that the vacant seats in the pews" be "rented out or sold for the benefit of the Church."—*Min. of Orph.
 Court*, II: 78.
- Mar. 3 From nominations made by the burgomasters, on Feb. 25, Stuyvesant and the council now reappoint Nicaius de Sille as church-warden, and elect Marten Cregier and Cornelis Steenwyck as orphan-masters, and Hendrick Willemssen and Claes Gangelofsen Visser as fire-wardens.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 78-80, 82-84, 89.
- " Hans Vos is appointed by Stuyvesant and the council as deputy schout of New Amsterdam, to assist Pieter Tonneman, the actual schout.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 222.
- " A request is made by a miller for the right to use the water of the Kolck with which to operate a mill. O'Callaghan, who made a special study of the mills of New Amsterdam and its environs, placed the location of this mill at the outlet of the Kolck or Fresh Water, 50 feet from Potbakker's Hill, now City Hall Place.—*Cal.
 Hist. MSS.*, Dutch, 222; La Chair's Register, in Hol. Soc. Year Book (1900), 146; Rec. N. Am., IV: 2. On the ownership of the mill, as shown in a partnership court case, see Rec. N. Am., IV:
 2-3, 5.
- 4 Allard (or Aldert) Coninck asks the burgomasters to excuse him "from purchasing his small Burgherright, because at the time of the great war [1653] he with others . . . helped to work on the wall," but his request is denied.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 80.
- 10 Stuyvesant and the council direct the burgomasters to deliver to the provincial secretary "in due shape the City's accounts of receipts and expenditures" for the year 1660, "and to do so henceforth every year" on Feb. 1, the day before the personnel of the board is changed, in conformity with the system "in the praiseworthy government" of old Amsterdam.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86-87.
- 11 Metje Greveraet being asked by the burgomasters why she does not pay "her money for the Rattle walk [night patrol] and for her Burgherright," answers that she cannot, because she does not "earn as much as a man."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 85.
- " The wife of Eghbert van Borsum is told by the burgomasters that she still owes excise fees for the year 1654. She says she "always paid when the collector came."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86.
- " Abraham de la Noy is told by the burgomasters that he still owes the city excise fees for the year 1654, which he disprives by his account-book.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86. Evidently this refers to his connection, as lessee, of the "Stadts Herbergh" or city

- 1661 tavern from Jan. 24, 1652 (g.v.) to the time in May, 1654 (g.v.), when the city occupied it as a town hall. He bought a house on Mar. 11 Sept. 1, 1659, the site of which is now in the rear of the building at No. 88 Stone St.—Innes, New Am. and Its People, 178 et seq.
- " Daniel Litschoeg, tavern-keeper, is told by the burgomasters that the books of the former secretary of the city, Jacob Kip, show he still owes the city for excise fees for the year 1654, but he produces a receipt as evidence that he paid in that year.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86. See Oct. 27, 1654.
- " Maria Polet is told by the burgomasters that she still owes excise fees for the year 1654, but she declares she paid all to Jacob Kip, then secretary of the city.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86. This 1654 reference is to excise fees for the first Wooden Horse tavern, which she conducted as the widow of Philip Geraerdy, on a site now part of the Produce Exchange. On Nov. 5, 1656, she was married to Matthous de Vos, notary, and from 1657 resumed the Wooden Horse tavern on the adjoining lot (now No. 8 Stone St.). See Castello Plan II: 250, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 98r.
- 18 When a refusal to pay the rattle watch tax is premised upon the fact that no watchman comes out as far as the house of the person who refuses to pay, the captain of the watch replies, "that according to his orders," the watchmen are "not to go farther than the Maagde Paatje," the present Maiden Lane; but he is told that this order refers "to bad weather," and that at other times they are "to go as far as Tomas Hal's," which is farther north, at about the present Beekman St.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 88-89.
- " Albert Pietersen, the bugler, asks the burgomasters to exempt him from paying the tax for his burgherright, because he is "an old Burgher," and they agree "to wink at it," and so inform the city's treasurer.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 88.
- 21 The petition by Emanuel Petersen and Dorothy Angola, his wife, both free negroes, prays that a certificate of freedom may be granted for a lad named Anthony Angola, whom they adopted when an infant and have since educated and reared. Petition granted.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 222. This is the earliest record of an adoption among the free negroes.
- 25 The city court establishes a new bread assize for the city, and orders each baker "to mark his baked bread with a particular mark," on pain of "forfeiture of the bread" found unmarked and subjection to a fine of 25 guilders besides for dereliction; also, to bring to the office of the secretary of the city, within three days' time, the stamp with which he intends to mark his bread, so that it may be registered. The marks of seven bakers were registered as the result of this order.—Rec. N. Am., I: 46; III: 285. See also Oct. 21.
- Apr. Previous ordinances regulating the fees of the weigh-house are reëdicted with a few modifications.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 391-94. See Aug. 10, 1654.
- " Jacob Kip receives a ground-brief for a lot including parts of the present Nos. 38 and 40 Broad St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 245; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 374.
- 3+13 The English East India Company is chartered with a capital of £30,000.—Annals of E. I. Co., I: 556-58.
- 15 The burgomasters contract with Jonas Bartelsen "for cases in the Council-chamber [of the city hall], to place thereto the city's papers, books, etc.," for work on which he is to be paid four florins per day.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 89-90.
- " Adriaen van Laer receives a ground-brief for a lot on the south side of Wall St., just west of William St., now included in the site of the Atlantic building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 392.
- 20 Abraham Pietersen sells his mill to Jan Cornelissen van Hoorn for 1700 guilders "good current wampum."—La Chair's Register, in Holland Soc. Year Book (1900).
- 26 Stuyvesant "and retinue" go to the Espous "in the galiot New-Amstel." They returned "on the 6th of May, after having ended the settlement and allotted and distributed parcels of land to different parties." Espous is "now called Wiltwyck."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 195-96.
- 28 The burgomasters issue an ordinance to the skippers in port, requiring them to pay to the city's treasurer, for accommodations in discharging their cargo "at the landing place," eight stivers per last, and "less goods and wares pro rata," of which two-thirds are to be charged against the skippers' freighters.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 90. The "landing place" is the bridge or pier on the East River (now Pearl St.).
- Marten Cregier, the city treasurer, is directed by the burgomasters not to accept the burgherright tax from anyone except those who have obtained their burgherrights from them.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 90.
- The directors of the West India Co. inform Stuyvesant: "Upon the good report which we have received about the person of Evert Pietersen, and confiding in his abilities and experience . . . his pious character and virtues, [we] have, on your Honor's recommendation, and that of the magistrats of the city of New Amsterdam, appointed the aforesaid person as Consoler of the sick, Chorister and Schoolmaster at New Amsterdam in New Netherlands, which charge he shall fulfil there, and conduct himself in these with all diligence and faithfulness; . . . wherefore, we command all persons, without distinction, to acknowledge the aforesaid Evert Pietersen as Consoler, Clerk, Chorister and Schoolmaster, . . . and not to molest, disturb or ridicule him in any of these offices, but rather to offer him every assistance in their power, and deliver him from every painful sensation, by which the will of the Lord and our good intentions shall be accomplished."—Eccles. Rec., I: 502-3. A later communication (see May 9) fixed his salary.
- Charles II is crowned in London. See also May 8, 25, and 29, 1660.
- In a record of this date, the new weigh-house and pier, at what is now Pearl and Moore Sts., are mentioned in connection with some goods carried "on the bridge or at the landing place" to the weigh-house.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 91.
- Claes van Elslandt, Jr., court messenger of the city, is ordered by the burgomasters to forbid all skippers who sail from New Amsterdam to Fort Orange (Albany), or elsewhere, "to take along any passenger" who has arrived lately by a ship from Holland, or any of the goods brought by a passenger, unless he can "show a written consent" of the burgomasters or city treasurer; a penalty of 150 florins is fixed for infractions.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 92.
- The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant and the council that the terms on which they have engaged Evert Pietersen, the schoolmaster (see May 2), are 36 guilders per month plus 125 guilders annually "for his board," and that he "is now embarked in the ship the Gilded Beaver." A supply of books and stationery is being sent with him, which is not to be placed "at his disposal at once, but from time to time, when he may be in want of these, when his account ought directly to be charged with its amount."—N. Y. Col. MSS., IV: 373 (Albany). For a discussion of Pietersen's salary during his entire period of service, see Kilpatrick, op. cit. 67 and footnote. Pietersen had begun his work prior to Aug. 1 (g.v.).
- Peter Andriessen, chimney-sweep, receives a ground-brief for a house and garden on the south side of Wall St., between William and Hanover Sts., the ground being now covered by the building of the National City Bank.—See Castello Plan C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 325; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 406.
- Abraham van Nas is commissioned by the provincial council as a public officer.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 224. About this time he had the "papers and documents relative to the residuary estate of Isaac Alertom the Elder."—Rec. N. Am., III: 288.
- Richard Bullock, a prisoner in the city hall jail, escapes. Hans Vos, recently appointed deputy schout, who had "his residence in the prison room," was confined "on bread and water" by the court for allowing the prisoner to escape; whilst Pieter Schaafbaeck, the city jailer, was "reprimanded for not having fastened the doors of the prison better." The jailer pleaded, in extenuation, that he could not attend to the prisoners in confinement because Vos resided in the prison room.—Rec. N. Am., III: 306. Vos having petitioned the city court for his "discharge from prison," alleging his innocence, was, on the 24th, "reprimanded for his drunkenness and excused for this time," and Schaafbaeck "was told that according to his office" of jailer "he must take charge of the prison, keeping the prisoners confined," and since he had failed to do so in the case of Bullock, he was bound to make good the loss.—Ibid., III: 313.
- Cornelis Melyn is asked by the council of New Netherland if he has "in his care any records or documents" concerning Staten Island. He hands over various petitions, land papers, etc., derived from the years 1640-2, of which a list is made, and he says "he has no others concerning the aforesaid island."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 200-1.

- 1661 Bartholomeus van Schel and other masons who have been engaged in building the walls of the fort of stone are discharged from the public service. Evidently, this work, which had been in progress for the last three years, was now completed.—See summary under Dec. 19, 1656.
- 13=23 Parliament votes that every member shall receive the sacrament according to the forms of the Anglican Church. On May 22, the "Solemn League and Covenant" was burned by the common hangman. On Dec. 13, Episcopacy was restored in Scotland, when three bishops were consecrated there by the Bishop of London.
- June 13 Johan de Decker petitions the supreme court of director-general and council, appealing from a judgment pronounced against him by the city court of New Amsterdam, alleging that because he is a member of the higher court he is not amenable to a court of inferior jurisdiction.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 225; cf. also Rec. N. Am., III: 308. The case was taken up by the supreme court.
- 23 The fiscal complains to the provincial council that the merchants are making false entries of their goods, and requests that provision be made to stop the frauds.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 225. On the same day, therefore, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance to prevent false entries being made at the customhouse, by demanding of "all Merchants, Factors and Traders not to ship off or send away any Peltries, either in case or package, unless the same" are "first brought into the Hon<sup>ble</sup> Company's store, and there inspected and appraised," as well as "marked with the Company's mark." Hides and tobacco are to be dealt with similarly, "and shipped off only from the Pier [present Pearl and Moore St.], and from no other place."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 401-2.
- 25 In the city court, a female defendant is threatened with punishment on the rack in order to elicit true testimony from her.—Rec. N. Am., III: 327. Another evidence of the rack is found in ibid., III: 300.
- 27 The provincial council issues an order requiring the tavern-keepers of New Amsterdam to acknowledge and respect the fiscal and his deputy in their respective offices.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226.
- " Hendrick Assueros, tavern-keeper of New Amsterdam, is fined by the provincial council for having sold liquor to sundry persons and permitted them to play at ninepins during divine service.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226. He lived on Hoogh (Stone) St. in 1665.
- July 1 Pieterje Jans, widow of Claes Jansen Ruyter, is charged in the city court by Schout Tonnenman with having an unstamped beer measure on her premises, contrary to law. She alleges it is the property of Willem Bogardus, therefore she has not the right to have it stamped, and that she has no other measure, having "heretofore sold by her cup." She is fined to guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 81.
- 4 The council refuses to grant the request of Jan de la Mootagne, Jr., and others, proprietors of the plantation called "Vredendaal" (Vale of Peace), near the newly erected village of New Harlem, to settle a hamlet of some families on the point of the flatland, near where a water-mill is about to be erected.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226. There are no records showing that the projected mill was built.
- 8 The members of the rattle-watch (or night patrol) are ordered by the burgomasters not to call before daybreak: "Rise up from bed etc." They ask for light and are promised two pounds of candles.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 93. See Oct. 7, 1661.
- " Sybrant Jansen (also called Galma) and Tomas Lambertsen, carpenters, are requested by the burgomasters to make "the pew of Burgomasters and Schepens" larger, for which purpose they are to fetch "the wainscot from Mr. [Nicasius] de Sille and the City paying for it."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 93.
- " Joost Goderis (or Goderus) is appointed foreman of the porters at the weigh-house of New Amsterdam by their own vote.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 93. He had been appointed weighmaster on April 26, 1657.
- " The burgomasters remind Stuyvesant and the council of their order to them, on Dec. 15, 1657, "to collect from each chimney for the purchase and maintenance of fire buckets and ladders one florin," but as there are in the city "many poor inhabitants" who have "only one small chimney," yet pay "as much for taxes as well-to-do persons" who have "two to three fire places for one chimney," they think it unfair, and ask the provincial authorities to "put such a tax on each fire place" as they deem fit. To this Stuyvesant and the council assented on July 15, by making the rate one florin annually for each fireplace.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 93-94.
- This settled, the burgomasters on the same day ordered Schout Tonnenman, Secretary Nevius, and Court Messengers Claes van Elsdand, Jr. and Jan Gillissen Koeck "to visit all the houses" in the city and to "examine the fireplaces in them, making a complete list of them," including the flues, and to make also "a note of all wooden or plastered chimneys." Then, on the 27th, the treasurer was instructed to send Koeck on Aug. 1 to collect one florin "for each fireplace . . . according to the test thereof;" and on Aug. 5, he was again ordered to send Koeck "to collect the outstanding dues for each fireplace," accompanied by the schout who was to assist him "in cases of refusal, first warning the recusants to guard against loss and then levying the dues by distraint, charging for the visit 3 fl."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 94, 96, 102. For early history of this tax, see Dec. 15, 1657.
- 12 Rector Curtius of the Latin school writes to inquire if the burgomasters and schepens will contribute to him 600 guilders a year (they had been giving him 200—see July 4, 1659) in beavers on condition of his receiving no contribution from the youth. He was referred to the director-general and council for an answer.—Rec. N. Am., III: 344. Prof. Kilpatrick computes that the rector's annual income from the salary paid him by company and city together, plus the tuition from pupils, may have reached 1,250 guilders, "considerably more than the elementary master received" (see May 9), showing that "the rector of a Latin school was on a distinctly higher plane, much more nearly equal to the position of the clergyman."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 103. Curtius was informed a few days later (see July 21) that he was dismissed.
- 15 A city ordinance concerning bakers is issued by the burgomasters, requiring them, after Aug. 1, to obtain a license to bake, to be renewed every three months, and for which they are "to pay each time" one pound Flemish ($2.40).—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 95. On Sept. 23, the bakers petitioned the burgomasters for relief from these rules and fees, but the petition was, on the 26th, referred to the provincial authorities, who had been responsible for the issue of the original order.—Ibid., II: 108.
- " Lodowijk Pos, captain of the rattle-watch, is reprimanded by the burgomasters for being "at night at the house of the Blue Dove," a tavern, where he engaged in quarrelling, even "allowing his sword to be taken from him." They charge him to look after his command, "inspect their attention to duty and appearance and then go to bed, rise again now and then at midnight," to see if his men do their duty.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 95-96. This is the only mention of the name of the Blue Dove tavern in the records. It stood at what are now Nos. 10 and 12 Pearl St. The tavern-keeper was Claes Jansen, from Naerden, who was also known as De Ruyter. See Castello Plan, II: 281; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977.
- 21 A letter from Stuyvesant and his council to the directors at Amsterdam says: "The English and French colonies are continued and populated by their own nation and countrymen and consequently bound together more firmly and united, while your Honors' colonies in New-Netherland are only gradually and slowly peopled by the scrapings of all sorts of nationalities (few excepted), who consequently have the least interest in the welfare and maintenance of the commonwealth."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 205.
- " Stuyvesant addresses the directors at Amsterdam in regard to wampum, as follows: "We are not less, than formerly, troubled in regard to your order about the reduction of wampum, for our daily experience convinces us more and more of how little use the former reduction from 6 to 8 [white beads] has been. We have already told you, that in the trade wampum is handled by the handful or length of string and that there is so much underselling going on, that no redress by reduction is possible. A beaver, bartered formerly for 6, 7, at the highest for 8 guilders in wampum at the rate of 6 for a stiver, is now bought and sold for 18 to 20 guilders, wampum rating at 8 for a stiver. If we were to go on reducing wampum at this rate, we would at once drive away all our trade, which is already suffering; for this and other reasons we dare not carry out at present the reduction, though repeatedly ordered by you."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 503-4. See April 21, Sept. 20, and Oct. 6, 1660.

1661 Curtius, the master of the Latin school, has been dismissed by July the directors of the West India Co., to whom Stuyvesant writes 21 as follows: "What Alexander Carolus Curtius, the Rector or Latin schoolmaster, dismissed by your Honors, has remonstrated and requested of us on his departure, your Honors can deduce from his annexed petition."—N. Y. Col. MSS., XIV: 30 (Albany); Pratt, Annals of Public Education in N. Y., 27. Curtius's petition appears not to have survived. He had been master of the Latin school for about two years (see July 4, 1659). For the reopening of the school under Aegidius Luycx, see May, 1662.

27 Joost Goderis (or Goderus), as foreman of the porters at the weigh-house, is ordered by the burgomasters to deliver to the secretary of the city within 24 hours a statement of what the porters exact "for carrying wares, goods, beer and wine from one place to another."—Min. of Orph. Court, 96-97. See Aug. 1.

29 Joris Rapalje, who requested on the 27th the post of harbourmaster, is granted the appointment by the burgomasters.—*Min.
 of Orph. Court*, II: 97.

Aug. 1 Nicolas Varlet (or Varlett), as collector of export duties, petitions the provincial council for aid in defraying the expense of a revenue cutter.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 227. On the same day, the council confiscates, for the use of the revenue cutter, a cargo of furs seized on board one Humphrey's sloop, near Tallman's island.—Ibid., 227. On Oct. 20, the council allowed Varlet compensation for supplies used on board the revenue cutter.—Ibid., 230.
 Regarding his family, see Nar. N. Neth., II: 326n.

" The presiding burgomaster reports "that at the request of the Burgomasters and on the recommendation" of Stuyvesant to the directors at Amsterdam, "Master Evert Pietersen is seat here [New Amsterdam] as schoolmaster, preceptor and comforter of the sick by the Directors . . . and he absolutely requires a proper dwelling and schoolhouse," which Stuyvesant requested the burgomasters to take under consideration. They forthwith resolve: "As soon as Master Evert Pietersen has been appointed schoolmaster etc. by the Director General and Council and the Burgomasters have been notified of it, they will dispose of the matter and for this purpose ask for the lot behind the house of the Fiscal to build a schoolhouse."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 97.
 They made a request for the lot on Aug. 5 (ibid., II: 103), but no action on the matter appears of record. See Feb. 2, 1662.

" The burgomasters give provisional instructions to the porters of the weigh-house and the beer carriers, requiring them "to report every morning at 6 o'clock before the Company's Warehouse or Scales and remain there until 12 noon, coming back at 1 o'clock to remain until sunset." They are not to handle wine or beer, taking it from one place to another, "without demanding and receiving the proper excise or transfer ticket"; they are to "furnish their own tools for handling wine and beer"; while on duty "not drink to excess," under penalty of losing their wages and paying besides a fine into the "common fund" of the porters; if damage occurs through their drunkenness, they are liable for the damage and subject to a fine; Joost Goderis (or Goderus), chosen by the burgomasters as foreman of the porters, is to be obeyed, and he is "to remain at the Scales or the Company's Warehouse" during the set hours, not leaving, so that the merchants may be served conveniently; the porters are required to keep at work continually from job to job, reporting each time upon their return to their foreman, who is obliged to keep a record thereof "for the information and convenience of the merchants;" also of the amount of beer they carry. As soon as a porter receives "the receipt of an excise ticket" he is "immediately" to "tear and preserve it," and, if lost, suffer a fine "for the common fund." When their work is done, they are to "immediately deliver the excise ticket to the foreman," who is to retain all of them "until the evening and then return them to the farmers of the excise or at the latest next morning before 9 o'clock," or be subject to a penalty for dereliction. Inattention is punished by a fine; so is tardiness and insolence to merchants or burghers. The porters are not to take more for their work than the wages that are prescribed by the burgomasters; if they do, they are to lose their places. When the fire bell is rung they are to be at hand and give aid, or, failing in this, to lose their places. When a porter falls sick, he is paid out of the common fund six florins weekly. Sunday work is prohibited.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 98-101. On Aug. 5, the burgomasters established tabulated rates of charges by the porters or labourers at the weigh-house, to be paid at the company's warehouse.—Ibid., II: 102-3.

The brewery of Jan Jansen de Jongh is mentioned in a record Aug. 5 of this date.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 103.

Hedrick Hendricksen Ohe informs the burgomasters that he was "engaged as City drummer" in June of this year. They tell him "that one drummer should not have more pay than the other," and that each drummer is allowed 50 florins. He replies he will "not engage for that and [would] rather serve without pay," yet asks for his discharge. He is notified to think it over for a couple of days.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 104. Being asked again, on the 8th, what he had concluded in the matter, he said he was still "of the same mind," and thereupon the burgomasters gave him his discharge "from his duties as drummer."—Ibid., II: 105.
 But on Sept. 16 they ordered him "to beat the drum at the coming fair and when the train band marches up under the orange flag," for which he should receive just compensation.—Ibid., II: 107.
 Steven Geneve (or Genuo), a brazier, was asked by the burgomasters, on Aug. 6, if he would "enter the City's service as drummer."
 He was willing, but demanded 250 florins a year; yet the city offered him only fifty, the sum paid to others.—Ibid., II: 104.

An extraordinary court of the schout, burgomasters, and schepens is held at the city hall, but in the absence of some of the bench the transaction of business is postponed. One of the things involved is a hearth or chimney tax for the city. Such a tax, of one guilden per annum on each chimney in New Amsterdam, had been established by Stuyvesant and the provincial council on Dec. 15, 1657 (q. v.). The city court met again on Sept. 10, 1661, with Stuyvesant present. A difference existed between the burgomasters and schepens as to authority for the imposition of new taxes. Stuyvesant told them he regretted to see this misunderstanding, and said that if new taxes were to be imposed "it must be by and with advice of the Schepens." The two burgomasters demanded of him "a separate instruction besides the instruction of Burgomasters and Schepens," but he said he could not give it, either alone or with his council. Then Schepen Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven asked him if the burgomasters could "impose any new tax without the knowledge of the Schepens" to which Stuyvesant made answer: "Yes, as regards the imposition of the Hearth Money; and that the Instruction regards new imposts, and that this is old."—Laus & Ord. N. Neth., 323; Rec. N. Am., I: 355
 III: 351-52; cf. also Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226.

The so-called "Duke's Plan," reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 10, and pp. 207-10, belonging to the King's Collection of maps, plans, views, etc., and preserved in the British Museum, bears the inscription "A Description of the Towne of Mannados of New Amsterdam as it was in Sept: 1661," and also the date 1664.
 The plan, which shows the city as far north as the outlet of the Fresh Water, was probably based upon a Dutch survey made in 1661, but was evidently made by an English draughtsman, shortly after the capture of the city by the English. It is a wash drawing on heavy vellum, brilliantly coloured and heightened with gold.
 The title of the plan is so strikingly similar to the manuscript "Description of the Towne of Mannadens," of the same time, that some relationship between the two has been suspected; see Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., VIII.

This manuscript "Description of the Towne of Mannadens in New Netherland, as it was in Sept. 1661" was discovered in 1906-7 by Miss Frances G. Davenport, of the Department of Historical Research in the Carnegie Institution of Washington, among the manuscripts of the Royal Society of London. Its authorship has not been determined. It was printed for the first time, but not letter for letter, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth. (1909), 421-24. The entire manuscript is reproduced in facsimile in this work for the first time.—See C. Pls. 85 and 86, Vol. II. (A typographical error appears there in the half-title in the spelling of Miss Davenport's Christian name.) The full text of the document, just as it was written, follows:

"Description of ye Towne of Mannadens in New Netherland,
